want but what we deserve, and Siloti gave you what you deserved by repeating four-fifths of the work that most of us consider to be one of the weakest as well as one of the longest Liszt ever wrote. A glance at the faces of the audience during the repetition showed that they had got more—a great deal more—than they had bargained for. I cheered myself during the ordeal by reflecting that a few such contretemps would make people afraid to applaud for longer than a few seconds.

(5.) If you don't like a work or its performance, don't applaud. On the Continent, where concert-goers are a wild and savage race, disapproval is shown by various contemptuous noises corresponding to what variety theatre audiences in this country poetically call 'the bird.' In America, where a leaven of the population is comparatively civilized, I understand that those who don't like a work quietly leave the hall. Here, kindheartedness has become so overdeveloped as to be little better than a vice, with the result that we do the cause of music a disservice by lavish and indiscriminate approval. When your tradesman sends you an article that doesn't come up to sample, you don't dissemble out of consideration for his feelings. You don't even remain silent: you protest. If he repeats the fault, you find another tradesman. Is there any reason why we should discard our sense of values when we go to a concert? Or is music so unimportant that we can afford to be indifferent as to whether the good or the bad gets the bigger show? As life is not long enough to give us a chance of hearing all the good things, we should be so relentless in our weeding-out process that only a negligible quantity of poor stuff remains in the repertory.

Finally, is there not a lesson to be learned from the cinema? As we have seen, there is very little applause at such entertainments. How then can a cinema manager judge as to what pleases his patrons? There are two tests, both far more trustworthy than applause. A manager who sees his audience coming regularly to his show, and intelligent and absorbed when there, knows he has found the stuff to give 'em. He can afford to snap his fingers at your hand-clapping, foot-stamping, and encores. When his patrons want an encore they come along next night and pay for it.

Music in the Foreign Press

[We have arranged for Mr. M.-D. Calvocoressi to give under this heading, a monthly résumé of articles of musical interest in the foreign press.—ED., M.T.]

The first March number of the Musikblätter für Anbruch is devoted to Bartók and his works. It tells us that Bartók, born on March 25, 1881, at Nagyszentmiklós, became at the age of ten a pupil of László Erkel, for pianoforte and harmony, and later of Prof. Stephan Thoman for pianoforte, and of Hans Koessler for composition. He diligently studied the works of Wagner and Liszt, but found little in them to suit his own purpose; and it was Strauss' 'Zarathustra,' produced at Budapest in 1902, that awakened his creative activities. Later he felt less fascinated by Strauss:

Studying Liszt afresh (especially less-popular works of his, such as 'Années de Pèlerinage,' 'Harmonies poétiques et religieuses,' 'Faust' Symphony, and 'Totentanz') I at last discovered, beyond certain external features for which I had little sympathy, the crux of the matter. I realised the composer's true significance. I discovered in him far greater genius than in Wagner or Strauss.

Bartók proceeds to describe how he met Kodály, and how they both started to learn the lesson, taught by Hungarian folk-music. The remainder is the story of his work and his efforts, narrated with the greatest simplicity.

The other articles are: a free translation of Cecil Gray's essay, published in the Sackbut; a 'Letter to Bartók,' by Oscar Bie; appreciations of six string quartets by Egon Wellesz, of his pianoforte pieces for children by Kodály, and of his other works for pianoforte by F. Petyrek.

A most useful number, which, with the article in the Revue Musicale (mentioned in last month's issue) and the complete catalogue of Bartók's works following it, will provide the would-be investigator with all the materials needed in addition to Bartók's music.

ERIK SATIE AND OTHERS

In the same periodical (February 2, number), Guido Gatti praises Erik Satie's 'Socrate,' whose very tendency to 'monotony' appears justified by the philosophical character of the work:

Colours and feelings, which may seem to follow one another in kaleidoscopic variety, must for the philosopher blend into an almost monochrome whole. . . .

The writer concludes:

One might call Debussy the poet of small tableaux de genre; but one cannot help finding in Satie's music—and most especially in 'Socrate'—the reflection of a wide, universal life, and the simplicity of the true philosopher.

Max Broesike-Schoen has little good to say of István Mrazek's lyric-drama, 'Ikdar,' successfully produced at Dresden. R. St. Hoffmann declares at various works by Ignaz Herbst, given at Vienna, the composer conducting, have left him the impression of 'monstrous inadequacy.'

RAVEL'S 'GASPARD DE LA NUIT'

In Il Pianoforte (Turin, January and March), Luigi Arrachio studies in detail the structure and the ethical content of 'Gaspard de la Nuit,' but without the superfluity of comment or hyperbole in the expression of the praise he metes out to that work.

Il Pianoforte is not entirely devoted to pianoforte music, e.g., the article on 'Ondine' (the first part of 'Gaspard de la Nuit') is followed by an excellent essay on 'Don Giovanni' (unsigned).

GREGORIAN MUSIC AND PALESTRINA

In the Rivista Musicale Italiana, Augusto Guzzo defines the relationship between Palestrina's and Gregorian music. Gregorian song, he writes, has a deliberate expressive purpose: it does not aim at expressing the soul of the period in which it was born, but is that very soul. On the other hand, Palestrina's music cannot be considered as a simple confession, a profession of faith: it is, first and foremost, the product of a conscious technique, gradually refined and directed towards deliberate expression. But his idiom owes a great deal to Gregorian elements. He was essentially balanced, with no tendency to lyricism; therefore we never find in his works rapt, ecstatic moments, such as occur in Gregorian music. He is as genuine as he is serene; and it would be a mistake to consider his elaborate technique as a sign of artificiality.

ROMAIN ROLLAND AND METASTASIO

In the same issue, the chapter on Metastasio as a precursor of Gluck in Romain Rolland's 'Voyage musical au pays du passé' is discussed by A. Della Corte, who questions the accuracy of Rolland's conclusions. Letters written by Metastasio to Chastellux and to Saverio Mattei—which he himself communicated to Calzabigi in order to ensure their inclusion in his complete works—reveal a point of view which is not exactly that expressed in the letter to Hasse upon which Rolland's conclusions are founded. Other letters reveal his partiality for Porpora, Vinci, Jomelli. To Brioschi he writes, in 1750, protesting against the growing popularity of 'extravagance and of symphony in conjunction with the voice.' In a letter of 1756, he describes Gluck as 'marvellous, but mad.' The writer's conclusion is that Metastasio was neither a reformer nor a precursor of Gluck.

COMPOSERS AS CRITICS

In Le Courrier Musical (Paris) a goodly array of French composers appear among the writers responsible for concert-notices. The March issues alone show the signatures of Louis Aubert, Florent Schmitt, Paul Le Flem, Darius Milhaud, Albert Bertelin, Louis Durey, Leon Moreau, and Gabriel Grovlez. Whoever has heard or read of the keen party rivalries that hardly any writer on modern French music fails to mention will naturally look forward to some excitement—but only to be disappointed. The accounts are unexceptionably sober. Florent Schmitt may, indeed, declare in unequivocal terms his lack of appreciation for Franck's 'Djinns'; and Darius Milhaud reveal his tendencies (of which more hereafter) by protesting against the indifference which conductors and concert organizers evince towards Albéric Magnard's music; but one would seek in vain for an echo of the quarrels, epic or petty, in and about which so much ink has been wasted.

In the issue of March 1, Louis Vuillemin describes the precarious position of most composers, conductors, and organists in France.

In Le Monde Musical (March) Charles Koechlin concludes a useful technical essay on passing-notes with a short survey of the 'new polytonal counterpoint' which seems to be derived from Schönberg's latest works.

A ONE-MAN PERIODICAL

In contrast with the aforementioned French periodicals (and indeed, I believe, with most musical journals), the daintily got-up, small but substantial Nouvelle Revue Musicale (Lyons) is essentially a one-man journal. The editor, Léon Vallas, is an expert in pithy paragraphs, and deals equally well with information and with critical views in tabloid form. In the March issue, with reference to the question whether songs should be sung in a translation, he boldly asserts that, given an audience incapable of understanding the original text, the worst translation is preferable to the original text. No mistranslation, he says, can be so great a treason as the singing of a text to an audience incapable of grasping its literary and dramatic purport.

THE 'SIX'

In the Lyons Salut Public, Léon Vallas devotes an article to a group of young French composers whose activities, creative and other, have of late attracted some notice. They are Darius Milhaud, George Auric, Francis Poulenc, Louis Durey, Arthur Honegger, and Mlle. Germaine Tailleferre. The youthful reformers, we are told, believe in self-advertisement. One of their 'stunts' was to organize, in a bar, a jazz-band in which George Auric and Francis Poulenc stood prominent. Their chief object is to provoke a reaction against Debussy's impressionistic methods and ideals. Apart from that, they have few features in common, although Poulenc and Milhaud are similar in one respect, viz., their fondness for clear-cut melody and brutal superimpositions of unrelated tonalities. Milhaud is particularly active, both as a composer and propagandist, appearing as singer, pianist, violinist, conductor, and impresario.

In the February issue of the Revue Musicale, M. Paul Landormy describes the 'Six' as aiming at a wholesale renovation of the vocabulary of music. Erik Satie is their ideal, we are told, and it is his example they wish to follow. Curiously enough, their alleged tenets are that music should be purely realistic (anything less realistic than Satie's music can hardly be imagined) and essentially melodic, harmony counting for little or nothing. Polyphony should be reduced to very simple forms. Working-out, and combination of motives, are banned.

M. Landormy proceeds to note that their latest innovation is to use 'chords consisting of chords in superimposition, exactly as the usual chords consist of superimposed notes.' He considers that the young artists in question do not appear to have discovered the rules of the new art-forms which they are trying to create. But he seems to admit that they may eventually discover these rules.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

A BEETHOVEN BIOGRAPHY

It is an odd circumstance that the best biography of Beethoven, though written in English, has so far been obtainable only in a German version. This book was the work of Alexander Wheelock Thayer, born at Boston, U.S.A., in 1817. Its publication in English was held to be impracticable, so it was translated into German, and published in three volumes by Weber, of Berlin, in 1866-79. Two more volumes appeared later, compiled respectively by Drs. Deiters and Riemann from a mass of notes left by Thayer at his death in 1897. A revised edition of the whole appeared a few years ago, Riemann being responsible.

From the article on Thayer in 'Grove,' we quote the following:

The quantity of new letters and facts, and of rectifications of dates, contained in the book is very great. For the first time Beethoven's life is placed on a solid basis of fact. At the same time Mr. Thayer was no slavish biographer. He viewed his hero from a perfectly independent point of view, and often criticised his caprice or harshness (as in the cases of Mäkel and Johanna Beethoven) very sharply. When the work is completed it will be a mine of accurate information, indispensable for all future students. With some condensations an English edition would be very welcome.

It will be good news to musicians that such an edition will shortly be available.

Under the auspices of the Beethoven Association of New York, Thayer's biography is now published in English, in an edition revised and corrected by Henry Edward Krehbiel, the well-known critic and musical scholar of New York, from the original manuscript and other material entrusted to him by Mr. Thayer's heirs, and used in this edition with the purpose indicated by the author before his death. The English edition will be in three volumes of about four hundred pages each, with appendices and reproduced documents that enrich the German text being omitted.

The publication might have been delayed indefinitely but for the public spirit of the Beethoven Association, which in 1920—the hundred and fifty-first anniversary of the composer's birth—decided to devote the proceeds of their concerts to this purpose. The work will be issued in December of the present year, and the supply for this country and the Colonies (other than Canada) will be obtained from Messrs. Novello. The price of the work will be £5 5s. but a limited number of copies will be sold at the subscription rate of £3 13s.

FESTIVAL WEEK AT BATH

BY ERIC BLOM

Unfortunately for the Glastonbury Players' Festival at Bath coincided with the week threatened to bring us a railway strike. But in consequence, unusually empty of visitors, and performances were attended by rather scanty audiences. Composed mainly, it seemed, of local inhabitants. The city's delightful atmosphere of music was unspoiled the aspects of the watering-place. Anne and the early Georges, gave way to a somewhat parochial feeling as soon as one entered the Pump Room. But those who, like myself, sought to attune their minds to the performances by passing through the old-fashioned and charmingly classical streets and squares just before entering the little improvised theatre, must have felt the ideal surroundings in which they took place. The pleasure they would have been capable of in any case. There is no doubt that the associations did much to make one receptive particularly for the old music that was performed, and they are perhaps mainly responsible for the fact that I derived the greatest and most pleasure from some old chamber music (I have missed an excellently-arranged concert of songs, madrigals, and virginal music), and Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas.' The latter was the best thing that the Glastonbury Players did. It was delightful to imagine oneself to be watching a performance in the days of Beau Nash. It was very easy to do this, for the programme is rather too modern and too obviously influenced by the Russian ballet and Miss Margaret. In spite of this, the performance of this work did not fall very short of perfection. The dance, and costumes, (there was no scene admirably blended into one artistic whole. The parts were excellently cast. The Dido was Dorothy d'Orsay, a singer with a beautiful voice and the restrained grand manner of the true tragedienne. She was a piece of work of sheer beauty, and she contrived to make the Death Scene almost unbearably poignant without any sort of hysterical display. So was course, helped by the marvellous song, 'When I and in earth,' surely one of the noblest and most beautiful expressions of grief ever written.

 His Orsay was admirably seconded by Miss Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies as Belinda. Mr. Sheerman Hand as Aeneas was not quite so successful, although he managed to keep within the picture. The Sorceress of Frederick Woodhouse, and the first Witch of Irene Child—and, for that matter, the whole of the witches' chorus—were a sheer delight in their malignancy. And what music they are given to sing. Those bold modulations in 'Destruction's our delight,' the extraordinary laughing ensemble and the chorus with an echo effect, still delight us as they must have done those for whom they were composed. The 'Echo Dance of the Fairies,' described in the libretto as 'horrid music,' still makes us feel how extremely modern it must have sounded once. As we listen to such things, we are thrown into relief now by a plaintive song, now a graceful or a stately chorus, and again by a rollicking sailor's song and dance, our wonder grows as we realise that a young man of twenty-two, with little chamber opera written for a girls' chorus and with nothing but a string quintet and a cello and double bass for accompaniment, should have found the means for writing one of the most truly dramatic and human operas the world has ever seen.
 And all this without any very material divergence from the lapidary style of his time, and in spite of the impediment of Nahum Tate's often very pedestrian verses. Purcell's secret lies in the marvellous way in which he welds recitative, aria, song and dance into one continuous whole, and in his unerring instinct for making the greatest dramatic moments coincide with the finest flow of inspiration. His recitative, instead of being a bridge from one climax to another, is an organic factor, and never lacks a distinct dramatic significance. Add to this a power of invention that is fertile in happy and original turns, and (for his time) extraordinary harmonic audacities, and with a sense of character and situation that always transmuted into what seems the exact equivalent, and the work of one of the most supreme masters stands revealed.

The second important stage work in the scheme was that of Mr. Broughton's 'The Immortal Hour,' which, as it were, regrets to say, did not quite come over the stage. Perhaps the primitive stage was partly responsible, and certainly the fact that the work was given with pianoforte accompaniment—surely an unnecessary makeshift in a city that has an excellent orchestra! This dreamy Celtic music is so lovely that one would like to be able to enjoy it to the full in performance; but the poetry of Fiona Macleod with which it is set is too elusive for the stage, and the music, which fits it so well, seems to evaporate before the material things of a theatrical production. Its ethereal delicate beauty seems to be continually lost by the dramatic necessities. Many of the songs that seem so lovely in one's study have a way of becoming merely dull and watery in performance.
 Throughout the evening the dramatic interest is absent for almost unendurably long periods, where it emerges in patches it becomes artificial and forced. And all this in spite of an excellent performance. Miss Ffrangcon-Davies as Etain called herself as a great, sensitive artist, a child of her father, and Mr. Arthur Jordan as Mair and Mr. Frederick Woodhouse as Dalua were both good. Mr. Sheerman Hand was much more at his ease in the part of Eschaidh than in that of Aeneas, but even here his acting, though very sound, seemed to be acquired rather than spontaneously felt. All the small parts were more than adequately filled, and a special word of praise must go to the admirable choir, who not only sing splendidly, but act exceedingly well, individually and in concert. The chorus of jeering spirits in the first Act is one of the best things one can imagine a chorus doing, both musically and histrionically.

 The dancing—an important factor, as it seems to be in all the Glastonbury productions—is very competently directed by Miss Penelope Spencer.

Mr. Broughton's little Choral Ballet, 'The Moon Maiden,' rather suffers from the same defects as
 'The Immortal Hour,' but having the advantage of being quite short, it is saved from making a similar impression. Another work of the Choral Ballet type, 'Music comes,' by Mr. P. Napier Miles, struck me as being superficially charming in an amateurish sort of way. The music ambles amiably from one idea to another without attaining to unity, and its lack of real individuality leaves no definite impression behind, save that of having been vaguely pleasing.

A concert of English chamber music, described as ranging from the 17th to the 20th century, was not in reality representative of the whole period, unless one took the gap in the programme to illustrate a corresponding hiatus in the musical history of this country. The first part contained Purcell's 'Golden Sonata' and a Violin Sonata by Eccles, while in the second the modern school came off none too well with Parry's 'Lady Radnor's' Suite for string quintet and Frank Bridge's String Quintet in E minor.
 There is no reason why Parry should not be given as a specimen of 19th century English music, but why perform a work that is deliberately imitative of Bach, Rameau, and Couperin? That all but one living composer had to be neglected was perhaps inevitable in a programme necessarily consisting of long works, but I noticed that many of the most important contemporary English composers were equally conspicuous by their absence from a programme entirely devoted to modern British music, which I was unable to hear.

New Music

CHURCH MUSIC

Organists who have not so far made the acquaintance of John E. West's setting in E flat of the Office for the Holy Communion should note that this work is now included in Novello's Short Settings for parochial and general use. Without being over elaborate or difficult, it is admirably designed to afford full scope for a well-trained choir, and to display the resources of a large organ. The highly interesting organ part is of an independent character, always engaged in the consistent development of some definite musical idea. Thus, in the Creed, much is made of the intonation phrase of three notes
 —B flat, C, and the G below—and a strong chordal passage of two bars given out at the commencement by the organ. The former provides more than one opportunity for effective use of the tuba. The vocal writing in the Creed, though providing for some big effects, is not difficult. The trebles are taken to the top B flat near the end, but optional notes are given.

The short but very striking Sanctus opens in an interesting and unconventional manner. The first page of the Benedictus is given to soprano solo. The chorus then enters, largely unaccompanied, with the solo singing above it. A short, brilliant setting of 'Hosanna' concludes the movement.

An expressive setting to Agnus Dei opens with bass solo. Next two sopranos and alto combine, the movement concluding with full choir. Some brilliant phrases for the organ are a feature of the first part of the Gloria. In the opening and final sections the writing both for voices and organ is of a highly festal character. The middle section contains some expressive solo and unaccompanied chorus work. The linking of this with the final section is cleverly managed. 'Thou only, O Christ,' is set fugally, though at no great length, while some imitative phrases for Amen lead to an imposing conclusion.

A. E. Baker's anthem 'At the Cross' (Novello's Chorister Series of Church Music) is a setting for treble voices of three verses of Hymns A. & M., No. 117. The first verse is for treble solo, the second for two trebles, and the third for treble chorus. The composer has written suitably dignified and expressive strains for the voices, which are supported by a well-written and flowing organ part.

The well-known hymn, 'The spacious firmament' (Addison), set to a broad, stately tune by John Sheeles (1720), has now been issued as No. 1,022 of Novello's Parish Choir Book.

In the setting of the Office for the Holy Communion in G minor, by W. Ernest Jennings, the interest lies chiefly in the vocal writing, the simple but well-written organ accompaniment being mainly an amplification of the voice parts. The music is straightforward in style, is devotionally written, and is nowhere commonplace. For its proper effect, the setting needs the services of a nicely balanced choir. Given that, much of the music might well be sung unaccompanied. We would suggest the singing of an Amen to the last phrase of the Gloria in preference to the unnecessary interpolation of the words 'Glory be to God on High.' G. G.

STRING MUSIC

It is significant that three of the most important works we have received during last month should be pianoforte and violin sonatas. Slowly but surely the composer of to-day is realising that there are other forms of composition besides the symphonic poem. Thus, in time, every man will be in his humour instead of in the humour of the 'Proms,' and perhaps it will be found that the classical form or light opera are better suited to some people's talent than the orchestral fantasia.

The sonatas in question are: Eugène Goossens' in E minor (Chester), T. F. Dunhill's in F (Augener), and Pizzetti's in A (Chester). They have all been heard in public, but in reading them consecutively they induce impressions different from those of the concert-room. In the first place it is important to note that while many appear to think that there are only two styles, the new and the old, these three composers, 'modern' as they are and indebted to some extent to predecessors, are each working out their way with characteristic independence. Mr. Goossens, we all know, is a follower of the most recent, and, in a way, most fashionable, school. But unlike many who are drawn to it purely by the glamour of controversy and notoriety, he is perfectly sincere. It may be urged that he is extravagant, that he lacks genuine warmth; he cannot be accused of being obscure. He does not consciously affect the trick of singularity; he is thoroughly logical. Grant his premises and the rest follows inevitably. He stands for a movement that is not confined to music but embraces almost every branch of human activity. An age which reckons amongst its keenest intellects Shaw and d'Annunzio is an age of stoics, not of enthusiasts. Its genius is for logic, for decoration—not for the ideals that pulled so hard at the heart-strings of Tennyson and Dickens. Such an age finds in music its most representative men in Scriabin and Stravinsky. Mr. Goossens is certainly of this company.

Pizzetti's Sonata has had already an exceptionally favourable reception. Time alone will prove whether its qualities are enduring—they are undoubtedly striking. Pizzetti enjoys to-day an advantage which was Grieg's half-a-century ago. Italy is a virgin country so far as the symphony and the sonata are concerned. Sgambati—and even Verdi—when he worked in classical form began by forgetting Italian music. There is nothing—not a bar—to connect Verdi's Quartet with the music of any one of his operas. Pizzetti instead seems to draw his inspiration and his strength from the popular national form—opera. There is nothing 'theatrical' in the usual sense, yet he does give us the atmosphere of the drama, of the theatre, but with power, freedom, and art that are essentially of the classicist.

T. F. Dunhill's work strikes us as a degree less distinctly original than that of either Goossens or Pizzetti. But his themes have sometimes an easy gait, a graceful lilt that are not often met with. The least convincing periods of the Sonata are to be found in the slow movement, where the great classical precedent lures the composer to uncongenial and uncomfortable dramatic depths. After all, the display of crape and funeral baked-meats in the slow movement is purely conventional, and any form that gave the required contrast would be equally effective.

The question of achievement is at present a question of individual taste. The all-important point is, that these sonatas show abundant evidence of vitality and originality. Masterpieces do not grow like blackberries, but this kind of work towers high above the 'promising' effort of the petit-maître. F. B.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

On April 4 the London Symphony Orchestra, with the Philharmonic Choir, and Madame Elsa Stralis, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Norman Allin as soloists, and Mr. Albert Coates conducting, performed the B minor Mass of Bach. Before discussing the concert itself it will be well to place on record two facts connected with it. The first is that an attempt at applause was immediately suppressed, although there was no intimation in the programme, such as is sometimes given, that applause was not desired. This, I believe, is a unique incident. A great deal could be said about it, but space forbids. The second is that shortly afterwards Mr. Busby, as official representative of the orchestra, wrote a letter to the Daily Telegraph in which he mentioned that the expenses had been about £470, and that the receipt with a full hall had been a little over £410. The astonishing thing about this is that not a penny is included for the services of the orchestra. On the other hand £150 was paid towards the necessary expenses of the choir, not, as seems to have been thought in some quarters, for the payment of its trainer or anyone else. As £150 would also have been roughly the cost of an orchestra of the size required for a Bach performance, the total is about what it should have been had the band been paid. The Hall was quite full and money was turned away. The expense of advertising was moderate, because, the Hall being sold out, advertisement during the last few days before the concert would have been superfluous. The fee of £63 given to the conductor cannot be considered excessive; nor is £100 an alarming sum for four soloists. These figures should be carefully considered by those interested in concerts of the highest kind. The conclusions to be derived from the facts are the reverse of encouraging, and seem to prove that the giving of the best orchestral concerts is becoming more and more an affair of philanthropy.

The performance itself must honestly be called disappointing. It was badly lacking in atmosphere and expressiveness, to which more importance should be attached than to one or two rather serious accidents. Criticism is, however, to some degree disarmed by the knowledge of the fact that the choir had met Mr. Coates only once before the concert, when they rehearsed with the orchestra. Considering this, perhaps we should be thankful that the performance was as respectable as it was. The trouble is, however, that such a performance gives a wrong idea of the Mass to those who have never heard it before, and is a specious piece of evidence for those who preach the abominable theory that Bach is merely a stodgy and academic composer. Mr. John Coates was the only one of the soloists who seemed to get near the spirit of Bach, and he was severely handicapped by the slow tempo and the unyielding beat of the conductor. A rendering such as this would be a serious thing for any conductor whose reputation does not rest on so sound a basis as that of Mr. Coates.

Mr. Coates also conducted a Bach-Beethoven-Brahms programme at the London Symphony Concert on April 18. Mr. Coates, as is well-known, has his own ideas on the classics, which evoke enthusiasm in some quarters and disapproval in others. In the 'Brandenburg' Concerto No. 3, in G, the slow tempo of the first movement caused a little surprise. The first Symphony of Brahms had some very impressive dramatic moments, but on the other hand there were a good many apparently needlessly sudden changes of tempo. The slow movement was far too slow in places, so much so that the rhythmic flow and melodic outline were lost. The introduction to the Finale had a strange romantic flow, but the extreme deliberation with which the Finale was begun was almost a shock. Here is a place where the sudden change of tempo is essential, and a great thrill is lost by not emphasising it. The Adagio was made extremely—almost sensationally—dramatic, but in an arbitrary way which did not commend itself to all. The vast majority of the audience applauded tremendously. M. Siloti, taking his place at comparatively short notice of M. Tosoni, played the 'Emperor' Concerto with a dignified breadth of style and welcome absence of mannerism. The slow movement has surely not often been taken so slowly.

A NEW CONDUCTOR

Mr. Edward Clark's series of four orchestral concerts began very encouragingly at Queen's Hall on April 8. He is chiefly known as having assisted Mr. Boult as conductor of a season of Russian Ballet. He had an orchestra of about sixty, specially chosen, which gave an exhilarating performance of Haydn's 'Military' Symphony, that showed him to be a conductor of the energetic type. It was possibly due to nervousness that his energy was occasionally excessive, so that the meaning of all his gestures could not be clear to the orchestra.

There were two novelties in the programme. The first was the 'Storm Music' written by Arthur Bliss for the recent production of 'The Tempest' at the Aldwych Theatre. It is in effect a subtle and ingenious study in the effects of persistent rhythm, thundered out by an exceptional number of drums, unusually combined with recitative-like phrases from the brass and the pianoforte. Most of us were surprised that seven drums could produce a din which ended by becoming almost fatiguing. It was a contest between the timpani of the players and the tympana (if the unconscious but inevitable pun be forgiven) of the audience. I must confess that my own tympana very nearly gave out before the conclusion. Its effect on the emotions of the audience, whether pleasurable or the reverse, was undeniable, and there was no doubt that it has lessons of some value to students of orchestration. From the same point of view there was a great deal of interest in the revised version of the 'Fire-bird' Suite prepared by Stravinsky about two years ago. It was the first performance in England, but one movement had been heard at the National Eisteddfod at Barry last August, when a thunder-storm and the pattering of rain on the corrugated iron made the music almost inaudible. (It would have been a finely opportune moment for Mr. Bliss' music.) The reduction of the number of instruments has the result of making Stravinsky's intentions much clearer, without any loss of the atmosphere of romance and mystery which is the great charm of the music.

The programme was completed by Arnold Bax's song-cycle from Carmen Sylva's 'Bard of the Dimbovitza.' It is not among Mr. Bax's latest works, but it has a good many of his characteristically poetical and imaginative touches. It is difficult to say at one hearing how far the frequent overpowering of the voice by the instruments was due to the composer, and how far to the conductor. Miss Ethel Fenton's singing of the voice-part deserves high praise.

Misfortune dogged the footsteps of the London Choral Society in its performance of Beethoven's Mass on March 23. First of all the soprano was unable to sing owing to indisposition, and her place had to be taken at short notice by another artist. Then the contralto was accidentally prevented from arriving in time, and after a long wait Miss Lilian Berger, who happened to be in the audience, took her place on the platform. In the circumstances, all that can be said is that the ensemble of the soloists was better than one could have dared to expect. Under Mr. Arthur Fagge the choir put in some good work, and was better in the more spirited choruses than in the more reflective ones, which are among the most exacting ever composed. The singers not unnaturally found the 'Mount of Olives' an easier task. The Mass remains one of the great enigmas of music. Those who have studied it most carefully have the greatest reverence for it, but it is rare to find a listener who has really been impressed by a performance, however good. How far it is justifiable to call it, as very many people do (some of whom have never heard it at all), the greatest of all Masses, is a question which must be left over for final settlement by posterity.

There were two orchestral concerts given by soloists which call for notice. A very pleasant impression was made by Miss Alice Frisca, a young pianist from San Francisco, who gave a concert with Sir Henry Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra on March 21. She has a conspicuously neat and fluent technique, and a touch of no little charm. Her interpretations have some of the characteristics which we have come to regard as typically American, and may be summed up by calling them eminently business-like. They are not very temperamental, but their exceeding alertness prevents them from being heavy or uninteresting. Miss Frisca has one curious habit which frequently interfered with the realisation of her intentions. She is apt to lose tone at the end of a phrase, even in important climaxes. She appealed to the public more strongly in Liszt's E flat Concerto than in the Concerto of Grieg, and had to add some encores, the playing of which revealed a sympathetic but undeveloped personality.

On March 14 Miss Ethel Frank gave her second concert, this time with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Sir Henry Wood, and the accompaniments were throughout most sympathetically and flexibly played. There are many idols in the musical market-place, and the two arias of 'The Queen of the Night,' from the 'Magic Flute,' are among those which have most surely led to much worship of false gods. Above all there is a certain type of pedant who always says that a performance of the opera without them is a maimed rite. He forgets that they were added by Mozart in spite of his better judgment at the instance of an imperious prima donna. They are as much 'additional numbers' as anything superimposed by a contemporary master on the subtle and complex structure of the most modern revue. It almost looks as if Mozart had determined to get his own back by setting the lady an impossible task. The result is that they delay the action of the opera (or would do so, if there were any to delay), which makes it almost impossible for the singer to get into sympathetic touch with an audience in an opera house; while on a concert-platform the singer is confronted with the insoluble problem whether to sing them as displays of coloratura or as dramatic arias. I cannot honestly say that in my time I ever heard any soprano who was able to combine the two elements. When I was young, elderly folk used to tell me that it had been done in the distant past, but years of bitter experience make one cynical as to that type of evidence. It was bold of Miss Frank therefore to choose these two arias. As coloratura she sang them remarkably well, but did not in the least succeed in conveying the impression that the 'Gli Angui d'Inferno' is a hymn of hate. When it has been made to sound as such, the high C's were hardly ever musical notes as they were in this case. Miss Ethel Frank sang Debussy's 'Fantoques' and 'Mandoline' with much taste and charm, and made a specially good effect with Moussorgsky's 'Chant Oriental,' with harp accompaniment admirably played by Mr. Cockerill. The only new thing in her group was a picturesque song called 'La Nuit dans l'Isba' by Camille Erlanger.

The programme contained an orchestral novelty, the 'Rondeau Arlequinesque' by Busoni. It is a continuous work in four well-marked sections in free Rondo-form. The composer gives a somewhat metaphysical explanation of the music, to which he prefixes three mottoes: he says "The Motley Dress" refers to the free structure of the piece; "The Lithe Body" means the rhythm and tempi; the "Bold and Original Mind" the musical idea (so far as the composer's ability has allowed him to express this). So far so good, but when he talks of music being a portrait of the hero 'in two profiles and one full face,' it seems to be carrying persiflage of the audience a step too far. We also gather from the composer's explanation that his main idea was to represent Harlequin as too daring in his tricks, like Till Eulenspiegel, and then his retiring from the world to mock it. Busoni is well known to possess a cynical and sardonic humour in orchestration, and great mastery over sombre musical colour, and this enables him to give the music an atmosphere of its own. He is not here as contemptuous of melody as he often is, nor is he as devoted an admirer of cacophony for its own sake. The whole is brisk and lively, and makes its meaning clear. It is, however, on the whole cerebral rather than deeply-felt music, although it would be an exaggeration to say that it is a matter of brain merely.

Of the Queen's Hall Symphony Concert on April 16 it is only necessary to say that Miss Howell's 'Lamia' was again loudly applauded and seems to wear well, and that Mr. Lamond's performance of Liszt's 'Totentanz' was sensational. It is a little curious that musicians of the school which most consistently admires Mr. Lamond were loud in their denunciation of M. Siloti and Liszt when he played the same composition at the London Symphony Orchestra Concert some time ago. Many morals might be drawn, according to the point of view of the moralizers, but far be it from me to draw them, with space so precious.

CHAMBER MUSIC

The Chamber Music Players (Mr. Albert Sammons, Mr. Lionel Tertis, Mr. Felix Salmond, and Mr. William Murdoch) continue their admirable concerts but so far they have not played anything new. It is not a little disappointing that the audiences have not continued to be as large as they should be. The London Chamber Concert Society began its season on April 5, when Miss Olga Haley gave an admirable performance of two of Dr. Ethel Smyth's Songs for Orchestra, conducted by the composer. In a spirit of self-sacrifice which is all too rare, encores were refused for both of them. The principal concert work in the programme was Josef Holbrooke's 'Pickwick' Quartet, which was first produced in 1916 by the Quartet led by the late Mr. John Saunders. In vol. lvii. of the Musical Times, page 297, col. 1, read that: 'It is difficult to place this rather erratic work, but we are sure it is not Holbrooke at his best. There is not much to be added to this concise verdict. It is a commonplace criticism of Mr. Holbrooke's programme music that he is too apt to attempt to jot down musical impressions of certain musical incidents and characters with too little regard for

(Continued on page 348.)

Let the people praise Thee

ANTHEM FOR FESTIVAL OR GENERAL USE WITH OR WITHOUT ACCOMPANIMENT

Psalm lxvii. vv. 3, 6, 7.

Composed by A. HERBERT BREWER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Moderato.

f

PRANO. Let the peo - ple

ALTO. Let the peo - ple..

TENOR. Let the peo - ple..

BASS. f Let the peo - ple praise . . . Thee, O God, . . .

Moderato.  $\text{♩} = 60$ .

f

ORGAN. f

cres. praise . . . Thee, O God, f yea, let . . all the peo - ple

cres. praise . . . Thee, O God, f yea, let all the peo - ple

cres. praise . . . Thee, O God, f yea, let . . all the peo - ple

cres. yea, let all the peo - ple praise

cres. 3 3 f

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

praise . . . Thee, praise . . . Thee, yea, let . . .

praise . . . Thee, praise . . . Thee, yea, let praise . . . Thee, praise . . . Thee, yea, let . . .

Thee, praise . . . Thee, praise . . . Thee, let all the peo - ple praise . . . Thee. . . Then shall the all the peo - ple praise . . . Thee. Then shall the earth . . .

all the peo - ple praise . . . Thee. Then shall the earth . . .

all the peo - ple praise . . . Thee. . .

earth bring forth her in - crease, and God, ev'n our own God, . . shall bring forth her in - crease, and God, ev'n our own God, . . shall bring forth her in - crease, and God, ev'n our own God, . . shall

Then shall the earth bring forth her in - crease, and God, ev'n our own God, . . shall give us His bless - - - ing.

give us His bless - - - ing. Then shall the give us His bless - - - ing. . . Then shall the earth . . bring give us His bless - - - ing, His bless - - -

mp dim.

Then shall the earth bring forth her in - crease, and God, ev'n our

dim.

earth . . . bring forth her . . in - crease, and God, ev'n our

dim.

forth . . . her in-crease, bring forth her . . in - crease, and God, ev'n our

mp dim.

- ing. Then shall the earth bring forth her in - crease, and God, ev'n our own God, . . shall give us His bless - - - ing. . .

p

p

own God, . . shall give us His bless - - - ing. . .

p

own God, . . shall give us His bless - - - ing. . .

p pp

own God, . . shall give us His bless - - - ing. God . .

pp pp

God shall bless us, God shall bless us, and all the ends of the God shall bless us, God shall bless us, and all the ends of the

pp pp

God shall bless us, God shall bless us, and all the ends of the

pp pp

... shall bless us, God shall bless us, and all ... the ends of the

pp pp

world shall fear Him, shall fear Him, shall fear . . . . . Him.

world shall fear Him, shall fear Him, shall fear . . . . . Him.

world shall fear, . . . . . shall fear . . . Him.

world shall fear Him, shall fear Him, shall fear . . . . . Him.

Tempo 1mo.

Let the peo - ple

Let the peo - ple . .

Let the peo - ple praise . . . Thee, let all the peo - ple

Let the peo - ple praise . . . Thee, O God, . . .

Tempo 1mo.

praise . . . Thee, O God, yea, let . . . all the peo - ple praise . . .

praise . . . Thee, O God, yea, let all the peo - ple praise . . .

praise . . . Thee, O God, yea, let . . . all the peo - ple praise . . .

yea, let all the peo - ple praise Thee,

Sheet music for the hymn "Let the People Praise Thee". The score is written for four voices (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "Thee, praise . . Thee, yea, . . let all the peo-ple praise . . Thee, praise . . Thee, yea, let . . all the peo-ple praise . . Thee, praise . . Thee, yea, let . . all the peo-ple praise . . Thee, let all the peo-ple praise . . Thee. Thee. Thee. Thee. Thee. Thee." The music features various musical notations including treble and bass staves, notes, rests, and dynamic markings such as cres., largamente., ff, and fff. There are also triplets indicated by a '3' in a circle.

(Continued from page 340.)

musical shape and without welding them into a whole by means of a unifying idea. These faults are very much in evidence in this work, and go far to spoiling the total effect of much of the cleverness and humour in detail. A fuller appreciation of these particular essentials of good programme music, allied with a little compression, would have been of extreme value to Mr. Holbrooke when composing the Quartet. The introduction of some well-known popular tunes is quite amusing, but the reason of the choice (except in the case of 'We won't go home till morning') is not very clear. It was admirably played by the Philharmonic Quartet.

At the second concert of the same Society, on April 12, the Sěvcik Quartet (Mr. Bohoslav Lhotsky, Mr. Karel Prochazka, Mr. Karel Moravec, and Mr. Antonin Fingerland) made its first appearance in London since the war. Like the Bohemian Quartet, it may claim as its chief merit exceptional strength and flexibility of rhythm. The players have not quite the same richness and depth of tone as the Bohemians. To use a convenient word, of the two they are the more classical in their outlook on music; and whether by accident or by design do not give us such quasi-orchestral effects. In the matter of suppleness and ensemble there is little to choose between them. They began with a Quartet of their compatriot Novak, a facile and fluent work which one would have been tempted to call academic, had he not known that it is considered by the Bohemians to be eminently national. It is true that there are some Czecho-Slovak folk themes in the Quartet, but these are employed in an entirely conventional manner. The players aroused great enthusiasm by their playing of the spirited second movement of Grieg's too unfamiliar Quartet. The soloist was Miss Harriet Cohen, who played Arnold Bax's Sonata in one movement. This is a work which gains very greatly on better acquaintance. Here the composer strikes us as developing a greater power of working up a climax than in almost any other of his works. The music is full of happy touches, and there is great strength in the principal theme. One criticism that suggests itself is that the most powerful—emotionally—of all the climaxes does not come at the end, but before the final section, which consequently suffers somewhat. This, however, is an impression which subsequent hearings may remove. Miss Cohen by her very admirable playing made a great step forward in public estimation.

Mr. Holbrooke is giving a series of concerts at Mortimer Hall with varied programmes, of which an unusual feature is his playing of three pianoforte pieces without mention of their names, and offering a prize to the member of the audience who guesses the largest number. At his concert on April 12 he played his own setting of Chesterton's Anti-Teetotal Songs from the 'Flying Inn.' The best of these is the one in dispraise of the grocer, which has a certain amount of elemental vigour. Mr. Holbrooke played the accompaniment, so that the singer had no choice but to sing fortissimo throughout. With a less robust accompaniment the singer might have been able to introduce some variety. I like Florent Schmitt's piece for horn and pianoforte no better than the Violin Sonata.

RECITALS, ETC.

It is not usual for a singer to stop in the middle of a group of songs to praise the work of his accompanist, but the very fine playing of Mr. Owe Mase, when he was accompanying Mr. Eric Godley at Miss Ursula Greville's concert at Wigmore Hall on April 7, deserved the compliment. The programme was made up of English songs, some of them new. Martin Shaw's 'Song of the Palanquin Bearers' was sung by Miss Greville, and deserves special mention, as does also 'A Prayer' by Mr. Perceval Garratt. Miss Greville manages the transition between the spoken word and singing in Mr. John Foulds' 'The Reed Player' very cleverly, and her singing of Holst's 'Indra' had dignity and breadth of style. Of Mr. Godley's songs 'The Lazy Man,' by Felix White, a setting of one of Mr. Waley's translations from the Chinese, was very diverting, and was sung with a pretty sense of humour, and Gerrard Williams' 'The Crooning from Inisfail' was sung with imagination. The merit, as well as the limitations of his style suggest that he will make a fine opera singer, if there's ever again demand for such a thing in this country.

At the recital of Mr. Melchior and Mr. Hansen on April 6, at Wigmore Hall, Mr. Melchior sang more gently than some of his performances in larger halls would have led one to expect—and Mr. Hansen is an exceptional artist. The novelty was a set of 'Glunten' by Gunnar Wennerberg, which, half-sung, half-acted, with a good sense of humour, was extremely popular with the whole audience, but especially with the Norsemen present who could understand the words of these student songs.

At her recital on April 14, Miss Litante again sang with much artistic insight. Señor Medina, who gave a recital at Queen's Hall on April 6, is a typical operatic tenor with a typical character of voice and a typical way of expressing emotion which immediately appeals to the public.

Mr. Pouishnov has finished his series of recitals and also gave an extra recital on April 13, at which he repeated many of the things in which he has previously made his chief successes, his performance of the B-minor Sonata of Liszt being especially noticeable by reason of its bigness of style and musical insight. His technique seems to have gained in brilliancy even in the short time since his first appearance. There is no doubt that he has a great future. Mr. Victor Benham made his first appearance after a successful Continental tour. He is an exhilarating if at times somewhat arbitrary player. Miss Winifred Christie, who gave a recital on the same day, is, on the other hand, an artist who impresses by her charm and refinement as well as by her finished, polished technique. Mr. Fischer, the Swiss pianist, who has given some recitals, is an interpreter of classical music of individuality and sterling merit. Mr. Edward Mitchell has given another Scriabin recital. Acting on the suggestion of a well-known critic he played the seventh Sonata, which, short, elucidatory remarks spoken previously, he also played it twice in succession. The majority of musicians now, however, seem to be veering round to the opinion that Scriabin is not destined to revolutionise pianoforte music, and that his early and less anarchical works are more likely to live than his later ones.

NOTES FOR MAY

The most important musical event of May will certainly be the reappearance of Mr. Kreisler on May 4 with the Albert Hall Orchestra under Mr. Landon Ronald. The principal item in his programme will be the Elgar Concerto. The Jubilee of the Albert Hall will be celebrated in fitting fashion May 7. Miss Carrie Tubb, Madame Kirkbynn, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Robert Radford, with the combined forces of the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra under Mr. Landon Ronald, and the Royal Choral Society and its orchestra, conducted by Sir Frederick Bridge, will take part. Mr. Clark gives two remaining orchestral concerts of his season May 6 and 20. The novelties at the first will be Soni's Concertino for clarinet and Arnold Schönberg's Chamber Symphony for fifteen instruments. At the second, at Queen's Hall, we shall hear Ravinsky's 'Pulcinella' Suite, and Manuel de Falla will play the pianoforte part in his 'Nights in the Gardens of Spain' for pianoforte and orchestra.

The last of the concerts of the London Symphony Orchestra takes place on May 9, and the programme includes the Finale of Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony and Moiseiwitsch will play the pianoforte part in Elbrooke's 'Gwynn ap Nudd.'

The Guild of Singers and Players founded by Madame Lily Henkel and Mr. Norman Notley announces a series of twenty concerts on a co-operative basis at Steinway Hall on every Tuesday and Wednesday in May and June. The ten May programmes contain some interesting native works.

[Photo by S. J. Loeb.]

Mr. Henry Wood has been invited, with Nikisch, Péné, and others, to conduct at the International Music Festival at Zurich in June and July.

THE GLASGOW ORPHEUS CHOIR

For about four months music in London has been singularly free from stimulants to curiosity, and one welcomed the visit of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir on April 9 as a break in the uneventful round. The fame of the Choir preceded it—our Glasgow representative has often paid tribute to its singing—and the number of people who came to hear it could not have found room anywhere but in the Royal Albert Hall. Otherwise it could only be regretted that the Choir had to sing in a place where nothing intimate, in music or in performance, can be properly heard.

Bad acoustics, however, could not disguise the fine quality of the singing. The Glasgow Orpheus Choir is what it is said to be—one of the most highly-refined instruments of choral expression existing in the kingdom. It can be listened to with some of the feeling one gets from the best string quartets, such cleanness and beauty are there in line and texture; and beyond this is the imagination which colours everything with the mood of a song and knows the difference between interpreting and merely pointing. Nothing could have served better to reveal this power of getting to the heart of a piece of music than Elgar's 'Death on the hills.' The whole conception of the setting (of words by Mrs. Newmarch from the Russian) is so dramatic that there are temptations to be melodramatic. Let the men put anger (and tricks of sforzando) into the voice of Death and the women make a human wail of their clamouring, and the work is spoilt. Let them be stern and plaintive for dramatic colouring, and give no other thought but to fine-drawn technique, then the words and the music will express the drama and express it with dignity. This is where Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, the conductor—it is time to mention his name—showed his sense of balance and fitness in choral art, where reticence can play as valuable a part as strong emotion. Other part-songs were treated with the same justice. These were Elgar's 'The Shower,' Boughton's 'Early Morn,' Holst's 'Turn back, O man,' a madrigal—the famous 'As Vesta was from Latmos Hill descending,' of Weelkes—and the warmly-coloured 'Beatitudes' of Kalinnikoff. In the last piece there was a suspicion of over-done expression, especially in the staccato on the word 'per-se-cu-ted.' Perhaps the composer had marked it so.

So long as the choir was singing this kind of music one could feel stimulated, pleased, and moved to admiration, but there was too little of it in the programme, and this introduces what may seem to be an ungracious grumble. The large share of the evening's music that was taken up by arrangements of Scottish folk-songs gave the impression of time wasted. There is no disrespect to the tunes in this complaint. One can with consistency declare that Scottish folk-music is the best in the world (especially with the treasures newly-discovered in the Hebrides), and deny that it lends itself to part-singing. Folk-music and the Victorian part-song are worlds apart, and an attempt to reconcile them is rather degrading to the former. And the way it is done usually suggests a false dressing which is apt to call too much attention to itself. Of course the results were pretty, charming, amusing, and so forth, but we have our suburban choral societies ready to breathe that atmosphere at any time, and even in the Albert Hall some large London-Scot Associations give us whole evenings of it. 'Eriskay love-lilts' and the like can be heard at Æolian Hall, with a Celtic harp for accompaniment. They are published, and we can croon them round the fire in May, or floating down from Boulter's Lock in August; they can have nothing more to tell us, S.A.T.B., in the Royal Albert Hall. So far as the choral singing of folk-songs helps to spread a love of them it is to the good, but we do not need a superlative choir to come from Glasgow to London on such a missionary enterprise when it has other and higher things to teach. It was vexing to think of all the madrigals and refined modern part-songs that were put aside for 'Wi' a hundred pipers' and the rest.

Here the grumble ends. It was jolly to hear the tune of the tramping song, 'The road to the Isles,' and it was a pity that Mr. Robertson's efforts to include the audience in his choir met with so feeble a response. The Hall can be blamed, or perhaps it was because the audience was more musical than Scots. There were some present who had so little knowledge of their native kingdom that they could ask what a Coolin was!

One item, that came straight from Scottish soil and history, was heard with gratitude. This was an old Highland Psalm Tune entitled 'French.' It is best described in the words of the programme note (by Mr. Robertson):

On his visit to Scotland in 1844, Mainzer noted down this extraordinary example of church praise from actual singing in Ross-shire. He also collected others of the same kind. These are now in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh. The present example was published by the committee of the Gaelic Mod. How these curiously florid tunes originated is not known. Roderick McLeod, of Inverness, has a theory that the soldiers who returned from the Peninsular War brought with them something of the spirit of the ornate music of Continental churches. Of course, the embellishments must have been originally in the nature of improvisations, and the people must have been very united in spirit to cause these improvisations to become traditional.

There are two short verses, sung line by line by a soloist, with responses from the choir. The decoration of the melodic line is aptly and beautifully done; the whole effect was fascinating, and breathed sincerity. The simpler Psalm tune 'Stracathro' of Hutchison made a good beginning to the concert.

The tone of the choir was good enough for satisfaction, but not of the kind that the ear revels in as a delight to the senses. Apparently Glasgow speech is not so perfect a voice-trainer as the English of Lancashire and Yorkshire. Occasionally there was a sharp edge to the soprano tone. But quality was seldom wanting; it was merely not conspicuous.

The Scottish songs that were scattered about the programme as solos were the right thing in the right place. The alternatives were art-songs, which are lost in the Albert Hall, or 'ballads.' Somehow or other the songs given by Miss Boyd Steven, Mr. Robert McAdam, and Mr. William Smith, seemed to lose nothing in the vastest of vast concert rooms, and to 'get home' easily where the soul of much great music has been lost by the wayside. Again, the way they were brought in and sung had nothing in common with the 'folk-song groups' condescendingly introduced by the West-end recitalist with an eye on fashion. One was particularly pleased to see that these singers (and their accompanist, Mr. A. J. Gourlay) were members of the Choir. After some recent experiences of hired soloists and their ways it was instructive to be shown how to do without them.

Duties at the organ were performed by Mr. Arthur Edwards.

W. McN.

Choral Notes and News

BY W. McNAUGHT

THE ORIANA MADRIGAL SOCIETY

The programme of the Oriana Madrigal Society at Æolian Hall, on April 16, was again a feast of rare enjoyment, even though the choir was not always singing in its best form. But the Oriana could do far below its normal and still be well worth hearing. There was a hint of pressure—or a too flustered urgent delivery—in Byrd's six-part anthem, 'Sing joyfully unto God.' Both here and in Byrd's four-part songs, 'What is life' and 'While that the sun the execution had not the cleanness we expect from these singers under Mr. C. Kennedy Scott's guidance. The choir was more at home in the lighter rhythm of two five-part Ballets by Weelkes and a set of old French Chansons. The modern part-songs consisted of Holst's third group of 'Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda,' Bantock's six-part arrangement of the Hebridean folk-song, 'The death croon,' and 'Evening in the village' and 'The stage coach,' by Balfour Gardiner. There were duets sung by members of the choir, and an agreeable collection of folk-songs sung unaccompanied, and with much gesture, by Mr. A. A. Pearson.

Among the countless Good Friday performances 'The Messiah' of which information has been received that of the Royal Choral Society, under Sir Frederic Bridge, can alone be mentioned. The Royal Albert Hall has seldom been more crowded, and the performance was fit to set before an earnest multitude. A great feature was the solo-singing of Madame Agnes Nichol, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Frank Mullings, and Mr. Robert Kirdorf.

The admirable Westminster Choral Society, ably trained and conducted by Mr. Vincent Thomas, furthered its work on behalf of British choral music by giving Parry's 'Piper of Hamelin' and Goring Thomas' 'The Swan and the Skylark' at Central Hall on April 5. Miss Dilys Jones, Elgar's 'Sea Pictures,' and the other soloists of the concert were Miss Flora Woodman, Mr. Herbert Cave, and Mr. Ivor Foster.

The formation of choirs among employees of large commercial houses is a process greatly to be encouraged, and we have pleasure in recording the success of the first concert of the Baltic Exchange Choir, which took place in the Great Hall, Cannon Street Hotel, on April 13. The choir of male-voices, under the direction of Dr. H. D. Watton, gave an excellent account of West's arrangement 'The Little Sandman' and 'John Peel,' Stanford's 'Song of the Sea' (with Mr. Gordon Cleather as soloist), Bantock's 'Give a rouse,' and several other none-too-easy part-songs.

The Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society finished its season with an excellent concert of light music on April 16, directed by Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock. Elgar's 'From a Bavarian Highlands' and an orchestral suite from Delius' 'Sylvia' were the principal items.

On April 20 the Railway Clearing House Musical Society gave an exceptionally good concert at Kingsway Hall, on occasion being its first public appearance. The members of the staff who took a prominent part in the concert were Mr. William Reeve, the possessor of a pleasing and sympathetic tenor voice, Mr. Harry Westly, a clear 'cellist, and Mr. Charles Forwood, the pianist, who accompanied well throughout. The choir of sixty male-voices came off with flying colours, its attack, variety of tone, and delicate pianissimo passages being excellent. Under the skilful training and enthusiastic leadership of its conductor, Mr. John E. West, the choir has made great strides during the past season. Stories were contributed by Miss Helen Mar, piccolo and flute solos by Miss Violet Hant, and songs by Mr. Ben Lawes and Mr. Randall Jackson.

THE NOVELLO CHOR.—under Mr. Harold Brooke, gives a concert of unaccompanied choral music at Bishopsgate Institute on May 10. The programme includes Bach's 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure,' Gibbons' 'Ah, dear heart,' Watson's 'Sister, awake,' Wilbye's 'Sweet honey-sucking,' Benet's 'All creatures now are merry-minded,' Porter's 'Gather ye rosebuds,' and Gerrard Williams' 'Three sleeps.' Ye will be sung by Miss Caroline Hatchard and Mr. John Buckley.

BASINGSTOKE.—The programme of the concert of the Basingstoke Victory Choir on April 7 opened with Hoffmann's 'Melusina'—a rare resurrection. The melodious and dramatic music was well sung under Mr. David Hume's direction, and soloists too numerous for mention did their parts adequately. There were also partings in the programme, including 'The Long Day Closes,' 'The Vikings,' and 'Wi' a hundred pipers' (arranged by West). BRECHIN (Forfarshire).—The Amateur Musical Association gave a performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha,' on March 16, under the direction of Mr. Patrick A. Black.

BROMLEY.—Brahms' 'Song of Destiny' and Verdi's 'Requiem' were given by the Bromley Choral Society, under Mr. Frederic Fertel, on March 15. Such a programme demands exceptional resources, vocal and mental, but reports speak of the Bromley choir as fully equal to the task. The solo parts were taken by Miss Dorothy Greene, Miss Mabel Corran, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Robert Bedford.

DUMFRIES.—The fifth subscription concert of the Dumfries and Maxwelltown Choral and Orchestral Society is held on March 23, when a programme containing 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' was greatly enjoyed. The solo singers were Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Arthur Sykes, and Mr. Herbert Owen, and the work of conducting was shared by Mr. F. J. Javer and Mr. W. J. Stark.

HAMILTON (Canada).—The Elgar Choir of Hamilton, conducted by Mr. Bruce A. Carey, had two useful days of concert-giving on March 4 and 5. First there was a performance of 'Elijah,' in conjunction with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, which appears to have made something of a sensation. On the second day the orchestra, under M. Ossip Gabrilovitch, and the choir, gave a children's matinée ('complimentary to Public School fourth forms') and an evening concert. Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' and Gretchaninov's eight-part 'Praise the Lord, O my soul' indicate the type of programme that was presented.

KETERING.—There were large audiences at the Coliseum on April 9 and 10, when the Kettering Gleemen gave the 10th and 11th concerts of their twelfth season. Under Mr. Samuel Wighton the choir sang with great precision and expressiveness in Dunhill's 'Full fathom five,' Elgar's five songs from the Greek Anthology, and other pieces. Songs were given by Miss Hilda Blake and Mr. Charles Knowles, and violin solos by Miss Marjorie Hayward.

KIRKCALDY.—The Musical Society gave a very successful performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Song of Hiawatha' on March 23. The choir numbered two hundred and fifty voices, and a complete professional orchestra of thirty-three players supplied the accompaniments. The soloists were Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Charles E. Mr. Charles M. Cowe conducted.

ORKHAMPTON.—The first concert of the Orkhampton Choral Society since 1914 took place on April 6, when 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' was well performed by a choir of eighty voices with string orchestra. The tenor solo was sung by Mr. R. J. Parker, of Exeter Cathedral. Mr. Sydneyham James conducted. In the second part of the programme the choir again showed its quality in 'O Somme Light' and West's arrangement of 'John Peel.'

OTTAWA.—The Oratorio Society gave an excellent performance of 'The Golden Legend' at the Dominion Methodist Church on March 15. Under Dr. Herbert W. Sykes a dramatic and appealing interpretation was secured (according to a local paper, which adds that 'The Golden Legend' is 'not the best known of Gilbert and Sullivan's operas').

STOCKPORT.—A miscellaneous programme given by the Vocal Union on March 21 included Callcott's 'O snatch me swift,' Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music,' and Fanning's 'Liberty.' Dr. Thomas Keighley conducted.

WOMBWELL.—Fletcher's 'The Deacon's Masterpiece' was performed effectively by the Wombwell and District Choral Society at the Pavilion on March 17, Mr. Bernard Langdale conducting. The programme included German's part-song, 'London Town,' Stewart's 'The Bells of St. Michael's Tower,' and, for the orchestra, 'The Peer Gynt' Suite.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Experienced pianist would be pleased to hear from good violin, viola, and 'cello players who would be willing to join him for practice of chamber music.—W. MEACHAM HALEY, 39, Springfield Gardens, Upper Clapton, E. 5.

Intermediate pianist-violinist (young lady) would like to accompany violinist (lady or gentleman); or, alternatively, is desirous of meeting pianist who would accompany her violin. Is willing to help violinist commencing pianoforte study, or to assist pianist beginning violin study. City of Nottingham.—'SNEINTON,' c/o Musical Times.

Cornetist (trained) desires to join good orchestra.—J. SYDNEY, 9, Birdhurst Road, S.W. 19.

Gentleman (Bristol) with numerous classical and modern original pianoforte duets and arrangements of orchestral scores, seeks gentleman pianist's assistance in same locality, evenings or week-ends. Facility at sight-reading essential.—'INSATIABLE,' c/o Musical Times.

Tenor wishes to arrange with pianist, trio, or quartet, for practice of chamber-music. Balham or Wimbledon districts.—'CLARINETIST,' c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet with good violinist and 'cellist for regular weekly practice of chamber music (classical and modern). Plymouth.—'AVILIO,' c/o Musical Times.

Young violinist would like to join trio (pianist and 'cellist), for study of classical and modern chamber music. Hampstead or Brondesbury districts.—F. C. W., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for practice.—L. B. B., 24, Accl Road, N.W. 6.

Gentleman, violinist, wishes to join trio, quartet, quintet, &c., or local orchestra at Croydon, or immediate neighbourhood. Classical music only.—C. C. D., c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (lady) wishes to meet violonist and 'cellist for mutual practice. Good music only.—CLASSICAL, 5, Lulworth Road, Peckham, S.E. 15.

Violinist, with a few years' orchestral practice, would like to join trio, orchestra, or small concert party. North Kensington district.—A. M., c/o Musical Times.

A good amateur 'cellist wanted for chamber music (string quartets, &c.).—W. A. MARSH, 35, Murchinson Road, Leyton, E. 10.

Good accompanist (young lady), also vocalist and beginner on violin, wishes to meet violinist-pianist for mutual practice. Kentish Town district. Practice-room at advertiser's home.—'CECILIA,' c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist (L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for practice of trios.—L., 57, Oakfield Road, Clapton, E. 5.

'Cellist wanted to complete chamber trio; must be accomplished. Large library of music, classics and moderns, the latter including pieces by Scriabin, Glinka, and Borodin. Practice, advancement, and mutual enjoyment.—EDWARD W. ORGAN, 'Milverton,' Mayfield Road, Acocks Green, Birmingham.

Pianist (man) wishes to meet violinist and/or 'cellist for regular practice. Classical music preferred, and would like to arrange with another pianist for pianoforte duets.—Write 'ENTHUSIAST,' c/o Musical Times.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

Some excellent orchestral records are waiting for notice. Here are a couple of double-sided H.M.V. of the 'New World' Symphony, the first movement and the Largo, played by the Albert Hall Orchestra under Landon Ronald. The first movement is on one, the slow movement on the other. Both are first-rate, the orchestral details being unusually clear as a rule, and the soft passages distinct.

Another old friend turns up in Liszt's 'Hungarian' Fantasia, with de Greef at the pianoforte, and Landon Ronald and the Albert Hall Orchestra, H.M.V., two d.-s. records. The pianoforte tone is especially well reproduced—so well, in fact, that one can hear the far too numerous twiddly bits with patience. What a long while Liszt is getting under way in this work! One feels inclined to say, with Macbeth, 'Come, fellow, leave thy damnable faces, and begin!' Of these two records the first is the more enjoyable, not because it is a better record, but because the musical interest is on the whole greater. But the pair should be in the cabinet of all who want a particularly good sample of pianoforte-cum-orchestra.

Handel's 'Largo' and the 'Coronation March' from 'The Prophet,' played by the New Queen's Hall Orchestra and Sir Henry Wood, have been recorded on a d.-s. by the Columbia Company. One misses the organ in the repeat of the Handel. Perhaps it is there, but if so it doesn't add the fat religioso effect we expect from it. The March is duly rousing, with a startlingly effective moment by the drums and cymbals.

An even better Columbia record is that of 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune,' by the Hallé Orchestra conducted by Hamilton Harty. The delicate texture comes out well on the whole, and the delightful bits for wood-wind are first-rate. On the other side is the same players' performance of the 'Rakoczy' March—good, but a little rough here and there—not in the playing but in the reproduction. A bit of inferior surface, probably.

The Æolian-Vocalion send a d.-s. with the London String Quartet playing the first and second movements of Beethoven's Quartet in D. A very successful record, clear, and with some ravishing tone at the beginning of the second movement.

The Allegro moderato and the Andante of Mozart's Quartet in D minor played by the same performers are on a Columbia 10-in., d.-s. The balance leaves something to be desired in the first movement, and the soft parts are a trifle too soft. The Andante is quite a success.

Another good chamber-music record is the H.M.V. 12-in. single of the Flonzaley Quartet playing the Allegretto ma non troppo from Mozart's Quartet in D minor.

Even Heifetz's brilliant playing cannot hide the musical poverty of No. 20 of Paganini's 'Twenty-four Caprices.' If this is a good sample, Paganini wrote just twenty-four too many. H.M.V. 10-in., single.

Moiseiwitsch playing the Schubert-Liszt 'Hark! hark! the lark!' and Debussy's 'Minstrels' is on a 10-in. d.-s., H.M.V. Save that some of the very soft parts are hardly audible, the record is good, the Debussy being especially attractive.

But the prize for a pianoforte record must go to the H.M.V. d.-s. of Mark Hambourg making the most of Debussy's 'Danse' and 'La plus que lente' value. The repeated notes in the first are wonderfully clear, and the whole so good that I know of no gramophonist who has turned it on four or five times in succession on several occasions—something like an encore!

Those who want a vocal record that will fill a large room with a bit to spare for the folk two or three doors off will find it in the H.M.V. of Tito Ruffo singing 'Adamastor, re delle' from 'L'Africana.' The music is of no great interest, but we know how little that matters when a fine voice gets going. I have been told that this is the most powerful vocal record so far issued, and I don't feel inclined to dispute the claim.

Peter Dawson's singing of 'Madamina,' from 'Don Giovanni,' comes out well, and the orchestral accompaniment is clear. But I make bold to say that it is a foolish song that we should never hear had it been written by a lesser man than Mozart. H.M.V., 10-in., d.-s.

On the other hand, what a gem is Purcell's 'When I am laid in earth!' I wish I could say that the H.M.V. record of Miss Edna Thornton's singing of it was worthy. The song would surely have been better suited to a soprano, and the accompaniment should have been arranged for string quartet, some such light and definite combination. The whole thing is far too heavy. On the other side Walthew's 'Gleaner's Slumber Song'—better, but not a complete success, the general result lacking clearness.

What tricky sprite was at the elbow of the packer of the Æolian-Vocalion batch of records sent to this office? Here are a Fox-trot and a One-step for review in the Musical Times! Both are well-known to us all, for errand-boys deliver them shrilly as they dash slowly about the streets. The Fox-trot is 'Dardanella,' by Bernard and Black (presumably composers, though they sound like a commercial couple; one feels tempted to add 'Lido' and the One-step is 'Swanee,' by Cæsar and Gershwin, another firm. How do they divide the work? Do they write the tune and the other the harmonic? I suppose these pieces belong to the 'beastly tunes' class, but I must plead guilty to enjoying them. They are vulgar, but intensely alive, and they are miles ahead of the average sentimental sort. There is stirring rhythm, genuine if rather obvious tunefulness, and orchestration that is sometimes effective, sometimes funny, the latter especially with the trombone appears to be suffering from an attack of what might be either biliousness or catarrh. When I saw this record I felt it had come to the wrong address, and would have to be given away. But it's still here, and now and again I shall be glad to spend a hustling ten minutes with Messrs. Bernard & Black and Cæsar & Gershwin. Why not? Only last night I was one of about two hundred people sitting in solemn rows at Queen's Hall listening to a good deal of music that was less vital, though its composers are well up Parnassus, and the four fox-trot merchants are not even on the map.

A Guild of Singers and Players has been formed to arrange concerts for artists who would otherwise be unlikely to give them. Twenty concerts have been arranged at Steinway Hall, at each of which three members of the Guild will appear. The hon. secretary is Madame Henkel, 72, Hamilton Terrace, London, N.W.8.

32	Contra Dulciana	...	...	...	...	metal	r6
33	Open Diapason...	...	...	...	...	wood	8
34	Stopped Diapason	...	...	...	...	metal	4
35	Principal ...	...	...	...	...		8
36	Nason Flute	...	...	...	...		23
37	Twelfth	...	...	...	...		2
38	Fifteenth	...	...	...	...		2
39	Cornet (Prepared for)	...	...	...	...	3 ranks	8
40	Trumpet	...	...	...	...

SOLO AND BOMBARDE ORGAN

13 stops, 2 couplers, and tremulant. (Enclosed)

FT.

41 Violoncello ... ..	metal	8
42 Tibia (open throughout) ... ..	wood	8
43 Viole d'Orchestre ... ..	metal	8
44 Salicional ... ..	...	8
45 Unda Maris (AA) (prepared for) ... ..	...	8
46 Concert Flute (Harmonic) ... ..	...	4
47 Salicetina ... ..	...	2
48 Cor Anglais ... ..	...	16
49 Clarinet ... ..	...	8
50 Tremulant ... ..	...	—
51 Contra Tuba ... ..	...	16
52 Tuba ... ..	...	8
53 Tuba Clarion ... ..	...	4

(Unenclosed)

54 Grand Tuba (Heavy Pressure, Harmonic) (prepared for) metal	8
55 Great Reeds to Solo.
56 Swell Reeds to Solo.

PEDAL ORGAN—15 stops

57 Double Open Diapason ... ..	metal	32
58 Great Bass ... ..	wood	16
59 Contra Basso ... ..	...	16
60 Open Diapason (extension of No. 57) ... ..	metal	16
61 Sub-Bass (stopped) ... ..	wood	16
62 Violon (from No. 16, Swell) ... ..	metal	16
63 Dulciana (from No. 32, Choir) ... ..	...	16
64 Octave (extension of No. 58) ... ..	wood	8
65 Principal (extension of No. 60) ... ..	metal	8
66 Flute (extension of No. 61) (Stopped) ... ..	wood	8
67 Super-Octave (extension of No. 65) ... ..	metal	4
68 Contra Trombone ... ..	...	32
69 Trombone (extension of No. 68) ... ..	...	16
70 Grand Ophicleide ... ..	...	16
71 Clarion (extension of No. 69) ... ..	...	8

COUPLERS—20

72 Solo to Pedal.	80 Choir to Great.
73 Swell to Pedal.	81 Swell Octave.
74 Great to Pedal.	82 Swell Unison off.
75 Choir to Pedal.	83 Swell Sub-Octave.
76 Solo to Great.	84 Solo Octave.
77 Solo to Choir.	85 Solo Unison off.
78 Swell to Great.	86 Solo Sub-Octave.
79 Swell to Choir	87 Great Pistons to Pedal (Combinations).

ACCESSORIES

6 Adjustable Pistons to Great Organ.
6 " " " Swell " "
4 " " " Choir " "
4 " " " Solo " "
6 " Pedals " Pedal " "
1 Reversible Piston for Great to Pedal } Duplicated by Pedals.
1 " " " Swell to Great " "
1 " " " Solo to Great " "

Balanced Swell Pedals to Swell and Solo Boxes.

Tubular Pneumatic Action throughout, giving perfect attack and repetition.

WIND PRESSURES

Great Flue Work, 4½-in.; Great Reeds, 12-in.
Swell " " 5-in.; Chorus Reeds, 15-in.
Choir " " and Reed Work, 3-in.
Solo " " Work and Orchestral Reeds, 6-in.; Tubas, 30-in.
Pedal Organ Flue Work, 4½-in., 5-in., and 6-in.; Trombones, 20-in.
Grand Ophicleide, 30-in.

IN MEMORIAM JOHN EDWARD VERNHAM, ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S, KNIGHTSBRIDGE

By the death of John Edward Vernham the Church of England has lost an organist and musician of the highest type. Although as a youth he had been apprenticed to a firm of South London organ-builders, yet the call of music was strong in him and would not be denied. He early forsook organ-making for organ-playing, and after some less important appointments, succeeded Dr. W. H. Monk as organist and choirmaster at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, in 1879. There he remained for forty-two years, until his death, and by his devotion to the Church and his unsparing zeal for work succeeded in building up such a splendid choir and beautiful musical services as made St. Paul's famous as a model of what a parish church musical service should be. In 1889 he succeeded Dr. Monk as professor of music and organist at King's College, London, and in recent years was also an examiner for Trinity College of Music. As a player he was always clear and accurate, and as an organ accompanist could not easily be excelled. His personality was so attractive and his unselfishness and general kindness of nature so great that he was beloved by all who knew him, and many will mourn his loss. He had suffered from heart trouble for some time, and his last illness came upon him on Christmas Day. When half-way through the morning service his powers failed him, and he had to give up, although against his will. He never played at St. Paul's again, and on March 2 he passed away. The funeral service, which was attended by a very large congregation, was held at St. Paul's on March 7. The music was that which he himself had arranged and played for so many years, and the full choir of men and boys sang the sad strains of the choirmaster whom they had known and loved. The vicar, the Rev. Prebendary Boyd, and also the Rev. Baden Powell, formerly Precentor of St. Paul's, were present, and Dr. W. J. Phillips, an old friend of Mr. Vernham, presided at the organ.

THE LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

Mr. John E. West's lecture on 'Old English Organ Music' at Trinity College on April 9 attracted a large gathering. Mr. West gave a very interesting account of the progress of organ music in this country from the 16th century down to the Wesley period. He rightly claimed that a good proportion of the work of our old composers in this field was well worth playing to-day. Much of it undoubtedly suffered from the backward condition of the organ in England especially from the fact that we were centuries behind the Continent in the adoption of pedals. Our persistence in unequal temperament was also a hindrance to the development of organ music. Nevertheless, the numerous illustrations to the lecture included some delightful things. Especial good were a characteristic Voluntary in A minor by Orlando Gibbons (a gravely beautiful movement that made one regret the composer left so little work of the kind), a Toccata by Lock, a Voluntary on the 'Old Hundred' by Purcell, a capital piece that we venture to suggest would be even more successful if its two sections were transposed; the first would make by far the better ending), and a charming slow movement by John Bennet. Had Mr. West's object been to show how much good organ music was written by our old composers he might easily have made up a programme of excellent works by Roseingrave, Boyce, Walmisley, Nare Adams, and others. But as the lecture was designed to trace the development of our organ music, and especially that peculiarly English type known as the Voluntary, the illustrations necessarily included a good many pieces of interest of which was mainly historical. The occasion, however, was of great value, and should draw attention to the department of English music that deserves to be better known. One of these old pieces in a programme of modern—and especially of ultra-modern—works provides refreshing contrast. We must add that the illustrations were admirably played by Mr. Stanley Roper. Dr. Pearce was in the chair, and added to the success of the afternoon by playing some pieces of Samuel Wesley.

We have received the eleventh Annual Report of the Organists' Benevolent League, and note with pleasure that this excellent institution has made a considerable step forward during the past year. There has been an increase of £156 in the receipts, the costs of administration have been less, the grants have been practically the same, and as a result the committee has been able to invest £200 in War Stock, and so make the future of the League more secure. A gratifying feature is the support received from Organists' Associations, no fewer than seventeen now sending regular contributions. We remind our readers that a large proportion of the amount is raised by collections at organ recitals, a form of help that is in the power of practically every member of the profession, and one which has the further merit of bringing the League and its objects before the general public. The secretary, Mr. Thomas Shindler, Royal College of Organists, Kensington Gore, S.W., will be glad to answer any inquiries.

The Blackburn Public Hall, now being built, is to have an organ of four manuals and sixty-four speaking stops enclosed in a handsome oak case, the whole costing about £15,000. Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper are to supply the instrument.

Faversham Parish Church Choir, numbering about fifty voices, gave a concert at Faversham Lecture Hall on April 5 before a crowded audience. Some excellent instrumental music was provided by an orchestra ('Ruy Blas' overture, March 'Henry VIII.,' Sullivan, and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, with Mr. F. A. Sultenay as soloist), but the chief interest of course centred the work of the choir, which sang part-songs, catches, and quartets by Goetz, Bairstow, Webbe, Schumann, Mackenzie, Beethoven, Bridge, Elgar, and Pinsuti, under the direction of Mr. W. J. Keech. This is a type of concert that should be given wherever a church choir is large enough to provide the variety obtainable from division into T.T.B.B., S.A.T.B., and S.S. choruses. Not only is excellent contrast thus obtained, but the various departments of the choir are developed, and the whole body gains in ease and lightness from the preparation of a well-chosen secular programme.

It is good news that we are to have another opportunity of hearing Marcel Dupré. We understand that he will give a recital at St. John's, Hammersmith, on May 21, at 5.30. Some of our readers know, the organ at St. John's has recently been rebuilt and enlarged by Messrs. Henry Willis Sons and Lewis & Co., and weekly recitals have for some time past been given by eminent players. M. Dupré's programme will include an improvisation.

The organ installed in St. Stephen's, Bow, by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, as a war memorial, was recently dedicated by the Lord Bishop of Stepney. Dr. W. Richards gave the opening recital, playing Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, the first movement of Tchaikovsky's Sonata, Widor's Scherzo in C minor, and the overture to 'Egmont.' The new organ is a three-manual with thirty-two stops and a large number of accessories.

Harold Moore's cantata 'The Darkest Hour,' was sung on Good Friday at Turret Green Baptist Church, Ipswich, by an augmented choir of eighty voices, conducted by Mr. J. W. Gooderham, with Mrs. M. Milton at the organ. This is the third annual performance of the work at Turret Green, the audiences on each occasion exceeding a thousand, and many people being unable to gain admission.

The newly-formed Par and District Choral Society (conductor, Mr. C. S. Edwards) sang Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary' and Easter selections from 'The Messiah' to crowded audiences at St. Mary's Church, Par, and at Tywardreath Parish Church on the afternoon and evening of Palm Sunday, in aid of Camborne and Redruth Distress Funds.

At a service for invalids held in a Tunbridge Wells Church a few weeks ago the vicar accompanied 'When I Survey' on a concertina, although a three-manual organ, electrically blown, was available. Doubtless he had his reasons, but we suggest that future experiments of the kind would not be tried on a congregation of invalids. It seems like taking a mean advantage.

At an organ recital given by Mr. Bertram Hollins at Eckenham Congregational Church recently the audience were unusually favoured in the matter of programme notes. Well-written analyses of Bach's Toccata in C and Harwood's sharp minor Sonata were illustrated by quotations of the chief subjects, the whole being reproduced by some up-dating process—apparently 'Plex.'

'Judas Maccabæus' was sung by the City Temple Choral Society at the City Temple on April 9, under the direction of Mr. Allan Brown. Mr. G. D. Cunningham resided at the organ, and the soloists were Miss Bessie Lang, Miss Beatrice Ashton, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, and Mr. Frederick Taylor.

A performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' took place at St. Peter's Church, Harrogate, on March 20. The soloists were Madame Edith Hartley, Mrs. Hyslop, Mr. W. Smith, and Mr. J. O'Connor. Mr. John Pullein, organist of St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow, was at the organ, and Mr. L. Naylor conducted.

Maunder's 'Penitence, Pardon, and Peace' was sung on April 17 at Welbeck Abbey Chapel by an augmented choir of sixty voices. The soloists were Messrs. Beckett and Rossland. Mr. J. D. Chandler, of St. Peter's, Bournemouth, was at the organ, and Mr. Harry Minchin, organist of the chapel, conducted.

Spohr's 'God, Thou art Great,' was performed at the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, on March 20, with Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson at the organ. Madame Belle Campbell, Madame Dorothy Trueman, Mr. Herbert Gutteridge, and Mr. Ernest Wainer were the soloists.

Varley Roberts' 'Passion' was sung at St. Luke's, Slyne with Hest, Lancaster, on Good Friday, with Mr. F. Laycock and Mr. W. Dennett Davies as soloists. Mr. W. Hodgson was at the organ. A silver collection was taken for St. Dunstan's.

During Mr. R. Goss-Custard's absence, the organ recitals at Bishopsgate Institute, on Friday evenings during May, will be given by Mr. Francis W. Sutton, the sub-organist of Southwark Cathedral. The recitals will commence at 6 o'clock.

On March 23 the choir of Borough Road Baptist Church, S.E., augmented for the occasion, sang Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary' and Stainer's 'The Crucifixion,' the former with orchestral accompaniment. Mr. J. Vanderpump conducted.

On March 23 Mr. Henry Riding opened the organ recently placed in Ongar Congregational Church as a war memorial. The collections amounted to £54.

The following appeared in a recent issue of a Belfast newspaper:

'Mrs. . . . , a young lady with a silvery soprano who sang Costa's "I will extol thee with culture and refinement."'

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. C. F. Eastwood, St. John's, Dumfries—Concerto in B flat, Handel; Fugue in D minor, Bach; Sursum Corda and Alla Marcia, Ireland.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Passacaglia, Karg-Elert; Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Aria, Bach.

Dr. Caradog Roberts, Siloam Congregational Church, Barmouth—Légende, Dvorák; 'Finlandia'; Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury—Alla Marcia, Holloway; 'Farewell,' Stanford.

Mr. Alban Hamer, the Cathedral, Bloemfontein—Sonata No. 4, Bach; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Allegro Grazioso, Frank Bridge; Fantasia in D minor, Stanford.

Mr. G. Bernard Gilbert, Town Hall, Stratford—First movement, Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Caprice, Wolstenholme; Spring Song, Hollins. Public Hall, Canning Town—Fantasia, Silas; First movement, Sonata in A flat, Rheinberger; Solemn Melody, Walford Davies.

Mr. F. C. Welling, St. Michael and All Angels, South Bromley—Choral in A minor, Franck; Caprice, Harvey Grace; Impromptu, Alcock; Grand Chœur, Dubois.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport (two recitals)—Allegro (Sonata No. 1), Bach; Minuet-Scherzo, Jongen; Three Preludes on Welsh hymn tunes, Vaughan Williams; Variations de Concert, Bonnet. Rhodes St. Wesleyan Church, Halifax—Fugue in G, Bach; Prelude on 'St. Mary,' Wood; Sonata, Reubke. Trinity Presbyterian Church, Wigan—Caprice Héroïque, Bonnet; 'Finlandia.'

Mr. Leitch Owen, Edge Hill Parish Church (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Storm Fantasia, Lemmens. Mr. Fred Gostelow, Luton Parish Church—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Good Friday Music ('Parsifal').

Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland, Burton, Westmorland—Fantasia, Byrd; Prelude on 'Irish,' Harwood; Toccata in C, Bach; Sonata in C minor, Mendelssohn; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck.

Mr. Ezra Edson, Primitive Methodist Church, Westgate, Barnsley—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Allegro Cantabile (Symphony No. 5), Widor.

Mr. A. E. Jones, Town Hall, Bolton—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Nocturne, Jones; Grand Chœur in E flat, Guilmant.

Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, Barking Parish Church—Quasi Pastoral, Stuart Archer; Toccata in D minor, Bach; Prelude on 'Rockingham,' Parry.

Dr. G. J. Bennett, Lincoln Cathedral—Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Good Friday Music ('Parsifal'); Finale in B flat, Franck.

Mr. W. Wolstenholme, Audley Range Congregational Church, Blackburn—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Carillon, Sowerbutts; Overture in C sharp minor, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Archibald Farmer, St. Dunstan's-in-the-East—First movement, Sonata No. 1, Bach; 'Good Friday,' de la Tombelle; 'Ein' Feste Burg,' Reger; Fantasia, Silas.

Mr. Arthur E. Sims, Central Hall, Newport—Marche Pontificale, Lemmens; March for a Church Festival, Best. Town Hall Assembly Rooms, Newport—Vesperale and Alpine Sketch, Cyril Scott; Minuet in the style of Handel, Wolstenholme.

Mr. George Ryan, St. Mary the Boltons, South Kensington—Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Harmonies du Soir, Karg-Elert; Fugue in D, Bach.

Mr. Stanley E. Lucas, Trinity Presbyterian Church, Canonbury—A Bach programme.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (four recitals)—Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Prelude on 'St. Mary,' Wood; Solemn Festival, Rheinberger; Choral Improvisation, Karg-Elert.

Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Concert Overture in F, Wolstenholme; Coronation March, Meyerbeer.

Mr. Henry Poole, St. John the Baptist, Burley—Fugue in G minor, Bach; 'Salut d'Amour,' Elgar.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—Introduction and Variations on a Ground Bass, Haynes; Question and Answer, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Stanley Mountford, Nechells Wesleyan Church, Birmingham—'Sursum Corda,' Elgar; 'Finlandia'; March in D, Mountford.

Mr. A. G. Colborn, St. Stephen's, Bristol (American composers)—Festal March, Kroeger; Impromptu, Horatio W. Parker. St. Thomas' City—Sospino, Padro; Entrada, de San Sebastian.

Mr. Paul Rochard, Kendal Parish Church (two recitals)—Prelude to 'Parsifal'; 'Largo' ('New World' Symphony); 'Finlandia'; March in G minor, Elgar.

Mr. B. Langdale, St. George's, Barnsley—'Pilgrim's Progress,' Part 3, Ernest Austin; Nocturne, d'Evry.

Mr. Ambrose P. Porter, St. Matthias, Richmond (four recitals)—Concerto in G minor, Handel; Elegiac Rhapsody, Rootham; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Sonata in A minor, Karg-Elert; Allegro (Sonata in G), Elgar; Phantasie on 'Hallelujah, Praise to God,' Reger.

Mr. Cyril S. Christopher, Grainger's Lane Primitive Methodist Church, Cradley Heath (two recitals)—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Prelude to 'Parsifal'; Sonata in G, Elgar.

Mr. Arthur H. Egg, Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal—Voluntary in D minor, Purcell; Preludes on 'St. Mary,' Wood; 'St. Bride,' Farrar; Toccata-Prelude on 'Vexilla Regis,' Bairdston; Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue, Healey Willan; Symphony No. 2, Vierne; Choral in E, Franck; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Allan Brown, Wesleyan Church, Gillingham—Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Finale from Sonata in F minor, Rheinberger; Melodie in E, Rachmaninov; 'Finlandia.'

Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, St. Andrew's, Holford—Air with Variations, Best; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (three recitals)—Finale from Sonata in F, Rheinberger; Passacaglia in D minor, Reger; Toccata in F, Widor; Toccata in F, Bach; Diithyramb, Harwood.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Voluntary, S. Wesley; Fantaisie in A, Franck; Pastorale, Bonnet.

Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns. Immanuel Church, Streatham Common—Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Preludes on 'Rockingham,' Parry; 'So fervently I long,' Bach. St. John's, Hammersmith—Toccata in A, Purcell; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Prelude on 'Melcombe,' Parry.

Mr. E. T. Cook, Southwark Cathedral—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Fantaisie Pastorale, de Severac; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Toccata, de Maleingreau.

Mr. J. Albert Sowerbutts, St. Lawrence Jewry—Pastorale (Suite in E minor), de Maleingreau; Two Choral Preludes, Bach; Elegiac Prelude, G. J. Bennett; Epilogue, Harvey Grace.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (the recitals)—Marche de Procession, de la Tombelle; First movement (Sonata No. 12), Rheinberger; Requiem, Æternam, Harwood; Fugue in D, Guilmant.

Mr. Alfred Hollins, Clapton Park Congregational Church—Fugue in G minor, Bach; Andante in D and Scherzo, Hollins; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck.

Mr. Noel Ponsonby and Dr. E. W. Naylor, Jesus College Chapel—Variations (Symphony No. 8), Widor; Pavane and Galliard, Byrd; Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Buxtehude.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Eric Brough, organist and choirmaster, Jackson's Lane Wesleyan Church, Highgate, N.

Mr. Frederick W. Flatt, organist and choirmaster, F. Christian Church, Croydon.

Mr. G. S. Pelear, organist and choirmaster, Stockton-Tees Parish Church.

Mr. Henry T. Pringuer, organist, Lindfield Parish Church, Sussex.

Mr. Alec Rowley, organist and choirmaster, St. Alban's, Teddington.

Mr. George Ryan, organist and choirmaster, St. Mary's, Boltons, S.W.

Letters to the Editor

THE 'ST. MATTHEW' PASSION IN SPAIN

SIR,—I send you an item of news worth recording, viz. a performance of Bach's 'Passion according to St. Matthew' which took place at Barcelona on February 27 and March 6. Note the hours of performance—the first part the evening from 5 till 7 p.m., and the second part at night from 10 to 12 p.m. The enclosed prospectus was sent by the Rev. Don José M. Padró, priest-organist of Gerona Cathedral. He writes:

'J'ai été à Barcelone le passé dimanche pour écouter la 'Passion de J. S. Bach selon St. Matthieu.' Elle eut une interprétation et exécution parfaites beaucoup. Could this performance have taken place in any part of Spain but Catalonia?—Yours, &c.,

2, Park View, ARTHUR G. COLBORN
Stapleton, Bristol.

March 8, 1921.

[Below is an extract from the programme kindly sent by Mr. Colborn:

L'Orfeo Català, continuant el seu constant esforç de donar a conèixer les obres cabdals de la música de tots els temps, ha organitzat i preparat amb curiosíssim estudi i intens treball d'unes úniques audicions completes de la 'Passió de Ntre. Sr. Jesucrist segons l'Evangeli de Sant Mateu, de Joan Sebastià Bach,' per a la present Quaresma de 1921. Aquestes dues audicions de la que per tothom és considerada producció més sublim del geni de Bach i monument definitiu de la música, es donaran els diumenges 27 de Febrer i de Març, executant-se la primera part a la tarda, de 5 a 7, i la segona a la nit, de 10 a 12. La gran extensió d'aquesta obra, l'atenció sostinguda que seua audició requereix i la fatiga dels executants imposen aquesta divisió sempre que's tracta, com ara de donar-ne l'audició íntegra.

Solistes Vocals: Andreu Fornells, soprano. Concepció Callao, contralt.—Georg A. Walte, tenor, de Berlín.—Emili Vendrell, tenor.—Sant Jordi, baix.—Ricart Fusté, baix.

Solistes Instrumentals: Prof. Fritz Flemming, Theodor Menge (oboí); Eduard Toldrà (oboí d'amo); Joseph Recasens (violín); Gaspar Cassado (violoncel·la); Grans Orgues: Dr. Albert Schweitzer, de Strassbourg.

Orquestra: Composta de 90 professors.

Massa Choral: Orfeo Català i nombrosos altres d'infants.

Direcció: Mtre. Lluís Millet.]

WHICH?

R.—In answer to a recent letter of mine, averring that Beethoven was the greatest of all composers, Mr. Oscar Penning has written from Palazzo Simonetti, Rome, to the Times, stating that in his opinion, and in that of Joachim, Mozart is the first of all composers, and Bach the next. Of course, this is entirely a matter of taste and conjecture, and I myself have, as every musician must have, the very best admiration for both Mozart and Bach, but I should like to quote the tremendous homage paid by Robert Schumann to Beethoven. After eulogizing Bach, Schumann's (translated from the German) as follows:

'And shall not a whole nation, taught patriotism and greatness of heart by the creations of a Beethoven, make public evidence of gratitude that could be greater a thousandfold? Were I a prince would build a temple in the style of Palladio, to his memory; ten statues should stand within it, and if Thorwaldsen and Dannecken would not execute them, they should at least see that all were executed under their superintendence; nine they should be, these statues, like the number of the Muses, and of his symphonies—Clio the Eroica, Thalia the Fourth, Terpsichore the Pastoral, and so on—himself the divine Apollo. There the German people should assemble from time to time, to celebrate festivals, and there his works should be performed in the highest stage of perfection. Or else take a hundred century-old oak-trees, and write his name with them, in giant letters, on a plain, and carve his likeness in colossal proportions, like Saint Jerome on Lake Maggiore, that he may gaze upon the mountains, as he did when living; and, when Rhine ships pass, and foreigners ask the name of that giant form, every child may answer—it is Beethoven.' Or would you dedicate to him a living monument, build in his name an academy for German music, where music, his word, may be taught, as a trade that any mechanic may choose, but a school of poets, a school of music in the German sense, be opened by the hands of a pure priesthood to the chosen ones only. Rise, throw off your indifference, I remember that the monument will also commemorate yourselves.'

And these glowing words emanate from a composer only a little less great and illustrious than Beethoven himself. Yours, &c.,

ALGERNON ASHTON.

15, Carlton Vale,
Maida Vale, N.W. 6.

April 19, 1921.

'THE EMPEROR'

R.—Would 'Feste' allow me to smile with him at those champions of the second-rate who say that a classic's studies are greater than a modern's strength? Each man naturally have his own views, but he has no need promptly to gird at those of others; and the blind imitation of works like the 'Emperor' Concerto (quoted in recent Musical Times) is, apart from the amusement of it, a little trying.

When compared with architecture and sculpture, with early perfection, music is still in the short petticoat; and it is surely a little unwise to thrust immortality (in large capital letters) upon a work only a century old. I am sure Beethoven would not approve; he was far too good a man to think that music stopped when he died, or to think that all he wrote was for ever. Finally, cannot the enthusiasts realise that adjectives are not argument? And use such long ones! Perhaps a short course of the field. . . . But this is beside the point.—Yours, &c.,

THOMAS WOOD

15, Sandowne House,
Tonbridge, Kent.

(Director of Music, Tonbridge School).

March 17, 1921.

THE SACKBUT, Etc.

R.—I am sorry to have to disappoint the hopes of the Times, but there is unhappily no prospect or possibility of the contingent future agreement of the newspaper editors with myself will result in the transference to them of taste and discrimination! If only this were necessary, the production of a race of critics would be easy, for even I could find quite a number of things whereon to agree with, for instance, 'Feste'—though far be it from me to rank him with ces messieurs of the usual quill-driving tribe.

If it really amuses 'Feste' to believe the implication in the last half of his letter, I have not the heart to deprive him of this simple pleasure and hope he may go on having lots of fun with it. But if he wanted his readers to believe it too, he should have followed the example of certain illustrious colleagues of his, and have taken the precaution first to suppress my letter. Yet he evidently considers honesty of more value than the making, or rather counterfeiting, of a journalistic point, and all honour to him. O si sic omnes!

My point is and remains this (and 'Feste' has not succeeded in destroying it), that, opposed to 'Feste's' 'practically unanimous approval,' there were a few of very considerable critical insight and keen judgment who did not regard the 'Planets' as a work of any importance or significance.—Yours, &c.,

KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.

175, Clarence Gate Gardens,
Regent's Park, N.W.1.
April 10, 1921.

BEETHOVEN AND KNITTING

SIR,—'Barbellion's' caustic comment on female knitters at symphony concerts, as quoted in your April number, recalls an amusing literary parallel in Stinde's 'Buchholz Familie,' where that humorous old philosopher Frau Buchholz also lets herself go on the subject of Beethoven and knitting:

'Das Konzert begann, und kaum fingen die Musiker an zu spielen, als die Bergfeldt einen Strickstrumpf aus der Tasche holte und darauf los strickte, als wollte sie das Entree wieder verdienen. . . . Ich bin ja sehr für den häuslichen Fleiß und hasse das Müßiggehen, aber wenn man seinen Geist im Konzert bilden will, kann man doch die Aufmerksamkeit nicht zursuchen Einer Symphonie und dem Strumpf teilen. Auch glaube ich nicht dass Beethoven seine himmlischen Eingebungen komponierte, damit dazu gestrickt werden sollte.'

Last winter in this town we had a course of University Extension lectures on 'Modern Music,' where ladies knitted. I have also noticed them knitting at Church Congress meetings, though so far not actually in church. Ladies I have asked say they can enjoy the music better when they knit. The matter might be an interesting subject of psychological inquiry. What, for instance, is the exact effect on a solo performer when he spies knitters among the audience?—Yours, &c.,

E. GORHAM GEE.

Granville House,
Granville Road, Leicester.
April 10, 1921.

'TA-RA-RA-BOOM-DE-AY'

SIR,—The resemblance between a feeble popular song tune and a theme in classical chamber music is hardly a subject deserving a long correspondence, but as more than one writer has shown interest in the matter in your columns, it seems worth while to draw attention to a small point which has been apparently overlooked. Beethoven did not compose the theme, 'Pria ch'io impegno,' upon which the last movement of the Clarinet Trio is founded. It is taken from an air in Joseph Weigl's 'Amor Marinaro,' which was no doubt itself a popular song at that time. Beethoven must have seen the possibilities of development latent in an otherwise somewhat crude tune, and therefrom produced the undoubtedly attractive variations already mentioned.

Beethoven's use of this tune is in no way a plagiarism. The title of the air is prefixed to the movement in printed editions of the Trio, and its origin is given in Grove's Dictionary. The one important point is that, though he found the tune useful, Beethoven was not its composer, and never pretended that he was.—Yours, &c.,

'Oakhurst,' Harrow-on-the-Hill. HUGH GARDNER.
April 5, 1921.

SIR,—The letter of Mr. Herbert W. Horwill regarding the supposed resemblance of 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay' to 'classical' music, and the retorts of 'Feste' in his 'Ad Libitum' column are both somewhat pointless, if the facts of the case are realised. It is curious that neither Mr. Horwill nor 'Feste' seem to be aware that the theme of the last movement of Beethoven's Clarinet Trio is in very reality a 'low' popular tune, heard by the composer in a Vienna music-hall, and used, in a spirit of fun, for the theme of these delightful variations. It is a merry tune, surely, with crude rhythmical qualities—not so poor as 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay,' to which it bears little real resemblance except in rhythm. It will be refreshing to 'Feste' (with his strange opinions upon the 'Emperor' 'Scale and Arpeggio' manual) to learn that Beethoven, when he discovered a thoroughly characteristic piece of vulgar music, did not despise it.—Yours, &c.,

74, Lansdowne Road,
London, W. 11.
March 19, 1921.

THOMAS F. DUNHILL.

TREMOLO AND 'TA-RA-RAR'

SIR,—I have recently come across the MS. parts of an overture to an opera, 'Niëser,' by the late W. S. Rockstro. The work was performed under Mendelssohn, and contains an effect which Rockstro claimed to have invented, viz., a smooth, cross-tremolo for strings, continued for twenty or more bars:

Can any of your correspondents quote an example earlier than, say, 1847?

No doubt many instances could be quoted of the employment of the theme of 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay' besides the passage in Beethoven's Clarinet Trio. Mozart used it with gay and charming effect, while Meyerbeer used it in the 98th Psalm. I have no means of referring to Mozart's Divertimenti at the moment, but so far as I remember the passage runs:

When the undergraduates at Oxford clamoured for it on some public occasion, Dr. Lloyd, who was at the organ, played it over first simply and quietly, and then extemporised upon it in a masterly way. It was one of many examples of his characteristic readiness, and his skilful treatment averted what might have been vulgar or absurd. Does it not owe its popularity to the strong accent and compelling rhythm which make 'Nights of Gladness' so successful a waltz?—Yours, &c.,

Eton College, Windsor.
March 14, 1921.

A. M. G.

A MATTER OF GENDER

SIR,—Is there no musical authority, with a knowledge of the English language, to check the growing tendency of English women musicians to describe themselves in un-English terms? Nothing seems to be gained, for while 'violiniste' belongs to no particular tongue, the French pianiste, like our old friends artifex and opifex, is as 'common to either sex' as our English word pianist. It is useless for such composers as Dr. Ethel Smyth—or does she prefer being called a 'composeres'—to insist that music has no sex, if the performers themselves tacitly deny the statement by aping the 'banjoistes,' 'acrobatistes,' and 'bicyclist'es' of another and possibly less elevated form of entertainment.—Yours, &c.,

TOM S. WOTTON.

6, Stockleigh Road,
St. Leonards-on-Sea.

A HANDEL COLLECTION

SIR,—In case it should be of any interest to your readers I should like to inform you that I have recently secured the Earl of Aylesford's collection of Handel transcripts, made by Handel's amanuensis Smith, and given to the late Earl by Jennens, the author of the words of 'The Messiah.' Rockstro in his 'Life of Handel' refers to my collection. It would seem from his work that there are three sets of transcripts—one in Germany, one that, according to Rockstro in 1883, was in the possession of Mr. Barret Lennart of Hampstead, and mine which belonged to the Earl. My collection amounts to nearly a hundred volumes.

I have a large Handel collection, including Hogarth's portrait of the Master exhibited at the Handel Festival in the early 'eighties, and declared by Ruskin and Holm Hunt to be the genuine portrait by Hogarth of Handel.

Yours, &c.,
'Idehurst,' Sevenoaks.

NEWMAN FLOWER.

IT REALLY WAS LOEILLY

SIR,—From the review of MacDowell's 'From the 18th Century' which appears in your current issue, we quote the following:

By the by, we hardly recognise an esteemed old writer under the name of Jean Baptiste Loeilly. What's the matter with 'Lully'? Or is Loeilly somebody else? Grove knows him not.

In reply to this we may say that there is nothing in the matter with Lully, and that Loeilly is somebody else. The former was born in France in 1633, and died in Paris 1687. The latter was born at Ghent, and died in London in 1728.—Yours, &c.,

ELKIN & CO., LTD.
(W. M. Elkin, Director)

8 & 10, Beak Street,
Regent Street, W. 1.
April 2, 1921.

SIR,—Your reviewer of pianoforte music ('C.W.' apparently considers that J. B. Lully and J. B. Loeilly are one and the same individual.

Lully, composer of operas, was born in 1633 and died in 1687.

Loeilly, composer of harpsichord suites, was born at Ghent about 1660, and died in London in 1728. His signature in G minor is to be found in Pauer's 'Alte Meister'.

Yours, &c.,
Park Cottage, Hampstead.
April 10, 1921.

PERCIVAL GARRATT

[C. W., our reviewer, writes: 'Peccavi! Not finding Loeilly in any book of reference, I scented some "tr" spelling of the type editors and critics indulge in at times, e.g., "Chaikowsky," "Skryabin," &c.']

THE ROYAL AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY

SIR,—My attention has been called to the remarkable page 233 of your edition of April: 'Mr. Mount carried the work [of conducting] until the dissolution of the Society only a few years ago.' While it is true that the Society remained in abeyance during the war, in consequence of many of its members being engaged on war service, I write to say that it has now resumed active rehearsals, which fact you may wish to bring to the notice of your readers.—Yours, &c.,

85, Gracechurch Street, E.C. 3.
April 7, 1921.

F. H. RAMSDEN
Hon. Sec.

'WARRING SCHOOLS'

SIR,—Referring to your article 'Warring Schools' in last month's Musical Times, I should like to say that I think M. Charles Koechlin has struck a true note—a note on the silver bell of truth that I think will go on ringing, louder and clearer, as the musical intelligence of present and future generations increases.

I hope many will read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest this useful article.—Yours, &c., 25, Stour Road, Christchurch.
April 9, 1921.

A. H. PRESTON

CONCERT PITCH AND THE DIAPASON NORMAL.

a.—There may be some doubt whether the best brains of the world were engaged in framing the Peace Treaty, but it is generally believed without question that at any rate the most infallible linguists in the world were concerned in settling it down. But attention is being called again and again to mistakes in the translations, such as those concerning Reparation. So far as I can see, there is only one reference to music in the documents, but that one reads like a first-class howler. On page 270, in a list of treaties, we find mention on the French side of 'Convention du 16 et 19 novembre, 1885, relative à la réduction d'un Diapason normal,' and on the English side of 'Convention of November 16 and 19, 1885, regarding the establishment of a concert pitch.' The translator obviously never heard of the world battle between concert pitch and normal diapason, which for the time split the musical world into two opposing armies. After this, of course, there is nothing left for the mere musician but to go on believing that the two are the same—C, 540.—Yours, &c., A. KALISCH.

Sharps and Flats

you think of it, striking one palm against the other and a resounding smack is a queer way of expressing your thought: it suggests a monkey-trick of primeval man.—W. Walkley.

The day will come when audiences will not want to applaud after each movement. Later, the day will come when they will not want to applaud at all, but will go out in complete silence after a great performance of a great work. Before that desirable day dawns the present breed of prima donna conductors will have to die out.—Ernest Newman.

Beethoven is, in fact, a rather tiresome personality.—Dent.

It appears to be the fashion nowadays among a certain class of musical wisecrackers to speak slightlying about Beethoven, the greatest of all composers.—Algernon Ashton. Each the bourgeoisie. . . .—H. E. Northam. Each's B minor Mass begins to grow monotonous.—J. Turner.

Brahms' Trio completed the items; appreciating more than morphia, I remained in fresher air after this.—Leigh Henry.

Sixty Years Ago

from the Musical Times of May, 1861:

HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1861.

The following arrangements have been made by the committee. . . . The sacred works will be given as follows:—1st morning: 'Elijah.' 2nd morning: Spohr's 'Judgment' and the principal part of Handel's 'Samson.' 3rd morning: 'Spring,' from Haydn's 'Seasons'; Mozart's 'Requiem'—the few alterations requisite to fit this great work for performance in a cathedral will be made in the original words; and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' 4th morning: Handel's 'Messiah'; it is proposed to give this Oratorio without omissions generally made. The leading works in the secular programme will be:—1st concert: Overture 'Corydon,' Weber; 'Pastoral Symphony,' Beethoven; a flute solo. 2nd concert: Overture 'Anacreon,' Rubini; 'Italian Symphony,' Mendelssohn; and a flute solo. 3rd concert: Overtures 'Wood Nymphs,' St. Saëns, Bennett, and 'William Tell,' Rossini; and Mendelssohn's popular Cantata, 'Undine.' In order to gratify the taste of the lovers of music for stringed instruments, a concert of chamber music will be given at the College Hall on Friday evening, commencing at about 7, and terminating before 9, thus preventing any interference with the grand ball at the Shire Hall, at the termination of the festival.

The vocalists engaged are Mlle. Titiens, Miss Louisa Pyne, Madame Weiss, Madame Sainton-Dolby, Miss Susan Pyne, Mr. Sims Reeves, Signor Giuglini, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. Winn, and Mr. Weiss. . . .

A programme containing finer works has never yet been issued; a glance at the names of the composers, and a list of the works will, it is hoped, give general satisfaction, and ensure deserved patronage.—Hereford Times.

DUBLIN.—A Re-union of the Philharmonic Society, of which the Lord Lieutenant is president, took place at the Concert Rooms, Great Brunswick Street, on March 20. Miss Emily Spiller and Miss Clara McKenzie were engaged from London, and Miss Cruise and Messrs. Dunne, O'Rourke, and R. Smith also sang. . . . The two ladies from London were of course the attraction of the evening, and several of their vocal performances were encored with much fervour.

WARBLINGS AT EVE. Romance pour pianoforte. Par BRINLEY RICHARDS. Solo, 2s. 6d.; duet, 3s. 'A little gem, as pleasant and cheerful as it is unobtrusive. Anyone can play it, and everyone should play it. As solo or duet, it is equally attractive; such warblings are welcome.'—Musical World. London: Robert Cocks & Co.; and all music-sellers.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

J. S. LITTLE, Mus. Bac., organist of Newbury Parish Church, on March 30. For thirty-seven years he was prominent as a conductor and organizer of musical activities in the South of England. At Newbury he built up a remarkably good choral society and an excellent orchestra (full wind and brass included) of local players. He also conducted for various long periods the English Ladies' Orchestral Society, Handel Society, Avon Vale Musical Society, Bournemouth Amateur Orchestral Society, and several others, and he was on the staff of Reading University College. Mr. Little had a profound knowledge of the theory and history of music, of all the works of the great composers, and of the technique of the various instruments, being himself a skilled performer on the violin (his principal instrument), the viola, pianoforte, and organ. These qualities, but above all his unselfish and enthusiastic love for music, made him an inspiring and successful teacher and conductor.

HOWARD SMITH, on March 13, for fifty years hon. secretary of the City Glee Club, treasurer for twenty-two years, and president for his last season. He had an extraordinarily wide knowledge of madrigals, glees, &c., and a happy gift of resurrecting old music from unexpected sources.

THE RELATION OF CHURCH MUSIC TO THE MUSICAL LIFE OF THE NATION

Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson took the above as the subject of his paper read before the Musical Association on February 15. As showing the importance of Church music, he estimated that throughout England there must be quite half a million of persons connected with it, while probably the organist's was the most numerous branch of the musical profession. In a vast number of cases the church or chapel choir was the one form of definitely-musical organization to be found in a district. The organist was in many cases the most prominent professional musician in the district, and by his energy and capacity, or the reverse, he had the power of making or marring the musical life of quite a large community. Yet very little attention was bestowed upon this enormous mass of executants by the general musician, and few of our rising composers cared two straws about Church music as a serious art-form. If it were objected that the general standard of performance by church choirs was not good enough, the remedy was to provide them with good music within their powers, and, by encouraging them, to lead them to improve. Merely to ignore them was to waste a great opportunity. Where else could such a public be obtained, and was it not worth while to write even the simplest thing that might be learned and loved by thousands? Another reason might be that the style considered necessary for Church music did not attract the average composer, but the anthem, at any rate, provided a pretty wide scope. If more interesting music were written for the Church by contemporary composers the standard of performance would certainly be raised. There was need for more anthems, especially for special seasons, and there was ample scope for short Church cantatas.

The musical equipment of churches might conveniently be considered under three headings:

- (1.) Village choirs;
- (2.) Ordinary parish churches in towns;
- (3.) Cathedrals or college chapels and certain important churches.

Any choir might be said to have two distinct functions:

- (a.) To lead the praises of the congregation;
- (b.) To minister to the congregation by its interpretation of great thoughts expressed in music, and at the same time to offer worship on behalf of all who were present.

There was a strong and increasing demand for good congregational singing in our churches. If such were wanted, music must be chosen which was really adapted to this purpose. The essentials were suitable pitch and melodic interest.

In village choirs, unison-singing should be the rule, as it was rarely possible to get a properly balanced number of voices able to sing in harmony. In small towns or ordinary parish churches we might reasonably expect to get a choir with the four parts adequately represented, and with some real artistic possibilities. Here, again, the basis of the music should be congregational, but there was no reason why anthems should not be frequently introduced, so long as they could be well sung, and the church cantata also formed a valuable feature in the possibilities. In cathedral or collegiate choirs, and the choirs of churches of cathedral type, the congregational element, though it should never be lost sight of, was not of main importance. In his experience, the lecturer felt that so long as the music was simple, and not pitched too high, village singing was reasonably satisfactory. The boys were better than the men, and harmony singing was seldom successful. Congregational singing was fair, and evidently greatly dependent upon a good lead from the boys. As to town choirs, these varied greatly, but the material was not bad. Where there was a good organist the boys were nearly always good, but the best available men seldom seemed to be attracted. In cathedrals, the finest singing could frequently be heard.

Anything like elaborate music was infinitely more effective when choirs were augmented; with the ordinary small choirs, the best and most artistic results were obtained when their efforts were confined to the simpler things. The realisation of this principle would do more than anything else to improve the general level of Church music.

The greatest need in country choirs was undoubtedly expert guidance. There should be in each diocese a sort of diocesan inspector of Church music, whose whole time should be spent in visiting choirs, training them and helping them on week-days, and hearing them or playing for them, and showing them how to do things, on Sundays. Ordinary parish church choirs suffered chiefly from not getting the right sort of music to sing. There was plenty of good and efficient material, but the choice of music was often exceedingly poor. A higher standard ought to be aimed at, and if the music were brought more into line with the musical thought of the day, better singers would be attracted and the whole level would be immeasurably raised.

Many cathedral choirs found themselves in a perilous position to-day, which threatened the stability of the whole of the venerable system which had for so many hundreds of years been a valued part of our national life. This position was brought about chiefly through lack of adequate funds, but partly, too, through the apathy of Cathedral Chapters. In the memory of most of us the choral service was chanted twice daily in almost every cathedral church. It was a piece of definite musical organization of which we had reason to be proud, and the like of which could not be matched in any other country in the world. But what did we find to-day? Cathedrals where several of the week-day services were plain, where certain 'dumb days' were the rule, and where at holiday times not a note of music was to be heard! This was all wrong. The first clearly-defined object of all these ancient cathedral foundations was the maintenance of a constant round of dignified worship: the musical staff was every bit as much an integral part of the system as the Deans and Chapters themselves. It was not right that necessary economies should all be effected at the expense of the music. The real reason was not only financial, it was partly because the Chapters did not themselves care sufficiently for music. It made the services longer, and took them from other things that they deemed more important. They should not accept these offices unless they could accept the obligations involved in them. Unless musicians, both professional and amateur, took a strong line of protest against these encroachments on the musical rights of the Church and the country, we should in a few years be faced with non-choral services the general rule on week-days, and these would very soon be followed by an amateur choir on Sundays.

Mr. Nicholson went on to discuss the true relation of art to religion, and particularly to public worship. Any attempt to make an art take the place of religion was foredoomed to failure; on the other hand, religion as expressed in public worship was at best a somewhat barrier thing where art was entirely ignored. The nearest secular analogy to religious art was to be found in the drama, where all the arts contributed their share to the general scheme but all in subordination to the central idea. In public worship, as in the drama, all the factors should be studied as one. Architects, artists, ritualists, musicians, and of course clergy, should all work together for this common end, that art in the Church should show that unity of purpose and design without which the attainment of true beauty was impossible. Were such a view of religious art generally accepted, the appeal to general musicians would be far stronger than it was at present. They would feel that they were being asked to contribute their share to a real, live art-form, and not merely to engage their talent in an unimportant detail with which they had no special sympathy. Church music would be raised from a condition of more or less ineffective complacency to take its place alongside the other great art-forms of the world.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY

The second congress of the British Music Society will be held in London on June 13-20. Two orchestral concerts are announced. The first programme includes Bantock's 'Hebridean' Symphony, Goossens' 'Eternal rhythm', Holbrooke's Prelude to 'Bronwen', 'The lark rising' by Vaughan Williams (a new work for solo violin and orchestra), a short work by Ernest Farrar, and Cyril Scott's Pianoforte Concerto, played by the composer. The second programme is to be arranged by plébiscite. The conducting will be shared by Messrs. Hamilton Harty, Eugène Goossens, Adrian Boult, and Walter Damrosch. Mr. John Coate gives a British song-recital on June 15. Chamber music, church music, and the madrigalian period will be represented, and morning discussions will take place at Æolian Hall.

'THE PEEP-SHOW' AT THE HIPPODROME

We received tickets for the new production at the London Hippodrome, presumably in order that we might comment on the music. But the musical side of the performance struck us as being negligible, when it was not annoying. In the matter of 'straight' singing, only Miss Desirée Ellinger is to be taken seriously, and she has too little to do, and no music worth her while. The tenor who took the floor in 'An old Dutch garden' was apparently from the Continent, if we may judge from his pronunciation of the few words that reached us. He showed a robust faith in the appeal of the long and loud high note—confidence justified by the applause. He was announced on the programme as 'The Voice'—fitly, for he was nothing more. Mr. Tate's music is in the reminiscent vein that to be expected in entertainments of this kind. The part of the show in which we found any musicality was the series of extracts from popular songs of forty years ago. These old friends, admirably imitated, proved that the 'great successes' of our boyhood are not more inane than those of the present day. Some of our correspondents will be interested to hear that 'a-ra-boom-de-ay' brought down the house as of old, largely to the big drum. Had our enjoyment ended on the music, then, we should have spent a dull evening. Fortunately there was some admirable work by comedians, Stanley Lupino being a host in himself. Allandale, with his different method and fewer opportunities, was only a little way behind him, and the versatile Vivian made a good third. Indeed, it is rare to find a comedian so genuinely funny at its first performance; the comedian as a rule has to be worked up during a few experimental weeks. The 'Peep-Show' is already one of the best and best entertainments in London. When it is over it will be better still.

H. G.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

Birmingham Bach Society is making efforts to bring local music-lovers examples of Bach's cantatas and old works unknown to the general public. On March 13 the Society introduced an early cantata by Bach, the first Sunday in Advent, written to Neumeister's 'Komm der Heiden Heiland,' and Schutz's cantata of eleven last words. The programme also contained a 'Missa Grossa' by Handel, with Miss Marjorie Astbury, Beatrice Peaty, and Miss Joan Willis as solo vocalists. Mr. Bernard Jackson is to be complimented on the excellent concert, which will go far to establish his reputation as an earnest and capable musician. He now hears little at Birmingham of Mr. George D. who for a period of ten years gave an excellent series of orchestral concerts. He still retains, however, the patronage of the Stourbridge Concert Society, which has completed its thirty-fifth season. On March 14 he gave a vivid performance of Brahms' Requiem and Dvorák's Requiem, which were greatly appreciated by the Stourbridge public.

Max Mossel's fourth and last concert of the season was given at the Town Hall on March 15. On this occasion Gordon Ronald conducted a small but effective orchestra of local musicians in the 'Nozze di Figaro,' Haydn's Symphony in G, and Schumann's 'Forte Concerto,' with Miss Irene Scharrer as soloist. Vocalist was Mr. Augustus Milner, an artist well worth listening to.

'Giawatha' (Parts I and 2) formed the Birmingham Union's programme at the Town Hall on March 19. The singing idiom and appealing choral writing come upon the listener with renewed delight every time he hears the 'Giawatha' cycle. The chorists were particularly full in 'The Death of Minnehaha,' which never fails to bring a spell of emotion upon its hearers. Not only the chorists but also the orchestra and soloists—Miss Doris Watkins, Mr. Ernest Ludlow, and Mr. Saul—rendered a most effective service. Mr. Richard Wassell conducted with his usual close attention to every detail. Mr. C. W. Watkins was the organist.

London Philharmonic String Quartet took the place of the City of Birmingham Orchestra at Mr. Appleby's Sunday Concert at the Theatre Royal on March 20. This masterly organization gave us an ideal performance of Debussy's Quartet in G minor, and Dvorák's famous 'Negro Quartet,' Op. 96, Joseph Haydn's 'Three Shakespeare Pieces,' the beautiful 'Cantabile' from Tchaikovsky's Quartet, and the 'Molly on the Shore.' A number of pianoforte pieces were played by the clever young pianist, Miss M. J. Jones.

The customary terminal concert in connection with the Birmingham Institute School of Music was given in the large Lecture Theatre on March 21, under Prof. Granville Bantock's direction. The full orchestra of the School, assisted by the professors of the various departments, also took part as usual. The entire programme was culled from the compositions of Jean Sibelius, the works performed being 'En Saga,' the tone-poem 'The Swan of Tuonela,' and the third Symphony. Two groups of songs were finely given by Miss Agatha Hughes and Miss Hilda Raybould. We have heard here of late so much of Sibelius' music that there is no need to refer to it again. Prof. Bantock, who is a great admirer and supporter of Sibelius, attained realistic performances, much to the credit of the orchestra.

The fifth and last chamber concert of the season, given under the auspices of the Birmingham Chamber Concert Society, took place at the Royal Society of Artists' Gallery on March 22. Mozart's String Quintet in C major, and Tchaikovsky's Sextet in D minor, for two violins, two violas, and two violoncellos, were performed by the Catterall Quartet, assisted by Mr. Paul Beard and Mr. Leonard Dennis. The composer has appended the title 'Souvenir de Florence' to the Sextet (which was published in 1892, a year before his death), and the music may stand as a kind of reflex of sunny Italian skies and the dolce far niente existence. The performers infused a great deal of character into their work, which strongly appealed to a large audience.

Plentiful provision was made for Good Friday music. In addition to performances of Stainer's 'Crucifixion,' given at many places of worship, Bach's 'St. John' Passion was performed at the Town Hall by the Midland Musical Society, under Mr. A. J. Cotton's conductorship. The principals were Miss Margaret Harrison, Miss Mary Fisher, Mr. John Aiken (Hereford Cathedral), Mr. A. Wrigglesworth (Chichester Cathedral), Mr. James Howell, and Mr. Towers. The solo viola di gamba was played by Mr. J. C. Hock, and Mr. C. W. Perkins officiated at the organ.

At the Repertory Theatre, Mr. Appleby Matthews again gave two performances of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion. The excellent choir of fifty voices was especially successful in the chorales, and the small orchestra did very well indeed. The soloists were Dr. Tom Goodey, Mr. William Willetts, Miss Doris Watkins, and Miss Helen Anderton, who sang artistically and with great fervour. Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted what was an excellent performance on the whole.

The sixth and last Symphony Concert at the Town Hall, on April 6, deserved to be better attended than it was. The conductor was Mr. Landon Ronald, and the programme comprised the Overture to 'Oberon,' Rachmaninov's Symphony in E minor, Butterworth's 'A Shropshire Lad,' Dvorák's 'Carneval' Overture, and the conductor's Suite, 'The Garden of Allah.'

At the Sunday Concert at the Town Hall on April 10, the famous Glasgow Orpheus Choir gave a delightful concert of part-songs under its own conductor, Mr. Hugh S. Robertson. The programme was the same as that given by the Choir at the Royal Albert Hall, London.

The last Popular Concert of the season in connection with the Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association took place at the Town Hall on April 9. Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducted, and submitted a programme of a distinctly miscellaneous but well chosen character. The choral work given was Stanford's 'The Revenge,' with which the chorists are well acquainted and which one was glad to hear again. There was plenty of work for the well-balanced orchestra. Other items of interest were a selection from Gounod's 'La Reine de Saba,' and a selection from Sullivan's 'Mikado.' The novelty was the conductor's first performance here of a miniature suite, 'Alpine Scenes.' Mr. Arthur Cooke was the solo pianist, Mr. Percival Hodgson solo violinist, and solos on the flute and piccolo were also given by Mr. Walter Heard. A first appearance at these concerts was made by Miss Claire Davis, a soprano gifted with a pleasing and well-trained voice.

Debussy's 'Blessed Damozel' is not new to Birmingham audiences, and its revival by the Festival Choral Society at its final concert of the season at the Town Hall on April 13 was anticipated with more than ordinary pleasure, especially as Sir Henry Wood conducted the performance. The interpretation he secured was far in advance of that given by this Society in February, 1919. The work was first performed by the Société Nationale de Musique in 1893, under its French title 'La Damselle Elue,' set to music for female voices, soli, chorus, and orchestra. Evidently the poem strongly appealed to Debussy's love of abstract reverie, for he has created a musical picture of marvellous ethereal delicacy and dramatic fancy. The tone-quality of the female voices was an outstanding feature of the Choral Society's performance, and Sir Henry once more showed his perfect command over his choral and orchestral forces. The programme also included a 'Meistersinger' selection, Bach's accompanied Motet, and Boëllmann's 'Fantaisie-Dialogue' for orchestra and organ (Mr. C. W. Perkins). The principal artists of the evening were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Alice Vaughan, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Robert Radford.

BOURNEMOUTH

The twenty-sixth season of Symphony Concerts is hastening to its close, but the near approach of the appointed date has not been accompanied by any reduction of interest. On the contrary, some of the later programmes have been fuller of incident than those which inaugurated this highly enterprising series.

The popularity of Schubert's majestic C major Symphony is a little obstructed by insistent demands for multitudinous rehearsals of the 'Unfinished,' but at Bournemouth, at any rate, the imposing C major example meets with a recognition that is commensurate with its deserts. On March 17 the work was played with rare finish by the Municipal Orchestra, and it is doubtful if Mr. Dan Godfrey has ever given us a more virile interpretation of the music. Holbrooke's tone-poem, 'The Viking,' was the novelty at this concert. It is a decidedly strepitant and crowded score, and its lack of refinement might not have been so apparent had the composer resorted to a little weeding out and the elimination of unessentials. Mr. Godfrey secured a spirited performance, but the work was rather coldly received by the audience. Mr. Norman Wilks, in César Franck's beautiful Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra revealed himself as a pianist of no mean order. His style, sense of touch, and technical equipment generally are quite enviable. It was only occasionally, on the interpretative side, that any adverse criticism could be brought to bear upon the performance.

Rarely is it necessary to censure the compilation of a programme at the Winter Gardens. It must, however, have been generally conceded that on March 24 the programme lacked authoritative distinction. A reasonably good performance of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony was the most acceptable feature. Nor must we overlook some pleasing playing by Mr. S. Clifford, a member of the Orchestra; but the composition in which he elected to be heard—Daniel von Goens' Violoncello Concerto in A minor—is a most invertebrate conception. This was the occasion of its first performance in England. Another first performance was that of Mr. van Someren-Godfrey's Rhapsody (No. 2), 'From the Hebrides,' a graceful piece of writing, if somewhat characterless in style. Its incidental employment of fugal methods is hardly consonant with the unaffected folk-tune material. The remaining number in the programme, Beethoven's 'Prometheus' Overture, is unadulterated Mozart—but not the Mozart of the G minor Symphony.

Granville Bantock's 'Hebridean' Symphony (first performance at these concerts) was the conspicuous event at the twenty-sixth concert. The composer conducted, and was accorded a splendid reception. The Symphony is an impressive work, abounding in the novel effects and multiform splashes of colour which go so much to individualise the conceptions of this eminent musician. The atmosphere of vastness—a similar atmosphere to that conjured up by Mendelssohn in his Hebridean exploit—and the vividness of the heroic incidents so graphically suggested, are manipulated with much skill. The orchestra excelled itself in the performance of this exacting number, and the composer was obviously delighted with the splendid playing of all departments. The soloist at this concert was Miss Chilton Griffin, who was heard to much advantage in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto. Her only fault was an occasional hardness of tone in the louder passages.

On April 7 the magnificent E minor Symphony of Brahms was brilliantly played, the abundant applause bestowed upon Mr. Godfrey and his confrères being thoroughly deserved. Elgar's Violin Concerto had not until this concert been heard here for some time, and memories of unforgettable performances by Kreisler and Albert Sammons still remain. At the concert under review Miss Tessie Thomas undertook the intricate solo part, and was entirely successful upon this point. The exacting technical requirements were completely met, and the performer's tone and style were admirable. As on the interpretative side, however, that Miss Thomas revealed some deficiencies, her ability to explore the emotional content of the music being somewhat restricted. Given a few years and Miss Thomas will play the Concerto in far more intimate fashion.

BRISTOL

To the deep regret of us all, the last of the Quincentenary concerts, at which Sir Henry Wood and the London Symphony Orchestra were to present a very fine programme on their first visit, on April 12, stands postponed to May owing to the labour troubles. Thus Messrs. Duck, Son & Co. Pinker's plucky effort to keep faith with the Bristol public is brought to naught.

Miss Felice Lyne paid her first visit to Bristol on March 14, when the last 'international celebrity' concert took place at Colston Hall. There was a small attendance, but much enthusiasm. Titania's song from 'Mignon' given by this brilliant artist a fitting introduction to Bristol. Frederic Lamond and Mr. Huberman played the 'Kreutzer' Sonata with breadth and unity.

Gounod's 'Redemption' was smoothly and sympathetically presented by the combined choirs of St. Mary Redcliff and St. Mary, Tyndall's Park, at the former church on March 13, under the direction of Mr. C. W. Stear, with Mr. R. Morgan at the organ. These church musical functions draw large congregations of music-lovers.

On March 16 Mr. Goss-Custard gave two highly appreciated organ recitals at Colston Hall, in connection with the Bristol Municipal Concerts.

A successful conclusion and a better attendance marked the final Max Mossel concert of the season, on March 17, at Colston Hall. Miss Irene Scharrer played the 'Moonlight' Sonata with artistic expressiveness, and exhibited much understanding in a group of Chopin pieces. The London String Quartet paid us a first visit, and its beautiful ensemble and phrasing enchanted everyone. Miss Mign Nevada and Mr. Frank Mullings sang with their usual good effect.

Easter performances of 'The Crucifixion' included the four choirs, St. Clement, St. Barnabas, St. Paul, and Wick, under Mr. F. Lear, at the Church of the first-named on March 21.

One of the good signs of the times is the activity of district choral societies at Bristol. Among the best of these is the Cecilian, composed of Messrs. J. S. Fry & Sons, employees, and under the discriminating care of Mr. Charles Read they gave 'The Messiah' at Colston Hall for Good Friday concert, with excellent results. They numbered with the orchestra about three hundred, and are doing creditable work. Miss Hilda Blake, a clever soprano, Miss May Keene, a local contralto of merit, Mr. Richard Ripley and Mr. Samuel Dyson made a valuable quartet of principal voices.

Bristol South Choral Society, another live local society, gave 'The Death of Minnehaha' and Macfarren's 'May Day' on April 2 at Totterdown Y.M.C.A. Hall. Miss H. Stowar and Mr. Sydney Smith were the vocalists. The choral work was highly creditable, and choir and orchestra numbering about sixty, under Mr. Reginald T. Youssell, showed they had devoted much attention to perfecting themselves in the details of the works.

Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was effectively performed by a choir of seventy voices made up of the Trinity Presbyterian and Redland Park Church choirs, the former church, on April 8. Mr. C. W. Casley (Redland Park) conducted, and there was a small orchestra.

Miss Dorothy Silk very daintily sang some old English songs and a Somervell group at the last concert of the New Philharmonic Society at Colston Hall on April 10.

programme that was instructive in modern music was acted by Mr. Arnold Barter for his choir, and included William Williams' 'Five Mystical Songs' and Holst's 'Mystical Hymns' from the 'Rig Veda,' in which Mr. Herbert Rivers gave invaluable assistance. The choir was uneven, wanted more power and tone, but it is, even with its comparatively small strength, doing very much to promote a wedge of modern music at Bristol. The orchestraed Julius Harrison's 'Worcestershire Pieces' and Herbert Howells' 'Puck's Minuet' with good effect. Madame Hilda Blake (soprano) gave a recital at her home place, Bath, on March 22. The Assembly Rooms were well filled, and Madame Blake's charming and cultured singing was heard with much pleasure. Letters in the local press evidently show that Bristolians are taking more interest in their great possession, the Weston Hall organ, a magnificent specimen, and the wishes of patrons as to programmes by the special players who visit the city are being increasingly considered.

CORNWALL

Mr. H. S. Middleton, who was appointed organist of Truro Cathedral last autumn, has already made his presence felt by breaking up the deadness which had characterised musical matters at Truro during several years past. Mr. Williams, organist of St. Mary's Wesleyan Church, had been the only musician with courage to attempt anything, but his efforts were interrupted by the war. Mr. Middleton revived and reconstituted the Philharmonic Society, and on March 15 this organization was joined by that from Plymouth for a performance of 'The Messiah' in the cathedral, with chorus and orchestra of two hundred. The latter was augmented, and very unsatisfactorily, by professional players from Plymouth, who seemed to be entirely inexperienced. Even so, the fine singing of the choir was memorable, and Mr. Middleton's reading was dignified and good. The principal soloists, Miss Fifi de la Côte, Miss Helen Sara, Mr. Dean Trotter, and Mr. Walter Belgrave, succeeded in spite of the band where lesser artists must have failed. Mr. W. Brennan Smith was at the organ.

Part-singing was heard from St. Day Choral Society on March 16, conducted by the Rev. W. W. Bickford; and 'Athalia's Wedding-Feast' was performed by St. Austell Choral Society on March 31, conducted by Mr. W. Brennan Smith, and by Lostwithiel Choral Society on April 5, conducted by Mr. E. A. Russell, in both cases with orchestra.

Household Male Choir, at its annual concert on March 19, conducted by Mr. Fred Roach in good performances of part-songs as 'Rouse ye, comrades,' 'Martyrs of the Faith,' 'The Beleaguered' (de Rille), 'Awake, Æolian' (Cooke), and some humorous numbers.

For some years and through many vicissitudes Miss Edith Blight has endeavoured to maintain a female choir at Truro, and now it is established on a permanent basis in connection with the Women's Institute. Miss Blight is an enthusiast as well as a capable trainer and musician, and has sung Somervell's cantata, 'Joan of Arc' was sung on March 31 with real artistic success. Part-singing was also heard in several other pieces with beautiful effect. Morval Choral Society sang Part 1 of 'The Redemption' on April 1, under the direction of Mr. E. Harvey Pinches at the organ. Truro Choral and Orchestral Society and Mousehole Choral Society performed 'The Messiah' on the same date, conducted by Mr. P. P. Wedlake and Mr. J. Irving Thomas respectively; and on April 7 Stokeclimsland Choral Society, conducted by the Rev. C. B. Walters, performed 'The May Queen' and part-songs. Lenten music was performed by the Truro Choral Society, Redruth United Choirs, and the Columb Church choir.

Truro Orchestral Society gave a good programme on March 16, conducted by Mr. Wray Palliser. A folk-singing festival at Penzance, in March, brought together hundreds of dancers, young and otherwise, and pupils who passed through instructional classes, Boy Scouts, girls' clubs, and Penzance County School, &c., presented a comprehensive exhibition. Redruth Choral Society gave a really excellent performance of Elgar's 'The Spirit of England,' and John S. Arkwright's poem 'The Supreme Sacrifice,' to a tune by Dykes. A capable orchestra played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto with Mrs. Gregory Rich, and instrumental music from Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' Dr. Rivers conducted.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

The latter part of March, though it brought with it a momentary lull in local musical life (occasioned in part, no doubt, by the two final weeks in Lent), in no sense saw the end of the season. There is a full month's round of engagements to be fulfilled before concert-halls close their doors for the summer months.

At the fifth concert this season given by the Coventry Musical Club, the singing of the Male-Voice Choir under Mr. John Chapman was again a feature.

Passiontide and Holy Week in the Cathedral city were marked by the performance of appropriate works such as 'The Crucifixion' and 'Olivet to Calvary' in several churches. Some attractive Church music was heard in the Cathedral at the Easter services. At St. Osburg's Church, on Easter Sunday morning, Mozart's seventh Mass was very creditably performed, and Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle' ('St. Cecilia') was heard at St. John's Church on Sunday, April 3.

Mr. Walter Warren arranged an interesting programme of music for the Holy Week and Easter services at St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church, Leamington. The organ recital given by Mr. Walter Hoyle in the Cathedral on Easter Monday attracted a very large assembly.

In connection with the observance of 'Warriors' Day,' special concerts were organized at Coventry and the neighbouring towns to take place either on or about April 3.

Coventry music-lovers are interesting themselves in a new work by Mr. Edgar Bainton, the son of a Free Church minister in the city. Mr. Bainton (reference to whose new Pianoforte Concerto was made in these columns in the March issue) has composed a Symphony for contralto, chorus, and orchestra, entitled, 'Before Sunrise,' which has just had its first performance at Newcastle.

At Leamington, the Orchestral Society, under the baton of Mr. Walter Warren, gave its second Subscription Concert in the Town Hall on April 2, when the programme included the Adagio and Scherzo from Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 and the 'Freischütz' Overture. Miss Millicent Russell's songs ranged from Gluck to Eric Coates, and violin solos were contributed by Miss Winifred Game.

During the term which has just concluded at Rugby School, organ recitals by well-known local instrumentalists were given from time to time in the School Chapel.

A new Choral Society has been formed at Kenilworth. It is for female voices only, and at its first concert on March 31 gave Battison Haynes' cantata, 'The Fairies' Isle,' and other works. Miss H. E. English conducted.

A new musical organization was inaugurated on April 2, when the Armstrong-Siddeley Military Band gave its first concert at the Parkside Canteen, under the conductorship of Mr. J. H. Williams, late bandmaster of the 2nd Kent Royal Garrison Artillery. The band acquitted itself well, the performers presenting satisfactory readings of various popular works. Vocal support was lent by the Westwood Quartet and Miss Frances Petty (vocalist).

DARLINGTON AND DISTRICT

The Darlington Chamber Music Society completed a very successful season on March 9 at Polam Hall, with a concert by the London String Quartet. The programme comprised Mozart's Quartet in D minor, the Andante Cantabile from Tchaikovsky's Op. 11, and Beethoven's C sharp minor Quartet, Op. 131. Stainer's 'Crucifixion' received some admirable performances in the district just before Easter; the choir of the Parish Church, under Dr. Kitson, gave Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary,' and at St. Hilda's Church, Handel's Passion Oratorio and Gounod's 'Stabat Mater' were sung on Good Friday evening with orchestral accompaniment. Handel's work aroused considerable interest, and the Church was filled to overflowing. The orchestra, in addition to the accompaniments of the choral work, played the Andantino from Mozart's Symphony in D.

Mr. T. Henderson conducted. On March 16 Mr. Edgar L. Bainton, of Newcastle, lectured at the Darlington Students' Association on 'The Modern drift of Music,' with pianoforte illustrations from Debussy, Scriabin, and John Ireland. There was a large attendance. The Middlesbrough Musical Union, under Dr. Kilburn, gave a fine performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' at the Town Hall on March 9.

The Stockton and Thornaby Choral and Orchestral Society at its second concert gave 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and a miscellaneous programme of part-songs and orchestral compositions, the latter including Beethoven's first Symphony and the Allegro from Mozart's Symphony in G minor. Mr. Webster conducted.

DEVON

Visiting Exeter on March 29, the Black Diamond Concert Male Choir, conducted by Mr. E. T. Jenkins, was disappointing in that throughout the programme the conductor accompanied at the pianoforte. The singers had plenty of vigour, and displayed good quality of tone, but what they could really do in the way of interpretation could only be inferred. Undoubtedly they were a fine body of voices, with more verve and sense of rhythm than many Welsh choirs, but again disappointment was felt at their choice of music.

Plymouth Co-operative Adult Choir has now grown to a membership of eighty voices, under its new conductor, Mr. T. Martin, and on March 12 sang part-songs. The Junior Choir, conducted by Mr. H. Woodward, gave a good programme on April 6. A new Glee Society at Bishopsteignton made its first appearance on March 29, conducted by Mr. H. W. Hawker; on the same date Ottery St. Mary Choral Society sang 'The Hymn of Praise,' conducted by Mr. Stanley Chipperfield. Plymouth Madrigal Society (Dr. Harold Lake) is a highly-cultured body of singers, and on March 23 sang Part I of Holst's Choral Hymns from the 'Rig Veda,' with orchestra and organ. The R.M.L.I. band played the 'Good Friday' music from 'Parsifal,' and some interesting Irish Tone Sketches by B. W. O'Donnell, brother of Mr. P. S. G. O'Donnell, now musical director of the Grenadier Guards Band.

North Tawton Choral Society came forward on April 6, when the singers were creditably heard in 'Joan of Arc,' conducted by Mr. H. Phillips. On April 7 the Budleigh Salterton Choral Society (Mr. Hugh Fowler) sang 'The Ancient Mariner' and 'The May Queen,' with Madame Isabel Hickson and Mr. Walter Belgrove as chief soloists, and supported by an efficient small orchestra. The plucky Choral Society at Beer sang 'The Revenge' on April 8, conducted by Mr. R. Silver.

The choir formed at Plymouth for the Mayflower celebrations last September has been put on a permanent basis under the training of Mr. T. Martin, and performed 'The Messiah' on April 10.

That much progress has been made recently by Exeter Male Choir (Mr. W. J. Cotton) was revealed on April 11, when good interpretations were given of such contrasted pieces as two cavalier songs by Bantock ('Marching along' and 'Give a rouse'), Goss 'O Thou, Whose beams,' Mackenzie's 'Newquay Fishermen's Song,' and a three-part glee by Battishill, 'Underneath the myrtle shade.' Improvement was chiefly noticed in quality of tone and variety of colour.

Lenten performances were too numerous for detailed mention, but the performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion by the Cathedral and Voluntary Choirs at Exeter must be noticed as something memorable, Dr. Ernest Bullock being responsible for fine singing and earnest interpretation. Passion music was elsewhere performed by choral societies at Ivybridge, Plymouth, Alphington (deserving special encouragement), Abbotsbury, North Tawton, Tedburn St. Mary, Revelstoke, Honiton, Exmouth, Ottery St. Mary, Penzance, Torre, Paignton, Tavistock, and Beer.

The April meeting of Exeter Chamber Music Club was chiefly memorable for pianoforte music by H. J. Edwards, Chopin, Debussy, and Mendelssohn, played by Dr. H. J. Edwards, and for a realistic performance of 'On Wenlock Edge,' by Mr. Dean Trotter (vocalist), Dr. Ernest Bullock (pianoforte), and a capable quartet of strings. Torquay has been visited by the Russian pianist, Le Pouishneff, and by the London String Quartet, with Miss Irene Scharrer, when the audience enjoyed Goossens' 'B the Tarn,' Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet, and Quartets by Dohnányi and Mozart. On March 31, at Torquay, a small orchestra, conducted by Mr. H. G. Crocker, played music by Sir Henry Bishop ('Les Meuniers'), Coleridge-Taylor ('Dream Dances'), Grainger, Tchaikovsky, and Brahms. Mr. Walter Belgrove sang 'And did those Feet' and 'Love is a bable' (Parry), and Mrs. W. H. Mortimer played pianoforte solos.

Members of the south-west section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians met at Teignmouth on April 9, and listened to an interesting address on the 'Musical Era' given by the hon. secretary, Dr. Emilie B. Guard. Mr. H. M. Lamerton presided.

Mr. Edward Petherick's string orchestra at Exeter, trained by Mr. A. J. James, can now play delightfully, and has given two performances of a well-arranged programme including Grieg's 'Holberg' Suite, an 'Elegie' by Elgar, Parry's 'Lady Radnor' Suite, and lighter music by Tchaikovsky, Natchez, German, Fletcher, and Grainger. Mr. L. Cardew Bickley has formed and trained for eight months a string orchestra of twenty-three players at Seaton who on April 1 were heard in Handel's 'Occasional Overture and smaller pieces. An enterprising orchestra, Winkleigh, formed by the Rev. Boyton-Smith last autumn at its first concert on April 6, played Costa's 'Eli' Marc the Gloria from Mozart's twelfth Mass, a Corelli, a Corelli, a Bourrée of Handel, and Minuet and Trio by Beethoven.

DUBLIN

The Feis Ceoil Band Competition which was to have taken place on St. Patrick's Day had to be abandoned owing to the disturbed state of the city.

At a recent meeting of the Senate of Dublin University it was decided to confer the honorary degree of Mus.D. on Prof. Sir Charles Villiers Stanford. The formal conferring of degrees will take place at the Commencements at Trinity College, on June 30. Although somewhat belated, this distinction is no less honorable to Sir Charles than to Dublin University.

The attractions at the nineteenth 'Mater' Concert, (Easter Sunday (March 27) included Mr. Foster Richardson, Mr. Arthur Darley, and Miss May Lafferty, as well as orchestral items composed by Prof. O'Dwyer and Mr. Brendan Rogers. Mr. Foster Richardson's bass is of wonderful volume and admirable quality, and he at once captured his audience, especially in Handel's 'Arm, brave' and Lambert's hackneyed 'She is far from the land.' Miss Lucy Leenane was a very capable accompanist.

Owing to the drastic curfew restrictions of the performances of Sullivan's 'Yeomen of the Guard,' by the Rathmines and Rathgar Operatic Society, announced for Easter week, have been unavoidably postponed.

The death of the Most Rev. Dr. Walshe, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, on April 9, necessitated the abandonment of several musical events, including the twenty-first 'Mater' Concert. It is well known that the late Archbishop was an excellent musician—indeed, his memoir is to be found in Brown and Stratton's 'British Musical Biography.' His 'Grammar of Gregorian Music' was published in 1885, and in conjunction with Mr. Edward Martyn he materially helped to found the Palestrina Choir at the Pro-Cathedral, contributing the munificent sum of £10,000, out of the required £20,000, towards the requisite endowment for its upkeep.

Mr. Patrick Delaney has done wonders with the Amateur Orchestral Players. Their concert at Gresham Hall, on April 9, was most creditable. The orchestra now numbers close on fifty performers, and the ensemble showed careful training. Miss Molly O'Callaghan was the vocalist, and her selections were in excellent taste and adequately interpreted.

An interesting meeting of the British Empire Shakespearean Society was held on April 14, under the presidency of Prof. W. F. Trench, and it is well to note that due prominence was given to Shakespeare's songs, some of which are set to old Irish airs.

GLASGOW

Mr. Thorpe Davie's choir gave a highly-attractive concert March 17 (repeated on the evening following), the main part of the programme being Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'Hiawatha's Departure.' The music was presented under the most favourable conditions by very efficient choir of a hundred and twenty voices, hampered by the traditions of oratorio performance, with adequate orchestral accompaniment, and directed by a choir-master of skill and imagination. The ladies of the choir sang two groups of 'Negro Spirituals' with fine effect, and the choral programme was varied by one solo music also contributed by members of the choir. For four evenings in succession—March 21-24—the Glasgow Orpheus Choir (Mr. H. S. Robertson, conductor), used St. Andrew's Hall to overflowing with eager lovers of accompanied choral music. It is sufficient to record that the Choir's performances throughout maintained the pitch of perfection which has given the Orpheus a position unique in this city and throughout Scotland. The Bach Choir's concert for the season took place at the Cathedral on April 11. The programme, in addition to the Church Sonata, 'Now shall the grace,' included numbers by Tallis, Tarrant, Gibbons, Palestrina, and Vittoria, and the Choir's expressive singing gave evidence that in Mr. A. M. Anderson, its new conductor, has been found a worthy successor to Mr. J. M. Diack, to whose capable and enthusiastic direction over many years the organization owes so much. Mr. Herbert Walton, the Cathedral Organist, played Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D major, the Sonata (in trio form) No. 4, in E minor, and the Massacaglia in C minor.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company concluded a two months' season at the Theatre Royal on April 9. Afterwards came amateur opera with the Orpheus Club in 'Princess Ida' (April 11-16), the Glasgow Grand Opera Society in Goldmark's 'The Queen of Sheba' (April 18-23), and the Lyric Club in 'Paul Jones' (April 25-30), the proceeds from which were devoted to charitable purposes. The musical season now practically comes to an end, except for our great competitive Festival, which occupies the days 4-14.

KENT

Two practical lessons in musical appreciation have been given at Maidstone. On March 9 Maidstone Orchestral Society and Rochester Symphony Orchestra joined, under Frederick Cole's conductorship, for a public rehearsal of works by Beethoven, Liszt, Grieg, Moszkowsky, Herbert, and Dvorák. Before complete performance each work was explained, and the principal motifs played. On March 12 Mrs. Stansfeld Prior gave a lecture on 'Sonata form,' and illustrated her remarks by playing various movements of Beethoven's Sonatas.

Mr. Cecil Sharp spoke on 'Education and Folk-Dancing' at the annual meeting of the Kent Folk-Dance Society, held at Maidstone on March 12, when a total of two hundred members in the branch was reported.

Folkstone Philharmonic Society's second concert of the season was devoted to a performance of Sullivan's 'Martyr Antioch' on March 16. The principal soloists were Miss Doris Montrave, Miss Annie Johnson, Mr. Spencer Thomas, and Mr. Dan Richards. Both choir and orchestra did some fine work.

Maidstone Choral Union, whose triple success at the Kentish Musical Competitive Festival was recorded last month, gave a fine performance of 'Israel in Egypt' under Mr. F. Wilson Parish at Maidstone on April 6.

Obham Musical Society chose a sacred cantata and miscellaneous items for its second performance of the season on March 23.

Good Friday saw an increased output of Easter music in Kentish churches. Three particularly meritorious performances of 'The Messiah' were those at Canterbury Cathedral, St. Peter's Church, Rochester, and the Wesleyan Central Hall, Plumstead. On the same day Meopham Musical Society, conducted by Mr. George Edwards, made a début in Maunders' cantata, 'Olivet to Calvary.'

Over a thousand members belong to the Kent County Association of Change-Ringers. There are a hundred and seven towers in the union, and during the year a hundred and twenty full peals have been rung. The annual meeting was held at Deptford on March 28.

Mr. David Thomas conducted the final concert of the season of Gravesend Choral Society on April 6, when the programme included the choral march from Berlioz's 'Faust,' and 'The Deacon's Masterpiece' (Fletcher). Miss Gertrude Wallis and Mr. Leonard Lovesey were solo vocalists.

A large audience filled Woolwich Town Hall on April 7, when the contributors to a well-arranged programme were Miss Ethel Peake, Miss Ruby Heyl, Mr. Frank Mullings, and Mr. Charles Tree. Mr. Victor Marmont accompanied.

LIVERPOOL

At the tenth and final concert of the Philharmonic Society, on March 15, Sir Henry Wood conducted the first performance in England of Rachmaninov's orchestral and choral setting of 'The Bells.' Various composers have taken bells as a theme, and Rongberg and Bruch at once occur to mind in connection with Schiller's 'Lay of the Bell,' but it has been left to a Russian to essay a more or less revolutionary and impressionistic setting of Poe's famous poem. The composer has used a Russian translation made by the poet Balmont, and this in turn, owing to the exigencies of the music, has been re-translated into English. But it would not appear that the light touch and verbal felicity of the original have been entirely preserved in the process. Certain notable lines have disappeared altogether, and others interpolated are far less magical. The music falls into four sections—'Sleigh Bells,' 'Wedding Bells,' 'Alarm Bells,' and 'Funeral Bells.' It is scored for an exceptionally large orchestra, including pianoforte and organ parts, with numerous percussion instruments. In this direction nothing is lacking except perhaps a military band. But even so the '1812' Overture is rivalled by the 'Alarm Bell' section, which is the strongest of the four and masterfully contrives an atmosphere of terror. Generally speaking, the interest of the music is harmonic and programmatic, and it was curious to note that 'wedding' bells appear to have affected the composer almost as dolefully as 'funeral' bells. He surely would have been excused if a little of the joie de vivre spirit had crept in here.

While in London, Poe no doubt came under the influences of English bells heard in change-ringing. They are, indeed, reflected in the reiterations of his verbal rhythms. On the other hand, Rachmaninov disregards, or does not know, the 'rainbow-chord' of bell overtones, whether produced by change-ringing as in England, or by the chromatic keyboard of a carillon as in the Low Countries. Either art is unknown in Russia, where there are many big bells, whose use is different from ours. Rachmaninov has apparently not felt the fascination of the descending major scale as a 'ground' which so largely influences Purcell's music, and even Tchaikovsky's in the 'Pathetic' Symphony, or the finely-suggestive example to be found in Elgar's famous 'Carillon,' which is built on a descending half-peal. Rachmaninov's use of bells is one of externals, and while individual, his music gives the impression of a texture laboriously designed, and of a masterful work which is not a masterpiece.

The vocal soloists were Miss Doris Vane, Mr. Arthur Jordan, and Mr. Norman Williams, who all sang extremely well, although their parts, as well as those of the choir, are long and notes woven into the fabric, and while very difficult to sing, possess no separate beauty or interest for singers. The high efficiency, as well as loyalty and patience, of the Philharmonic Choir (who had to sing from separate voice-parts) was a signal factor in the success of a performance which worthily upheld the best traditions of the Society. Congratulations are also cordially offered to the able choir-master, Dr. A. W. Pollitt. The chorists will probably feel no pangs in passing on 'The Bells,' as a hard nut to crack, to Willem Mengelberg and the Amsterdam orchestra and choir, to whom the work is inscribed, although the Hollanders have not yet performed it. The Philharmonic Society's first performance is therefore all the more memorable. It was magnificently carried through under Sir Henry Wood's inspiring and masterful direction, and there was an abnormally large audience.

As a prelude to 'The Bells,' a first performance here was given of Frank Bridge's 'A Prayer,' which is a setting for chorus and orchestra of short supplications from the 'Imitation' of Thomas à Kempis. Prayers and collects are difficult subjects for music. Their mood is one of intensity rather than variety, and the interest in this case is found in a novel combination of styles, the music for the chorus being contrapuntal and modal, with an orchestral commentary on modern harmonic lines. But despite its musicianship, the work did not wholly sustain interest as a twenty minutes' concert piece.

The Welsh Choral Union has established a reputation in 'The Dream of Gerontius,' and their latest performance, on March 19, followed the usual high ideal of choral excellence with few if any shortcomings on the executive side. There were moments of exaltation as well as tonal grandeur in the singing, and a welcome restraint in the snarling Demon music. Mr. Hopkin Evans may be commended for a generally impressive performance. The vocal soloists were Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Herbert Brown.

Concerning the 'Elijah' performance on March 23 by the Liverpool Choral Society, in saying that the outstanding interest was found in the vocal solos rather than in the choruses there is no lack of appreciation of the singing, which was intelligent and good up to a point. A want of balance in the tone was chiefly due to paucity of tenors, but these can hardly be blamed for occasional weakness in attack by the whole body, and it was prudent in Mr. Ingram, who conducted, not to force his singers to essay any specially dramatic points. In the title-rôle Mr. Horace Stevens gave an ideally fine performance, and with him were exceptional associates in Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, and Mr. Webster Millar.

Our townsman, Mr. Joseph Greene, is among the pianists who count not only by reason of his executive powers, but also for his fine interpretative qualities. His recital on April 9 drew a crowded audience to Crane Hall to hear Beethoven's great Op. 111 Sonata, Schumann's 'Carneval,' and the Wagner-Liszt 'Tannhäuser' Overture.

Attention has already been drawn to the commendable work of the Liverpool Harmonic Choral Society under Mr. David Roberts, a conductor who aims high and handles his material excellently. Another young Society, the West Kirby Choral, conducted by Mr. T. F. Jones, deserves similar encouragement. The shortage of male voices, especially of tenors, appears to afflict choral societies in all localities, but at West Kirby there were sufficient to permit creditable performances of such perennial favourites as Bishop's 'Now tramp,' Pinsuti's 'Spring song,' and Roland Rogers' 'The river floweth strong,' with other well-chosen choral pieces. Another Choral Union, the 'Irish,' it is devoutly hoped has come to stay. It was first heard at the Irish Festival held in St. George's Hall on March 14, when Mr. Frank Mullings sang. There is abundant material in this city to establish such a choir on a permanent footing, and its first appearance was surely an event of happy augury.

At Liverpool we naturally take a great interest in the McCullagh String Quartet of ladies. It holds a high place in such organizations, and its quality was well displayed at Crane Hall on April 6, especially in Beethoven's Op. 18 Quartet in G. Interesting in another way were the two Holbrooke quartet movements, 'Song of the Bottle' (a Welsh motif) and 'Irish Jigs,' clever and characteristic music which repaid a re-hearing. The occasion was one of the popular series of high-class concerts on Wednesday afternoons. The vocalists were Miss May Williams and Mr. Randolph Giles, with Mr. Sandberg Lee as accompanist.

The Irwell Springs Band played before the King—for the second time—at Knowsley Hall (the seat of Lord Derby) on March 17, under Bandmaster Nuttall.

The Warrior's Day concert organized by the Mayfair Trio at Wigmore Hall brought £102 to the Fund.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

Manchester is fortunate beyond most other provincial centres in that, even in the absence of opera, although current of its musical life flows less strongly in the spring-time on the conclusion of what may be termed its major concert activities, it possesses an unusually large number of secondary musical interests of quite exceptional quality, whose brightness in the past few years has been dimmed only by the brilliance of the larger enterprises.

At the commencement of the last autumn season I ventured the opinion that we should speedily have to return to the old-sized bands of a hundred players or more. Brand Lane, whilst engaging the present normal-sized Hallé Orchestra, has consistently strengthened the string department and enabled Sir Henry Wood to perform with not fewer than a hundred players. Not infrequently this fact has seemed rather wasted on some of the comparative trifles included in the programmes of this series, but one may be that on the two occasions this spring—the Handel-Mozart-Wagner evening, and the recent Lamond and 'Eulenspiegel' concert—when so much music worthy of such occasions was played and so much appreciated, that management may venture next year on a larger proportion of programmes of symphonic order. Probably this audience fluctuates considerably in personnel, but the festina lente attitude, like any other, may be overdone, and the time ripe, I believe, for a more progressive policy.

Good Friday saw the close of the Hallé season and a monster crowd to say farewell to Mr. Hamilton Harty for a brief space. Later, the results of this season may be discussed.

The C. W. S. series was finished on March 23, when the Alto Rhapsody of Brahms was the main feature of an otherwise very attractive scheme. Miss Evelyn Arden did scarcely the requisite reserve for this work, especially in the early portion, and the conductor's tempi certainly erred on the side of deliberation. His task this season has been specially arduous. No other local choir-conductor has remotely approached his record for amount of work achieved, but it has been impossible to resist the feeling that his name tends to monotony of treatment rather than to the swiftness of responsive temperament which is necessary in what are often all intents and purposes, a series of choral recitals.

In the sphere of chamber music the Catterall Quartet made its first appearance this winter in Manchester's chief residential suburb on March 16. These Bowdoin Chamber Concerts are excellently managed, and their audiences are better able to sample and compare the excellences of the leading visiting quartets and trios than any other in the Manchester area. On April 13 the Catterall players had packed noon-tide audience of business men and women in Houldsworth Hall, playing Beethoven, Op. 18, No. 1, Frank Bridge's 'Cherry Ripe,' and Wolf's 'Italienische Serenade.' After that they travelled to Blackpool, played in the evening the same programme, except that Debussy replaced Wolf—again to a large and enthusiastic audience. During May they are to make two more appearances at the Tuesday mid-day series.

From an unusually interesting lot of noon-tide recitals one must select two song-recitals of outstanding merit. On March 18, Mr. Dale Smith, of Stockport (who earned great fame about 1907 as a boy soprano of exceptional quality at Blackpool and other festivals), showed that the essential intuitive qualities were evident in the man to a still greater degree. His programme ranged through many styles—Verdi, Schubert, Schumann ('Belshazzar' sung with tremendous dramatic intensity), to Old English melodies, and then to examples of Hurlstone, Ireland, Butterworth, and part of Somervell's 'Maud.' This recital ranks with two given by Mr. Charles Neville this winter, which have not been approached by any other singers for sustained interest in the work done or manner of execution. Both are ladies, and have appeared with equally distinguished fellow-students as their pianists, Miss Gilson playing with Mr. Smith, and Mr. R. J. Forbes with Mr. Neville. The latter gentlemen had given us in February or March the 'Wenlock Edge' cycle by Vaughan Williams; on April 1 we heard from them George Butterworth's setting of two of the same lyrics from the 'Shropshire Lad'—'Is my true ghing,' and 'Bredon Hill.' Personally, I found the Butterworth settings making a more powerful appeal. Singing and loving the West Country as ardently as I do, the Butterworth settings seem drenched with the spirit of the locality, capturing it in a musical sense much as Wilson does pictorially, and this difference was, for me, again manifested in the emotional content. Not often does one have the chance of hearing the same poetry, set by two men and sung by the same man, all of whom are so finely tuned, and these experiences have been among my most treasured memories this season. The 'Shropshire Lad' songs were followed by what I believe to be the best recital in English of Hugo Wolf's 'Zuleika' songs, Goethe's 'West-Eastern Divan.' Mr. Charles Neville often been associated with Mr. Samuel Langford in propaganda, but never has this collaboration been so well directed. Mr. Langford's translations preserve the poetic values, are good English poetry, and singable in an exceptional degree. Mr. Neville's Butterworth singing was a revelation, but he appeared to put even more of himself into the Wolf. The 'Turban' song, the 'Chain' in the circle of thy ringlet-locked hair,' and still more so the last song of the cycle, must rank as the most passionate and loyal in song heard here for many a day. Poet, composer, translator, singer, player—all at white-heat intensity!

On March 16, Manchester's most distinguished musical personality, Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt, was honoured by his Leeds Choir members, after twenty-five years' connection with them. Mr. Walter Butterworth, who may be regarded as Manchester's Fine Arts Minister, referred to Mr. Nesbitt's work as an organist, a Cathedral chorister, a member of the Tallé chorus, as Director of Music at the Greek Church for over twenty years, and as the Orpheus Glee Society's conductor for twenty-five years. Mr. Nesbitt has been an excellent conductor, and played a fearlessly independent part in his long association with the Competitive Movement. He has done for male-voice choral-singing what the conductors of Barrow, Blackpool, and Lancaster choirs have done in mixed-voice work—namely, created and maintained a standard to which others have endeavoured to rise.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE

On March 16 the London String Quartet paid a visit to the city and performed Ravel in F, Beethoven No. 11, in minor, Op. 95, and a Folk-song Fantasy of H. Walton, the last named work being at once scholarly and charming. All three items were interpreted in the quartet's usual delightful manner.

The Northumberland Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. C. Horsley, gave a programme on March 17 which included Dvorák's first Symphony, Gade's 'Hamlet' Overture, Percy Pitt's 'Air de Ballet,' and the 'Euryanthe' Overture. For a body largely amateur, and conducted in an amateur, the performance was a distinct triumph, precision and rhythmic freedom being features that were particularly noticeable.

At a meeting of the local branch of the British Music Society on March 18, Mr. T. Dunhill held the interest of a large audience with a comprehensive review of modern chamber music. He said it was very natural that a backward and undemonstrative nation like ourselves should be slow to take to chamber music when it wished to express itself, mere theatricality or display of virtuosity being out of place in such a medium. No country was so slow in this form, at the present time, as our own; and it could show such variety of style. The lecturer then went on with the individual composers from Stanford to the younger men of to-day. He was ably assisted by Mr. E. L. on, Mr. A. M. Wall, Miss E. Pringle, Mr. J. Carroll, Miss V. Atkinson, who played movements from the chamber works of A. M. Wall, Ireland, Bridge, Goossens, and McEwan.

In connection with the local branch of the Organists and Church Musicians' Union, the Bach Choir gave an evening of choruses on March 19, with explanatory notes by V. G. Whittaker. There was a large audience.

On March 31 Mr. W. G. Whittaker, lecturing on 'Northumbrian Folk Music,' dealt with the influence of the Northumbrian pipes on the folk-tunes, as shown in a fondness for leaps of thirds and sixths (intervals very easily played on the pipes), and in the unvocal character of many of the songs.

Bainton's Choral Symphony, 'Before Sunrise,' which has been published by the Carnegie Trust, received its first performance on April 6 by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, under the direction of the composer. The work is certainly a notable addition to modern choral music. Strongly recalling Elgar in the bold sweep of the vocal writing, it yet preserves a striking individuality which marks it off from many other modern works we have heard. The chromatic passages for the heavy brass did not quite come off, but no doubt, now that players are having ever-increasing demands made on their technique, they will adjust themselves to such difficulties. The choir acquitted itself splendidly, carrying off the most trying passages in truly exhilarating fashion. The remainder of the programme, conducted by Mr. W. G. Whittaker, included Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Dvorák's 'Carneval Roman,' and the 'Bartered Bride' Overture.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

The musical season locally has been somewhat discouraging, and many concert promoters will experience relief at its termination. Mr. Frederick Lamond appeared at Messrs. Wilson Peck's final concert, on March 16, when he furnished the entire programme and evoked considerable enthusiasm. His interpretation of the 'Waldstein' Sonata was impressive, the Chopin, Liszt, and Scriabin examples serving to display his versatility. Under Mr. Leonard W. Gale's direction, the recently-formed West Nottingham Orchestral Society gave its second recital on March 13, and made a very promising impression. On the same date a concert was given by the Nottingham Military Band and the Nottingham Gleemen, with a highly popular programme that included such favourites as the 'William Tell' Overture and the 'Faust' 'Soldiers' Chorus.' The Gleemen Quartet was heard, and vocal duets were contributed by Mr. G. Hodgett and Mr. H. Topham.

One of the most interesting events of the season was the first performance at Nottingham of 'The Apostles,' given by the Sacred Harmonic Society on March 17, under Mr. Allen Gill's conductorship. The choral work was exceedingly good, and the solo parts were admirably sustained by Miss Elsie Suddaby (Mary), Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Stewart Gardiner, who sang the music of Jesus with unerring taste and restraint, and Mr. Robert Radford, who impersonated Judas with intense dramatic power. Mr. John Adams and Mr. Sam Mann made the most of their opportunities. The largely augmented orchestra played the exacting score with much skill.

The annual performance of Mr. Bernard Johnson's 'Ecce Homo,' on March 20, was distinguished by a higher standard than conditions had yet permitted. As before, the Albert Hall choir was joined by the choir of St. Andrew's Church, and the principals were Mr. Charles Morley, Mr. Stanley Lee, Mr. F. Berry, Mr. Herbert Smith, and Mr. Charles Keywood. Mr. Marshall Harding conducted, the composer was at the organ, and the solo trumpeter was Mr. E. Hipkin. On March 22, Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was given by St. Mary's Choral Society, which has accomplished much fine work under Dr. F. Radcliffe. The choir on this occasion was notably responsive to the conductor's baton. Mrs. C. A. Howell and Miss F. Wood admirably sustained their parts. The tenor music was in the safe hands of Mr. John Adams, the bass solos were given by Mr. Charles Keywood, and Mr. B. Johnson was at the organ. Miss Cantelo's pianoforte accompaniments were exquisitely discriminating, and Mr. George King's violin accompaniments were yet a further adjunct to a fine performance.

The usual number of Passion-tide performances of 'The Crucifixion' and 'Olivet to Calvary' took place at the various places of worship, and many proved to be very meritorious.

Opera abounds at the Theatre Royal at this period, a fortnight of the Carl Rosa Opera Company being followed by two weeks of the D'Oyly Carte Company.

Mr. B. Johnson's fortnightly recitals came to an end on April 10. Miss Helen Guest—who has established a local reputation—was the solo pianist, and was warmly applauded for her playing of solos by Chopin, Smetana, Grovlez, and Balfour Gardiner.

PORTSMOUTH AND DISTRICT

The Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society can look back with gratification upon a most successful season. It has enjoyed a wonderful measure of public support, and in return has given of the best in the realm of music. The greatest treat of all was reserved for the closing concert on March 17, which was devoted to the performance of Bach's B minor Mass, this being the first time the work had been attempted at Portsmouth. Under the direction of Mr. Arthur Bliss both choir and orchestra rose to the occasion splendidly. Owing, however, to only a limited number of rehearsals having been possible, the Credo had to be omitted, but at a later concert the Society hopes also to do justice to Bach's setting of what is probably the most sublime expression in all music. The Society may be able in the meantime to add to the tenors, whose numerical weakness becomes particularly noticeable in a work of this description. Conceding so much, one could not have wished for a more intimate and sympathetic interpretation of the Mass than that given. The solo parts were taken by Miss Flora Mann, Miss Lilian Berger, and Mr. Stewart Wilson; Mr. Stanley Blagrove (solo violin), Mr. Albert Fransella (solo flute), Mr. Leon Goossens (solo oboe d'amore), and Mr. Lickfold (continuo).

In sharp contrast to the success of the Philharmonic Society has been the lack of interest taken by the public in the Max Mossel concerts. Of course a local Society, and especially one of such high standing as the Philharmonic, makes a wider appeal; but it would have been thought that the Max Mossel programmes would at least have had paying support. Yet good as they have been, the Town Hall has hardly been more than half full during the series, and under the circumstances it is doubtful whether they will be continued next season. At the closing concert, on March 23, the artists were Miss Mignon Nevada and Mr. Frank Mullings (vocalists), Miss Irene Scharrer (pianoforte), and Mr. Felix Salmond (violoncello).

The feature of the Easter music at Portsmouth was the twenty-seventh annual performance of 'The Messiah' by the Portsmouth Temperance Choral Union on Good Friday at the Town Hall. Without the Choral Union and 'The Messiah' Good Friday would now be a singularly empty day musically. Mr. W. E. Green, the veteran conductor, once more guided choir and orchestra through the work, but so well did the former know their parts that the majority sang faultlessly without the music. It was a splendid achievement, Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Constance Hay, Mr. Arthur Jordan, and Mr. Edward Dykes were the principal vocalists.

Outside Portsmouth it is pleasing to record the growth of musical appreciation in the immediate district. The Southbourne Choral Society has made a modest beginning, and under the direction of Mr. H. Stringer its twenty voices gave a good account of themselves in glees and part-songs at its first concert on March 30. The Havant Choral Society also was heard in another capital programme on April 6, the first portion of which consisted of an abridged version of 'The Messiah,' with Miss Marguerite Horner, Miss Grace Hoskyns, and Mr. T. J. Morgan assisting as soloists. The second part comprised miscellaneous vocal and orchestral items. Mr. R. T. Canaway conducted.

SOUTH WALES

On March 16 and 17, two creditable performances of 'The Messiah' were given at the local hall by the Merthyr Vale and Aberfan Choral Society, assisted by artists of local repute. Mr. R. T. Lloyd was the conductor, and the audiences on both occasions were manifestly delighted.

The annual concert of the Tredegar Choral Society took place on March 23, at Olympia, when, under the baton of Mr. W. J. R. Davies, a fine performance was given of 'The Creation' (Parts 1 and 2), supplemented by 'Young Lochinvar' (Cyril Jenkins). The vocal soloists were Miss Annie Rees, Mr. Dan Jones, and Mr. Foster Richards. Especially gratifying was the enthusiastic reception of the programme by the large audience present.

On the same date, Tonyfelin Church, Caerphilly, packed to the doors, the occasion being the performance of 'Judas Maccabeus' by the Caerphilly and District Choral Society (a hundred and forty voices), assisted by a small body of instrumentalists, under the conductorship of Mr. T. Rowland Davies. The same work was also given on March 22 and at Zoar Chapel, Maesycwmmwr, by the newly-formed Ystalyfera Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. John Price, of Rhymney.

A successful performance of 'Samson' was given by the Troedyrhiw Musical Society at St. John's Hall on March 18, the conductor being Mr. Evan Poley, and on the same date, at the Temperance Hall, Tredegar, Jessop's 'The Galilean' was sung by Poplar Road Church Choir (eight voices), assisted by a small orchestra under Mr. Cave.

On Good Friday there was a performance of 'The Messiah' at Park Hall by the Cardiff Musical Society, assisted by a full orchestra and well-known artists, under the baton of the veteran conductor, Mr. T. E. Aylward, at a sacred concert at Wood Street Congregational Church, the choir, under the direction of Mr. J. B. Gill, the programme being 'Ruth' (A. R. Gaul), supplemented by miscellaneous items. Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was given at St. Martin's Church, Roath, Cardiff; and at Park Presbyterian Church, Tredegar, with Mr. J. D. Evans as conductor; 'Olivet to Calvary' at Harcourt Terrace Wesley Church, Tredegar, the choir being directed by Mr. J. Watkins. Mendelssohn's 'Christus,' supplemented by solos from Bach, Handel, &c., formed the programme at the Parish Church, Dowlais; and at the Pavilion, Blackwood, the Blackwood Male-Voice Party, assisted by the Tredegar Orchestral Society, were heard in 'The Martyr,' under the conductorship of Mr. George James.

A fine performance was given of Parry's 'Judith' at the Tabernacle Baptist Church, Cardiff, on April 6, by the Tabernacle Choral Society, assisted by an efficient orchestra. Mr. E. J. Richards conducted. This was the best performance of the work at Cardiff, and it gave much satisfaction to a large and interested audience.

A chamber music concert was given at the Intermediate School, Merthyr, on the evening of March 21, under the auspices of the Welsh National Council of Music, and under the immediate direction of Mr. J. M. Lloyd. The programme comprised Trios by Haydn and Mozart, an Andante and Fugue for violin and pianoforte by Handel, Variations in B flat by Beethoven, movements from Schubert's Trio in E flat, and that of Brahms in C minor, and Grieg's Violoncello Sonata.

On the same evening the Newport Literary Society organized a Beethoven night at the Hall of the High School for Girls. The instrumentalists were Dr. and Mrs. Gilchrist (pianoforte), Mlle. Wieniawska (violin), and Mr. Fenn (violoncello). Dr. Gilchrist (Cardiff) passed in a review the life of Beethoven, and many illustrations were given.

YORKSHIRE

LEEDS

This is the record of an expiring season, for after Easter serious music is at a discount in the West Riding, save at Harrogate, where the weekly symphony concerts are continued during the summer months. The Leeds Choral Union, under Dr. Coward, gave an excellent all-round performance of Verdi's 'Requiem' on March 15, with Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. Ranaflow as a strong quartet. The Leeds Philharmonic Society, on April 16, ended the season with a very interesting programme, of which Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' was the chief feature, Parry's Motet, 'There is an old Belshazzar,' practically new to Leeds, being also heard. Dr. Baird was the conductor. The last Saturday Orchestral Concert, on March 19, introduced Beethoven's eighth Symphony, and Mr. Murdoch's brilliant and artistic playing in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto was a noteworthy feature. Mr. Goossens' own Overture, 'Philip II,' was a novelty to Leeds, and its distinctively tragic note was really impressive. The 'St. Matthew' Passion was, according to custom, at the Parish Church on March 21, when the new list, Dr. Tysoe, may be said to have finally proved his agency by securing a worthy performance with purely material. The Leeds New Choral Society, of which H. M. Turton is the conductor, reflects his artistic vision by giving programmes of artistic distinction. On March 13 three Bach cantatas were presented, viz., 'Christ and Death's dark prison,' 'My spirit was in heaviness,' and 'A Stronghold Sure,' together with the significant, a remarkably interesting programme, which, the Society's recent performance of the whole of the 'St. Matthew's' Oratorio, makes a notable array of Bach's works. The performance, if not perfect, was creditable. At St. Chad's Church, on April 15, a rather unusual and very interesting recital was given of three Pianoforte Concertos—Bach's in D minor, Beethoven's in C minor, and Franck's 'Symphoniques'—with Miss Kathleen Friswell as soloist, and Mr. Percy Richardson, representing the orchestra, at the organ. Miss Friswell and Mr. Richardson gave one of the University recitals on March 15, when she sang a long series of songs, including four 'Nursery Songs' by Granados, Moussorgsky's seven 'Nursery Songs,' and six 'Negro Spirituals,' to her own accompaniment, all from memory, and entering into the spirit of each in turn with unflinching sympathy and intelligence.

SHEFFIELD

The last of the season's Sheffield Subscription Concerts, on March 15, took the form of a pianoforte recital by Mr. Derrick Lamond. In a tremendous programme, which included Sonatas by Beethoven ('Waldstein'), Scriabin (Op. 10, No. 3), and Chopin (Op. 35), as well as such trifles as Brahms-Paganini Variations—both sets complete—Mr. Lamond fully justified his great reputation.

The Sheffield Musical Union gave Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' on March 17, with complete success under Mr. Coward's direction. The principals were Miss Ursula Gifford, Miss Nellie Keighley, Mr. Barrington Hooper, and Herbert Brown—an excellent quartet. A new cantata, 'The Land of the Living,' by E. C. Macmillan—who holds an important official post in Canada, and wrote this work while a prisoner in Germany—received a first performance which aroused much interest. The Overture is long, and a little tedious in performance, but it is complex in texture and might easily prove an acquaintance. Lacking contrasted episodes, it is the impression of being too much all of a piece; yet it contains a good deal of clever and musically writing, and much of the scoring is effective. The opening four-part chorus was impressive, its strength and dignity of style being admirably realised. The six- and eight-part choruses which followed did not come off nearly so well, and the choir obviously found them very exacting. There is not much solo work, and that little, in spite of the best efforts of Miss Gifford and Mr. Brown, was not very effective. The orchestra plays a part of vital importance throughout, but the real strength of the work is in the choral singing, which should commend it to the consideration of any ambitious choral society with a taste for modern English music.

The University Chamber Concerts were concluded on March 18, when the programme was specially attractive owing to the inclusion of Mozart's String Quintet in C and Brahms' String Sextet in B flat. The Catterall Quartet rehearsed the Quartet in D minor, Op. 76, No. 2, of Haydn, superbly, and was assisted by Mr. Allan Smith (viola) and Collin Smith (violinello) in the other works. The whole concert was delightful, and aroused the greatest enthusiasm in a large audience.

Miss Eva Rich, on March 19, conducted a performance of Ormond Anderton's 'The Song of the Morning Star' by her Ladies' Choir, a large and efficient organization, whose singing of the work and of miscellaneous part-songs was admirable.

It is gratifying to know that the Sheffield Promenade Concerts are to be continued next year, four concerts having already been arranged. The series concluded by the concert of April 6 has been most successful artistically, and local orchestral music would suffer a severe deprivation if the scheme terminated. The programme at this concluding event was splendidly arranged, and included Vaughan Williams' Overture, 'The Wasps,' Borodin's second Symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini,' and Rachmaninov's second Pianoforte Concerto, with Miss Isobel Gray as soloist. Sir Henry Wood and the orchestra, which is composed mainly of Sheffield players, deserve the warmest congratulations on their performance. Miss Gray's playing in the Concerto deservedly won the warm admiration of her audience.

Miss Helen Guest, pupil of Miss Lily Foxon, made her professional début at Sheffield on April 11 in a pianoforte recital that left no room for doubt concerning the really high standard of her attainments as a concert pianist. She gave, in fact, notable performances of Brahms' F minor Sonata and César Franck's 'Prelude, Choral, and Fugue,' and had a splendid reception from a more than ordinarily musical audience.

At its thirteenth annual concert, on March 23, the Chesterfield and District Musical Union, with Dr. J. F. Staton as an energetic and inspiring conductor, gave selections from 'Israel in Egypt' and the whole of Elgar's 'The Spirit of England.' Although somewhat handicapped by having to utilise a theatre as a concert room, both choir and orchestra did well, and the event revealed commendable enthusiasm and enterprise. Miss Emily Breare, Mr. Herbert Parker, Mr. Laurie G. Hartley, and Mr. Herbert Teale were fully competent principals.

The last of the Foxon Five-o'clock concerts was chiefly notable by reason of some charming singing by Miss Ena Roberts, who, although under the disability of a cold, showed real art in the alto songs with viola obbligato (played by Mr. Allan Smith) of Brahms, and in a diversified group of seven songs by Schubert, Reynaldo Hahn, Puget, Lalo, and Flégier.

OTHER TOWNS

The Bradford Subscription Concerts ended on March 18, when Sir Edward Elgar conducted a programme of his own music, including the cantata, 'King Olaf,' with Miss Elsie Suddaby, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. George Parker as the principals. The Hull Philharmonic Society, whose orchestra is largely amateur, gave on April 7 a more than creditable performance of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, under Mr. J. W. Hudson's direction. Mr. T. Huntington was the vocalist, and sang the scena from 'The Flying Dutchman,' in the first Act, 'Die Frist ist um,' which is among the earliest things in which Wagner anticipated his mature style.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

The time for Dr. Muck's departure seemed to have come much too soon for the majority of our concert-goers, judging from the vociferous cheerings which greeted him on his last appearance at the thirty-fifth symphony concert. The programme included Haydn's G major Symphony (No. 13) and Beethoven's 'Eroica.' The hundred and sixty-eighth Cæcilia concert, however, gave us one more chance of admiring his splendid capacities. He was at his best in Beethoven's seventh Symphony. On this occasion we had the singular treat of hearing Dirk Schäfer play the solo part in Chopin's E minor Concerto, which was hailed with all the greater delight inasmuch as we had not had a chance for quite a number of years of hearing this eminent Chopin interpreter perform with the orchestra.

Although as yet no publicity is given to the fact, it is almost certain that Dr. Muck will be asked to lead our orchestra when Mengelberg goes to America next January. These two conductors really supplement each other to a marvellous extent. During the interval between Muck's departure and Mengelberg's return the performances of Schönberg's 'Gurre-Lieder' took place, and proved for many people one of the great events of the season. There had of course been much booming to arouse the interest of the public at large, and certainly nothing had been left undone to create a festival atmosphere for this occasion. Considering the enormous amount of pains bestowed on these performances, it must be stated with regret that the financial results were far below expectation, and were probably due to the prominence given to some of Schönberg's latest works. The orchestra, too, had to be enlarged to upwards of a hundred and sixty performers, and in addition there was a choir of six hundred voices. Schönberg's orchestral score is perhaps the largest known, seeing that it includes not less than twenty-six separate wood-wind parts. Such an enormous body of executants can hardly fail to create an extraordinary impression. Still, the result for the most part is not convincing, especially as the work abounds in lyrical moments which suffer greatly by the unduly heavy orchestration. Small wonder that the voices of the soloists were usually drowned in the instrumental outbursts. The music of 'Gurre-Lieder' is undoubtedly the work of a man of great talent. Seeing that it was composed as early as 1901, we need not be surprised that it contains no more than hints of the present Schönberg. And since it reveals none of those ominous harmonic 'short-cuts,' the work could have been written quite twenty years earlier, about the time of 'Parsifal.' Indeed, the music as a whole is conceived under the influence of the 'Ring' and 'Parsifal.' The vocal soloists were drawn exclusively from the Vienna Opera. Among them Madame Kiurina created a really splendid impression. Hers is certainly one of the finest soprano voices imaginable. Next, Madame Olga von Bilecki has to be mentioned. Her voluminous contralto voice was an object of general admiration. Of the male soloists no more can be said than that they acquitted themselves meritoriously. Our excellent Toonkunst chorus was again at its best, and the same may be said of the orchestra. Schönberg, who conducted, succeeded in recording a great artistic triumph. He may be more original in his later works, but the audience showed an unmistakable predilection for this early creation, which at least conforms to what the majority still regard as music. The programme of an orchestral concert conducted by Prof. Max von Schillings, the present director of the Berlin Opera, contained Busoni's very interesting 'Brautwahl' Suite, Hugo Wolf's charming 'Italian' Serenade, and Schillings' own 'Glockenlieder,' in which Madame Barbara Kemp gave an exceedingly fine interpretation of the voice part. A concert of works by Dr. Alphons Diepenbrock, whom death shortly after released from a long-protracted illness, will be borne in mind by all of us as a Memento Mori. On April 7 Mengelberg resumed his activities. His first two concerts, in both of which Mahler's masterpiece, 'Das Lied von der Erde,' figured as the chief item, showed him again as one of the finest conductors of the present time. A share in the great success of this concert must be assigned to Madame Ilona Durigo and M. Jacques Urlus. On April 5 the Society for the Improvement of National Song gave a concert with a choir consisting of six hundred and twenty school children, conducted by the alderman of public instruction, M. H. J. den Hertog, whose merit in bringing this juvenile body up to its standard of perfection cannot sufficiently be extolled. The tide of solo-recitals has of course run high. Regarding these I must confine myself to mention those concerts which aroused special interest. Hubermann drew by far the largest audiences. With his excellent pupil, Mlle. Irene Dubiska, he played Bach's Concerto for two violins, besides the usual number of solo pieces. On another occasion he introduced here Ottorino Respighi's magnificent Violin Sonata, the exceedingly difficult pianoforte-part being well sustained by his accompanying pianist, M. Paul Frenkel. The youthful Hungarian violinist, Mlle. Erna Rubinstein, has created a stir by her prematurely finished playing. On Easter Day M. Alfredo Casella, assisted by Mlle. Eleonore Leclair and Mr. Norman Wilks, gave a recital, when the scheme consisted chiefly of his own works. His compositions left the audience wondering. Mr. Howard-Jones has visited us again, and has been very welcome. This time he came accompanied by Mr. Felix Salmond, who appeared for the first time on a Continental platform. They delighted us with three admirably played Violoncello Sonatas, of which, one, by Frank Bridge, proved to be of special interest. The players met with a very hearty reception, and scored an unequivocal success. W. HARMAN.

MILAN

The most prominent feature of the Dal Verme Carnevale Lent opera season is Catalani's 'Dejanice,' a performance of which was given on March 3. Time, the great level, is slowly but surely reinstating this great composer's work. 'Dejanice' was performed for the first time thirty years ago at the Scala Theatre, when the composer was barely twenty-nine years of age. This was his third attempt at opera, his first work being 'Falce' and the second 'Elda' or 'Loreley,' as it was called later. Boito had sketched the outline of the libretto of 'Dejanice,' but abandoned the work, as he was writing 'Mefistofele' at the time, and handed it over to Zanardini. It bears the marks of hasty construction. Catalani was fretting to fulfil his promise to the Scala management of a new opera. The music is typical of his style.

A Royal decree had been signed by which all theatrical performances were to have been taxed on a graduated scale up to forty per cent. of gross returns of such performances. The decree was to have become effective on January 1 of this year, but before that date a commission of theatrical representatives formulated a protest stating that the carrying into operation of the decree spelt ruin for a great many theatrical concerns. The new Finance Minister accepted the proposals of the commission, and a new decree was issued on January 23, by which a tax of ten per cent. was levied on all theatrical performances in the kingdom. The Commune of Milan lodged a protest against the new decree to the effect that it would be hit financially by the reduction, inasmuch as the State had conceded to some of the Communes, and Milan was included in the number, part of the revenue derived from the tax first mentioned, which the Communes themselves were authorised to collect. In the protest filed flat in face of the more general interests of theatrical enterprise throughout Italy. The tax within the province of Milan is twelve per cent., the extra two per cent. being ceded by the State for the benefit of the Scala, which will thus derive an annual revenue of approximately three million lire (nominally £120,000 sterling).

A new opera, 'Ettore Fieramosca' (A Hero of Mediaeval Chivalry) will shortly be given at the Regio Theatre, Turin. The music is by Adolf Cantù.

Signor Nino Rossi, the pianist, gave a recital on March 11 at the Hall of the Royal Conservatorium. He played Sonata No. 28, Op. 101, of Beethoven, the Preludes of Debussy, a 'Preludio e fuga sopra un soggetto di Meyerbeer' by Maestro Orefice, and a new composition on a theme from 'L'Africaine.' Signor Rossi played another new composition, 'I Poemi Asolani,' of Malipiero, which, however, did not receive a warm reception. It is intelligently conceived, but is an exaggerated manipulation of musical colour-schemes. Two pieces by Scarlatti, the 'Preludio Aria, e Finale' of Franck, and a Bach Fuga, were also included in the programme.

The Budapest Quartet gave a concert in the same hall on March 12, playing Brahms' Op. 51 and a Quartet of Haydn with clearness, balance, and thoroughly good taste. A new Quartet of Franco Alfano, director of the College of Music, Bologna, made only a very moderate appeal.

The following day the Quartet gave another concert in the same hall with a Schönberg programme. The 'Opussetima' was the first item. It lasted three-quarters of an hour, and towards its close the impatience of the audience showed itself in emphatic protests.

Ferenc de Vecsey gave a recital at the Dal Verme Theatre on March 24 for the benefit of a charitable institution for poor and sick children of the city and province of Milan. The programme included Concerti by Beethoven and Viextemps, and the 'Allegro' of the Concerto of Paganini. Maestro Angelo Ferrari conducted the orchestra.

'Ramuntcho' is the operatic novelty of the Dal Verme season. The first performance was given on March 1. The music is by Stefano Donaudy, and Alberto Donaudy, a dramatist and brother of the composer, adapted the hetic story from the romance of Pierre Loti. This was to have been given before the war broke out. The tenor, Angelo Ferrari conducted, and secured a performance that was fairly well received.

The Sirota Trio—so-called after the name of the pianist who led it—gave a concert in the hall of the Royal Conservatorium on March 16, playing the Trio in G of Schumann, the Trio in B of Brahms, and the Trio in D minor of Tchaikovsky. The Sirota Trio affords real pleasure to its hearers—suavity of sound and perfect fusion of the parts being characteristics of its playing. The pianist himself has a remarkable touch—tocco vellutato (velvet touch), as they say here. A serene atmosphere of harmony pervaded the hall, and the artists' efforts won spontaneous applause.

Since Bottesini—the great viol player and composer of an opera, 'Ero e Leandra'—bade farewell to this vale of tears, the contrabasso has fallen into disuse or ill-favour as a concert instrument for soloists. It was confined to the orchestra as a supporting pillar of the harmonic edifice. A Russian, Sergio Kussevitsky, whose attributes of orchestral conductor, composer, and musical editor have carved a way for him in his own country, gave an exhibition of what can be accomplished with a contrabasso, in spite of the negative qualities of this instrument. His was a small but very fine-edged Amati viol. The hall of the Conservatorium was by no means as full as it might have been; nevertheless those present appreciated the artist in Kussevitsky. He played Bottesini's 'Tarantella,' the second movement of Mozart's Concerto, the Adagio of Gailiard, a Minuet of Beethoven, and several fragments of the Concerto of his own composing. He used four strings, whereas Bottesini used only three. Kussevitsky gave a second concert in the same hall on March 22.

On Easter Sunday the Cappella Musicale Metropolitana, conducted by Maestro Commendatore Salvatore Gallotti, presented some new vocal works. The 'Missa Salvator Noster' by Vambach, at present the maestro of the Cathedral of Milan, and a 'Sonata a due organi' of Prof. Setacciolini, director of the Philharmonic Society, Rome, transcribed by Ugo Bossi, were executed along with the compositions of Bottesini himself and of Gallignani. The latter is director of the Royal Conservatorium at Milan.

Maestro Sergio Failoni has made a very favourable impression as a conductor of orchestra. He is still very young, but the concert which he conducted on March 31 at the Teatro Popolo is his first real effort in this line. There is no consciousness in him, but the utmost confidence in his ability to make good and forge his way in the career he has chosen. There was no dissimulation in the applause which the audience meted out to him and his orchestra. The programme comprised Beethoven's first Symphony, Strauss's 'Don Juan,' a symphonic poem, 'Ferrara,' of Maestro Ugo Mariotti, Mendelssohn's 'Fingal's Cave,' Rabaud's 'Notturmo,' Martucci's 'Notturmo,' and the overture from Berlioz's 'Damnation of Faust.' The concert was repeated on April 1.

E. HERBERT-CÉSARI.

PARIS

DUPONT'S 'ANTAR'

Dupont's 'Antar,' which, following its very successful production at the Opéra, has been repeated on several occasions, is amongst the most interesting of modern French operas. It is, indeed, an acquisition to the répertoire. The score is full of colour, it is always descriptive, and the composer has availed himself of plaintive Arab melodies—rather, of melodies based on the simple native form of the East. In the exacting rôle of Antar, M. Franz—who, it may be remembered, in pre-war days sang for four seasons at the Grand Garden—triumphs as singer and actor alike. M. Couard, a well-equipped artist from every point of view, lends distinction to the performance, and Mlle. Yvonne Hély's fresh and sympathetic voice, no less than the beauty of her person, makes an interesting figure of the heroine, the resplendent Abila. The choral singing also calls for praise, especially that of the women's voices. The rôle of 'Griegfried' has been revived with a competent cast, M. L. L. L., an experienced tenor, appearing in the title-rôle, and Madame Demougeot, as notable a dramatic soprano as any on the lyric stage, being the Brunnhilda of the occasion. Indeed, Madame Demougeot's art has an authority that is reminiscent of the great singers of bygone days, her vocal means and her use of them being alike impeccable, while she imparts to her singing a dignity and precision such as are rarely encountered. Excellent, too, is the Fafner of M. Narçon, whose round and resonant voice invariably affords pleasure to the really critical.

FROM CIMAROSA TO GAILHARD

Although the unfortunate Cimarosa succumbed to a bilious colic, the gay music of his 'Le Mariage Secret,' which lately was revived at the Trianon-Lyrique, in no way suggests the malady from which he suffered while engaged upon the score. Certainly the book may not always be exciting; even those easily-pleased persons who tolerate a musical-comedy plot might condemn it. The general structure of the opera is archaic. The constant repetition of words is irritating, and there are some dull moments, yet the melodies please the open-minded listener, and fall gratefully upon the ear of the severest critic. The revival owes its success chiefly to the singers, who, as is customary at the Trianon-Lyrique, have distinguished themselves, Mlle. Vauthrin, M. de Trevi (who sings with much taste), and M. Nogué (a new baritone with a fine sonorous voice), making the most of their opportunities.

André Gailhard's 'Arlequin,' which has made a good impression at the Apollo, is described as a 'comédie féerique en trois actes et deux rêves.' A Parisian critic finds the score 'aimablement mélancolique . . . d'une volupté ingénieuse et persuasive,' which pretty well sums it up. The interpretation is above the average, M. Joubé, a baritone with an unusually flexible and carrying voice, being the chief attraction.

'Tristan' has been performed in Italian at the Théâtre des Champs-Élysées, and with the full strength of the Turin Teatro Regio troupe. Thanks to the enterprise of M. Jacques Hébertot, the extremely progressive director, a particularly interesting evening was ensured. During M. Hébertot's management the theatre has catered for those who are attracted by something out of the common. The success has been gratifying.

Very welcome was the concert given by Madame Jeanne Fromont-Delune, a violoncellist of unusual attainments, who displayed a remarkably fine technique, breadth of style, and beauty of tone. Her programme included examples by Tartini, Spaurini, Pasqualini, and Louis Delune, whose compositions are remarkable for atmospheric feeling and rare delicacy. At the innumerable orchestral concerts little that is new has been given, a state of affairs which exasperates the 'moderns.' As to the vocal recitals there was no end to them. Some were well attended; others, though serving to exploit capable artists, must, it is to be feared, have proved a loss to the performers.

GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

MR. ALBERT COATES AT THE AUGUSTEUM

With the greatest pleasure it is recorded that Mr. Albert Coates gained a splendid success here when, on March 20, he conducted the Augusteum Orchestra in a programme comprising Brahms' first Symphony, Scriabin's 'Poème de l'Extase,' the Good Friday music from 'Parsifal,' and the 'Ride of the Valkyries.' Save by reputation he was practically unknown to the Italian musical public, yet after a dozen bars Mr. Coates had absolutely won the vast audience that crowded the theatre on Palm Sunday, and at the close of the performance storms of applause, as well-merited as they were sincere, registered the popular verdict. A stranger who presents Scriabin's poem to a Roman audience has need of courage: the stranger who succeeds in winning applause is no ordinary conductor. Mr. Coates succeeded in making his hearers appreciate, if not understand, Scriabin's poem, and was rewarded in a fashion which astonished all who remembered former presentations of the work. It will be of interest to readers to learn what the Roman critics said of Mr. Coates. The well-known contributor to the Tribuna, Signor Gasco, heads his article, 'An athletic musician,' and says:

'Age thirty-nine; gigantic stature; modelled like a Greek wrestler; sympathetic face, and with an open smile: these are the principal physical qualities of Mr. Albert Coates, who presented himself to an astonished audience at the Augusteum yesterday, and, with a magician's art, transmuted even iron into shining metal, and made folk applaud Scriabin's "Poème de l'Extase." Mr. Coates is truly an excellent orchestral strategist. He knows how to use with discrimination the sonorous forces at his disposal, and at the moment of final attack, he employs his heavy artillery with secure effect. . . . Thus the Finale of Brahms' first Symphony had an unexpected splendour; the terrific conclusion of the "Poème de l'Extase" brutally oppressed the audience; the stretta of the "Valkyries" was vertiginous such as we never remember it before: in a word, his appearance was a great success, of which the memory will not quickly pass. Mr. Albert Coates on his first visit to Rome could honestly employ the famous message of Cæsar.'

The Messaggero writes as follows:

'Coates immediately conquered the audience by his vigorous and exuberant temperament, that, coming just a week after the visit of Franz Schalk, provided us with a profound contrast with the mild and phlegmatic temperament of the German master. The ample gesture, mobile and almost unquiet, the swift coup d'œil, the security of his baton in mnemonic tenacity, the spiritual and sentimental warmth of his interpretation, all combine in Coates to reveal a great orchestral director. Owing to his impetuous, abundant temperament, certain poetical penetrations and delicate nuances are lacking in his interpretations, but these are amply atoned for in the animation and vitality of his finales.'

The Piccolo has a genial appreciation, in which we read that 'Similar to a glad and unexpected message that brings the highest joy to the spirit, so is the unexpected revelation of Mr. Albert Coates as a great, incomparable, and perfect director of orchestra.'

Immediately following Mr. Coates, the Augusteum welcomed his great master, Arthur Nikisch, of whom the English conductor is the favourite pupil. Nikisch will be well-remembered by patrons of the Wagner season at Covent Garden before the war. This is, however, the first time the eminent interpreter of the Bayreuth master has visited Rome, and intense interest and enthusiasm were aroused by the event. Indeed at the first concert an altogether phenomenal success was gained. The programme included 'Leonora' No. 3, the 'Eroica,' Prelude to 'Tristan' and 'Death of Isolde,' and the 'Tannhäuser' Overture.

The concert was repeated during Easter week, Strauss' 'Tod und Verklärung' being substituted for the Wagner items. At the time of writing Nikisch is still at Rome, and will give two more concerts, after which Busoni will present a series of programmes.

HOLY WEEK AT ROME

As usual, the great basilicas have been thronged for the imposing functions of Holy Week, and the usual classical polyphonic music has been executed, without organ: the responsories, lamentations, and psalms of Palestrina, Vittoria, Viadana, &c. But Holy Week has also been remarkable this year for three sacred concerts of high interest, two given in the Sala Bach, and one in the hall of the Philharmonic Society. The latter was of peculiar interest for the exhumation of the 'Stabat Mater' of Augustus Steffani, of whom a few details will interest English readers. Steffani was born at Castelfranco, in the province of Venice, in 1654, and was famous as bishop, diplomat, mathematician, and musician. As a child, he sang in the choir of St. Mark at Venice, whence the Elector of Monaco took him to his Court, and gave him a musical education. In 1724 the Academy of Doubt Music, of London, named Steffani its president—no doubt through the good offices of George I.—and it was perhaps on this occasion that Steffani sent his 'Stabat Mater' to London, where the MS. is still preserved in the British Museum.

It is this same MS. which the Philharmonic Society, Rome has copied, and which was executed before a crowded and distinguished audience on the Monday in Holy Week. The composition is written for six voices (choir and solo) with accompaniment for strings, and a figured bass for organ. This figured bass has been successfully adapted for orchestra by the director of the Philharmonic, Maestro Setaccioli. The entire composition is remarkable for its contrapuntal daring and is much in advance of its time. It is also perfectly spontaneous, and reveals no artificial searching after effect. The work is not laid out as a continuous whole, but each of its twelve verses is treated separately. Presented by a well-trained choir and excellent soloists, it aroused great interest in the Roman public, its exhumation proving in every sense a success. Probably this was the first performance of the work after Steffani's gift of the MS. to the London Academy.

On the Tuesday in Holy Week a sacred concert was given in the Sala Bach that attracted a crowded audience. A great success was gained that the concert was repeated on Holy Thursday. The first part of the programme was devoted to Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater,' in an edition for twelve voices (without choir), with orchestra of strings and organ. The second part was occupied by an organ recital, given by Dr. Manari, organist of the Lateran, with the following programme:

Prelude and Fugue in D minor	...	...	...	Bach
Chorale Prelude	...	...	...	Buxtehude
Pavana ('Earl of Salisbury')	...	...	...	Byrd
Recit. de Nazard	...	...	...	Clerambault
Aria in C minor	...	...	...	Martini
Adagio and Allegro in B minor	...	...	...	Zipoli

On Easter eve, in the same hall, Haydn's 'Seven Words of Our Lord on the Cross,' for double string quartet, had a successful presentation. In the matter of quartets I am informed that the newly-formed Roman String Quartet comprising Signori Spada, Gaudini, Matteucci, and Zuccaro will visit London next season. These artists are well known at Rome, and their performance of Haydn's work excellently inaugurated their corporate existence.

Amongst other functions at the Sala Bach mention should be made of the appearance of a young vocalist Miss Evelina Levi, who sang Shakespeare's 'Willow Song' in English; and of an altogether exceptional concert by Hungarian lady, Mlle. Ghita Lenart, whose rich contralto voice was heard in a remarkably comprehensive and interesting programme of Italian, French, and German songs.

LEONARD PEYTON.

FOLK-SONGS OF SARDINIA

Folk-loreists and collectors of traditional music would find a mine of interesting material amongst the island people of Sardinia. Immense interest has been raised in Rome by the recent visit of a Sardinian, Prof. Gabriel, with five genuine cantadori, or folk-singers, of the island, who have illustrated with their songs his most interesting lecture on 'Songs and Singers of Sardinia.' As the subject is rather without general interest, a résumé of the lecture is suggested:

The folk-music of Sardinia has much in common with the early Greek music, and the introduction of Christianity tended only to elaborate an already existing art. The traditional tasgia, or accord of voices, is composed of five parts—the tenor, the contra-tenor at the distance of a 5th, the bass, the triplum or 3rd, and the double-octave tenor, whose aid is called in only on extraordinary occasions. The words belonging to these traditional songs are of no importance, and serve merely as a peg for the melodies, many of which are used as dance measures, while in some the instruments are represented by a walking-stick, on which the singer pretends to play. A great utility of these traditional songs was their adaptability as amorous serenades. The inconvenience of their being for four or five voices, however, soon made itself felt, and from this arose the monodic chant, so largely characteristic of the island, in which the other voices are supplied by the guitar. The monodic chant is distinguished by a peculiar characteristic that at once determines the value of a cantadore, that consists not in timbre or power of voice, or in extent of gamut, but solely in ability to produce a peculiar sort of sob (singhiozzo) with which the monodic chant terminates.

There is no remarkable difference between the religious and the amorous music of the Sardinians. Indeed, it seems for them peculiarly fitting that the melody in which they have sung the praises of the Madonna should be transported to the open air and used to acclaim the beauty of their flesh and blood madonne of the dark hair and flashing eye. Very peculiar is their method of expressing the unexpressible, the beauty of their lady-loves. How is it possible to capture the infinite? Evidently by reaching far, and coming downwards! So, to express this idea of descent from the infinite, they begin with a high number and count backwards; one of their amorous songs being literally as follows: 'My lady-love is dark, seven six five four three,' &c. These songs, sung by the tasgia with elementary harmony, have a most curious and moving effect.

In publishing a singularly curious document concerning a Cappella Sistina, Rome, the Rivista Musicale Italiana supplies information known by few on that famous 'Collegio i Cappellani Cantori Pontifici,' which is the most important musical institution the Church can boast of. The Cappella Sistina is the Choral Corps proper of the Apostolic places, and is used exclusively at the rites personally performed by the Pope, and must not be confused, as often happens, with the musical Cappella of the Basilica of Saint Peter called 'Cappella Giulia.' The only characteristic, perhaps, which is peculiar to and distinguishes the Sistina from the Giulia, and from all other similar musical institutions the Catholic Church, consists in the exclusive execution of music which is purely vocal, i.e., unaccompanied by instruments—or, as some say, alla Palestrina (Palestrina style). It is common knowledge that in the Pontifical Latin Church, which is most beautifully frescoed by Michelangelo, no organ exists, and that the use of a musical instrument is absolutely prohibited, even as it is the practice day in Christian sanctuaries in the East (Russian, Greek, &c.). This is a tradition which travels back to earliest times, when the persecuted followers of the newly found faith came together in secret in the Catacombs. From the above-mentioned document—which in substance is a petition to Pope Pius X. to induce him to bring the emoluments of the singers of the Sistina up to a level with the increased cost of living—one gathers that in 1590, in the reign of Gregorio XIV., the singers received an honorarium of 200 scudi a year (nominally £40 sterling), a soup daily, dinner on every festivity (generally served in the servants' hall, so-called, of the Apostolic Palace), four tips yearly, free distribution of cassocks and surplices at prescribed times, and other emoluments.

The Serenità, a 'review of popular re-education,' as it is called, published a characteristic Verdian anecdote intimately associated with the première of 'Falstaff,' which was performed at the Scala in February, 1893. Great was the expectation, seasoned with curiosity, for the new work of the grand old man. The Minister of Education went to Milan for the occasion, taking with him the famous Giosuè Carducci and Enrico Panzacchi, a poet of repute. After the second Act, the Minister went to greet the octogenarian maestro and handed him a telegram from King Humbert, which was couched in affectionate terms. The following day the Minister left for Rome, but shortly after his arrival there he received a wire from Verdi stating that he had just read in the Milanese paper that the title of Marquis had been conferred upon him by the King, and adding, evidently in a disturbed state of mind, 'I look to you to do everything possible to prevent this thing.' The Minister was flustered; indeed, such a thing as the conferment of a title upon Verdi had not even entered his mind, and neither had King any such intention. The news had been circulated by a foreign journalist, who, moreover, had woven a romance around it to the effect that King Humbert wished to give Verdi the Collare dell'Annunziata, but that Crispien, the then Prime Minister, opposing this, the Minister of Education insisted that at least the title of Marquis be conferred.

The news was devoid of all truth, but nothing could persuade Verdi that he had not 'foiled a plot,' which if it had succeeded would in his opinion have made him 'cut a ridiculous figure in the eyes of the world.' The times, and men, have changed. Great men who are simple souls are not the order of the present day. E. HERBERT-CÉSARI.

VIENNA

This summer the State Opera Company proposes to arrange a tour of the big South American cities, playing a season of Wagner and Strauss in each. If this scheme is carried out (at present a campaign in the Press is being waged against it), the Opera will be closed from June 1 until the end of September. But some means of increasing the salaries of the artists is necessary, and it is expected that in spite of opposition the tour will take place. At present the principal tenor is, at the rate of exchange, receiving a salary of under £4 per week.

Musical events during March have been fairly quiet, as is usual during the latter weeks of Lent. At the Opera the principal items of interest have been the 'Guest' performances. The German baritone, Herr Bohnen, is still here, and has appeared ten or eleven times during the month. The 'Ring' has been performed once, with Herr Bohnen as Wotan, Fräulein Marie Lorenz-Hollischer, of Karlsruhe, as Brunnhilde, and Herr Schubert in the rôle of Loge and Siegfried. Dr. Schalk conducted these performances. On March 6, Herr Bohnen appeared as Kaspar in 'Freischütz,' the performance being conducted by Richard Strauss. On March 17 'Tosca' was given, with Signor Giorgini, of the Scala, Milan, as Cavaradossi. This artist sang in Italian, and the remainder of the company in German. 'Otello' was given on March 21, with Herr Slezak in the title-rôle, and on March 23 Herr Slezak appeared as Radames in 'Aida,' with Frau Jeriza in the name part and Herr Bohnen as Amonasro. This very fine performance was directed by Dr. Schalk.

Korngold conducted his opera, 'Die Tote Stadt,' on March 29. No doubt his reading of the score is authoritative, but that of Dr. Schalk would seem to be far more convincing. The first performance of 'Die Kuhlhaymerin,' by Dr. Julius Bittner, is promised for April 9, with Fräulein Lehmann in the leading-rôle.

It is stated that Lehar's latest operetta, 'The Blue Mazur,' which has been running here for nearly a year, will shortly be produced in England. This work, though perhaps not up to the composer's 'Merry Widow' standard, contains some typical waltzes, and will no doubt become popular in London.

A concert under the direction of Mr. Albert Coates was announced for April 12, with a programme comprising Scriabin's 'Divine Poem,' Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, the 'Siegfried Idyll,' and the 'Trauermusik' from 'Götterdämmerung.' This concert was under the patronage of the British Minister, the Hon. Francis Lindley, the proceeds to be devoted to the British relief fund for Vienna children.

STANLEY WINNEY.

Miscellaneous

The April issue of Music and Letters is even more interesting than usual. Mr. Plunket Greene writes of Stanford's work as a song composer, and surely no one has a better right to be heard on the subject; Bronislaw Huberman deals with 'Artists and Concert Life'; C. F. Crowder does well to remind us of 'Neglected Treasure in Handel's Operas'; and G. E. P. Arkwright contributes 'A Note on Purcell's Music.' Other articles are 'Lodewyk Mortelmans' (Leo van Riel), 'Violoncello Playing' (Guilhermina Suggia), 'The Heroic in Art' (John Drinkwater), 'A Concert Audience and its Points of View' (Paul Edmonds), 'The Dante Sexcentenary of 1865' (Mary Bradford Whiting), and the usual reviews of new books. The number is lavishly provided with music-type illustrations, and there is a Rothenstein drawing of Stanford by way of frontispiece.

A concert by Dame Clara Butt and the Handel Festival Choir and Orchestra is to be given at the Crystal Palace on June 4. The programme includes the 'Hymn of Praise' and 'Blest Pair of Sirens.'

The Federation of British Music Industries has held an exhibition of German musical instruments at the Northern Polytechnic in order that makers may inspect the goods with which they are competing.

Answers to Correspondents

BARONICA.—The answer of your question would entail far too much research and space. Some of the composers about whom you inquire are not sufficiently important to be in any books of reference. Why not refer to 'Grove' for the illustrious ones? For biographical details of the others, write to the publishers of the songs they have perpetrated.

ENHARMONIC.—The term 'enharmonically related' is applied to such intervals as the augmented sixth and the minor seventh, which are written differently—(i.e.,  $F\sharp$  and  $G\flat$ )—but sound the same.

LEONARD DORSETT.—The only two known to us are Le Canada Musical (in French only), Montreal, and The Canadian Music Trades Journal, 177, Jarvis Street, Toronto.

CONTENTS.

Page.

The Jubilee of the Royal Albert Hall and the Royal Choral Society. II. The Period of Experiment and Non-Success. By Herman Klein ( continued )	313
The Dramatic Works of Vincent d'Indy. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	320
Some Italian Composers of To-day: IV.—Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli. By Guido M. Gatti	323
The Organ Works of Bach. By Harvey Grace ( continued )	326
New Light on Early Tudor Composers: XVII. Thomas Knight. By W. H. Grattan-Flood	331
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	332
Music in the Foreign Press	334
A Beethoven Biography	336
Festival Week at Bath. By Eric Blom	336
New Music	337
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	338
The Glasgow Orpheus Choir	349
Choral Notes and News. By W. McNaught	350
Chamber Music for Amateurs	351
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	352
Church and Organ Music	353
The New Organ for Westminster Cathedral. By J. Stuart Archer	353
Letters to the Editor	356
Sharps and Flats	359
Sixty Years Ago	359
Obituary	359
The Relation of Church Music to the Musical Life of the Nation	359
The British Music Society	360
'The Peep-Show' at the Hippodrome	360
Music in the Provinces	361
Musical Notes from Abroad	369
Miscellaneous	374
'Let the people praise Thee.' Anthem for Festival or General Use, with or without Accompaniment. By A. HERBERT BREWER	347

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. 'Dream-love.' Four Part-Song. By Percy E. Fletcher.
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BENNETT, G. J.—Scherzo. (No. 78, Original Compositions for the Organ. New Series.) 2s. 3d.
—Three Preludes. (No. 79, Original Compositions for the Organ. New Series.) 2s. 3d.

BREWER, A. H.—"Let the people praise Thee." Anthem for Festival or General use. (No. 939, The Musical Times.) 2d.

BUTTERWORTH, G.—"Love blows as the wind blows." Song-Cycle, with accompaniment for String Quartet or Pianoforte. Vocal Score, 5s.; String Parts (4), 1s. 3d. each.

CAMPBELL-PATTERSON, F.—"The Messenger." Song. 2s.

CATTY, C. S.—"By the Stream." For Pianoforte. 1s. 6d.

COULDERY, C. H.—"Hark! my soul." Anthem. 3d.

CRIMP, H. E.—"The Vine." Song. 2s.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

ELGAR, EDWARD.—"The Spirit of England." Words only. 10s, net per 100.

FLETCHER, P. E.—"Dream-love." Four-part Song. (No. 1392, Novello's Part-song Book.) 4d.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—"London Town." Four-part Song. Arranged for Men's Voices (T.T.B.B.) (No. 572, The Orpheus.) 6d.

—"O lovely May." Arranged as a Trio. (No. 47, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

MCNAUGHT, W.—"Dancing at the Lurgan." Song. In D, for low voice; in G, for high voice. 2s. each.

MARSH, J. W.—"The Motherland." Unison Song. 4d.

MAY, A. V.—Vesper Hymn ("Grant us Thy peace") 1½d.

NORTH, J. W. ALLEN.—Vesper Hymn ("Lord, keep us safe"). On Card. 2d.

ROBERTS, OWEN.—"Abide with me." Sacred Song. 2s.

—"Lead, kindly Light. Sacred Song. In G, for Soprano or Tenor. 2s.

RUSSELL, F. G.—"When the Lord turned again." Festival Anthem. 8d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 347) contains the following music in both notations: "A Song of Sunshine." GEORGE TOOTELL. 2d.

SCOTT-SMITH, B.—"Sayonara" ("Good-bye, as must be so"). Song. In G or A flat. 2s. each.

SHEELES, JOHN.—"The spacious firmament." Hymn and Tune. (No. 1022, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

SPARROW, S.—"Ave Verum" ("Hail, True Body") 3d.

SWEETING, E. T.—"Lavender." Two-part Song. (No. 192, Novello's Two-part Songs for Female or Boys' Voices.) 4d.

WEBSTER, ERIC.—"Vignettes." For Pianoforte Solo. 3s.

WHITE, FELIX.—"A Dickens Note-Book." Suite for Pianoforte. 5s.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BERGÉ, I.—"Jesus, loving to the end." Choral. 10 cents (4d.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—"O Lord, support us." Anthem for eight voices. 10 cents (4d.).

—"St. Christopher." Cantata for Women's Voices. 50 cents (2s.).

ESSAY, A.R.C.O.—"Seven Lamps" and "Judgment," both 3 models and hints. Enclose 3s. 6d. each case. "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BROADWOOD Semi-Grand PIANOFORTE for SALE. Excellent condition. May be seen by appointment. Write, 120, Local Guide Office, S.E.3.

HAWKES Excelsior Sonorous French Horn, in F with low and high pitch crooks; perfect condition. £10. "P. C. S." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy Song "THE SILENT LAND" (Oakley). Compass A to D. Price 2 Weeks & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

BACH'S PASSION (St. John), about 40 copies WANTED (second-hand). Harold Harris, 262, Wellingborough Road, Northampton.

FOR SALE.—The old-established BUSINESS of a Pianoforte Dealer and Tuner, together with the SHOP and DWELLING-HOUSE, Nos. 47 & 48, High Street, Banbury, with vacant possession. Particulars of W. E. Wood, 21, Marlborough Road, Banbury.

YOUNG talented MUSICIAN can have practice before the public without fee. Madame Lewis, L.R.A.M., 1, Yeoman Row, S.W.3.

POWERFUL ORGAN, Suitable for Church or Cinema. Handsome walnut case; ornamental pipes. 16 Stop Height, 8-ft. 6-in. Excellent condition. £100. 30, Glebe Road, Barnes.

BOUDOIR GRAND (Stingl), exhibition instrument, ebonized case, perfect condition. £120. Mornington, 1, Southwood Mansions, Highgate, N.6.

ELKIN &amp; CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS

THREE PASTORAL SONGS

BY

ROGER QUILTER.

POEMS BY JOSEPH CAMPBELL.

Original Edition (Voice, Piano, Violin, and 'Cello), 7s. net.

Edition for Voice and Piano only, 4s. net.

I will go with my father a-ploughing.

Cherry Valley.

I wish and I wish.

IN TWO KEYS.

FOR MEDIUM OR HIGH VOICE.

A WORLD-WIDE SUCCESS.

CORONACH

(A HIGHLAND LAMENT)

BY

EDGAR BARRATT.

	Price Net.	s.	d.
CORONACH—Piano Solo ... ..	2	0
CORONACH—Organ ... .. (Arr. by Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.)	2	0
CORONACH—Full Orchestra ... .. (Including Piano Conductor.)	2	0
CORONACH—Arranged for Piano, two Violins, 'Cello, Bass ad lib.	2	6

"Pianists who love to hear their instruments sing will welcome this delightfully impressive song-without-words, not alone for its inviting subject-matter but for its unconventional harmonic dress and rich chordal colouring."—Musical Opinion.

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 &amp; 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher).
Master Teacher (T.R.C.)—Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, History, Interpretation. Successes at L.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Tests (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

VOICES WANTED for CHOIR of West-End
Church. Ladies or Gentlemen. "G. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., Wardour Street, W. 1.

T. ANDREW'S, Holborn.—There is a Vacancy for ALTO in the Choir. Communicant. Full Cathedral Services.
Salary £20 per annum. Apply, enclosing copies of two recent testimonials, to Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, Organist and Director of the Choir, Whitehall, 70-72, Guilford Street, London, W.C. 1.

BASS SINGER REQUIRED. £15 per annum.
Good reader essential. Write, Choirmaster, St. Andrew Under-croft, Leadenhall Street, E.C. 3.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Cairns United Free Church, Motherwell, near Glasgow. Fine
two-manual Willis Organ. Salary, according to qualifications.
Minimum, £100 per annum. Apply, enclosing copies of testimonials, later than May 3, to Dugald Taylor, Dudley, Motherwell, Scotland.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for Woodberry Down Baptist Church, Stamford Hill. Two-manual Organ, electrically blown. Reply by letter, stating experience, qualifications, and salary required, to Mr. W. J. Hines, 100, Stlewood Road, Stamford Hill, N. 16.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Sherwood United Free Church, Paisley. Must be fully qualified Choirmaster. Salary not less than £80 per annum. Applications, with testimonials, to be sent by May 15 to Andrew Elliot, Juniorleigh, Arkleston Road, Paisley.

ORGANIST (lady), pupil of Goss-Custard, wishes to depute within ten miles of Woolwich, for expenses paid.
£226, Observer Office, Bexley Heath.

T. MATTHEW'S, Bayswater. — Tenors, Bass,
WANTED. £15. Apply, by letter, Organist, 40, St. Mary's Mission, W. 2.

TENOR and BASS, £12; also TENOR, £20.
WANTED for All Saints', Devonshire Road, South Lambeth.
Alter Attersoll, 21, Thurlstone Road, West Norwood, S.E. 27.

AS DEPUTY, Experienced ORGANIST (R.C.)
and PIANIST, free during July and August, would undertake duty. Address, "Deputy," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

STUDENT MUSIC MISTRESS (non-resident), required in September. Apply to Head-Mistress, Skinners' School, London, N. 16.

THE PIONEER CLUB for Professional and
Business Women has been reopened at 12, Cavendish Place, W. 1.
Annual Subscription, £4 4s. No entrance fee (pro tem.).

TWO-MANUAL ORGAN for SALE.—10-ft. high,
7-ft. wide, and 6-ft. deep. Tubular Pneumatic throughout.
5 Great, 3 Small, 1 on Pedals. Three Couplers. In stained case.
£300, or close offer. Apply, F. Tunks, Organ Builder, 50, Leppoc Road, Clapham, S.W. 4.

MOLD PARISH CHURCH.—FOR SALE,
Three-manual and Pedal ORGAN, Fine Tone. 35 Stops, with Couplers. Oak case. In fine condition. Apply, Vicar, Mold, N. Wales.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—
Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed.
Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two
Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built.
Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—Two-Manual and Pedal Reed Organ (Karn). 14 Stops, hand and foot blown. Polished oak case; as new. Suitable for student or Church. Cheap. Apply, J. Berry, 18, Colwick Road, West Bridgford.

ORGAN (Bell), Two-Manual, no pedals, in handsome carved case. 17 Stops. £80. (Flat 4), No. 1, Stamford Brook Avenue, Hammersmith, W. 6.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, Kersal.—FOR SALE.—
KINETIC BLOWER, in good condition, suitable for two-manual or small three-manual organ. Offers to the Organist at once. Can be seen by appointment; no reasonable offer refused.

FOR SALE.—PEDALS (Radiating and Concave), with Roller Board for attachment to Piano; and Organ Stool.
What offers? 35, Mayfield Road, Moseley, Birmingham.

MUSIC for EASTER and WHITSUNTIDE

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, in F, CHANT FORM ... ..	3d.
BENEDICTE, OMNIA OPERA, in F ... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, in F ... ..	6d.
CANTATE DOMINO AND DEUS MISEREATUR, in F ...	6d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, in E FLAT ...	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, in D ... ..	4d.
COMMUNION SERVICE, in E, with BENEDICTUS AND AGNUS DEI ... ..	1s.

ANTHEMS.

IF WE BELIEVE—EASTER ... ..	4d.
TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
THE GOOD SHEPHERD—EASTER ... ..	4d.
IF YE LOVE ME—WHIT SUNDAY ... ..	3d.
I WILL MAGNIFY THEE—WHIT SUNDAY ... ..	4d.
TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
AVE MARIA—in Six Voices. SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLO, WITH CHORUS ... ..	6d.
AVE MARIA—SOPRANO SOLO—FOLIO ... ..	1s. 6d.
MAY CHORUS—FOUR VOICES ... ..	4d.

The Composer will be pleased to send Specimens of any of the Compositions in this advertisement.

Address: 36, CHRIST CHURCH ROAD, NORWICH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise that tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."
—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c. &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest ... ..	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth ... ..	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES

SERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Jubilate ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... ..	1s. 4d.	10d.
--------------------------------------	---------	------

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison) ...	4d.	2½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s.	—
---------------------------------------	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use) ...	2s	1s. 4d.
--	----	---------

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE COSMOS SERIES.

1. CHORAL LEAFLETS, VESPERS, INTROITS, ETC.
2. S.S. ANNIVERSARY MUSIC, HYMNS, SOLOS, ETC.
3. CHRISTMAS CAROLS, New and Original.

Specimens sent post free for 3d. in stamps. Mention this paper.

A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS.

GLENHOLME, THE COMMON, HESSLE, E. YORKS.

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male

Quartet, by Arthur Mangelsdorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd.
160, Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarshaw, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

A SHORT AND EASY SETTING OF
THE OFFICE FOR THE

HOLY COMMUNION

IN THE KEY OF E FLAT.

1. KYRIE.
- 1a. RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS.
2. CREDO.
3. SANCTUS
4. BENEDICTUS QUI VENIT
5. AGNUS DEI.
6. GLORIA IN EXCELSIS.

COMPOSED BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 35.)

PRICE, ONE SHILLING.

Voice Part only (for congregational use) price Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS
60.	THREE CHORALE PRELUDES ... ..	Harold E. Darke 3
61.	SOLEMN PRELUDE ... ..	Hugh Blair 1
62.	INTERMEZZO ... ..	Hugh Blair 2
63.	CAPRICCIETTO ... ..	Hugh Blair 2
64.	POSTLUDE ... ..	Hugh Blair 1
65.	POSTLUDE (with Violins ad lib. ) ... ..	A. C. Mackenzie 1
66.	FANTASIA ON THE TUNE "TWIRGWYN" ... ..	T. J. Morgan 2
67.	MINUET ... ..	Alfred Hollins 2
68.	EPITHALAMUM ... ..	Alfred Hollins 2
69.	THREE SHORT PIECES ... ..	S. Coleridge-Taylor 4
70.	TOCCATA ... ..	A. P. F. Boëly 2
71.	A SOUVENIR ... ..	H. Douglas 2
72.	LAMENT ... ..	J. A. Sowerbutts 2
73.	ELEGIAC PRELUDE ... ..	G. J. Bennett 2
74.	CRADLE SONG ... ..	R. G. Hailling 1
75.	CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN" ... ..	J. E. Wallace 3
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") ... ..	C. Hubert H. Parry 3
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... ..	Alec Rowley 1
78.	SCHERZO ... ..	G. J. Bennett 2
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... ..	G. J. Bennett 2

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR OLD FRENCH

HARPSICHORD PIECES

1. Vaudeville à danser, 1712 (Auteur inconnu)
2. Petit air tendre ... L. J. Saint-Amans
3. La Bourrée de Vincent ... J. P. Rameau
4. Tambourin Chinois ... E. G. Chedeville

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS

BY ERNEST FARRAR.

VIOLIN AND PIANO.		s.	d.
CELTIC SUITE ... ..	6	0
SONGS.
CRITTANY.
Three Keys ... ..	1	6
MISTRESS MINE.
Two Keys... ..	2	0
FO PASTORALS.
Come you, Mary.
Who would shepherd pipes forsake?
Two Keys... ..	2	0
FO SONGS.
Diaphenia.
The Lover's Appeal.
Two Keys ... ..	2	0

ANTHEM.		s.	d.
REVENT US, O LORD ... ..	0	2

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

COMPOSITIONS

BY FELIX WHITE.

DICKENS NOTE-BOOK.		s.	d.
Suite for Piano ... ..	5	0
OLDEN SLUMBERS.
Song. In F and G ... ..	2	0
ING, CARE AWAY.
Song. In E flat and F ... ..	2	0
THOU HAST LEFT ME EVER, JAMIE.
Song. In D minor and E minor ... ..	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS

BY JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

OT-POURRI. A Cycle of Fragments or Verses by	s.	d.
Isobel Scott Bremner ... ..	6	0

SONGS.

OVE OUTWITTED. Phantasy Duet for Voice and
Pianoforte ... ..	2	0
MARCH MORNING. For High or Low Voice	2	0
TWO SONGS: "Absence" and "Serenade." For
High, Medium, or Low Voice ... ..	2	0

PART-SONGS.

AIR, SWEET, CRUEL. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..	4d.
HUNTING SONG. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..	4d.
SWEET KATE. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..	4d.
THREE SLEEPS. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..	2d.
WHEN LAURA SMILES. (S.A.T.B.) ... ..	4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE EDITION OF THE WORKS OF
BRITISH BLIND COMPOSERS

This Edition, published under the auspices of the National Institute for the Blind, and obtainable from any music dealer, is exclusively devoted to works of high artistic value by Blind Composers.

ASK TO SEE THE EDITION.

Catalogue may be had from the National Institute for the Blind, 224, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W.1, where the music may be inspected

Publishers of the Edition

RYALLS & JONES, LTD.,
107-109, GRANGE ROAD, BIRKENHEAD.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

"SUN OF MY SOUL."
"THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
"DIVINE LOVE."
"THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."
"LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
"THE NAZARENE."
"THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
"JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES)

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each,

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
15 CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLISH LYRICS

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.

(SET II).

1. One golden thread.
2. The spirit of the Spring.
3. What part of dread eternity.
4. The blackbird.
5. The faithful lover.
6. If I might ride on puissant wing.
7. Why art thou slow.
8. She is my love beyond all thought.

(SET 12).

1. When the dew is falling.
2. To Blossoms.
3. Rosaline.
4. When the sun's great orb.
5. Dream pedlary.
6. O World, O Life, O Time.
7. The sound of hidden music.

The Series is now completed by the publication of the above Sets.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

---

SELECTED EDITION.

---

SONGS AND BALLADS.

(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

---

Price     ...     ...     ...     Eighteen Shillings each.

---

PREFACE.

THIS Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, chanteys, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purposes of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises—counting variants, and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series, in which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

---

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BARBARA ALLEN

VARIATIONS

FOR STRING ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ADAM CARSE.

Conductor (Pianoforte) ... .. 2s. 3d.

String Parts (Four) ... .. 6s. od.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LAMIA

SYMPHONIC POEM

FOR

FULL ORCHESTRA.

BY

DOROTHY HOWELL.

FULL SCORE.

Price, Twenty Shillings.

String Parts, 6s. 8d.; Wind Parts, MS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED

SUITE

FOR STRINGS.

FROM THE DRAMATIC MUSIC OF

HENRY PURCELL

ARRANGED AND EDITED BY

ALBERT COATES.

SCORE.

Price, Two Shillings.

String Parts, 2s. 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

O LOVELY MAY

A Three-part song for S.S.A., with pianoforte accompaniment.

BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

Price Fourpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

JUST PUBLISHED.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOLK-SONGS

OF

ENGLISH ORIGIN

COLLECTED IN

THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

BY

CECIL J. SHARP

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

FIRST SERIES.

Price Seven Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENT
VOL. I.Development of the Rhythmic and Metric Sense of the Instinct for Harmonious and Balanced Movements, and of good Motor Habits.

BY

EMILE JAQUES-DALCROZE.

Price Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

YOUR INSTRUMENT

THE PERFECT "E" STRING AT LAST.

A revelation in Steel E's. Careful experiments and tests have enabled our experts to produce a Steel E with a movable bridge protector which is under the complete control of the player. It may be moved up or down the string at will. One end of the string is also covered with silk of special texture and great strength as protection for the peg.

Cat. No. 1003
RETAIL PRICE, 7d. each.

deserves the best strings.

THE CRAFTSMAN says: "Because of the manufacturing and scientific resources behind every 'Cathedral' and 'Summit' String you can always rely upon the quality with absolute certainty. 'Cathedral' and 'Summit' Strings are the most widely known in the world to-day, and are being used by eminent musicians everywhere. Order a few samples from the lists in this announcement, try them on your instrument, and you will never go back to the foreign brands again."

Of all Music Dealers or post free from
BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS LTD.,
MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, N.4.

Telegrams: "Cello, Finspark, London." Telephone: North 2594.

THE "CATHEDRAL" ADJUSTER.

Many world-famous artists now use Steel E Strings with the adjuster including Jascha Heifetz himself. The "Cathedral" adjuster has its own special features not to be found in similar appliances. Be very sure that you do buy a "Cathedral" adjuster—the name is stamped on the screw. Neatly packed with instructions for fitting.

RETAIL PRICE,
2s. 6d. each.

ALUMINIUM D.

"Cathedral" & "Summit" new process Aluminium "D" Strings play easily. They vibrate sympathetically with other strings and tones, and act as an ideal neutral agent between the Soprano qualities of the upper strings and the deeper notes of the "G" String. "Cathedral" Brand, Cat. No. 1003, Retail Price, 1/8 each. "Summit" Brand, Cat. No. 1003, Retail price, 1/- each.

CATHEDRAL STRINGS SUMMIT STRINGS

"SUMMIT" GUT STRINGS.

VIOLIN.

Cat. No.

1 E 3 lengths selected, 1/- each.

3 A 2 " " 1/2 "

5 D 2 " " 1/4 "

VIOLA.

Cat. No.

7 A 1 full length selected, 1/2 each.

9 D 1 " " 1/4 "

VIOLONCELLO.

Cat. No.

11 A 1 length selected, 2/6 each.

12 D 1 " " 2/3 "

DOUBLE-BASS.

Cat. No.

13 G 1 length selected, 5/6 each.

17 D 1 " " 7/6 "

"CATHEDRAL" ACRIBELLE.

Violinists find the "Cathedral" Acribelle a perpetual delight. Reveals wonderful craftsmanship—a masterpiece in string production. But the best test of its value is in actual trial on your violin. It just means that you will always use them. Prices, Cat. No. 50, E, super-silk, 3 lengths, 1/- each; No. 60, A, super silk, 2 lengths, 1/3 each; No. 60, D, super-silk, 2 length, 1/9 each.

THE "DISCUS"

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly one thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

MADE BY

WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS.

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

17, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

The "Apollo"
ORGAN

The 'APOLLO' Pedal Reed Organ

.. The Substitute for a Pipe Organ

When authorities of a small Church, Chapel, or Mission find their finances will not admit of the installation of a Pipe Organ the solution is the practical 'Apollo' Pedal Reed Organ.

Built by Pipe Organ craftsmen, with the finest pipe organ materials and being a replica of a Pipe Organ in Scale, Dimensions, Position and Combinations the 'Apollo' is worthy of serious consideration.

Eminent authorities endorse the 'Apollo' both for Church use and for Organists or Students Home Practice.

Illustrated Booklet with the testimony of a leading Recitalist will be sent by post free upon application.

Specification.

Two complete Manuals and Pedals.
8 full rows Reeds on Manuals, 61 Notes, CC to C; and 2 rows on Pedals, 30 Notes CC to F. Pedals RCO Scale, Radiating and concave. 17 Stops. Case, Solid Oak, light or dark finish, complete with circular fronted BENCH, as shown.

Great.

Violone .....16ft. Open Diapason 8ft.
Clarabella 8ft. Du ciona .....8ft.

Swell.

Principal 4ft.
Bourdon.....16ft. Gamba .....8ft.
Oboe .....1ft. Flute .....4ft.

Pedal.

Tremulant —
Sub Bass 16ft. Open Diapason 16ft.

Composition Pedals.

2 to Swell. 2 to Great. Swell Pedal.

Couplers.

Swell Octave. Swell to Great.
Swell to Pedal. Great to Pedal.

Accessories.

Hand and Foot Blowers (the latter close into case when not required). Wind Indicator, etc., etc.

Designed and BUILT by

Rushworth & Dreaper Ltd.

Church, Chamber and Concert
ORGAN BUILDERS

Showrooms, 11-17 Islington, LIVERPOOL.

Telegrams:
'APOLLO,' Liverpool.

LONDON:—The CHAPPELL PIANO CO. Ltd., 50 New Bond Street, W.1.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH
DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER
EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Four Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG
TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

ARNOLD KRUG
SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Four Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK
TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price Two Shillings each.

MAX MAYER
BAGATELLES

Price Five Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN
SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON
WOODLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE
THREE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

SCHUMANN
PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 2s. ; Part II., Price 3s.

SCHUMANN
THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

E. A. SYDENHAM
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Four Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY
CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price Two Shillings each.

FRANCESCO BERGER
FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORGAN - STOPS

AND THEIR

ARTISTIC REGISTRATION

NAMES, FORMS, CONSTRUCTION,
TONALITIES, AND OFFICES IN SCIENTIFIC COMBINATION

BY

GEORGE ASHDOWN AUDSLEY, LL.D.

ECCLESIASTICAL AND ORGAN ARCHITECT.

Author of "The Art of Organ-Building."

ILLUSTRATED.

Price, Cloth, Twelve Shillings and Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED.
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY Co.

HORALE PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

FIRST SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 1.

CONTENTS.

HORALE PRELUDE on "Dundee."
HORALE PRELUDE on "Rockingham."
HORALE PRELUDE on S. S. Wesley's "Hampton."
HORALE PRELUDE on the "Old 104th."
HORALE PRELUDE on "Melcombe."
HORALE PRELUDE on "Christe Redemptor omnium."
HORALE PRELUDE on "St. Ann's."

SECOND SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 45.

CONTENTS.

HORALE PRELUDE on "Croft's 136th."
HORALE PRELUDE on "Martyrdom."
HORALE PRELUDE on "St. Thomas."
HORALE PRELUDE on "St. Mary."
HORALE PRELUDE on "Eventide."
HORALE PRELUDE on "St. Cross."
HORALE PRELUDE on "Hanover."

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH SET

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MINOR MELODIES

Lyrics and Songs for Musical Setting

BY

J. M. STUART-YOUNG.

Ready about May, 1921, through MESSRS. T. & A. CONSTABLE, at the University Press, Edinburgh, at 10s 6d. net per copy, to the general public, first edition of 4,000 copies. 250 pp., Crown 8vo.

NOTE.—Composers may secure single copies on sending one or more of their published songs, as proof of their bona fides, and 1s. 6d. (to cover cost of packing and postage) to

THE MISSES HARVEY, TYDERTON,

45, ST. ALBAN'S ROAD, SEVEN KINGS, EBBW.

"MINOR MELODIES" will be followed a few months later by a second volume of Lyrics, this time with more tropical settings (Mr. Stuart-Young is permanently resident in West Africa) under the caption of "THE SEDUCTIVE COAST." Composers who acquire "Minor Melodies," and who wish to hold an early reserve on the Lyrics now being written, should ask the MISSES HARVEY to note down their wish for the new volume. It will be supplied to composers on the same terms (cost of postage and packing only).

THE ORGAN

A STUDY OF ITS PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE

PART I.

BY

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD.

Price Three Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

VALE LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND THREEPENCE.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRAS

	d
String Parts ... ..	2 5
Wind Parts ... ..	5 4
Harp (or Pianoforte) ... ..	1 6

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ELEMENTS OF HARMONY

BY

JAMES LYON, MUS. D. (OXON.)

CHAPTERS: I. Introductory; II. Primary Triads, Major or Minor; III. The Secondary Triads; IV. General Information; V. The Inversions of the Diatonic Triads; VI. Sequences; VII. The Dominant Seventh; VIII. Cadences; IX. Modulation, Part 1; X. Chromatic Triads; XI. Unessential Notes; XII. Suspensions; XIII. Secondary Chords of the Seventh; XIV. The Dominant Ninth; XV. The Dominant Eleventh; XVI. The Dominant Thirteenth; XVII. Chromatic Fundamental Discords; XVIII. The Augmented Sixth; XIX. Chromatically Altered Chords; XX. Modulation, Part 2; XXI. Pedals; XXII. General Hints.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence net.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 91.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON

WITH PREFACE BY

SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

The Times, September 16, 1920.—"Useful advice, clearly stated and conveniently arranged, on the subject of preparing musical MS. for the press. There is a delightful preface by Sir Edward Elgar, which makes one wonder more than ever what subject there is of which he has not penetrated below the surface."

Daily Telegraph, October 30, 1920.—"A preface by Sir Edward Elgar gives additional weight to a recent publication of Novello . . . entitled 'System in Musical Notation,' by H. Elliot Button. Chapter by chapter the author gives unfailing commonsense reasons for a suggested revision of our notation. Mr. Elliot Button has systematised the whole thing in an admirable text-book, the value of which can only be fully realised by a study of the illustrations. Here you will find familiar passages taken from Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann, and others, so set out that they are infinitely easier to read. . . . But not the least of the improvements is in the direction of rhythmical clearness, a phenomenon apparently due to the simple device of adopting the crotchet as the pulse unit."

Musical News, September 25, 1920.—"The little book should be read by all who write music, for we lack definite rules in this matter, and anything that serves to draw composer, printer, and reader together and establish one custom or use in presenting musical publications to the public is to be commended."

The Queen, October 9, 1920.—"The book is well-conceived and planned, and the author sweeps away preconceived ideas due to its usage wherever they obscure the issue from the performer's point of view. The chapter headings do not give much indication of the immense amount of information so succinctly packed into their pages. Sir Edward Elgar has confessed his indebtedness to the author (in the preface). Mr. Button deserves every praise for his valuable contribution to a much neglected subject."

Sunday Mercury, Birmingham, September 19, 1920.—"The book deals expertly with the art of musical notation, so brilliantly and usefully illuminated by Mr. Button, who has proved himself not only a finished expert, but also a public benefactor, showing as he does how scores, apparently intricate and obscure, can be made comparatively easy to read, and therefore more understandingly played. Originals are given side by side with the author's suggestion, and all cases with illumination, and in some cases with results that may fairly be called amazing. The price of this quite remarkable book makes it worth while for the amateur to place it in his collection; to the professional player and to the composer it will be invaluable."

Western Morning News, September 17, 1920.—"If all writers would adopt Mr. Button's system the reader would be spared much confusion."

PRICE - - - THREE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED

THE THREE-CORNERED HAT

(EL SOMBRERO DE TRES PICOS)

BY

MANUEL DE FALLA

AS PERFORMED BY THE RUSSIAN BALLET.

PIANO SCORE WITH ILLUSTRATED COVER

Price - - - 20s. net cash.

The Score of "The Three-Cornered Hat," one of the greatest triumphs of the Russian Ballet, has been long and eagerly awaited, and many musicians will be delighted to know that it is now available in an edition that is remarkable for the excellence of its transcription—admirably done by the Composer himself—for its clear type and good paper, and for its most attractive and artistic appearance.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.,
11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

This Supplement is part also of the May issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 154.

THE SOUTH-EAST LONDON FESTIVAL.

The inception of this meeting can be traced to the ample and success of the People's Palace Festival. It deals to the same type of population and serves the same ends, and in planning a syllabus and organizing the competition the new committee was both wise and fortunate drawing upon the experience of twelve years' work at Whitechapel. The chief active workers were Miss V. M. Morford and Miss Helen Ridley, nominally organizing and dutiful secretaries, whose zealous work built up the success of the Festival.

The competitions—like those at the People's Palace—called for concerted work, from vocal and instrumental trios, choirs and orchestras. Those that were open to children were held at Crossway Hall, New Kent Road, on March 19. There were about seven hundred children present, representing eighteen school classes and two violin bands. Charles Macpherson judged the vocal classes and Emily Daymond the instrumental. The standard was encouraging for a first attempt. A feature of the day was the singing of combined choirs at the afternoon concert.

The results of this day were as follows:

- ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS (Girls) (eight entries).
 Tests: 'It was a lover and his lass' (T. F. Dunhill).
 'The gentle sounding flute' (G. Rathbone).
 Kennington Road (Miss E. O. Doherty).
 King and Queen Street, Walworth (Miss C. E. Phillips).
 St. Saviour's, Herne Hill (Miss G. M. Warner).
 Greenwich Park (Central) (Mrs. Widgery).

- ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS (Boys) (five entries).
 Tests: 'When icicles hang by the wall' (G. Dyson).
 'The ride of the witch' (C. Wood).
 Mina Road (Central), Camberwell (Mr. H. Shalders).
 Oliver Goldsmith, Peckham (Mr. Mollet).
 King and Queen Street, Walworth (Mr. W. Leigh Crutchley).

- ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS (Mixed).
 Tests: 'The hobby and the toy girl' (arr. C. Wood).
 'Orpheus with his lute' (C. Wood).
 Sayer Street, Southwark (Mr. G. A. Harper).
 Redriff, Rotherhithe (Mr. G. W. Kay).

- ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS (Sight-reading).
 Bellenden Road (Central), Boys (Mr. G. W. Ford).
 Kennington Road, Girls (Miss E. O. Doherty).
 Greenwich Park (Central), Girls (Mrs. Widgery).

- SECONDARY SCHOOLS (Girls) (one entry).
 Tests: 'The Lavender Lady' (Farjeon).
 'Go ye, my canzonets' (Morley).
 Kennington Secondary Girls' School (Miss E. M. Beany).

- JUNIOR CHOIRS (one entry).
 Test: Singing Game, 'Looby Light' (arr. C. Sharp).
 St. George's Guild of Play, Camberwell (Miss Coward).

- VIOLIN BANDS.
 Test: Ballet from 'Orpheus' (Gluck).
 Planey Road School (Miss Bertha Murray).
 Sayer Street (Mr. G. A. Harper).

The competitions for adults were held during the week ending on April 9. There were nearly fifty entries in eighteen classes—not a high proportion; but at a first year's festival it is satisfactory if not many competitions have to be dropped for want of competitors. Moreover, it was found that the date of the Festival fell so closely on the heels of Easter that church choirs were debarred from entering. Nothing was more striking than the excellence of the orchestral standard. This was chiefly to the credit of Mr. Gustav Holst, who brought in his orchestra from Morley College. The winning Pianoforte Trio and String Quartet were from the same training-ground. Mr. Holst's sportsmanship was matched by that of Dr. Emily Daymond, who entered her 'Sunshine Club' in the elementary class for Girls' Clubs, &c., with similar success. Another conspicuous feature was the singing of Mr. W. H. Bullock's Bermondsey Settlement Choir (the prize-winners) and Mr. Walter Gandy's 'Ceramic' Choir in the Ladies' (intermediate) class. In the senior class only Roehampton Club (J. Hullah Brown) entered. The singing of the Mothers' Meetings in 'Dashing away with the smoothing iron' was popular, especially when they joined together at the final concert.

The four choral societies that came in to sing Purcell's 'With drooping wings' and Pearsall's 'Who shall win my lady fair' were:

- St. George's Association, Camberwell (Rev. E. C. Blaxland).
 St. Mary-the-Less, Lambeth (Miss Stephanie Hess).
 St. Peter's, Walworth (Mr. Percy S. Wilson).
 1st. Morley College (Mr. G. T. Holst).

The judges were Mr. T. F. Dunhill, Dr. Harold Darke, and Mr. Harvey Grace.

At the concluding evening concert on Saturday, April 9, combined choirs sang Handel's 'Worthy is the Lamb' and 'Amen' Chorus and Haydn's 'Distracted with care and anguish,' under Mr. E. T. Cook's direction. Songs were given by Madame Agnes Nicholls, accompanied by Mr. Hamilton Harty; and Sir Amherst Selby-Bigge distributed certificates to the prize-winners.

LEITH HILL.—April 12 and 13.

Among the villages around Dorking and Leatherhead the practice of choral singing has been fostered for many years by this little model Festival, held this year for the twelfth time. A feature is made of bringing everybody together at the end of a day's competition for a concert of orchestral music, good solo-singing, and massed choral performance. On the first evening a chorus composed of choirs from Coldharbour, Ewhurst, Fetcham, Headley, Holmwood, Mickleham, Peaslake, and Shalford sang some of the day's test pieces, including Holst's 'Turn back, O man' and Dowland's 'His golden locks.' Songs were given by Miss Lucia Young, and an orchestra played Beethoven's seventh Symphony, Butterworth's 'Banks of green willow,' and Ravel's 'Pavane.' At the second concert choirs from Abinger, Albury, Blackheath, Brockham, Capel, North Holmwood, Shere, and Westcott joined in Bach's cantata, 'Bleib bei uns,' with Miss Muriel Marshall, Mr. J. Steuart Wilson, and Mr. Frederick Taylor as soloists, and the Symphony was repeated. On each occasion Dr. Vaughan Williams, a local resident, was the conductor. The competitions were judged by Mr. Geoffrey Shaw and Mr. Steuart Wilson.

WHARFEDALE (ILKLEY).—April 13-16.

This Festival, now held for the fifteenth time, shows a crescendo of success, and to-day holds an important position as a meeting-ground for Yorkshire musicians. It has been necessary to lengthen the syllabus, to add a fourth day to the customary three, and to engage three adjudicators. These were Prof. Granville Bantock, Dr. Markham Lee, and, for the Old English dances, Miss Frances Ellingham.

The Country Dance, Morris Dance, and Singing Game competitions—a new local section—were well supported, the entries being fourteen. Prizes were won by Yeadon and Guiseley Secondary School ('Oranges and lemons'), Brougham Street C.S., Skipton ('Rigs o' Marlow'), Woodhead School, Burley, and Church of England Girls' School, Ilkley.

The best school-singing was provided by Woodhead School, Burley; Orchard Street C.S., Guiseley; Church of England Girls' School, Ilkley; and Brougham Street C.S., Skipton, in the local class. In the open class the tests were Martin Shaw's 'Jolly Shepherd' and Ivor Atkins' 'A Sea Song,' and the result as follows:

- Victoria Road School, Morley (Mr. Edgar Varley).
- Myrtle Park C.S., Bingley (Mr. William Rushton).
- 2nd. Green Lane Boys' C.S., Leeds (Mr. Tom Morton).
- 3rd. Brougham Street C.S., Skipton (Mr. Arthur Townsend).
- 1st. Holycroft Boys' C.S., Keighley (Mr. W. H. Whitaker).

There were various classes for Girl Guide Companies (nine entries), Girls' Clubs (eight entries), and Girls' Welfare Clubs (six entries). Two competitions for Public Secondary Girls' Schools (ages under fifteen and over fifteen) brought in all ten entries, the first prizes being gained by Bradford Girls' Grammar School (Mr. A. T. Akeroyd) and Carlton Street Secondary School, Bradford (Miss D. Fieldsend).

Village Choral Societies sang Tomkins' madrigal, 'O yes! has any found a lad?' and Balfour Gardiner's 'Sir Eglamore,' the first being Brougham Street Old Scholars' Choral Society (Mr. A. Townsend).

The tests, entries, and results in the chief choral competitions we quote in full:

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'O wild west wind' (Elgar).

'My soul, there is a country' (Parry).

- Thornton Vocal Union (Mr. John Barker).
- Bradford Philharmonic Society (Mr. J. E. Constantine).
- Barnoldswick Choral Society (Mr. Frederic Lord).
- 2nd. Cleckheaton Central Choir (Mr. Harry Bennett).
- Bradford Vocal Union (Mr. George Thorman).
- Colne Valley Vocal Union (Dr. T. E. Pearson).
- Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. W. H. Whitaker).
- 1st. Gledholt Vocal Union (Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'The sailor's return' (Percy E. Fletcher).

'The riders' song' (Cornelius).

- Hebden Bridge (Mr. H. Greenwood).
- Morley Vocal Union (Mr. W. Trudd).
- Barnoldswick Glee Union (Mr. Frederic Lord).
- 1st. Harrogate (Mr. Fred Wood).
- York (Mr. Seymour Wilkinson).
- Windhill Musical Union (Mr. A. Dracup).
- 3rd. Holme Valley (Mr. Irving Silverwood).
- 2nd. Todmorden (Mr. T. H. Lees).

There were abundant competitions for soloists, vocal and instrumental, and for chamber-music players.

BELFAST.—The annual musical competitions occupied four days (April 4-9), and ended with a concert of successful competitors on April 10. The entries were gratifyingly large, and the whole Festival was most successful. The adjudicators were Mr. H. Plunket Greene, Dr. Palmer, and Dr. Arthur Somervell, who all expressed their appreciation of the high standard attained, some of the very young competitors showing remarkable talent. It is regrettable that there was no competition among orchestras, quartets, or string trios, but no doubt in due time, and with the steadily growing interest of the younger generation, this absence may not occur in the next competition.

THE MANX FESTIVAL.—April 11-14.

This Festival continues to uphold the standard of music appreciation and performance in the Island, and year after year the same choirs come in to compare and improve the standards. The adjudicators of the year were Mr. Fiel Hyde, who included in his duties a short lecture on voice production, and Mr. C. H. Moody.

In the chief choral classes the first places were won by the following choirs:

- Children's Choirs.—Douglas Collegiate School (boys).
- Arbory School (girls), Murray's Road School (mixed).
- Buck's Road Primitive Methodist Sunday School.
- Village Choirs (Shield Class).—Malew Choral Society.
- Ballasalla (Mr. T. P. Fargher).
- Church Choirs.—St. Peter's Choir, Onchan (Mr. H. Cullerne).
- Female-Voice Choirs.—Douglas Festival Ladies' Choir (Mr. Noah Moore).
- Choral Sight-singing (four-part).—Andreas Village Choir (Miss E. A. Collins).
- Male-Voice Choirs.—Douglas Male Choristers (Mr. Noah Moore).
- Choral Societies.—Douglas Festival Choir (Mr. Noah Moore).

LEIGH (LANCS).—Five choral competitions were held at the sixth annual Festival on April 2, and the entries numbered twenty-three. Highfield and Camden, Runcorn (Mr. J. Weedall), were winners in the male-voice section and Earlestown Orpheus (Mr. W. Turner) in the chief mixed-voice class. Mr. Hopkin Evans and Mr. T. Carrington adjudicated.

RADCLIFFE (near MANCHESTER).—The two days Festival on April 8 and 9, arranged by the Education Committee of the Radcliffe and Pilkington Co-operative Society, attracted good entries. Three choirs sang Stanford's 'The bluebird' in the open choral class, the Radcliffe Co-operative Choir (Mr. W. E. Taylor) being first. The adjudicators were Mr. Frederick Green and Dr. T. Keighley.

WEST SUSSEX.—Worthing was chosen as the meeting place for West Sussex choirs. On March 3 and 4 choirs from Arundel, Horsham, Chichester, Bognor, Littlehampton and many villages were heard in contest by Mr. W. G. Whittaker, who found much to praise in their singing. The proceedings included a concert at which test-pieces were sung by winning choirs and songs were given by Lady Maude Warrender.

MIDDLESBROUGH.—A new Festival was inaugurated here on March 29, Dr. Henry Coward adjudicating. Male-voice choirs sang Price's 'Crossing the plain' and Brewer's 'O my love's like a red, red rose,' the first prize being won by Hartlepool Excelsior, conducted by Mr. A. J. Smith.

STOCKTON.—The Easter Eisteddfod drew a hundred and ninety-two entrants in twelve competitions. Cleveland Harmonic (Mr. Gavin Kay) was the first of four choirs in Prothero's 'Invictus,' Cecilian Mixed Choir (Middlesbrough) the best of the smaller choirs, and in the female-voice class the Bohemians (Middlesbrough) won the first place. Mr. G. W. Hughes adjudicated.

DOVE AND CHURNET VALLEYS.—The ninth annual competitions were held at Uttoxeter on April 4 and 5. Seven village choral societies sang Lee Williams' 'Song of the pedlar' and Pearsall's 'I saw lovely Phyllis,' and five large choirs sang Fanning's 'Song of the Vikings' and Benet's 'All creatures now are merry-minded.' Dr. Brewer awarded the prize to Cheadle. Uttoxeter was best in sight-singing. Ashbourne Cecilia was first in the female-voice and male-voice classes.

CORRIGENDUM.

LONDON FESTIVAL.—In the class for choral societies, of which details were given in our last issue (p. 177), the Willesden District Choir (Mr. W. Basford) tied for second place with the S. Suburban Choral Society.

DREAM-LOVE

FOUR-PART SONG
WORDS BY CHRISTINA ROSETTI MUSIC BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

With gentle movement.
(Tenderly expressive.)

SANO.

LTO.

ENOR.

ASS.

With gentle movement. ♩ = about 72.
(Tenderly expressive.)

COMP.
For practice only.)

DREAM-LOVE.

cres.
gra - zing, White doves come building there; And round . . a - bout . . him The

cres.
gra - zing, White doves come there; And round . . a - bout . . him The

cres.
gra - zing, White doves come there; And round . . a - bout him The

cres.
gra - zing, White doves come there; And round . . a - bout him The

cres.

dim. (delicately.) p
May-bush-es are white. . . Soft moss a pil-low For, oh, a soft-er cheek;

dim. (delicately.) p
May-bush-es are white. . . Soft moss a - pil-low For, oh, a soft-er cheek; . .

dim. (delicately.) p
May-bush-es are white. . . Soft moss a - pil-low For, oh, a soft-er cheek;

dim.
May-bush-es are white. . .

dim. (delicately.) p

DREAM-LOVE.

mp sustained. (calmly.)
 Broad leaves cast shad - ow Up - on hea - vy eyes: . . . There winds and mp expressively. (calmly.)

 Broad leaves cast shad - ow Up - on the hea - vy eyes: . . . There winds and

mp sustained. (calmly.)
 Broad leaves cast shad - ow Up - on the hea - vy eyes: . . . There winds and

mp sustained. (calmly.)
 Broad leaves cast shad - ow Up - on hea - vy eyes: There winds . . . and

mp sustained. (calmly.)
 wa - ters Grow lulled and scarcely speak; . . . There twi - light lin - gers The (warmly.)

cres. (warmly.)
cres.
 wa - ters scarce - ly speak; . . . Twi - light lin - gers

(warmly.)
cres. (warmly.)
cres.
 wa - ters Grow lulled and scarce - ly speak; . . . There twi - light lin - gers The (warmly.)

cres. (warmly.)
cres.
 wa - - ters scarce - ly speak; There twi - light lin - gers The (warmly.)

cres. (warmly.)
cres.

Slightly held back. . . . . DREAM-LOVE.
in time.

long - est in the skies. Young Love lies dreaming Till sum - mer days are in the skies. Love lies dream - ing ... Till summer days are long - est in the skies. ... Young Love lies dream - ing ... Till summer days are long - est in the skies. Love lies dream - ing ... Till summer days are Slightly held back. . . . . in time.

gone, . . , Dream-ing and drows-ing A - way to per-fect sleep : He gone, . . , Dream-ing and drows-ing A - way to per-fect sleep : . . He gone, . . , Dream-ing and drows-ing A - way to per-fect sleep : He gone, Dream-ing, drow-sing A - way to per-fect sleep :

sees the beau - ty Sun . . hath not looked up - on, And tastes . . the sees the beau - ty Sun hath not looked up - on, And tastes . . the sees the beau - ty Sun . . hath not looked up - on, And tastes . . the
He sees the beau - ty Sun hath not looked up - on, And tastes . . the

DREAM-LOVE.

dim.
 foun - tain Un - ut - ter - a - bly deep. (mysteriously.)
dim.
 foun - tain Un - ut - ter - a - bly deep. p Young Love lies
dim.
 foun - tain Un - ut - ter - a - bly deep. p (mysteriously.) Young Love lies
dim.
 foun - tain Un - ut - ter - a - bly deep. p (mysteriously.) Young Love lies foun - tain Un - ut - ter - a - bly deep. p (mysteriously.) Young Love lies
dim.
 foun - tain Un - ut - ter - a - bly deep. p (mysteriously.) Young Love lies Cool shad - ows deep - en
 drows - ing A - way to pop - pied death; Shad - ows
 drows - ing A - way to pop - pied death; Shad - ows
 drows - ing A - way to pop - pied death; Cool shad - ows
 A - cross the sleep - ing face: (expressively.)
 So fails the deep - en A - cross the face: cres.
 So fails the deep - en A - cross the sleep - ing face: cres.
 So fails the deep - en, deep - en A - cross the sleep - ing face: cres.
 The (expressively.)
cres.

DREAM-LOVE.

(regretfully.)

sum - mer With warm de - lic - ious breath; . . . And what hath sum - mer With warm de - lic - ious breath; And what . . . hat sum - mer With warm de - lic - ious breath; . . . What, . . .

sum - mer With de - lic - ious breath; And what . . . hat

(regretfully.)

slowing down.

au - tumn! . . .

au - tumn . . . To give us in its place!

. . . and what hath au - tumn! . . .

au - tumn . . . To give us in its place!

slowing down.

DREAM-LOVE.

Slower and very smoothly.

Draw close the cur - tains Of branch - ed ev - er - green;

Draw close the cur - tains Of branch - ed . . ev - er - green;

Draw close the cur - tains Of branch - ed . . ev - er - green;

Draw close the cur - tains Of branch - ed ev - er - green;

Slower and very smoothly.

Change can - not touch them With fa - ding fin - gers sere:—

Change can - not touch them . . With fa - ding fin - gers sere:—

Change can - not touch them . . With fa - ding fa - ding fin - gers

Change can - not touch them With fa - ding fin - gers sere:—

Change can - not touch them With fa - ding fin - gers sere:—

DREAM-LOVE.

(tenderly expressive.)

Here the first vi - o-lets Per - haps will bud un - seen, . . And a dove, . . may

(tenderly expressive.)

Here the first vi - o-lets Per - haps will bud un-seen,

(tenderly expressive.)

sere: The first vi - o-lets Per - haps will bud un - seen,

(tenderly expressive.)

Here the first vi - o-lets Bud un - seen,

(tenderly expressive.)

still slower.

be, . . . Re - turn to nes - tle . . . here. . . .

pp

Re - turn to nes - tle . . . here. . . .

pp

Re - turn to nes - tle . . . here. . . .

pp

Re - turn to nes - tle . . . here. . . .

still slower.

pp

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

2. 940.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

JUNE 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

ARK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

The Academy is still quite full. Students wishing to join in November are advised to have their names added to the waiting list as soon as possible.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.
WEDNESDAY NIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, June 11 and 25, at 3.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Tuesday, June 21,

R.A.M. September Examination. Last day for entry, June 30.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

1, KENSINGTON CONSOBT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams: "Musical Times," "Musical Times," Initiative, Southkens, London." Telephone: "1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: Sir HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

Students who wish to enter the College in the Christmas term, 1921, are asked to send in their forms as soon as possible.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Endowed by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of young Composers and Executive Artists.

Regulations may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres.
Theoretical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December.
Entries for the November-December Examinations close
Wednesday, October 19th, 1921.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., October-November, March-April, and June-July. Entries for the October-
November Examinations close Wednesday, October 12th, 1921.

Written papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or "School") can be obtained on application. Price 1s. per annual set, free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

The Royal College of Organists

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:—

CHORAL PRELUDE, "Jesus Christ our Saviour." J. S. BACH.
(Novello & Co., Book 17, p. 74; Augener & Co., p. 900; Peters, Vol. 6, No. 31.)

THREE PRELUDES founded on Welsh Hymn Tunes.
VAUGHAN WILLIAMS. (Stainer & Bell.)

AIR AND VARIATIONS (Serenade), BEETHOVEN, Op. 25.
Arrangements for the Organ by W. T. BEST, No. 68, p. 895.
(Novello & Co.) This arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the July
A.R.C.O. Examination are the same as those set for January, 1921.

Regulations may be had on application.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their Names for FELLOWSHIP by June 9th, for ASSOCIATESHIP by June 16th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, proposal forms duly filled up must be sent in before June 2nd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Books of Examination Papers may be obtained by members only.
Vol. I., 1881-96, price 6s.; Vol. II., 1897-1906, price 8s. 3d.
(including postage).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

ESTABLISHED AND MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL " " " " " LANDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s.
per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and Orchestra.

Sullivan's Opera, "Mikado," in rehearsal. Performance early in July.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School
Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

Telegrams: Euphonium Fleet, London.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical Instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

DEATH

COLE.—On April 20, at 17, Thornton Avenue, Chiswick, JAMES PARRY, formerly of Maida Vale, aged eighty-four. Interred Kensal Green Cemetery.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE.*SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
 Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18): WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9):
 SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.
 Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS.
LTD.

1, CENTRAL BUILDINGS, WESTMINSTER, S.W.
 (formerly of 91, St. Martin's Lane, W.C. 2.)

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC held in JUNE and DECEMBER.

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON

undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRs,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

THE TECHNIQUER

AN APPARATUS FOR DEVELOPING THE HANDS OF ALL
 INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Copy of Testimonial received from

SIDNEY HANN, Esq., A.R.A.M.

"Having had considerable experience with your ingenious invention,
 'The Techniquer,' both personally and with my pupils, I have pleasure in stating that I consider it fulfils every claim you make for it; and judiciously used, it should prove of the greatest service to students of the pianoforte in developing the stretching power of the hand, and improving the technique generally."

May, 1921.

SIDNEY HANN.

Send for full particulars and testimonials.

"Hand Development," 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

B. Cooper, Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.
 DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
 G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
 (Staff of Fifty-eight Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Voice
 Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held Scotland and Ireland in JUNE, and at all other Local Centres
 JULY.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.
 Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Assoc.
 (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, J. and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A.M.
 L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L.M. L.C.M.), and Fellows (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application.
 SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIE HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.
 INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

REV. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teaching Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.
 Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.
 Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Count point, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
 Victoria, Cap. cxxxi. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.
 DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX.

THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.

THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):

DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

GUILD FESTIVAL SERVICE, All Saints', N. Peckham.
 October 20th, 1921, at 7 p.m.

COMPETITIONS, 1921.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANTHEM, TE DEUM, and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBT,
 CHANT, and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacancies.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Ward 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

IREE CHOIRS FESTIVAL.

HEREFORD,

SEPTEMBER 4th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th, 1921.

201st Meeting of the Three Choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester.

Principal Performers:

ROSINA BUCKMAN.	Captain JOHN COATES.
AGNES NICHOLLS.	Mr. ROLAND JACKSON.
DOROTHY SILK.	Mr. FRANK MULLINGS.
ASTRA DESMOND.	Mr. NORMAN ALLIN.
PHYLLIS LETT.	Captain HERBERT HEYNER.
BEATRICE HARRISON (Solo 'Cellist).	Mr. GEORGE PARKER.
REED'S STRING QUARTET.	Mr. ROBERT RADFORD.
ON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA (Principal 1st Violin, Mr. W. H. Reed).
ORGAN (Mornings), Sir IVOR ATKINS, Mus. Doc.
GAN and PIANOFORTE (Evenings), Dr. A. HERBERT BREWER.
Conductor - - Mr. PERCY C. HULL.

IN THE CATHEDRAL.

SUNDAY, Sept. 4th, 3 p.m.

ND OPENING SERVICE WITH CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA
TUESDAY MORNING, Sept. 6th, 11.30 a.m.

... .. Mendelssohn

TUESDAY EVENING, 7.30 p.m.

... .. Haydn

... .. Vaughan Williams

... .. Parry

... .. Bach

... .. Mozart

WEDNESDAY MORNING, Sept. 7th, 11.30 a.m.

... .. Elgar

... .. Wagner

THURSDAY MORNING, Sept. 8th, 11.30 a.m.

... .. Dvorak

... .. Holst

... .. Brahms

... .. Walford Davies

... .. Wagner

... .. Brahms

THURSDAY EVENING, 7.30 p.m.

... .. Elgar

... .. Dale

FRIDAY MORNING, Sept. 9th, 11.30 a.m.

... .. Handel

IN THE SHIREHALL.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, Sept. 7th, 8 p.m.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT.

... .. Elgar

... .. Bach

... .. Smetana

... .. Reed

... .. Brewer

... .. Bainton

... ..

FRIDAY EVENING, Sept. 9th, 8 p.m.

CHAMBER CONCERT.

The W. H. Reed String Quartet. Songs, &c.

Chorus and Orchestra of about 350 Performers.

Tickets admitting to all Oratorios and Wednesday Evening

Concert, £5 16s. 6d.

MISSION TO CATHEDRAL, Division 1, Nave, 20s.; Division 2,

12s.; Division 3, Transepts and Lady Chapel, 7s. 6d.;

ON 4, Choir Aisles, 2s. 6d. REHEARSALS IN CATHEDRAL, 10s. 6d.

RSAL IN SHIREHALL, 7s. 6d.

SHIREHALL, Wednesday, Grand Orchestral Concert, one class of July, 10s. 6d.

SHIREHALL, Friday, Chamber Concert, 1st Division, 7s. 6d.; 2nd

Div., 5s.; 3rd Division, 2s. 6d.

The above prices include Entertainment Tax.

Chappell Grand Pianoforte.

Organ erected by THE POSITIVE ORGAN COMPANY, LTD.

any further information and all particulars as to Stewards, &c., to Mr. GEORGE HOLLOWAY, General Hon. Secretary, The ct., Aylestone Hill, Hereford.

Plans will be open to Stewards on Monday, June 20th, and to Public on Monday, July 4th. Cathedral, 1st and 2nd Divisions, Wednesday Concert, at Messrs. Heins & Co., Broad Street.

ral, 3rd and 4th Divisions, and Friday Concert, at Messrs.

son & Pinker, High Town.

plete Programme, Post-free, 6d.

BIRMINGHAM REPERTORY THEATRE.

BARRY V. JACKSON'S

OPERA SEASON

(IN ENGLISH).

JUNE—JULY.

THE CLANDESTINE MARRIAGE Cimarosa
(Il Matrimonio Segreto)

THE IMMORTAL HOUR - Rutland Boughton

DON PASQUALE - - - Donizetti

COSI FAN TUTTE - - - Mozart

The Music under the direction of APPLEBY MATTHEWS.

Particulars will be sent post free on application to the Assistant-Manager

BIRMINGHAM REPERTORY THEATRE,
Station Street, Birmingham.

BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 18th to 22nd, 1921.—WINTER GARDENS.

SOLO, DUET, QUARTET, CHORAL, ORCHESTRAL, AND SCHOOL CHOIR COMPETITIONS.

SYLLABUS now ready. Post free, 6d. (Three 2d. stamps) from G. W. STANSFIELD, Empress Buildings, 91, Church St., Blackpool. The Official List of Awards and Adjudicators' Notes for the 1920 Festival. Post free, 2s. 6d. (postal order).

LONDON

GRAND CHAIR EISTEDDFOD.

CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER,

THURSDAY, 17th NOVEMBER, 1921.

MALE-VOICE CHOIR - - - PRIZE £75.

MIXED CHOIRS - - - PRIZE £25.

SOLOS, ETC.

Syllabus (two penny stamps) of Hon. Secs.:

J. DAVIES, 107, Falmouth Road, London, S.E. 1.

D. B. JONES, 24, Distin Street, Lambeth, London, S.E. 11.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF HUDDERSFIELD.

"MRS. SUNDERLAND" MUSICAL COMPETITIONS.

SPECIAL PRIZES FOR ORIGINAL MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Open to natives of Yorkshire or ten years' residents.

Adjudicator: GRANVILLE BANTOCK, Esq., M.A.

UNACCOMPANIED CHORAL NUMBER FOR MALE-VOICES (mainly in four parts). First Prize, £5 5s. and £5 towards cost of publication; Second Prize, £2 2s.

SOPRANO OR TENOR SOLO, suitable for Senior Competition Test-Piece. First Prize, £5 5s. and £5 towards cost of publication; Second Prize, £2 2s.

Compositions to be forwarded to the Secretary not later than July 1st.

For further particulars apply to THOS. THORP, Secretary, Technical College, Huddersfield.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

Berlioz's "Faust," Northampton, April 29, 1921: "He has made the part his own. The humour and finished singing he can give as no one else. His every solo was powerfully, thrillingly sung.—Echo."

"One could easily imagine that he was standing on the stage with a flaming light shining upon him. There was a dynamic fire in his singing, and all the sinister parts were interpreted with dramatic reality—his satanic snarl, his general demeanour, and expression."—Chronicle.

LECTURE-RECITALS on

HOW TO SING with ease FOR FORTY YEARS or more.

During the past thirty years at least 50,000 voices have been trained in Great Britain. It would be difficult to find twenty singers who have kept their voices unimpaired after thirty years of public work—a striking proof of the wrong training which is prevailing. Every week brings examples of pupils who are entirely on wrong lines. Effortless singing. Anyone who is singing with physical difficulty is on wrong lines. Here is a basis of self examination.

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s.).

(If difficult to obtain this work, write direct to author.)

Mr. Thomas Henderson, Darlington, writes:—"It is just the book for which I had been looking for years. It richly deserves a big success."

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W. 5.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I can recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly novel, interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Terms, &c., address: Mr. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

A LIBRARY OF MUSIC REQUIRED.

SUITABLE FOR ORGAN AND RECITAL WORK, including great Composers as

BACH, GUILMANT, HOLLINS, LEMARE, ETC.

(Reasonable price.)

Information to be sent to

W. A. JONES, A.R.C.O.,
550, Dorchester Street West, Montreal, Canada.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the composition of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some week of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended the System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE
LONDON, W.C. 1.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, TO IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON

MUSICA SACRA.

A COLLECTION OF CATHOLIC CHURCH MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

LAUDY & Co.,

8, Newman Street, Oxford Street, London, W.1.

The above Collection includes the music formerly published by Richard Butler.

Send for New Catalogue.

MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

Mus. Bac.

The Guarantee Course originated by the M.C.C. represents the best offer ever made to students in music, and for a fee of £20, which can be paid by easy instalments, tuition is given until the Mus. Bac. is gained.

The lessons are carefully graduated and entirely individual, which encourages the student and impels him to put forth his best efforts.

Each lesson is corrected in a detailed manner, examples are given to elucidate difficult points, and model solutions are sent to past examination questions.

We could not offer the Guarantee Course unless we were in a position to prepare the student in the shortest possible time.

Under the system there is no waste of time, for if a student reaches the standard of one examination before the date is due, work is sent at once for the next examination.

The Guarantee Course for Students who have passed Matric is £15.

A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.

The first students we sent did remarkably well in 1921. Our successes represent 66 per cent. As the percentage from all sources was only 27, this is sufficient evidence of the soundness of our methods.

Assistance is given, free of charge, with Registration Aural Tests, and Extemporisation.

For a fee of £6 tuition is given until the student passes A.R.C.O. or F.R.C.O.

For a fee of £10, which can be paid by monthly instalments, tuition is given until the student passes both the A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.

Twenty Lessons A.R.C.O. or F.R.C.O., £3.

A. Mus. T.C.L.

This is a valuable diploma and an excellent stepping-stone to Mus. Bac.

We can prepare any student of average ability in six months.

The feature of the Course is the special work devoted to the Art of Teaching.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

In March, 1921, the M.C.C. secured 100 per cent. of passes.

For a fee of £10 tuition is given until a student passes both the L.R.A.M. and the A.R.C.M.

Pianoforte Teaching can be taken for one diploma, and Teaching of Singing for the other.

The fee for twenty lessons—either diploma—is £3.

The Guarantee Course—tuition until successful—for either diploma is £6.

ASSOCIATED BOARD.

At the examination held in March, 1921, a student of the M.C.C. gained honours in the advanced grade.

This student obtained 130 out of 150 for Harmony, and 132 out of 150 for Counterpoint. This student is now taking up a Guarantee Course for Mus. Bac. and F.R.C.O.

SUCCESSSES:	MATRIC	-	55	January, 1921	{	Entries	3.
						Successes	3.
	A.R.C.O.	-	-	January, 1921	{	Entries	3.
						Successes	2.
	A.R.C.M.	-	-	March, 1921	{	Entries	2.
						Successes	2.
	Associated Board			March, 1921	{	Entry	1.
						Success	1.

NOTE.—The only Correspondence College for Music that secured a hundred per cent. of passes at the above exams.

FREE

Guide to Matric, Mus. Bac., A.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., A. Mus. T.C.L.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION

RECITALS, CONCERTS, ORATORIOS,

Arranged and managed under the personal direction of A. E. MILGROM

OVER 400 VOCALISTS AND INSTRUMENTALISTS ON BOOKS.

MR. MILGROM can arrange the ENTIRE PROGRAMME for WEEK-ENDS at any country place or seaside resort.

For terms, please write

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, REGENT STREET, W. 1 (NEAR QUEEN'S HALL). 'PHONE: MAYFAIR 4123.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Mr. MILGROM will shortly visit Vienna. Artists wishing to be represented kindly communicate with above Agency.

FROLIC CONCERT PARTY

FOR

GARDEN PARTIES, CONCERTS, ETC., ETC.

NOW PERFORMING WITH GREAT SUCCESS AT

PARK HILL PAVILION, CROYDON.

ARTISTS:

DOROTHY BARNES, ETHEL REVNELL, NESTA YOUNG, PHYLLIS FERGUSON, VIOLA WEST, C. A. HARRINGTON, BERNARD HUDSON, CHARLES GRANT.

For terms and vacant dates, apply:

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, REGENT STREET, W. 'PHONE: MAYFAIR 4123.

SPECIAL TERMS TO CHARITIES.

PERCIVAL GARRATT

PIANIST, ACCOMPANIST, AND COMPOSER

CAN ASSIST AT

RECITALS, CONCERTS, ETC.

For terms and vacant dates, apply to

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

MARY ARMSTRONG

OPERATIC SOPRANO.

CONCERTS, RECITALS, AT HOMES, ETC.

For terms and vacant dates, apply to

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

NEWFIELD PIANOS

(VERTICAL AND OVERSTRUNG)

SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO THE PROFESSION.

Can be seen at

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, REGENT STREET, W.

(near Queen's Hall).

AGENTS AND REPRESENTATIVES WANTED.

PIANO SALE.

170 PIANOS—MOSTLY VERTICAL

TO BE SOLD

at greatly reduced Prices.

Good Modern Pianos, with best tape action,

FROM £34 NET CASH.

SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO THE PROFESSION

Seen at MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, Regent Street, W.

POSTAL TUITION.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Complete Postal Preparation
FOR

L.R.A.M.	A.R.C.M.
A.T.C.L.	L.T.C.L.
A. Mus. T.C.L.	L. Mus. T.C.L.
F.R.C.O.	A.R.C.O.
Mus. Doc.	Mus. Bac.

PERSONAL COACHING
IN PRACTICAL WORK.

Numerous Successes at first attempt.

8, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.
Telephone: Bristol 3033.

POSTAL TUITION.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES

- (1) A.T.C.L. Paper Work (for July).
- (2) L.R.A.M. Paper Work (for September).

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

G. HUBI-NEWCORBE

(LYRIC AUTHOR).

"Whisper and I shall hear" (Piccolomini), "Within your heart"
Frotère, "Love's Devotion" (A. F. Tate), "Heart's Delight" (Tosti),
A Summer Song" (Guy d'Hardelot), "I heard a Sweet Song" Dorothy Foster), "Song of Gladness" (£100 Prize).

ADAPTATIONS AND TRANSLATIONS. 1,300 Songs sold. 300 Adaptations.
Libretti for Cantatas, Operettas, Cycles, &c.
"OVERBURY," FURZE LANE, PURLEY, SURREY.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).
Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.
15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).
Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MILLARD THOMPSON

(L.T.C.L.)
Principal Tenor, St. George's, Southwark.
32, Selwyn Avenue, Highams Park, E.4.

FRANK LE PLA

BASS-BARITONE.
Oratorio, Concerts, &c. 35, Villiers Road, Southall, W.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.
For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W.1.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).
8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E.5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7253.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

GIVES LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.
Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.
COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—
Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch," and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."
Over 500 Successes at Exams.
"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING
H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.
*The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR
O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),
c/o "The Faith House," 22, Buckingham St., Charing Cross, W.C.2.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., A.Mus. L.C.M. (1921), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O.
(1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-seven. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

DR. CROSSLEY.—Singing, Piano, Composition,
Special Coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons by Correspond. And at FORSYTH BROS., Manchester. Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

L. R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F."
Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

Wednesdays, June 1st, 8th, 15th, and 29th.—Students' (Invitation) Concerts, at 3 p.m.

June 6th.—HALF TERM begins.

Wednesday, June 22nd, at 3 p.m.—Pianoforte and Violin Recital by MISS EMMELINE MEDD-HALL and MISS CHRISTINE HICKS.

June 25th.—Last day of entry for the July Diploma Examinations, and for the next competition for Scholarships.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

A WORLD-WIDE SUCCESS.

CORONACH

(A HIGHLAND LAMENT)

BY

EDGAR BARRATT.

	Price Net.	s.	d.
CORONACH—Piano Solo ... ..	2	0
CORONACH—Organ ... ..	2	0
(Arr. by Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.)
CORONACH—Full Orchestra ... ..	2	0
(Including Piano Conductor.)
CORONACH—Arranged for Piano, two Violins, 'Cello, Bass ad lib.	2	6

"Pianists who love to hear their instruments sing will welcome this delightfully impressive song-without-words, not alone for its inviting subject-matter but for its unconventional harmonic dress and rich chordal colouring."—Musical Opinion.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., LIMITED

THE CELEBRATED

RHYTHMIC METHOD

BY

T. H. YORKE TROTTER, M.A., MUS. DOC.

The Rhythmic Gradus.

An Elementary Text-Book of Music. In Four Grades.

Grade I., 3s. Grade II., III., IV., 3s. 6d. ea.

Ear-Training and Sight-Singing,

With Exercises for use with the 'Rhythmic Gradus' and

'Constructive Harmony.' In Seven Grades.

Grades I., II., III., IV., 1s.; Grades V., VI., VII., 1s. 6d. ea.

Constructive Harmony.

Together with a Book on Form. In Three Parts:

Part I.—Diatonic Harmony and Elementary Construction ... .. 2

" II.—Chromatic Harmony and Composition ... .. 2

" III.—Form ... .. 2

Rhythmic Gradus Scale Chart.

(Mounted on Rollers and Varnished) ... 2s. 6d., 3s., 4s.

Wonderful and extraordinarily good results have been obtained this method in England, and it is at present arousing great interest in the U.S. of America, where Dr. YORKE TROTTER is to lecture and introduce it at the end of this year.

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR', 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR', 'HEMY'S TUTOR', 'WICKINS' RA-
TUTOR', GRAHAM P. MOORE'S 'FIRST PRINCIPLES'.

Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD', 'BERINGER'S DA-
TECHNICAL STUDIES', 'MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC
LESSONS', 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD', ETC.

THE FIRST EDITION IN ENGLISH.

THAYER'S LIFE OF BEETHOVEN

CORRECTED, REVISED, AND EDITED BY

H. E. KREHBIEL.

To be published in December next in Three Volumes at £5 5s. net.

Messrs. NOVELLO &amp; Co., Ltd., have opened

A SUBSCRIPTION LIST

For a Limited number of Copies at £3 13s. 6d. net.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JUNE 1 1921

THE JUBILEE OF THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL AND THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY BY HERMAN KLEIN

(Continued from May number, page 320)

III.—PROFITABLE UTILIZATION

The turn of the tide in the affairs of the Royal Albert Hall very nearly synchronized with the turn of the century. It began, that is to say, soon after the appointment of the new manager, Mr. Milton Carter, in 1901. Truth to tell, the administrative department was badly in need of fresh blood and fresh ideas. Mr. Wentworth Cole had suffered from ill-health for several years. He was fettered hand and foot by the traditions that had grown up with the place during his thirty years' connection with it. He longed to see it a different paying concern, but he did not really know how to make it one. To his credit be it said, he could not obliterate the sense of the duty that he felt he owed to the Commissioners of the Exhibition of 1851 and to the Prince of Wales' Provisional Committee. At any rate, if he had any new ideas of his own, he failed to impress them with effect upon the Executive Council of later years. And at the time the need for reforms was urgent in the extreme.

From the day it was opened, the Albert Hall had never earned anything more solid than its reputation for 'uncertainties.' Alike commercially, financially, and acoustically, one could never be quite sure how things there were going to turn out. Undertakings that looked magnificent on paper frequently failed to draw their expenses, owing chiefly, no doubt, to the 'difficulty of access' which for thirty years was a thorn in the side of the entrepreneurs. During the same period, moreover, it was not by any means a favourite place with the public for listening to music, except oratorio performances, and in a minor degree the organ recitals or abnormal entertainments like the Patti concerts. With musical folk themselves it was almost unpopular in the early days, simply because they feared it—the imposers on account of effects unanticipated, the conductors who detested the echoes, the instrumentalists who hated them likewise, and, above all, the singers who were afraid their voices could not possibly be loud or strong enough to fill so vast a space.

Never will the present writer forget how the original representative of Wagner's Brünnhilde, that otherwise courageous artist, Frau Materna, stood upon the platform paralyzed with fear at the rehearsal for the opening concert of the Festival in 1877, utterly unable to open her mouth and begin. In vain had she been told that it was as easy to sing here as in the Hoftheater at Vienna; in vain did Richter patiently wait for her to launch forth the initial phrase with which Elizabeth apostrophises the Hall of Song. Not a sound could she produce until Wagner himself had come forward and besought her to make the attempt, and Richter had consented to play the introduction over again. Then she tried once more, and with a success that surprised no one so much as the singer herself. For the same reason Gounod six years before had been mortally afraid that the newly-formed choir which he was rehearsing at Exeter Hall would never prove powerful enough for the broader expanse of the new building in Kensington Gore. He assured his sub-conductor, Mr. Charles Hargitt, that 'he had never in his life heard such a wonderful body of tone nor more perfect singing.' Would it be big enough?—that was the question. Yet Mr. Hargitt had tested separately over five thousand applicants and selected no fewer than 1,400 singers, the number actually assembled under Gounod's baton being 1,134. One would have imagined such a body of voices to be more than enough, but Gounod continued to be sceptical until after he had heard them in the Albert Hall, and only then did he declare himself content.

It took a good many years to overcome this and similar prejudices; to persuade musicians generally, and singers in particular, that it was not the volume of the tone that mattered, whatever its nature or timbre, but the absolute purity of the quality, the degree of resonance, the smoothness and equality of the sound-waves. The first man to solve the problem of Albert Hall acoustics was not, however, Charles Gounod, but Joseph Barnby; and this brings us to the story of what we are now accustomed to call the Royal Choral Society.

BUILDING UP A REPUTATION

The retirement of the composer of 'Faust' had, as we have seen, evoked no regret, save on the part of a few friends and of the Earl of Wilton, who, as 'Deputy Commissioner for Music,' had engaged him to occupy a post for which he was not actually fitted. The affair was described by one leading critic as a series of 'slaps in the face' for English art, with this just remark added: 'We acknowledge the eminence of M. Gounod and should be among the first to pay him due honour; but a man who can write music is not necessarily one who can train a great choral force.' After the fourth and last concert of the inaugural season the same pen recorded the interesting fact that 'The ladies of the chorus having taken leave of their distinguished conductor, the Albert Hall Choral Society entered upon its rest.' It was not to remain at rest very long. The sum of £5,000 granted by the Commissioners of the 1851 Exhibition 'for musical performances' had been only partly spent by their well-meaning Deputy, and steps were immediately taken to continue the enterprise upon a fresh basis, with Barnby as the new conductor, with Stainer as organist, and John Hedley as secretary.

This portion of our narrative has already been briefly sketched, and we may now dismiss the early years of the Society's existence with similar brevity.* The numbers of the choir were wisely reduced to 850—the average to this day—among them being seven gentlemen who have remained in its ranks to celebrate the present Jubilee; while the normal division of parts is 250 sopranos, 170 altos, 170 tenors, and 250 basses. The first president of the Society was the Duke of Edinburgh, and when his Royal Highness relinquished the post it was accepted by its present distinguished occupant, the Duke of Connaught. The Earl of Lathom, the Earl of Pembroke, and the Earl of Shaftesbury have in turn filled the office of Vice-President. It was by command of Queen Victoria, who became its first Patron in 1882, that the Society in 1888 assumed the style and title of the Royal Choral Society.

To thoroughly organize the choir, to bring out all its fine qualities, and to train it to the pitch of perfection for which Barnby was awarded so much credit, occupied two or three seasons. Not until after the production of Verdi's 'Requiem' in 1875 did London begin to boast openly of the Albert Hall performances or go to hear them as regularly as it went to the Sacred Harmonic. Then became known the agreeable fact (already recorded) that for the season of 1875-76 the Society had for the first time a balance on the right side. After that the number of concerts given each year increased from ten to twelve or even fourteen, though subsequently it was again reduced to ten or eleven. Finer choral singing on the grand scale than was heard here in the 'seventies and 'eighties could not be listened to anywhere in the kingdom. The famous Yorkshire voices at the Leeds Festival may have produced a more glorious beauty of tone, effects more thrilling and in a sense more overwhelming, but Barnby at this period was practically without his equal as a choir-trainer (Henry Leslie stood upon a different plane), and he contrived to get from his 850 singers a degree of precision, a delicacy and wealth of nuance, and a cleanness of attack, allied to a measure of intelligent expression and sense of climax that were nowhere to be surpassed.

THE PRODUCTION OF 'PARSIFAL'

On November 10, 1884, Joseph Barnby fulfilled the most notable ambition of his career—one which incidentally revealed the extent both of his powers and his limitations as a conductor—by directing the first concert performance in this country of Wagner's 'Parsifal.' The event had been delayed for several months (even after certain difficulties raised by the composer's family had been smoothed away) in order to ensure the best preparation of an extremely exacting work. It is interesting to recall now the excitement that the event aroused. The Wagner 'craze' was at its height. 'Parsifal' had been produced at Bayreuth only two years before, namely, in August, 1882, the same season that witnessed London's greatest Wagnerian invasion, when we had our first performance of the 'Nibelungen' at Her Majesty's Theatre, under Anton Seidl, and the rest of the repertoire, with 'Die Meistersinger' and 'Tristan' as novelties, at Drury Lane, under Hans Richter. Helping to heighten curiosity was the prevailing conviction that 'Parsifal' could never be given on the stage in this country owing to what one journal termed 'the sacred nature of the subject.' So it was this, not Wagner's wish in the matter, that heaved its way. The work had to be treated as an oratorio; consequently the Albert Hall was essentially the ideal place for it to be performed in. The practical Barnby had been quick to perceive this when he went to Bayreuth to render himself a fit and worthy medium for the introduction of this work to the knowledge of a London audience.

Some of the critics took special pains to make this clear to their readers. Hence the Daily News:

The impression made by oratorio music is, in many cases, sufficiently effective without external adjuncts, which, in some instances, would vulgarise rather than enhance the effect. Handel's 'Hailstone' chorus, for example, would scarcely be improved by a mechanical imitation of a hailstorm; the highly dramatic chorus 'Have lightnings and thunders,' in Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion does not need the aid of visible electric fluid and audible stage thunder; nor is it requisite, in the performance of that wonderful choral recitative in Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' 'He sent a thick darkness,' to surround the audience with real obscurity. Further arguments might (without the least doubt) be adduced in justification of Mr. Barnby's production of Wagner's last work in the only shape in which it can be rendered here.

But all were not of the same opinion. The Standard began its notice in quite another vein:

The production of the latest of Wagner's stage-festival plays at the Albert Hall in 'recital' form cannot be regarded as anything but a grave error of judgment. The Master's standpoint was the indivisibility of drama and music, until a little flattery brought him to rescind his previous judgments and concoct 'concert arrangements' of his musical plays. The precise value of these performances was proved by the failure (sic) of the Wagner Festival held in the Albert Hall some years ago. Then it was thought a pitiable thing for a man of unquestionable genius to descend from his lofty pinnacle, and show that his interests were nothing if not wordly; but why Mr. Barnby should have chosen to produce 'Parsifal' at the first concert of the new season of the Albert Hall Choral Society is one of the mysteries of modern life. The grossest sceptic will admit some good points in the sacred music-drama, but 'Parsifal,' when transformed into an oratorio or cantata, is but a dull affair.

* For certain details here given I am indebted to the article written for the programme of the Jubilee Concert by Mr. W. G. Rothery, who succeeded Mr. Hedley on his retirement in 1910.

Fortunately for the undertaking, the general musical public did not share the latter view, for there was an enormous crowd both at the performance on November 16 and its repetition six days later. Meanwhile, there had been time for a reader of the Standard residing in Italy to write the following interesting letter, which appeared immediately under the second notice, and which will be peculiarly appropriate to quote here :

TO THE EDITOR OF THE Standard.

SIR,—With reference to the first performance of 'Parsifal' in London, it may interest some of your musical readers to hear how Wagner was impressed with the grandeur of the Albert Hall and with its peculiar fitness for the performance of great orchestral and choral works such as came up to his ideal. While staying, together with his family, at Heidelberg in 1877, after his return from London, he said to the writer, in the course of a conversation : 'On entering the Albert Hall for the first time it struck me at once as the beau idéal of a place for performing Beethoven's ninth Symphony in a manner and on a scale really worthy of the great master. If I had to conduct it, the chorus would occupy the gallery, and the orchestra I would arrange in the centre of the area. The effect would be stupendous.' The idea is thoroughly original and eminently characteristic of Wagner. Had he lived, he might have carried it out in the case of his own 'Parsifal,' which to him was his Choral Symphony and his Requiem.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

C. P. S.

Viareggio, Prov. Lucca,
November 12, 1884.

Wagner's suggestion was never tried, of course, and is unlikely to be. Anyhow the wording of it, as given in this letter, is a trifle hazy. Whereabouts in the gallery would he have put the chorus, and what 'centre of the area' mean centre of the arena? In either case the idea sounds more like a curious blunderbation of Reinhardt and a Greek play than Wagner dealing seriously with Beethoven's ninth symphony. Unquestionably, the effect upon 'Parsifal' would have been wholly disastrous. As it was, the excellence of the Albert Hall rendering far exceeded anticipation, and it may fairly be questioned whether a finer concert performance of the work has ever been heard. The solos were so fine because they were in the hands of Bayreuth artists so gifted and famous as Thérèse Malten (Kundry), Gudehus (Parsifal), and Scaria (Jurnemanz), though the incomparable Reichmann had to be replaced at the last moment by a baritone named Schuegraf as Amfortas. On a level with the splendour of these voices was the tone of the choir in the Grail choruses, which were magnificently sung; nor were the English Flower-maidens far behind in point of merit, especially at the second performance. The orchestra, too, did remarkably well.

Apart from Bach's 'Passion' and oratorios generally, this production of 'Parsifal' was Barnby's best achievement. He possessed neither the instinct nor the training necessary for an operatic conductor, though it was his ambition some day to be one. But at the Albert Hall he was upon his 'native heath,' and there nothing came amiss to him. He could have had no severer critic than that ardent Wagnerian enthusiast, Dr. Francis Hueffer; yet this is what Dr. Hueffer wrote about him in The Times after the repetition of the work :

No applause has ever been bestowed upon a musician more justly than that which again and again recalled Mr. Barnby to the platform. That gentleman's name will always be connected with one of the most memorable events the history of English music has had to record of late years. . . . In counting for support in his arduous enterprise upon the enormous prestige attaching to Wagner's name in England, he had not been mistaken. But even more remarkable than his keen-sightedness in this respect was the truly artistic spirit in which he approached the task of doing justice to so great and difficult a work. . . . Choral practice of the most severe kind went on for week after week, and the orchestral rehearsals, although necessarily limited in number, were turned to the best possible account. How ably the conductor was seconded by singers and players the result has shown.

The financial success of the experiment was another gratifying fact; nor did the Executive Council fail, in its annual report, to pay a high compliment to all concerned—to Barnby, 'who spared neither time nor trouble,' and to the Committee of Management of the Choral Society for its 'large and hazardous enterprise on account of the outlay required to bring to England the celebrated German artists who took part in the original performances at Bayreuth.'

FAVOURITES: EVANESCENT AND PERENNIAL

A glance at the extensive repertory of the Royal Choral Society—a total of a hundred and eight works, which occupied an entire page of the Jubilee Concert programme—provides abundant food for reflection, both edifying and instructive. The persistency with which certain of the older works have retained their places on the active list; the meteor-like rapidity with which newer ones have won favour, only to lose it; the vogue of a couple of modern native compositions; the failure of others to obtain a permanent hold—these features of a splendid fifty years' history furnish a tolerably accurate indication of the ebb and flow, the gradual, but resistless, transition in the movements of popular musical taste, that have marked this important period of our art-life. Had the choice always rested with the Committee of Management, matters might often have decided otherwise; but, as we have seen only too plainly, sheer economic necessity was ever compelling the Committee to yield to the selective will of its patrons the public, whose likes and dislikes have invariably been manifested by box-office results that left no alternative.

Let us recall only a few of the failures. (Not that an Albert Hall failure ever meant a downright fiasco, or even an artistic failure, in the ordinary sense. The word in this case has merely signified the verdict of the gallery- or the balconyite, who says, after listening to a novelty, 'Yes; very fine music, no doubt; but I prefer the choir in something I know and like better.') In the late 'eighties, for example, there were revivals in quick succession of Rossini's 'Messe Solennelle' and the 'Requiems' of Mozart and Verdi. All were admirably sung; but they did not draw the paying crowds. The nearest approach to a success just then was the combination of Mozart's 'Requiem' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' with Albani, Scalchi, Edward Lloyd, and Del Puente as soloists—the kind of soloists we used to get in those days. Yet even this did not induce repetition. The novelties fared worse still: Mancinelli's 'Isaias' and Benoit's 'Lucifer,' both tried in 1889, awakened no response, despite the strengthening of the choir, which sang them superbly. Great hopes of a lasting success were entertained for Cowen's charming oratorio, 'Ruth,' because of the hit that it had made at the Worcester Festival (1887), but it was forgotten as quickly as Barnby's psalm, 'The Lord is King,' which had been produced at Leeds. 'Ruth' did much better in town (and was, on the whole, better performed) at Novello's Oratorio Concerts; while the habitués of the Albert Hall, who idolised Barnby as a conductor, preferred his 'Sweet and Low' to his more ambitious flights in composition.

'THE MESSIAH' AND 'ELIJAH'

The perennial favourites are of course 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah.' Changing taste and carping criticism are just as powerless to weaken their position here as in the scheme of a provincial Festival. They represent the survival of the fittest. Good judges would doubtless rather hear Bach's 'Passion' at St. Paul's or Westminster Abbey, or 'Israel in Egypt' at the Crystal Palace. The latter is given occasionally at the Albert Hall,* so is 'Judas Maccabæus'; but with these exceptions (and not forgetting Haydn's 'Creation'), 'The Messiah' alone remains 'fixed in (its) everlasting seat,' to remind us of the simple days when the rage for Handel obsessed our forefathers—as it did Samuel Butler. According to Mr. W. G. Rothery, Mr. John Hedley's courteous successor as secretary of the R.C.S., the grand old 'sacred oratorio' has been given here a hundred and eighteen times during the fifty years of the Society's existence. The two annual performances, viz., on New Year's Day and Good Friday, have always been the principal mainstay of the institution. It could not have flourished without them. At this Hall the Royal Choral Society and Handel's oratorio go hand in hand. No one else may share in the harvest that it brings. The average attendance at a 'Messiah' performance under Barnby used to be eleven thousand. It is probably not much smaller nowadays.

In 1892, the year in which he was knighted, Sir Joseph Barnby conducted the hundred and fiftieth anniversary performance of 'The Messiah.' He died in 1896, and three years later his popular successor, Sir Frederick Bridge, brought Handel's masterpiece to a hearing minus the additional Mozart accompaniments given in this country since 1805.

This was done in accordance with a set of parts that were discovered by Prof. Ebenezer Prout and Dr. Mann in 1894 in a cupboard behind the organ-loft of the Foundling Hospital, at which Handel directed several performances of the work. The version was welcomed by purists because it undoubtedly approximated more closely to the original Dublin score; but on the whole, owing to the lack of balance between the orchestra and the choir, it proved less effective in this huge building than the customary arrangement.

Like the great Saxon master, Mendelssohn's dwindled in popularity until his fame with Albert Hall audiences now rests practically on a single work, and that his greatest. But 'St. Paul,' the 'Hymn of Praise,' 'Athalie,' the 'Walpurgis Night' have all fallen out of the running, and 'Elijah' alone remains, 'one prophet of the Lord,' with splendid justification for being there. Fifty-two performances—not quite half the amazing 'Messiah' record—stand to the credit of 'Elijah' which opens every season with a foregone success and associated with them will live, so long as memory lasts, the incomparable delineation of the title-rôle by Sir Charles Santley. That was a truly wonderful achievement, alike in its vocal and dramatic aspects; and never was it more impressive than when presented here, with Albani, Patey, and Edward Lloyd completing what was then termed 'the great English quartet,' with Barnby's superb choir at its finest, and Stainer or Hodge or Balfour at the organ.

These were the halcyon days of 'Elijah.' The ensemble was almost always first-rate. One recalls especially the performance of 1879, when Madame Albani (fresh from new triumphs at the Birmingham and Bristol Festivals, and associated now with Antoinette Sterling, Lloyd, and Henschel first electrified a South Kensington gathering with her fervid, clear-toned 'Hear ye, Israel.' There were other good casts, too, as time brought other singers—for example, in 1881, Marie Roze, with Patey, Lloyd, and Santley; in 1888, Lilia Nordica and Belle Cole, with Lloyd and Henschel; in 1890, a strange combination of two foreign ladies Mesdames Schmidt-Koehne and Svatlowsky, with two fine British artists, Ben Davies and Watkin Mills; in 1898 a still-living cast that comprised Ellen Russell, Giulia Ravogli, Edward Lloyd, and Santley; another (1895) consisting of Marguerite Macintyre, Clara Butt, Lloyd Chandos, and Santley; and yet another (1903) of Albani, Kirkby Lunn, Philip Newbury, and Kennerley Rumford while occasionally we had that very fine Elijah, Andrew Black, who was followed by Herbert Brown and Dalton Baker.

PERLIOZ'S 'FAUST,' 'THE REDEMPTION,' AND 'THE GOLDEN LEGEND'

It was 1882, a year memorable for so many important musical events in London—the year, by the way, when Queen Victoria became Patron of the Royal Choral Society, and the Executive Council st called attention in its report to the Society's steadily increasing efficiency and popularity'—at witnessed two out of the three brilliant at fleeting triumphs which distinguished the de-siècle career of this Society. The first was Berlioz's 'Damnation de Faust,' produced here in March; the second, Gounod's 'Redemption,' even in the following November. The third, Arthur Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' did not come until four years later. Their fates were identical, and they may appropriately be considered together.

* When the duet, 'The Lord is a Man of War,' is invariably sung by the four hundred tenors and basses of the choir.

Berlioz's 'Faust' had been first heard in England Her Majesty's Theatre, under Padeloup, in 1878. Then, in 1880, after trying it in English at Manchester, Charles Hallé won a remarkable success with it at St. James's Hall, and kindled in Barnby a burning desire to try it at the Albert Hall. The result was the same there: the audience fell down and worshipped every number. The principal parts were taken by three still-surviving singers, Madame Marie Roze, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Frederic King; while the choir quite surpassed itself, creating astonishing effects of colour and contrast such as Padeloup and Hallé had never dreamt of. The success won in March, 1882, was to be renewed every season for twenty years or more.

Not a whit less enthusiastic was the reception in November 1 of 'The Redemption.' The cast included three of the artists who had sung the work under Gounod at the Birmingham Festival a month before—namely, Albani, Lloyd, and Santley; and they were rejoined by Madame Patey when it was repeated here on December 11. In spite of mannerisms, the melodic charm of the vocal setting, the beauty of the concerted music, the delicate refinement of the orchestration, and, above all, the grandeur of such choruses as 'Unfold, ye portals everlasting,' proved wholly irresistible. 'The Redemption' quickly won the position of 'third favourite' in the repertory. For years did it 'fill the bill' on every Ash Wednesday, usually drawing an audience of ten thousand. For years did the works of the two great Frenchmen in the closest of races for popularity. 'The Redemption' was selected for the memorial performance on February 19, 1896, in honour of Joseph Barnby, when Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted, the ladies of the choir discarded their painted coloured sashes and wore long black dresses, while Esther Palliser, Belle Cole, Lloyd Sandos, and David Bispham, also in mourning, were the chief soloists. For another decade, perhaps, the crowds came regularly to hear 'The Redemption.' And then?—

First, though, something must be said concerning the third item of the triad—'The Golden Legend.' The libretto of this cantata had been adapted from an English fellow by Joseph Bennett, and when Sullivan set it to music for the Leeds Festival of 1886 he was at the height of his powers. The sensation which it created there was renewed when he conducted it six weeks later (November 15) at the Albert Hall, with Madame Albani, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Frederic King in their original parts. Rarely, if ever, has a new work exercised such an extraordinary fascination on first hearing in this unique locale. Never certainly have music and choral singing combined afforded purer delight there than the three choral gems of 'The Golden Legend'—the Prologue, the Epilogue, and the Evening Hymn. The rush to hear the work developed into such a perfect 'craze' that it was repeated on no fewer than four occasions in the following year (1887), each time before an overflowing audience. For season after season it was revived, with only a change of cast to differentiate one performance from another—Sir George Henschel's fine Lucifer chiefly in demand, and either Edward Lloyd or Ben Davies to sing Prince Henry.

It is not easy to say exactly when the phenomenal popularity of the three works just referred to began to fade. The rise in each case was rapid, the fall gradual. In all probability the whole process was only a phase of the well-marked change in musical appreciation and outlook which we date from the opening years of the present century. But again it was the box-office that told the tale; and the moral thereof was unmistakable. So the perennials remained, hardy as ever; while new favourites were quickly found to replace the old ones as they retired into the background.

'THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AND 'HIAWATHA'

Or was it not rather a case of two favourites taking up the room of three? In vain did one hope that the public might fasten for its 'third' upon something by one of our tried writers, Mackenzie, Cowen, Stanford, or Parry. It was not to be. What of Elgar? For a time no one could say. His 'Dream of Gerontius' had been produced at Birmingham in October, 1900; and most people imagined it to have won a success there. Yet for five solid years there was no sign of its advent at the Albert Hall. The reasons for the delay need not detain us. Enough that 'Gerontius' took an ample revenge when produced there on March 22, 1906. It achieved an instantaneous triumph and has since been given once every season, replacing Gounod's 'Redemption' as the work reserved for Ash Wednesday. The original group of soloists here comprised William Green, Madame Kirkby Lunn, and Ffrangcon Davies. Afterwards, the tenor part was invariably taken by that lamented and justly-admired artist, Gervase Elwes, whose beautiful rendering of it will long endure, a fragrant and cherished memory.

The extreme pains taken by Sir Frederick Bridge over the preparation of 'The Dream of Gerontius' had its reward, not only in an excellent performance, but in a far closer and deeper realisation of its subtle beauties than musicians had looked for in the great concert-room. Evidently abnormal size was no longer an obstacle here to the perfect enjoyment of the most delicate or unfamiliar music; audiences as well as performers had by now grown accustomed to surroundings that had often baffled the perceptive faculties of an earlier generation. Moreover, there was in the music itself something which made a new emotional and intellectual appeal, intense religious sentiment and mysticism speaking through an idiom of strange and haunting charm. Those who could compare the performance with that heard at the Westminster Cathedral in 1903 distinctly preferred the Albert Hall, especially for the dramatic realism of the choral effects. Hence an impression that has never been modified. As for the choral performance at Birmingham, that had been as full of blemishes as this was free from them.*

Catholicity of taste is evidenced by the strong contrast to Sir Edward Elgar's work that distinguishes its companion success in the current repertory, namely, Samuel Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' Compositions more dissimilar in character can rarely have shared popularity with the same audience. In its complete form this splendid setting of 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha' was first sung at the Albert Hall on March 22, 1900; and it is to be noted that the third section, 'Hiawatha's Departure,' was written for that occasion at the request of the Committee of Management of the Royal Choral Society. It was fitting in every way that both the distinction and the triumph should have fallen to a pupil of the allied Institution, the Royal College of Music, where, by the way, the opening section, known as 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' was first performed as a separate cantata in November, 1898. The second section, 'The Death of Minnehaha,' was written for and produced at the North Staffordshire Festival of 1899. It will be seen, therefore, that by the time 'Gerontius' arrived at South Kensington 'Hiawatha' had had six good years wherein to settle down in the good graces of the public; and it has kept there ever since.

Here, then, are the two works that flower annually side by side with 'The Messiah' (twice) and 'Elijah.' The five performances happily draw such audiences as suffice to maintain the finances of the Society in a thoroughly safe position. Let us hope that other modern masterpieces from native sources may see light ere long, and be found suitable and worthy to take their place in the same category. But it is not easy to follow up one great success with another, particularly at the Albert Hall. Many people admired Gounod's 'Mors et Vita' more than they did his 'Redemption,' but it never became even a temporary rival to the older work. Sullivan, had he lived, might have improved upon 'The Golden Legend,' which contains the best music he ever wrote. But it is hard to understand why Mackenzie's fine oratorio, 'The Rose and Sharon,' never really 'caught on' here; or Stanford's noble choral ballads, 'The Revenge' and 'The Voyage of Maeldune'; or Parry's 'Job' and 'Judith'; or Cowen's 'Ruth' and 'Sleeping Beauty'; or Elgar's 'Apostles,' 'The Kingdom,' or 'Music-Makers.' Any or all of these may be revived at intervals, as are some of Sir Frederick Bridge's shorter choral compositions. But not one of them is to be found on the regular active list of the Society. On the other hand, the Christmas performance of a selection of Carols has now become a popular annual feature.

This part of our retrospect may conclude fittingly enough with a word of recognition for the Society's capable and efficient orchestra, which, in the first instance a mixture of amateur and professional elements, has long been a purely professional body. Its leader was originally the well-known violinist Mr. Pollitzer, but for many years now that position has been held by the talented and respected Mr. Arthur W. Payne, who is also conductor of the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society. And so the good work goes on as it has gone on for fifty years. Choristers and instrumentalists alike share the same deep feeling of pride in their labour, the same esprit de corps, the same reverence for the artistic banner under which they are ranged.

SUNDAY CONCERTS AND OTHER 'ATTRACTIONS'

Enough has been said in the earlier pages of these articles to give a fair idea of the sources from which sprang the improved revenue, the more profitable utilization of the Royal Albert Hall, after it had passed through its period of tentative and often unavailing experiment. Celebrations of every kind grew more numerous, one important factor of increasing value being the religious missions—notably the Torrey-Alexander Mission held in 1905, when no fewer than eighty-five consecutive daily meetings took place, each attended by ten thousand persons. At some of these the waiting queues were of such length that they extended half-way down Exhibition Road to the east and Queen's Gate to the west. The number of costume balls also increased, and altogether there have been forty of these huge and expensive affairs down to the date of the Jubilee.

The steady development of the Sunday concert scheme has been another conspicuous success. This dates only from the time when the charge of the concerts was exclusively taken over by Mr. Hilton Carter.* It is not generally known that when the new manager was appointed, in 1901, a contract existed between the Executive Council and one of its members whereby this gentleman possessed the sole right of organizing and 'farming' the talent for the Sunday performances. They were limited almost exclusively to * Nevertheless, faulty execution did not prevent the work from being enthusiastically received. It is too often asserted that the balance of critical opinion at Birmingham was not favourable to 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which is not the fact. Perhaps the writer may be forgiven for quoting one sentence from the notice which appeared in the Sunday Times of October 7, 1900: 'If this cantata does not belong to the type of works that live and flourish in the full light of day, then am I greatly mistaken concerning the present trend of musical feeling and opinion in this country.'

* It may be recorded that on the afternoon of the Jubilee Concert a presentation was made to Mr. Hilton Carter to mark the completion of his twenty years' service at the Albert Hall, when a complimentary letter and a laurel harp with golden strings were handed to him by Miss Elsie Fogarty, principal of the Central School of Dramatic Art, on behalf of herself and her pupils.

able vocal and instrumental items, and theoyal Artillery string band under the late Cavalierertal. The contract in question did not expireil 1905, and the Council, instead of renewingdecided to hand over the whole of the Sundayncert business to Mr. Carter, with a substantialarantee to carry it on with.

The first of the new series of Sunday concerts en with the Queen's Hall Orchestra and Madameani as the vocalist, drew a big audience, andmped the undertaking with an artistic *cachet*at lasted throughout the fourteen years ofHilton Carter's régime, which ended in 1919.r some time the London Symphony Orchestrapeared in alternation with the Queen's Hall;id later on the Royal Albert Hall Orchestrarmerly the New Symphony Orchestra, underLandon Ronald)—so christened in January,1916—executed the lion's share of the Sundayrk. To name the solo performers who havepeared at these concerts would be to mentionery great artist living in or visiting this country.And it was the right idea, as the result has proved.verything in connection with the Albert Hall hasved slowly but surely, and along certainarly-defined lines. The direction of those linesbeen determined by the trend of popular tasteand the expression of a popular demand. Todeavour to fill this vast auditorium without aong—that is to say, a recognised—'attraction,'s always proved an ungrateful and futileusiness. Carter primus (William 'of that ilk')d not burn his fingers years ago, for the reasonat his 'National Concerts' had a real nationallowing; and, strangely enough, people wereing to forgive him his second-rate choir becauseas the composer of that incredibly dullatorio, 'Placida.' When, later on, Carterundus (otherwise Hilton, M.V.O., whom theing honoured during the interval at the Jubileeconcert) came upon the scene, Sunday concertsre only just beginning to secure a firm holdon public favour. Seizing time by the forelock,ought from the first to provide his audiencesh the finest procurable talent, and thus stimuled them with a new desire to come again onthe following Sunday; even as Barnby would say,ome once to the Albert Hall to hear my choir,nd you will want to hear it again.' As with manyer successes of slow growth in this world, thecret of ultimate prosperity in this case has beene gradual creation of a habit.

THE JUBILEE CONCERT

The presence of the King and Queen sufficed to part all the needful éclat to the afternoon concert ick, on Saturday, May 7, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the Hall. With theirajesties, in addition to their daughter, the Princessary, were three of the four surviving members ofe Royal Family who had been present at the ening ceremony in 1871, namely, the Duke of ennaught (the President of the Royal Choralciety), the Princess Christian, and the Princess Beatrice. There were probably few others among the crowded Jubilee audience whose memory could carry them back so far. Better still, however, there were seven original members of the choir, who joined during the season of 1871-72, and are now hon. superintendents; and these active gentlemen, accommodated for the nonce with seats in the Prince of Wales' box, had the honour of being presented to the King during the interval. Their names were Messrs. Edgar Doggett, Thomas Terry, Charles Sheath, Albert C. Hunter, Charles Hood, George W. Harris, and William Callingham.

Mr. William Whitton, who has not yet attained the position of hon. superintendent, also joined the choir during its first season.

The members of the Committee of Management present were the Earl of Shaftesbury (chairman), Earl Howe, Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bt., Sir Homewood Crawford, Sir Hugh P. Allen (Principal of the Royal College of Music), Lieut.-Col. N. J. Galloway, Mr. Augustus J. Littleton, and Mr. Charles Sheath.

The obvious intention of those who compiled the programme—not an easy task by any means—was to represent in it the British composers who have most contributed to the Society's repertory and its activities. Eleven of them were so represented (at least creditably, if not always quite worthily), together with one foreign musician, Gounod, who had at the outset been personally connected with the Albert Hall. On the whole, it was a fair revenge for the gratuitously un-English programme of fifty years before, and if for that reason alone deserves to be quoted here in full:

PART I.

GOD SAVE THE KING

Quartet and Chorus { 'Marching Song of Peace' } Parry
(War and Peace)
Miss Carrie Tubb Madame Kirkby Lunn
Mr. Ben Davies Mr. Robert Radford
Song { 'Onaway! Awake, beloved' } Coleridge-Taylor
(Hiawatha)

Part-Song 'Sweet and Low' ... Barnby
Motet ... 'Peace lives again' J. Frederick Bridge
The Choir

Recitative and Aria 'The Jewel Song' (Faust) Gounod
Miss Carrie Tubb

Old English Dances (First Set) Frederic H. Cowen
No. 2, Rustic Dance No. 4, Country Dance
The Orchestra

Conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald Chorus ... 'With Proud Thanksgiving' ... Elgar
Conducted by the Composer

PART II.

Organ Solo ... Prelude ... Stainer
Mr. H. L. Balfour

Solo and Chorus 'Land of Hope and Glory' Elgar
Madame Kirkby Lunn

Conducted by the Composer
Overture ... 'Britannia' ... A. C. Mackenzie
Conducted by the Composer

Songs with Chorus 'Songs of the Sea' C. V. Stanford a, 'Drake's Drum' b, 'The Old Superb'
Mr. Robert Radford

Chorus ... 'O Gladsome Light'
Soprano Solo } 'The Night is Calm' } ... Sullivan and Chorus }

(The Golden Legend)

Miss Carrie Tubb

The band (a hundred and two performers) was made up of the united Royal Albert Hall and Royal Choral Society's orchestras, led by Mr. A. W. Payne. This fine body of players, in conjunction with the full choir and supported by Mr. Balfour at the organ, brought out a tone of magnificent volume and satisfying quality, more especially in ensembles such as the refrain of 'Land of Hope and Glory,' the last excerpt from 'The Golden Legend' (pity it could not have been the splendid Epilogue!), and the final chorus of Sir Edward Elgar's 'For the Fallen.' With the exceptions above indicated the whole of the items were conducted by Sir Frederick Bridge, who has practically completed a quarter of a century of solid and useful labour in connection with the Royal Choral Society. Sir Alexander Mackenzie and Sir Edward Elgar were both warmly received, and regrets were expressed at the absence of Sir Charles Stanford, who was detained by an unavoidable engagement at Cambridge. Sir Frederic Cowen was also away from town, but this gave Mr. Landon Ronald the opportunity to which his lengthy association with the Sunday Concerts entitled him. The loudest 'ovations' of the afternoon, apart from the cheers for the King and Queen and the 'one more cheer for our President,' were those bestowed upon Mr. Ben Davies (now approaching the fortieth anniversary of his public débüt) and Mr. H. L. Balfour after he had played the Stainer Prelude. Altogether, then, a very enjoyable and memorable function!

[The list of works mentioned at page 395 appears below, reprinted from the Jubilee Concert programme.]

Bach—St. Matthew Passion; Christmas Oratorio; Mass in B minor.
 Barnby—The Lord is King.
 Beethoven—Mass in D; Choral Symphony; Ruins of Athens.
 Benoit—Lucifer.
 Berlioz—Faust; The Childhood of Christ.
 Brahms—Requiem; Triumphlied.
 Bridge—The Flag of England; The Ballad of the Clampherdown; The Forging of the Anchor; Callirhoe; Rock of Ages; A Song of the English; The Incheape Rock.
 Coleridge-Taylor—Hiawatha; The Blind Girl of Castel Cuillé; The Atonement; A Tale of Old Japan; Kubla Khan.
 Cowen—Ruth; Coronation Ode; The Veil.
 Dvorák—Stabat Mater; Requiem; The Spectre's Bride.
 Elgar—Caractacus; The Apostles; The Kingdom; The Dream of Gerontius; King Olaf; The Music-Makers; The Spirit of England: The Fourth of August; For the Fallen; To Women.
 Gardiner, H. Balfour—News from Whydah.
 Goetz—Psalm 137.
 Gounod—Redemption; Mors et Vita; Requiem.
 Hamilton Harty—The Mystic Trumpeter.
 Handel—Messiah; Israel in Egypt; Judas Maccabæus; Belshazzar; Theodora; Samson; Jephtha; L'Allegro; Acis and Galatea; Ode on St. Cecilia's Day; Alexander's Feast.
 Haydn—Creation.
 Henschel—Stabat Mater.
 Hiller—A Song of Victory.
 Leoni—The Gate of Life.
 Macfarren—St. John the Baptist; Joseph.

Mackenzie—The Rose of Sharon; The Dream of Jubal; The Cotter's Saturday Night; Bethlehem; The Witch Daughter.
 Mancinelli—Isaias.
 Mendelssohn—Elijah; St. Paul; Athalie; Loreley; Hymn of Praise; Walpurgis Night.
 Mozart—Requiem.
 Parker—Hora Novissima.
 Parry—Job; King Saul; Invocation to Music; War and Peace; Blest Pair of Sirens; The Pied Piper of Hamelin; The Chivalry of the Sea.
 Rossini—Stabat Mater; Messe Solennelle.
 Saint-Saëns—The Promised Land; Samson and Delilah.
 Schubert—The Song of Miriam.
 Smyth—Mass.
 Spohr—The Last Judgment.
 Stanford—The Revenge; The Voyage of Maelduné; St. Cecilia's Day; Eden; Stabat Mater; Songs of the Sea; Songs of the Fleet; At the Abbey Gate.
 Sullivan—The Golden Legend; The Light of the World; The Martyr of Antioch.
 Vaughan Williams—A Sea Symphony (Part 1).
 Verdi—Requiem.
 Wagner—Parsifal; The Holy Supper of the Apostles; Tannhäuser (Act 3); Lohengrin (Part 1); Flying Dutchman (Selections).
 Wood, Charles—A Dirge for Two Veterans.

This List does not include numerous Motets, Choruses, Part-songs, and Carols.

THE DRAMATIC WORKS OF VINCENT D'INDY

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

(Continued from May number, page 322)

'FERVAAL'

'Fervaal,' in my opinion, is a masterpiece, a work which all high-class operatic stages ought to include in their repertory, together with Wagner's with 'Boris Godunof,' Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Maïsk of Pskof,' and 'Pelléas et Mélisande.' A masterpiece it appeared to me in 1898, when first produced at Paris, and a masterpiece I consider it to the present day.

I am quite aware that the history of the work during those twenty-three years affords little in support of my assertion. Shortly after 'Fervaal's' completion (1895), excerpts of it were given at one of the concerts organized at the Paris Opéra, 'in order,' it was explained, 'to give the public some idea of many contemporary French works which the management was unable to produce.' In 1897 'Fervaal' appeared on the stage of the Brussels Théâtre de la Monnaie. Most of the Paris critics were present, and many of them spoke highly of the work, others criticising it sharply on the ground that it was too direct an imitation of Wagner, that it lacked warmth, and that it was too intricate.

The following year 'Fervaal' was produced at Paris: not at the Opéra, but on the smaller and therefore less suitable stage of the Opéra-Comique, temporarily housed in the building that is now the Théâtre Sarah Bernhardt. The balance of criticism, despite strictures of the same kind as before, was favourable. But whether the play might have become 'a success' remained undecided, the removal of the Opéra-Comique to its regular, far smaller premises, having rendered a continuance of the performances impossible.

A revival of 'Fervaal' at the Opéra, on December 31, 1912, seemed to give the work a better chance. The production was excellent. The great quarrel between Wagnerites and anti-Wagnerites had died out, and in any case the intervening years ensured better focussing. Particularly instructive in that respect is, for instance, a comparison between Alfred Bruneau's article on 'Fervaal' of 1897 and his article of 1913. The former lays great stress on d'Indy's imitation of Wagner, the latter places matters in their proper light, and is full of praise.) The public was far better educated as regards modern music, works like 'Pelléas' and 'Boris Godunov' (quote but those two) having been produced in the interval. Had that public proved responsive, there seemed to be no reason why 'Fervaal' should not be maintained in the repertory; so that—despite the fact that no great work ever owed success in the first place to the public of the Paris Opéra—it may be alleged that 'Fervaal' at least had a fair chance, and failed to make good. But I feel sure that the last word has not been said.

The allegation that d'Indy imitates Wagner is chiefly founded, as I said last month, on a few passing reminiscences and on a few analogies, none too general to afford a valid argument, and the remainder entirely superficial, if not imaginary. As to the assertion that the music of 'Fervaal' lacks warmth and vitality, I simply cannot understand it. I am convinced that in proportion as more music-lovers get familiar with that music, unfavourable opinions will lose ground and 'Fervaal' will find new admirers. It may contain elements that are not all one would wish them to be: think, for instance, that the musical interest flags in several parts of the otherwise very beautiful third Act. Yet as a whole 'Fervaal' teems with emotion, with music that is both lofty and convincing. Where the music is perforce more decorative than emotional—in the greater part of the second Act, with its wonderful apparitions and rustic ceremonies—it again achieves supreme beauty and striking originality.

The poem is written on strictly Wagnerian principles. In the delineation of its principal characters, humanity and symbolism are blended very much in the same way as in Wagner's heroes, and for similar purposes. Fervaal is a young Celtic chief, the last of his race, the elect defender of his country against the Saracen invaders.* By yielding to his love for Guilhen, the Saracen princess, he forfeits the favour of his gods. Dagard, the High Priest, precipitates the catastrophe by recalling Fervaal to his duties; Guilhen, forsaken, launches her devastating hordes against Cravann, Fervaal's country. The Celts are defeated. Amid the horrors of the night following the battle, Guilhen and Fervaal meet again. Their love is stronger than death; and when Guilhen dies of exhaustion, Fervaal lifts her in his arms, and with his precious burden climbs the slopes towards the peaks to which a choir of mystical voices, heralding the advent of the new and better religion foretold in ancient prophecy, calls him. Truly a splendid climax (despite the alleged obscurity of its symbolism), and one in which the music rises to a wonderful height.

The orchestration of 'Fervaal' is another point upon which certain critics have pounced in order to give a semblance of justification to their plea that d'Indy imitates Wagner. It employs four flutes (one of which alternates with the piccolo), three oboes (one alternating with the English horn), three clarinets, one bass clarinet (with which a contra-bass clarinet alternates), four bassoons, four saxophones, four horns, four trumpets, eight saxhorns, four trombones, one tuba, one bombardon, eight harps, the usual percussion, and strings (which include five-string contra-basses descending to the C). Together with the 'Symphonie sur un thème montagnard,' 'Fervaal' shows d'Indy's scoring at its very best. His methods are as individual as they are effective. And it is typical that, even with so great a mass of instruments at his command, he should evince his marked predilection for unmixed timbres. His scoring, no less rich and mellow in the half-shades or contrasts than in the tutti, is as clear-cut as are his motives, his harmonies, his modulations. I have already alluded to that feature, which is the hall-mark of his music.

D'Indy's 'Treatise of Composition' sets forth in unequivocal terms certain principles concerning structure and texture which are no less unequivocally illustrated in 'Fervaal.' The motives, he tells us, should be terse, and rich enough in distinctive features to be easily followed in the working-out. Whereas in symphonic music the composer remains free in his choice of modulations, in dramatic music, the modulations—whose sole object is always expression—are predetermined by the course of the action. Tonality, he adds, should be conceived in a broader sense than it usually is, and the meaning of the term modulation more accurately understood. To think that any notes or chords not belonging to the diatonic scale of a given key introduce a modulating element is a gross mistake. There are so many affinities between notes and chords that most of the possible triads may be included in the scheme of any tonality without disturbing its balance; and it is the alteration of that balance that alone constitutes a modulation.

As regards harmony, d'Indy's views are simple and uncompromising. There is but one chord—the triad. All other formations are merely the outcome of modifications temporarily introduced by melodic processes—adjunctions or alterations; in other words, are the result of melodic movement, do not exist per se, and should never be considered as static. Another instance of the important part played by that notion of movement in his conception of the texture of music and its expressive properties is afforded by the stress he lays on the fact that the expressive value of certain modulations may be greatly affected by the interposition, as a transitory step, of even one 'neutral' formation—such as a diminished seventh or an augmented fifth.

* The anachronism is deliberate.

It is in accordance with those views that d'Indy mainly uses as material short bold themes, which as a rule are elements of construction rather than constructed units—with the result that from the point of view of thematic structure, the music of 'Fervaa', without falling short in appropriate dramatic expression, constantly tends towards the state of 'pure' music. Some of those themes play the part of leading motives; others are simply descriptive or decorative figures—at times mere touches—recurring as often as they are needed. The working out is conducted on strictly polyphonic lines. The recurrences and associations of themes may at times suggest that d'Indy devotes too finical a care to details, is too deliberate in his methods of drawing upon the resources of association. But even if one were to see in the idiom of 'Fervaa' signs and symbols as numerous, as definite and constant in meaning as the 'motives' which commentators like Schweitzer and Pirro discover in the works of Bach, it would be no sufficient reason for denying the vitality of the organism of which those 'cells' are the constitutive parts.

It has been remarked that in 'Fervaa' certain keys are almost uniformly affected to the expression of certain feelings, recurring after the fashion of the motives, or with the motives. That is true to a certain extent only; and when it occurs it is not the result of deliberate artifice. Indeed, the 'Treatise of Composition' emphatically states that no key is endowed per se with a distinctive colour; that the idiosyncrasies out of which certain theorists make so much capital are due to the relative frequency of open notes on the stringed instruments, of natural harmonics in the wind instruments, and so forth. Hence, a given key may seem to bear a certain character in music entrusted to bowed instruments, and a different character when produced by any other combination. The only true explanation, therefore, is that the keys are brought back by the sequence of modulations following the progress of and changes in the action.

The method followed by d'Indy for the working out of his themes is chiefly founded on the principle of rhythmic amplification and variation. It is in a great measure to the ingenuity and point of the rhythmic treatment that the vitality and expressive power of the music of 'Fervaa' are due. Wagner had very seldom resorted to similar means, which originally belong to 'pure' music, and in dramatic music come to their own for the first time in 'Fervaa'.

A good instance is afforded by the heroic theme:

among whose transformations the following may be adduced:

Further to illustrate the working of the principle another theme which refers to Guilhen's queenly presence, her feminine grace and tenderness, may be quoted, with some of its variants:

Remembering the composer's axiom, that harmonies, or 'chords,' do not exist per se, but crop up as the outcome of melodic lines in motion encountering one another, one may proceed to consider his melodic and polyphonic methods, of which Ex. 2 above affords a very simple yet typical instance—an instance calling for no further comment. But there are cases when the encounter of melodic lines leads to results such as this:

Another very remarkable instance is the choral writing in passages like the following (from th underfully impressive scene of mythological apparitions in the second Act):

Ex. 7.

SOPRANI. A . . . a . . .

ALTI. A . . . a . . .

In contrast with those essentially 'horizontal' devices, one finds in 'Fervaa' many instances of purely harmonic beauty and expressiveness. A case in point is the opening of Fervaa's lament after the death of Guilhen and Arfagard:

Ex. 8.

Ils dor - ment, tous ceux que j'ai - mais, Ils

And with reference to effects of purely harmonic colour, one should not overlook the very telling use he makes (in the scene of the apparitions) of the whole-tone scale, one of the most misused devices in modern music, and one whose possibilities for good are very few:

Ex. 9.

p cres.

&c.

(To be concluded.)

SOME ITALIAN COMPOSERS OF TO-DAY

(Continued from May number, page 326)

BY GUIDO M. GATTI

V.—VINCENZO DAVICO

Although fairly numerous, the compositions of Vincenzo Davico do not make a very bulky pile. They are mostly songs or short compositions for the pianoforte, each containing an image either brilliant or fascinating through the subtle emotion marking its outline. They are nearly always unilineal and monochord; they are born, live, and die in a brief space of time, but not without leaving in the soul of the listener an impression of tenderness. They are very short Japanese tanke, a few verses containing a deep thought or an exquisite image which the composer has translated into music, preserving the spirit intact, and with such nicety as not in any way to spoil the delicate design, although he often adds to the precision of the language the indeterminate halo of harmony. They are, in short, subdued cries of the soul, fugitive vibrations, almost imperceptible tremors which the musician knows how to evoke with a simplicity of means that is almost meagre, but full of savour. They show absolute scorn of the cliché and of the technical instrumental formula, so that at first sight some of the pages for the pianoforte might seem very little adapted for the instrument by a player who is accustomed to define as 'pianistic' certain traditional passages, and to consider inadequate those compositions that do not contain them.

Davico was among the first in Italy to accept the Debussy gospel. When still very young he had the courage to present himself to the public with works which were certainly not made to captivate the sympathies of the majority, more accustomed to plain, solid—even stale—bread, than to certain exotic spiced ragouts of French make. But Davico was too intoxicated by the breath of liberation which came to us from across the Alps (and which reached him, then living at Monte Carlo, sooner than it did most of us) to be able to practise that self-control of which he has shown himself capable in maturer years. Moreover, he was almost predestined to submit to Debussy's influence by the natural tendency which led him to love in art those same poetical or pictorial expressions which were almost the sole inspirations of the French composer. Davico, from the time he was a child, had disdained the forms of romantic sentimentalism (in music of hyper-melodism); the musing solitude among the mountains of his paternal Piedmont or facing the Mediterranean Sea, had moulded in him a delicate, sensitive spirit, with a tendency to consider the life of men and things as a slender, yet substantial, sequence of inward states of mind. Ever since his first collaborations with poetry he had shown a special inclination and an almost exclusive love for the mezzotint and 'mezzo-voce' poets—artists who are refined to the verge of morbidity, some concealing their ironical vision of mankind under the form of intentional every-day simplicity, others displaying their orgiastic sensuality in a riot of words, sound, and colour. Both these expressive realisations found their origin in the mental discomfort of the artist of the first years of the century, and were the reaction from the patheticism of the 19th century. Davico, then, was a follower of Debussy by temperament and education. I remember his 'Impressions d'automne' (1912) as three pages full of that hidden charm which makes one love the best among the 'Preludes' of Debussy. This was especially the case with the third, 'Cloches dans la brume,' in which brief strokes of the bells and broken phrases create a vast, far-away sonority that seems to have filtered through a mist. These and similar pieces of Davico have no preamble, central part, or clearly marked conclusion; they are rapid expressions of lyric moments, glimpsed through a loop-hole of life. They are indisputably and entirely in the Debussian manner; yet, on hearing them a second time, we find something in them which is not Debussy—which should perhaps be called almost anti-impressionist. This shows itself in a certain severity of line, the constant affirmation of the sense of tonality, and in the style of the melody, always chosen with a certain regard for its intrinsic beauty of sonorous arabesque. In short, Davico is a colorist; yet one who sees not only colour but masses of light and shade: and from those dynamic masses draws his design, at times not so much outlined as living in the rhythm and figuration, like a sap which nourishes unseen.

Besides the essential features of Davico's Italian temperament we must not forget his studies with Reger at Leipsic, where he gained his diploma in 1912. No doubt the chief benefit which he derived from this work with Reger was in some tightening up of what we may call his dispersive tendencies. Otherwise no signs remain save in certain songs in German style repudiated by the author, and (less apparently) in a Trio (1912) and in a Sonata (1913) for violoncello and pianoforte—works which are not among his best.

Besides the 'Impressions d'automne' we may place the other three small Suites of impressions: 'Impressions d'intérieur,' 'Impressions crépusculaires,' and 'Impressions nostalgique,' which are all conceived in the same spirit and in the same form, and which give us the same sensations. No doubt we feel at times the need for something more substantial, and, although they are miniatures, we should now and then like a longer breath. Certain pages doubtless show the effects of a deceptive facility, and are too soon lost, vanishing like an iridescent bubble. But on the whole these twelve impressions, from which one could form a string of at least six small but fine pearls, testify to the existence of a poetical and exquisitely sensitive spirit, especially susceptible to certain twilight and nocturnal aspects of nature.

Davico has written also six 'Nocturnes' (1910), works oscillating slightly between the spirit of Chopin and that of Fauré, but in a finished style, and well adapted to the pianoforte, reminding us of the Debussy of the 'Arabesques' and the 'Suite Bergamasque.' The music is suggestive without ever abandoning itself to the fascination of a languid, morbid melody, and without losing sight of the reserve and sobriety of tone which are among the characteristics of his art.

We said just now in passing that our composer's sympathies incline towards the poetry of the 'decadents' and more precisely to those known as the 'twilight poets,' and we have also said that the delicate spirit of the latter expresses itself either in the mystic poverty of a Gozzano or a Guérin, or breaks forth in euphuistic style and in riot of colour as in d'Annunzio or in Gautier. Davico reveals both characteristics, for, besides his 'Impressions' for the pianoforte, he has written richly-coloured orchestral pages in which the hand of a master of instrumentation shows itself with a tendency to the use of positive colour and to the non-complication of the orchestral tissue. Good examples of scores are the 'Impressions antiques,' the 'Polifemo,' the 'Poema erotico' (which won a prize in a national competition at Rome in 1910), the score of the opera in one Act, 'La Dogaresa' (given at Monte Carlo in February, 1920), but especially the last two parts of the oratorio 'La Tentation de St. Antoine,' written about seven years ago. This work—which, rather than 'oratorio,' might be defined as 'opera da concerto,' like the original of the 'Damnation de Faust' or the 'Giovanna d'Arco' of M. P. Bossi, for example—has a plot in prose formed of various passages taken from Flaubert's work of the same name. It consists of three episodes: in the first the hermit, in a fit of delirium, sees the most important events of his worldly life pass before his eyes; in the second are depicted the arrival of the Queen of Sheba with her rich and imposing Court, and the temptations of the Saint; in the third is unfolded the symbolic eternal struggle of the spirit with Death and Desire, ending with the triumph of Death amidst the mystic comments of invisible voices.

The musician has used the orchestral resources with moderation, always keeping in view the dynamic order of the work. Thus, from the simplicity and transparency of the orchestral accompaniment of the Saint's words in the first episode we pass by gradual steps to the opulent riches of the temptation scene, returning in well-devised parabola to the severe and mystic dialogue contested between Desire and Death in the last episode, where the two contrasting themes almost blend in the final apotheosis of the Saint.

'La Tentation de St. Antoine' is worth noticing, too, under its vocal aspect: the voices have been considered with special regard for the expression of the words, most gracefully and aptly treated. These merits also distinguish the brief work for voice and pianoforte entitled 'Elegies à Lesbos,' and the 'Canti d'Oriente.' One may note what expressive meanings are contained in the beautiful lyric 'Le Talisman,' where e sense of Indian fatalism is given by the uniformity and symmetry of the pianoforte part with its bass chords; and what precision of 'cosodial tones' is revealed in the charming, genuine Japanese, 'L'ombre de la lune.'

The perfection of some of these brief pages and others contained in various collections (such as the Liriche Giapponesi) make us appear ungracious when we say that we much prefer them to the composer's more important works, as, for instance, the above-mentioned 'Tentation,' or the 'Requiem' for four voices written in memory of the dead Princess of Monaco. But the fact remains that we specially appreciate in Vincenzo Davico that keen, fresh sensitiveness and fine elegance revealed rather in the miniatures than in the larger and more ambitious works. We have so much admiration for his delicate art that we hope he will resist the temptation to employ it in fields where its charm may vanish and its delicacy be taken for weakness.

NOTE.—Vincenzo Davico was born at Monaco on January 14, 1889, of Italian parents. He is at present living at Paris. Besides the compositions mentioned in the present article are: 'La Princesse Lointaine' (1909), 'Impressions romanes' (1913), for orchestra; 'Trois Poèmes de Verlaine' (1916); 'Chants d'Amour et de mort' (1917), and 'Trois quatrains d'Al-Ghazali,' for voice and pianoforte, &c. Davico's compositions are published by Demets, Rouart-Lerolle, Ricordi (Paris), Williams (London), Blaringham (Monte Carlo), and Pizzi (Bologna).

[This series will be resumed in September.—Ed.]

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

By HARVEY GRACE

(Continued from May number, page 331.)

IX.—BACH AND THE TRANSCRIPTION

Bach was ever an enthusiastic copyist and transcriber of other composers' works, from his boyhood, when he tried his young eyes by copying on the moonlight nights of six months), a volume of clavier music by Kerl, Pachelbel, &c., to his last days, when his overworked sight failed him entirely. A good deal of such copying was of course unavoidable. Printed music was scarce, and if one wished to add a work to one's library, there was usually no other way than the weary process of manuscript. But Bach seems to have been exceptionally busy in this direction, partly because of his consuming interest in music of all kinds, and also because he evidently found his own invention stimulated by the process.

His contemporary, Magister Pitschel, of Leipzig (says Schweitzer), tells us that before improvising he generally played, from the score, a work by some other man, as if he first had to set the machine of his invention going by artificial means. "You know," writes Magister Pitschel to his friend, "that the famous man who in our town enjoys the greatest reputation for music and the admiration of all connoisseurs, cannot, they say, ravish people with his own combination of tones, until he has played something from a score to set his imagination in motion."

The above seems to provide an answer to the question organists frequently ask: 'Why did Bach make organ transcriptions of the Vivaldi concertos?' As Schweitzer remarks: 'It was not to make them more accessible to the public at large, nor to learn from them, but simply because this was his way and it gave him pleasure.'

There is not much interest in these concertos to-day, but as they are invariably included among Bach's organ works (Book xi.) they cannot well be passed over. First, we have to note that only two of the set are by Vivaldi, Nos. 1 and 4 being by Duke Johann Ernst of Saxe-Weimar, who died at the age of nineteen. He was evidently a princeling of unusual musical ability who took his art seriously, being a friend of Bach and a pupil of Walther, the town-organist of Weimar. All four concertos contain an undue amount of complacent padding, wearisome repetition, and passages designed purely for showing-off the player. Their chief interest for us lies in the light they shed on Bach's methods and tastes. They prove first of all that he was far more concerned with the music than with the medium, and that he had no objection to the principle of arrangement. This was natural at a time when the idiom of various instruments was still not clearly defined. (Only a little earlier our own composers had been producing sets of pieces 'apt for viols or voyces.' Imagine a work of to-day being written for S.A.T.B. or string quartet!) As to taste, Bach appears to have been far less critical of other men's music than of his own. All was fish that came to his net. He seems to have consumed music (as he produced it) in a steady stream, and probably the two processes had more connection than is realised. In these transcriptions Bach employs some keyboard methods used nowhere else in his organ music. In the Finale to the first Concerto we have several examples of this chopstick arrangement:

EX. 1.

(The movement is marked Presto, and is on one manual.) The Allegro of No. 2 contains long stretches of broken chords on two manuals, thus:

EX. 2.

In the same movement there is a good deal of double pedal of an unusually simple type—repeated notes by the right foot at the top of the keyboard, with the left foot stumping out the real bass far below. In the opening movement of

No. 4 there are some remarkably rapid and frequent manual changes, often two in a bar of quick 4-4 time, and almost invariably on the second of a group of semiquavers—the best of answers to those who object to our making similar changes in the D minor Toccata.

At first sight it seems odd that Bach, with his unrivalled knowledge of organ effect, should have transferred these string works to the keyboard with so little modification. The explanation is not difficult, but it involves the throwing-over of a popular idea as to the place of the organ in Bach's art. We have been accustomed to believe too readily that the organ was the most influential factor in his life, and that practically the whole of his output shows traces of the idiom of the instrument. But we must not forget that he was probably a proficient violinist at a time when his organ playing was still in a very elementary stage. As Parry says, 'It is worth remembering that music of some kind rendered upon the violin was one of his first artistic experiences, as his father had played on a stringed instrument and had taught him the violin when he was a child; and among his duties on his first appointment at Weimar was that of playing in the Duke's band.' We have already seen that the Italian school of string composers exercised a marked influence on his organ works during the most important part of his creative life. This influence showed itself not only in the employment of phrasing marks, melodic passages, and basses, of a type suggestive of strings, but even more in a clearness of texture and a finished workmanship rarely found in the organ music of his predecessors and contemporaries.

It may be asked, 'Seeing that he was a violin player from childhood, why is there practically no sign of violin influence in his early organ works?' The answer is that the Northern school of violin composers—the only one known to young Bach—consisted chiefly of organists, who used a liberal amount of keyboard idiom when writing for strings. The strong and weak points of the violin were first realised in Italy, and it is a significant fact that Bach's finest organ music period began at a time when his professional work was largely that of a chamber-musician, and when the Italian string composers were becoming well-known in Germany. Thenceforward the string influence is easily traceable in almost every organ work. Even his Leipzig masterpieces, with their return to some of the Buxtehudian methods, contain material more suggestive of strings than of the keyboard—e.g., the arabesque passages in the B minor Prelude, and the springing figure in the C major Prelude. The more we consider the matter, the more clearly we see that if there was one instrument that above all others influenced Bach it was not the organ but the violin. That is why he made clavier arrangements of seventeen string works by Vivaldi and others, in addition to the four for organ, making little or no change of idiom. As Schweitzer says: 'He tries to get the effect of the strings on the keyed instruments,' showing, 'what we can also gather from his works, that for him there was really only one style—that naturally suggested by the phrasing of the stringed instrument—and that all other styles are for him only modifications of this basic style.'

Here, surely, is our cue in regard to the interpretation of much of his organ music, in the matter of phrasing, and even, at times of registration.

If we want further evidence as to Bach's easy-going way of transferring string passages to the keyboard, we shall find it in the set of six Chorale Preludes he arranged in his later years for issue by Schübler, a Zelle publisher (xvi.). It is not easy to understand why, given the rare opportunity for seeing some of his organ works in the glory of print, he should have sent Schübler a set of arrangements, instead of drawing on the numerous chorale preludes at that time in course of revision. Schweitzer thinks these Schübler pieces 'do not go particularly well on the organ'—an opinion that will not be endorsed by most organists who have played them. The exquisite prelude or 'Sleepers, wake!' would alone be sufficient to make the collection notable, but, as we shall see, its companions are only a little less effective as organ music, though their purely musical appeal sometimes falls a trifle short. Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5, and 6, are drawn from cantatas, a fact which makes it tolerably certain that the origin of No. 2 was similar, and that its source is amongst the lost works. The original form of the 'Sleepers wake!' piece is a chorus in the cantata of the same title, the chorale melody being sung by all the tenors, under a long streaming melody on the violins and violas. The pictorial idea is no doubt that of a bridal procession, hinted at in the text. Parry says:

A highly sympathetic writer on Bach suggests that this singular and delightful passage has the intention of a dance tune; by which is indicated that Bach had in his mind the procession of the betrothed and the joyous attendance of the virgins, whose gestures have a wayward grace which is suggestive of Botticelli. At first the quaintness of the suggestion rather balks acquiescence. But when the extraordinary vivacity of Bach's imagination is taken into account, it may be admitted that among the many things which influenced the product, the idea of the virgins of allegory participating in the welcome of the heavenly Bridegroom may have had a share.

In the organ version Bach gives the vocal part to a solo stop in the tenor register, the string counter-theme to a second manual, and the string bass to the pedals. He omits the filling-in harmonies suggested in the original by the usual figures, the result being a trio. (Knowing his fondness for this method of treating the organ, we are not surprised to find five of these arrangements are trios for two manuals and pedals.) The 'Sleepers, wake!' movement contains a good many examples of Bach's freedom in the matter of passing-notes and discords. Here is a quotation showing the first two phrases of the chorale melody:

Ex. 3. Ch. 8-ft. Sw. 8-ft.

In the whole of Bach's chorale arrangements there is nothing more fascinating than the way the counter-theme develops into what Walford Davies truly calls 'one of the most spacious tunes in existence.' This piece is often spoilt by being played so quickly that parts of it become almost trivial. The mood is one of cheerful meditation. The string melody should not be given to a very telling stop. Its character and frequent high pitch ensures its being sufficiently prominent. If the chosen stop is enclosed so much the better.

The second Prelude is a quaint little piece on the Chorale 'Whither shall I fly?' The word 'fly' seems to have suggested the figure which is treated by two manuals (the upper with 8-ft. stops, the lower with 16-ft.—Bach's own directions), while the pedal delivers the chorale melody with a 4-ft. stop, thus providing the alto of the trio. We may well add a soft 8-ft. to the 16-ft. in order to make the lower bass passages clearer. This little piece can be made very piquant, and we may be sure Bach played it quickly. The third Prelude is on 'Wer nun den lieben Gott,' and is an arrangement of a duet from the cantata of the same name; the voice-parts and the bass continuo are given to the manual, while the chorale, played in the original by massed strings, is delivered by the pedal with a 4-ft. stop, thus:

Ex. 5.

The result is very effective, whether the movement be played loudly or softly. The former method is suitable only when a powerful 4-ft. reed can be used for the melody, against a diapason background.

No. 4 is a treatment of Tonus Peregrinus, and is lifted bodily from the cantata, 'My soul doth magnify the Lord' (not the Magnificat, but a hymn based thereon by Joseph Kling). The original version consists of a duet for soprano and tenor, against the C.F. played by oboe and trumpet. In the organ form the voice-parts are played by the left hand, the C.F. by the right, and the continuo by the pedals. This piece is usually registered quietly, but in view of the fact that the C.F. was originally delivered by the trumpet, we need not hesitate to experiment with a tuba and plenty of foundation tone. There is something very striking in the opening and closing of the piece by a single bass part. The treatment of this very 'stringy' theme by the two voices is full of interest. The two bars of F minor following the first phrase of the C.F. are unexpected and deeply expressive. Bars 13 and 24 call for a momentary use of the right hand on two manuals at once—a very unusual thing in German organ music of that date, though some of the early French composers seem to have made considerable use of 'thumbing.'

Ex. 6.

The fourth Prelude, 'Ach bleib' bei uns,' is drawn from one of Bach's most beautiful cantatas—that dealing with the walk to Emmaus. In its original form it is a soprano solo, with obligato for violoncello piccolo, and continuo. Bach shortens it in the organ arrangement, giving the vocal solo to the right hand and the elaborate 'cello part to the left, the pedals of course playing the continuo. This piece seems unpromising on first acquaintance, but the frankly tuneful 'cello part eventually takes one captive. Here is an extract:

Ex. 7. (♩ = 96.)

This curiously attractive piece is an excellent study for left hand and pedals.

The last Prelude of the set is the least successful. It is a transcription of an alto solo in the cantata 'Lobe den Herren,' the voice-part being played by the pedals (4-ft.), while two manuals share the elaborate violin solo and continuo. The violin solo is awkward for the keyboard, and not very effective, containing a good deal of this kind of thing:

The chief drawback to the piece is its length. The intervals between the appearance of the chorale phrases are long, and we get tired of the rather fussy violin solo.

In addition to their very considerable claims as music, special interest attaches to these Schübler Preludes. They were amongst the last of Bach's works, and the cantatas from which they were taken also date from his Leipzig days. In their lightness of texture (as we have noted, five are trios), as well as in the somewhat secular character of a good deal of their thematic material, they have a decided flavour of chamber music. If, on the whole, they show us Bach neither plumbing the depths nor scaling the heights, they are too good to be neglected. They are first-rate studies in phrasing and their value as exercises in the melodic use of the pedal is obvious. Moreover, they serve to remind us, first, that Bach had a liking for making organ transcriptions, and, second, that when he did such arranging, the very few changes he made were always in the direction of simplification—a point worth noting by some modern arrangers.

This brings us to Bach's last work—the set of Eighteen Chorale Preludes. With a discussion of these, and a brief Coda dealing with some general principles as to the performance of Bach's organ music on the instruments of to-day, this study comes to an end.

(To be concluded.)

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XVIII.—THOMAS ASHWELL

As a brilliant contemporary of Fayrfax it is surprising that the work of Thomas Ashwell has not received adequate recognition long ere this. Notwithstanding the destruction of manuscripts at the period of the so-called Reformation, quite a respectable number of Masses, motets, songs, &c., by Ashwell may be cited as proof of his powers. In particular, he was one of the first—if not actually the first—English composers to give us a setting of the 'Stabat Mater.' Of course we know that Fayrfax did compose a setting of this beautiful Sequence, which was formerly included in the well-known Eton MS.; but, alas! the pages containing it are long since missing. On this account, Ashwell's setting is of unique interest.

Yet another claim to fame may be put forward in the case of Thomas Ashwell, namely, that he composed a royal anthem, 'God Save King Harry,' which may be regarded as the precursor of the present National Anthem. The date of this English Anthem—composed for the marriage of Henry VII. to Elizabeth of York—can be fixed with tolerable certainty, for the nuptials took place on January 17, 1485. And a third claim to notoriety is the inclusion of a song by Ashwell in Wynkyn de Worde's printed Song Book of 1530, in which he is represented by a four-part setting of 'She may be called a soverant lady.' Yet the strange circumstance is that no memoir of this remarkable musician has yet appeared, nor have any facts of his career been hitherto published. All that has emerged is that Ashwell lived 'between the years 1485 and 1510,' and that he is included by Morley in his list of famous English musicians of the early 16th century. On this account it is a pleasure to be able to throw a little more light on his personality, even though the details are not as copious as could be desired.

For a long time I believed that Ashwell held a Court appointment under Henry VII., or else that he was in some way connected with the Chapel Royal, but after a protracted search I found that such a claim was groundless. Nor does his name occur in the monumental 'Calendar of Letters of Henry VIII.' However, I was fortunate to locate him as Master of the Choristers of Lincoln Cathedral in 1508.

It is to be regretted that the published 'Chapter Acts of Lincoln Cathedral,' carefully edited by non R. E. G. Coles, in three volumes, for the Lincoln Record Society, begins only in 1520, and consequently gives no information as to Thomas Ashwell. Yet a reference to the late non Maddison's excellent little book on the vicars-choral, Poor Clerks, and Organists of Lincoln Cathedral, from the 12th Century to the accession of Edward VI., printed privately in 1878, affirms the statement that Thomas Ashwell was appointed Master of the Choristers—evidently in succession to John Davy—in 1508. At the same date Leonard Pepei, a vicar-choral, was acting as organist, plenus organorum in alto choro.

Yet though Ashwell was Master of the Choristers in Lincoln in 1508, he was neither a vicar-choral nor chorister nor Poor Clerk of that Cathedral, and does not seem to have been previously connected with the place. He owed his preferment to William With, Bishop of Lincoln,* who ruled from 1496 to 1514, and was also known to Bishops Wolsey (1514) and Atwater (1514-21). At one time I was of opinion that Ashwell had been engaged temporarily in Lincoln in 1505, but his name does not appear in the detailed list of Cathedral officials at the installation of Dean Symeon on August 14, 1506. Consequently the date of his appointment at Lincoln is not earlier than 1508.

From 1508 to 1518 Ashwell held office at Lincoln, and in the latter year was replaced by John Gilbert, who had graduated Bachelor of Music at Oxford in 1510, and who was appointed permanent organist of Lincoln Cathedral in 1524.

In regard to the English Anthem written for the weddings of Henry VII. and Elizabeth of York in 1486, Miss Agnes Strickland, in her 'Lives of the Queens of England,' makes the following statement:

An Anthem was written for the occasion in which a strong resemblance will be immediately traced to 'God Save the King'; the similarity of the music is still stronger.

is added:

This Anthem was found with other ancient papers in the church-chest at Gayton, Northamptonshire.† The date is 1486. It is set to music of the old square form, and with the baritone clef on the third line:

'God save King Henry wheresoe'er he be,
And for Queen Elizabeth now pray we,
And for all her noble progeny.
God save the Church of Christ from any folly,
And for Queen Elizabeth now pray we.'

We are safe in dating Ashwell's creative period as between the years 1485-1515, and he disappears after the year 1517; for, as has been seen, his successor (John Gilbert) was appointed in 1518.

To the student who would fain make himself acquainted with Ashwell's works, a visit to several libraries is necessary, as his MSS. are scattered. Some are in the British Museum, others are in the Bodleian, while a few are to be met with in Cambridge University Library.

In the British Museum (Harleian MS. 1709), there is the setting of the 'Stabat Mater' previously ascribed to, also a beautiful Motet, 'Tu nostreum Dei Adamus'; but Mr. H. B. Collins (to whom I am indebted for much information on Ashwell's compositions) kindly informs me that this Motet is probably the work of Hugh Ashton, in proof of which he quotes Bodleian c 1-5, Cambridge University, and St. John's. The British Museum (Add. MS. 30,520) also has a fragment (two leaves) of his 'Mass of St. Cuthbert,' and fragments of another Mass, and a Motet (Bass only) 'Sancta Maria' (Add. MS. 34,191).

The Bodleian Music School Library (c 376-382) has two Masses by Ashwell, namely, Mass 'Ave Maria' and Mass 'Jesu Christe'—both complete.

At Cambridge University Library (MS. 815) is his remarkable five-part Mass, 'God Save King Harry'—but C.T. only, not Tenor, as in the Catalogue—of which the Bass part is in the Library of St. John's College, Cambridge (No. 234).*

In conclusion, it may be well to note that the inclusion of Ashwell's song, 'She may be called a soverant lady' in Wynkyn de Worde's printed Song Book, dated October 10, 1530, is no certain proof that he was then alive. This unique music-book of twenty songs contains compositions by Cornish, who died in 1523, and by Dr. Fayrfax, whose death occurred in 1521; consequently the appearance of a song by Ashwell in 1530 cannot be quoted as evidence, and we are forced to the inevitable belief that his death occurred soon after the year 1518. At the same time, it is remarkable that a certain Thomas Ashwell was in receipt of an annuity from King Henry VIII. in September, 1543. And it is significant that his name appears in the same list of pensioners as William Crane, Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal, Richard Bowyer, Henry Stephenson, and Thomas Byrd.

Ad Libitum

BY 'FESTE'

Fair play's a jewel. Those of us who have so often grumbled at the comparatively small amount of space given to music in the daily press must not grudge appreciation when our art does for once in a way get a fair show. A salute, then, to the Northcliffe press, which, having somehow realised (in good time) that the Melba concert promised to be 'the musical event of the year,' proceeded in its own efficient way to see that everybody else realised it too. There appeared to be need for such a step, for musicians as a body showed none of the interest—even well-repressed excitement—with which they usually await events anywhere near the very limited category of 'the most important'—especially with the definite article sforzandoed. People have speculated as to the reasons for this sudden musical enthusiasm on the part of the Northcliffe press. I am glad to be able to give the solution—on the understanding, of course, that the matter is entirely between ourselves, and goes no further. The Melba 'stunt,' then, was merely an effort to regain prestige. The Viscount has long had a large and docile public ready to eat out of his hand. At his nod they grew sweet peas, ate standard bread, and even sat through Reinhardt's 'The Miracle.' But lately there has been a fall from grace. They were unmoved by the Daily Mail village signs, and they greeted The Prescribed Hat with marked disrespect. Only a tiny handful ventured abroad—shyly—wearing a 'Sandringham,' and in all but a few cases these have since reserved

Bishop Smith founded some exhibitions for choristers in the Lincoln Song School. The Rector of Gayton kindly informs me in a letter dated December 20, 1920, that there are no documents prior to 1558 at Gayton. Miss Strickland was evidently misinformed.

* Mr. H. B. Collins obligingly sent me a transcript of his own reconstruction of the opening bars of the Gloria, giving the theme of 'God Save King Harry,' but I may add that it bears no resemblance to the present National Anthem.

The Hat for use in the garden or for walks abroad after nightfall. This would never do; the public must be brought to heel. But there must be no third fiasco. The knock this time must be at an open door, or one ready to yield at a touch.

Then, in a lucky moment, his Lordship remembered that he had filled the Albert Hall for the Dupré recital. If he could shepherd ten thousand to Kensington Gore to hear two hours of ecclesiastical music—mostly of a severe and unaccustomed type, and smelling terribly of Popery—what could he not do with a popular singer as the bait? The Albert Hall? Pooh! a mere bungalow for such a flock. He could fill the Park . . .

As we know, he filled the hall, every ticket being sold some days beforehand.

It is of course possible—even highly probable—that Dame Nellie Melba would have achieved the same result unaided. But the Dupré concert was another matter. The two events set one speculating as to what could be done for our symphonic, choral, and competitive gatherings if the Viscount suddenly became enthusiastic about them—or if he determined that his public should become enthusiastic, which is pretty much the same thing.

The Dupré and Melba propaganda was successful because it had an appeal almost entirely lacking in our musical journalism. Head-lines of course played a big part. They began mf, so to speak, thus, in the Evening News of May 4:

MELBA'S AU REVOIR CONCERT.

SONGS 'FOR THE PEOPLE' AT THE ALBERT HALL.

BOOK SEATS FOR SUNDAY.

On the following day we had a different registration scheme (as an organist would put it), with a familiar, dig-in-the-ribs air:

GOOD STORIES OF MELBA.

WHEN LANDON RONALD'S CURL GOT ON HER NERVES.

SUNDAY'S GREAT CONCERT.

LITTLE PERSONAL TOUCH WHICH TOOK AN AUDIENCE BY STORM

On May 6 there was another change, a solo on the vox humana, in the shape of an article:

MY FIRST SONG IN LONDON.

BY DAME NELLIE MELBA, D.B.E.

This brought us to Saturday, the day before the great event, whereupon appeared this triumphant series:

WONDERFUL MELBA SUNDAY.

NOT A SINGLE SEAT TO BE HAD IN THE ALBERT HALL.

COULD BE FILLED TWICE.

DIVA TO GO HOME AND TEACH 100 GIRLS TO SING.

These stout efforts were well backed up by the attendant matter:

British music-lovers will flock in their thousands. . .

The singer's glorious voice will not be heard again for at least a year, and people who wish. . . . Considering the importance of the occasion, the prices are most reasonable. . . . It will be the privilege of the thousands who get seats in the comfortable Albert Hall on Sunday next to talk in years to come of the Melba voice. . . . There have been daily queues at Mr. Powell's office. . . . Mr. Powell says those who do not get a ticket to-day. . . . To-day people who disregard the warning to buy their tickets early . . . [What did We tell them?] Everyone who has heard that adorable voice will want to hear it again. . . . The Albert Hall will hold 10,000 people. . . . The prices . . . considering . . . extraordinarily moderate. Amphitheatre stalls will be 10s. 6d. . . . and the whole of the balcony 4s. 9d. (including tax).

Perhaps the half-dozen or so of our readers will manage to exist without the Evening News may be curious about the Curl and the Little Personal Touch mentioned—or, rather, shouted—above.

As per head-line, the curl belonged—incredible it may appear—to Mr. Landon Ronald:

There was a certain big curl on the left side of my head [he told an interviewer] which it was my habit when conducting to twist—much in the manner a man twists his moustache. My unfortunate habit one day got on Dame Nellie's nerves. . . . She completely lost her self-control, and threatened that if I didn't stop twisting my hair she would walk right off the platform!

A reproof that effected a lasting cure, for no conductor makes less play with his hair than Mr. Ronald.

The 'Little Personal Touch' had to do with the same distinguished musician. At a Blackpu concert Dame Nellie was encored, and decided to sing my 'A Little Winding Road.' By a curious mistake I started the accompaniment at the pianoforte in a key which only a deep contralto could sing. She began the opening phrase—and immediately stopped.

Then in that carrying voice of hers she said: 'My dear Landon, you're playing it in the wrong key!'

Of course, everyone in the audience heard her. shall never forget the wild scene of enthusiasm that little personal touch evoked.

A dour folk, these Blackpudlians, and not easily moved, but wonderfully responsive when the right thing comes along.

A Daily Mail interview with the Dame gave great pleasure. We were told that 'she loves the English audience as much as it loves her. . . . appeals for their favourite songs she is never de . . . [Several other singers share with her this general readiness to give the many-headed what it (or they) likes (or like).] She had been ill, and was no better. All trace of the illness was happily gone. Most of us would be content to leave it at that. But the Dame, to make certain, went to see her famous throat doctor Sir Milsom Rees. 'He roared with laughter after looking at my vocal cords,' she said, laughing at the recollection of the interview. 'Get out of my room,' he said, 'you don't want me!'

I hope the interviewer duly howled with glee. There are few funnier sights than vocal cords. Have a glance at your own, if you doubt this. . . . You will need a laryngoscope or X-rays, which of course is where the cream of the joke comes in.

And what was the programme of the concert thus boosted? There was some good orchestral fare, of course. Our orchestras somehow contrive to find music which everybody, both musician and many-headed, can enjoy. But on such occasions their portion is that of the undistinguished participants which sporting records lump together in an off-hand way as 'also ran.' At the Dame's concert they played some Weber, Debussy, Dukas, Rimsky-Korsakov, and Bizet. The real musical interest of the moon, however, was supposed to centre in 'Jewel Song' from 'Faust,' Puccini's 'Addio,' Puccini's 'By the waters of Minnetonka,' and Puccini's 'Good-bye,' and in the encores, thoughtfully announced beforehand—'Home, sweet home' and 'The Laurie.'

Maybe you have so far escaped 'Minnetonka,' you must not be let off an extract. It is well we should place on record a sample of the kind of singing at 'the musical event of the year' by a prima donna:

his 'tune' is practically repeated to:

'Sun Deer

No fear

In heart of mine,'

the second portion begins thus:

the accompaniment of almost every bar consists of tonic and dominant arpeggios, with the dominant used lavishly in its most sentimental fashion.

Look again at the last batch of head-lines. 'The time to go home.' By all means. Why not? As the Diva has melodiously declared (only too often), 'There is no place like it.' 'And teach 100 girls herself.' The Dame can give those hundred girls her own beautiful voice, well and good, but for heaven's sake let a musician be called in to attend to their repertoire. We cannot lightly face the prospect of hundred débutantes let loose on us a year hence to the epiglottis with 'Minnetonkas,' 'Jewel Songs,' and 'Home, sweet Homes.' 'I am torn at leaving England,' the Dame said to the Evening News representative. Naturally. In how many other countries will she find a hall accommodating ten thousand that can be filled thus easily with singers at 10s. 6d. to 4s. 9d. per head (including expenses)? Where else will she meet with a Napoleon of the Press spreading himself to make his country a fit fit for prima donnas to live in?

However, one may be 'torn,' yet determined, and the Dame is gone. For at least a year there will be no doing in the world of music, no 'Minnetonka,' no Puccini's 'Good-bye,' no queues outside the agents, nothing beyond a couple of hundred promenade, symphony, chamber, and choral concerts, with a dash or so of recitals by mere musicians.

Perhaps in the meantime one of us may get the ear of the Viscount, and tell him something of the music of the musicians that really matter—of the London Symphony Orchestra playing at concert after concert mere honour and glory, of another orchestra practically disbanded, of silent opera-houses, of choral societies and competitive Festivals living from hand to mouth, for the lack of the support that he has gratuitously whipped-up on behalf of one of the most important musical events of the season.

DECENTRALISATION: AN EXPERIENCE

BY C. À BECKET WILLIAMS

The subject of Decentralisation of music has for the last few years so engaged the attention of the pundits of the Press that a few remarks on my practical experiences cannot fail, in theory at least, to interest the reader. For I, with many others, have given time and money (stupidly) in trying to prove that the hypothesis is a true one, viz., that music has only to be decentralised to be a success, both from the point of view of Golders Green and Lombard Street.

And, reader, I believe it is true.

My first move was to interest Mr. Philip Ashbrooke in my scheme, and henceforward I will refer to our joint efforts in the plural. We, then, got busy and formed a committee to help us which consisted of Lady Cooper, Messrs. Harold Samuel, Dr. Somervell, Gilbert Webb, and Harvey Grace—a representative body I am sure you will agree. But now we came to our first fence, and fell. We had an old-fashioned idea that societies and committees of this kind should be self-supporting, and that the public should pay for its musical medicine. What we ought to have done was to appeal for funds, like everybody else. . . . Instead of that we made it clear to the committee that membership involved no financial responsibility, and that unless the scheme was self-supporting it would be abandoned. However, as we eventually learnt, this first fence proved our undoing.

We next informed the Press of our project, and of course were duly patted on the back and blessings were called down on us. On the other hand the Daily Telegraph allowed Dr. Hull, with his usual enthusiasm, to ask why we did not join the British Music Society, or words to that effect (I was one of its first members!), and somehow omitted to print a letter we wrote in reply.

It is now perhaps advisable to quote the words of our manifesto, so that our subsequent actions may appear the less remarkable:

For some time it has been apparent that concerts of the best class have been too much confined to the West End of London, and the above committee has been formed with the object of arranging for concerts by famous artists to be given at Town Halls in and around London.

The reader will note the words 'famous artists.' Plenty of infamous artists decentralise ballads in the drawing-rooms of Balham and Blackheath, but we wished to cater for a larger circle. We therefore decided to give a series of concerts at the Town Hall at, let us say, Colney Hatch, in the centre of a big nest of both the upper and lower middle classes, which were the classes we proposed to entice into our net. At an interview the Town Clerk adopted an attitude of surprise, mixed with an engaging optimism and hopefulness. We were grateful for his sympathy and help throughout the whole series. But, alas! his hands were not altogether free. There were certain things he could not do, as you shall hear.

We decided that we must fix on the same day in each week for our concerts in order, so to speak, to form the habit. But we found that nearly every night the Hatchonians disported themselves jazzily in the hall we wished to hire. What about Sundays? We were informed that concerts could be given on Sundays, but with two provisos, namely, that the L.C.C. should sanction them, and that any profits accruing should be handed over for a charitable purpose. As we were only out to pay our way we agreed. We were then informed that we would have to pay for the hire of the pianoforte in the hall—the pianoforte sacred to jazz—whether we used it or not. However, after lengthy correspondence, the council waived this demand. Then we found that the local cleaning staff not unnaturally refused to work on Sunday without extra pay, and even then Mr. Ashbrooke had to provide all the programme sellers, booking-clerk, and the rest of the personnel of a concert-hall. Would the authorities permit us to put up our bills on their notice board, place leaflets on the counters of their offices, and would they be responsible for the advance bookings? Yes, but (to put it mildly) little enthusiasm was displayed in any way—the minimum was done to help us. All looked on with cold and suspicious eyes, and the L.C.C. hung up our arrangements while, presumably, examining our dossiers at Scotland Yard.

But we were determined to continue with our project, and realising the importance of starting well we decided to engage Mr. Mark Hambourg for our first concert, and for days beforehand huge representations of the great pianist's features pontifically presided over the pedestrians perambulating the pavements. As the hour approached the advance bookings showed that no interest whatever was being taken. But this was nothing to go by, and indeed on the night itself the audience was large and shriekingly enthusiastic. But we charged very small prices (i.e., 2s., and 3s.), and the concert did not pay. The audience at the next concert was very much smaller, but our overhead charges were not so high, as some of the artists generously gave their services for the cause. Nevertheless, we lost money over the whole series. We have no cause for self-reproach from the technical point of view. Mr. Ashbrooke's skill in using all advertising resources was as amazing as it was admirable. The hall was situated opposite an important station, on the main road, and the route of several omnibuses. Furthermore it was in a district without any rival attraction. Yet the public response was practically nil. Why then did we fail? Not because we performed good music instead of rubbish. There is plenty of good music which is much more attractive even to the unsophisticated proletariat than bad music, as everybody knows. No; it was the lack of funds to carry on the enterprise and form the habit. The concerts would have paid if we could have continued them, of that I am certain, but it was not for us private individuals to do so. At this point we decided the authorities, should come in. They should make themselves responsible for a dozen concerts at least, so as to give matters a fair trial. We have circularised every London Borough, and put our machinery at their disposal. The next move must come from them. It would be better for all concerned if the powers-that-be would cease wasting money on grandiose schemes for child education, and spend about a hundredth part on educating and uplifting their parents.

The above article may perhaps give the impression that our energies were confined to these concerts only. This is not so. We have been as far afield as Hertford, and if reasonable chances occur of making both ends meet we shall continue our activities. We are quite aware that we are not the only people who give concerts, but claim that so far as we know our committee is unique in possessing the equipment for giving such concerts with no idea of profit or personal gain.

RUTLAND BOUGHTON'S 'THE IMMORTAL HOUR'

BY ROBERT LORENZ

On June 18, 1821, Weber's 'Der Freischütz' was performed for the first time at Berlin and fell like a bomb-shell on a nation saturated with the imbecilities of current Italian opera. The moment was well chosen: the ground was ready. On August 14, 1821, the platform of Bayreuth station was baized to light the footsteps of Kaisers, Kings, Tchaikovsky, &c. Mr. Joseph Bennett, of the Daily Telegraph, at that moment was well chosen: the ground was ready. On August 26, 1914, 'The Immortal Hour' was performed in the moth-eaten Assembly Rooms of a mediocre townlet, to the accompaniment of an imperfect grand pianoforte. Needless to say, the moment was not well chosen: the ground was not ready, for on March 31 of the present year the same work was performed in the same townlet (increased in stature and football proficiency, but not in understanding) to the accompaniment of a still more imperfect grand pianoforte.

Yet Rutland Boughton's 'Immortal Hour' is perhaps the most significant musico-dramatic work produced anywhere since 'Parsifal,' and in England for over two hundred years.

The purpose of the present article is not to provide a guide to the work nor to do more than touch the fringe of a masterpiece that sooner or later will figure prominently in musical history; but to communicate some, at least, of the writer's enthusiasm for a score which has genius stamped on almost every page.*

Rutland Boughton calls his work a Music-Drama, a complete misnomer to start with, for music-drama was a title coined by Wagner to distinguish his mighty synthetic brain-bursts from other people's operas, and conveys to most minds the picture of a huge stage, huge singers, a huge orchestra, and a huge conductor. Now from the beginning to the end of the 'Immortal Hour' there is much that is strong, nothing that is huge; or rather, I should say that the few attempts at hugeness are the complete failures of the score. It is indeed not at least of Boughton's achievements (and a rare tribute to his commonsense) to have steered clear of Wagnerian hugeness without at the same time becoming petty and affected like Debussy in 'Pélle et Mélisande.' I myself have crossed out the words 'music-drama in my score and written instead: 'a lovely noise of myriad leaves'—for that is the secret of this music, if indeed its secret can be wrung from it in mere words. It is green, it is lovely, and its greenness and loveliness are the greenness and loveliness, not of a highly civilized intellectual costumed but of the very fairest parts of this fair country. One simply cannot conceive the work being performed in any country except England or one rich in Anglo-Saxon traditions. I suppose 'Bells of Youth' may ance and Germany, but they certainly don't ring his:

* The work has been published under the scheme of the Copyright United Kingdom Trust by Messrs. Stainer & Bell, to whom I am indebted for permission to select a few musical examples. The score costs 15s.

Suppose those countries too had 'old, old, far-off' but they were certainly quite different from to show how really good they were. Nor can I give for a moment that the lordly ones who in the hollow hills of the Rhine are like this :

short, the music I have quoted above and the of nine-tenths of the work is English to the and could have been written only by one whose I was most subtly attuned to the very essence of is typical in the meadows, glades, and hedge- of this country. By way of contrast, look at phrase, one of the blots on the score, depicting fairy-god, Midir :

h sounds as if it had come straight out of the per-room of the Berlin Opera House, and then pare it with this, another phrase connected with ir :

h seems as if it had been squeezed from the sweetest apples of a West Country orchard, and which is to the clear, limpid air of an English spring day what Wagner's :

was to the heavy, elder-laden fragrance of that midsummer's eve in Old Nürnberg.

But setting aside for a moment these pæans of disjointed praise, let us try to arrive coolly at the true musical significance of the work; let us try to analyse briefly the good and the bad in it. Its supreme technical achievement is the belated restoration of a genuine vocal line and the attainment in the best parts of the music of an almost perfect balance between the vocal and orchestral portions. Except where the composer has resorted to frank, straightforward tunes—set pieces certainly, but tunes that are pure songs and part-songs instead of stagey arias and choruses—there are only a few pages where it can be said that the pedestal is either on the stage or in the orchestra. There is, of course, a certain amount of running orchestral commentary, but it is usually of a very discreet order, and though there are some orchestral themes that must, I suppose, be dubbed 'motives,' these are as a rule of a vocal rather than a purely orchestral nature. Here is one of them, which occurs frequently and which gives perhaps a better idea of Boughton's creative individuality than any other :

If this theme appears to any listener to owe its origin to any musical 'school' past or present I shall be glad to hear of it. It seems the very soul of the work, though I suppose that distinction really belongs to the lovely clarinet phrase with which the score opens, and which must surely strike a sensitive listener by the freshness and originality of its conception :

Here is an example of a beautiful vocal phrase which shows an economy of orchestral resource that refuses to overburden the voice, and yet is not in any sense a merely formal accompaniment :

Delightful tunes such as these are scattered all over the work, often cropping up in the most unexpected places. Some are choral, some for solo voices; sometimes they are full-blooded diatonic stuff (look at 'Green fires of Joy'); sometimes they are wistfully inconsequent, as in the well-known Fairy Song; sometimes a blend of both, as in Midir's song:

Ex. 11.

Often they are the product of sheer musical joy, like the 'Bells of Youth,' than which nothing daintier or more infectious has ever tripped from a composer's pen. They have too a delightful leavening of the commonplace which will be the first means of carrying them straight to the heart of a healthy humanity. Are not all the world's most joyful melodies just tinged with this charming quality of vulgarity or crowd-feeling?

The chief adverse criticism must take the form of a rather sweeping assertion—due more to lack of space than to lack of means to prove it—that Boughton is not essentially a dramatic composer but pre-eminently a lyric one. The second scene of Act 1, in which Eochaidh and Etain meet for the first time, and the scene which follows Midir's entrance in Act 2, contain ample evidence of this.

If I have insisted more than anything else on the loveliness of the work I do not wish to imply that it lacks strength, and in this respect there are no finer pages in the whole score than the opening scene of Act 2, where a long and terrifying monologue of Eochaidh occurs, based on the persistent rhythmic undercurrent of this striking phase:

Nothing too could be finer by way of contrast than the beginning of the short answer from Etain which immediately follows:

And here a word in season to choral societies. Concert versions of dramatic music are not very satisfying, but a society which decided to produce the whole of this scene at a concert, from the beginning of the Act to the entrance of Midir, would not regret its decision. Nor would its audience.

To sum up: this work will not attract the casual followers of 'stars' whose estimate of the worth of an opera is based on the number of different languages in which it is sung at any given performance. Nor will it appeal to the out-and-out fanatics of ultra-modern spankhard dynamics. But there are, I believe, still a few timid souls who have the temerity to admire the less forcible methods of a Mozart, and who still value music more for its own sake than for the success with which it has been made to suggest a totally alien matter. It is to them above all that I commend this score.

In conclusion, a hint to those who by reading this article or otherwise have become desirous of hearing the work. Translate your desire into action by getting in touch with the proper person—in this case, Mr. Rutland Boughton, Mount Avalon, Glastonbury. Don't write him a string of fulsome inanities saying how you would love to hear the music if only you could, and how you will have your children rechristened Eochaidh and Etain if it will be the godfather. Send him merely a short practical note: 'I want to hear "The Immortal Hour" I live in [say] Biggleswade. You come and come.' Then Mr. Boughton, who is nothing if not business-like, will slip your name and address into a 'You come and I'll come' file, and so the foundation stone will be laid of a living art movement based on the immutable law of supply and demand. As we write 'The Immortal Hour' is being performed at Bournemouth. Somebody wanted it there—and so it is. What Bournemouth has to-day Biggleswade can have to-morrow if only a sufficient number of somebodies will want it—and say so.

OLD ITALIAN MUSIC AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM

The main interest of the old books and manuscripts being shown at the British Museum in connection with the Dante Centenary is, of course, literary. But two cases are reserved for old Italian music, and these hardly got the recognition they deserve. Of the music of Dante's time little is known. We have nothing of the famous Casella, whose songs, Dante's words, 'used to still all my longings.' Ten poems in the Vatican library bear the inscription 'and Casella set them to music.' That is all. For the rest the musician must go to Boethius at St. Augustine, and find the bare bones of the music of that epoch—no more. But there are in the exhibition ecclesiastical books which may well be connected with Dante. An Antiphonal of the Dominicans, probably the work of the early 14th century; Hymnals of the Augustinian Convent of San Salvatore de Silva, near Siena; Gradual of the 14th century from Vallombrosa—these are exquisite examples of an art with which Dante was well acquainted. The fine illuminated illustrations are very characteristic of the time, and very beautiful. These rare miniatures, the foliate designs on burnished gold, may well have suggested one of the images described in the 'Divine Comedy.'

But realising the scarcity of the material relating to Dante's time, the authorities of the Museum have wisely extended the scope of the exhibition to include much later work, and give an adequate idea of the progress of Italian music and of the printing and manuscripts. These link up logically with the whole history of the Italian opera and Italian music. We begin with the 'Idi Spirituali' used in the oratory of Santa Cecilia in Vallicella (1583), which takes us back to the Rappresentazioni Sacre, the root of the oratorio. Performances at the Vallicella were not directly concerned with the traditional music of oratorio, but contributed to the dawn of the spirit which was to develop in time the new form. The British Museum contains a dialogue recalling the dialogues of the oratorio, which mark the point of contact between the 'Laude' and the oratorio. The first of the two wishes to repent but fears the jibes of the world, while the second objects that only the lessons of the wise need be taken into account. This was surely the substance of many a future 'dialogue' on repentance. Amongst the innovators must be placed Mazzocchi (1639), whose MSS. bear the first time the indications forte and piano, occasionally shortened into the modern 'f' and 'p.' An earlier composer, Orazio Vecchi (1551-1605), is represented by the 'Anfiparnasso,' which has been taken to be the first opera ever produced. The same cut which adorns Vecchi's opera has been reproduced in the copy of 'La Pazzia Senile' of Banchieri, more closely related to the Commedia dell'Arte than to much else besides. Goldoni himself began with 'Pantallone and Harlequin.' Moreover, Banchieri's opera lies open at the prologue of which the sentiments have come down to us in the prologue of 'Pagliacci'—only, of course, 'better pressed.' With Banchieri we enter the realm of the Opera. Rossini, however, is not represented by a full, but by a lament for the death of Byron. Of the latter there is only one specimen—the score of 'Pavane' in the neatest of handwriting. An admirable exhibition on the whole, and certainly worth a visit even by those who are not especially attracted by the Dante exhibits. F. B.

The Musician's Bookshelf

BY 'FESTE'

New composers are so well qualified to write memoirs as Saint-Saëns. He has had the varied and interesting experiences, and he is a pungent writer. These things being so, it is a pity his 'Musical Memories' (John Murray, 15s.) gives us somewhat of a meagre, and that even this is spoilt by one of the best translations of a musical book that has so far come my way. If a musician could not have been asked to translate the work, surely one might have been consulted as to the technical terms. One could compile quite a long list of 'howlers.' The book is of course full of plums in the way of anecdote and odd bits of information. Here is a bearing on the subject of applause at concerts, recently discussed in this and other journals:

Formerly the conductor never saluted his audience. The understanding was that the work and not the conductor was applauded. The Italians and Germans changed all that. Lamoureux was the first to introduce this exotic custom into France. The public was a little surprised at first, but they soon got used to it. In Italy the conductor comes on the stage with the artists and salutes the audience. There is nothing more laughable than to see him, as the last note of an opera dies away, jump down from his stand and run like mad to reach the stage in time.

The chapter on the organ is far too short. Saint-Saëns could write a book on it, seeing he was an organist for so many years. His retort to the priest who complained of his severe style is well-known, but it is worth repeating:

He told me that the Madeleine audiences were composed in the main of wealthy people who attended the Opéra-Comique frequently, and formed tastes which ought to be respected.

'Monsieur l'Abbé,' I replied, 'when I hear from the pulpit the language of Opéra-Comique, I will play music appropriate to it, and not before.'

Organists whose hearers demand trivialities in the way of choir music and voluntaries should keep this up their sleeve ready for use. Of the thirty-three chapters that make up the book the only one leaving an unfavourable impression is that entitled 'Their Majesties.' It relates Saint-Saëns' experiences with Queen Victoria and other crowned heads, and is couched in an obsequious vein that may be very well in republican France but it is out of place in democratic England. I doubt if any Englishman would write such a passage as this, for example:

After this slight concert she [Queen Alexandra] delivered to each of us, in her own name and in that of the absent King, a gold medal commemorative of artistic merit, and she offered us a cup of tea which she poured out with her royal and imperial hands.

One wonders if the overwhelmed composer secured a few of the tea-leaves to add to his collection of royal cherry-stones. However, bating a few faults, Saint-Saëns' book is one to enjoy.

Arthur Coleridge was a great all-rounder, and his 'Reminiscences' (Constable, 10s. 6d.) contain a good deal of interest to musicians. A chapter of about sixty pages is devoted to musical matters, sixteen being concerned with Jenny Lind. Coleridge was the real originator of the Bach Choir, as is pretty well known. Less known is the fact that its inception was primarily due to 'a few casual words' of Walmisley, who in Coleridge's hearing said that 'the noblest choruses ever written by man were to be found in a work the bare existence of which was problematical, for the contents were known but to the sacred few who could be counted.' The remark, made in 1849, stuck in Coleridge's mind, bearing fruit in the shape of the first English performance of the B minor Mass twenty-seven years later. The last time Coleridge sang with Jenny Lind was in the duet for soprano and tenor in the Mass. He tells us that no artist of her time rejoiced more in the Bach revival than Lind. (Imagine our Tetraxis and Melbas showing enthusiasm over such a matter!)

I remember her saying to me, 'To think that an old woman like me, who has lived in music all my life, should have to be told of this music by an amateur!'

The temptation to quote further from this delightful chapter must be resisted. I will add only that Coleridge, being a keen churchman, was a sturdy champion of organists, and maintained that the Athenæum should confer its highest distinction, that of election under Rule 2, upon the organists of the principal London churches, without regard to their musical merits or social standing.

Not often are organists' musical merits taken for granted and their social standing so easily disregarded.

Another rattling good book of reminiscences comes from Ethel Smyth—'Streaks of Life' (Longmans, 10s. 6d.). Here again one could fill columns with quotation and comment. Instead, I give one extract from the chapter on the Empress Eugénie, whose lack of musical ear was notorious:

One day she paid a visit to the County Lunatic Asylum, and on her arrival the band (composed of lunatics) struck up 'Partant pour la Syrie,' which is the hymn of the Napoleonic dynasty and is attributed to la Reine Hortense. I felt certain that it was not in their usual repertory, and must have been specially studied for the occasion; so as we drove away, I remarked that it was a delightful idea on their part. The Empress gave a great jump: 'Comment?' she exclaimed, 'vous êtes bien sûre que c'était "Partant pour la Syrie" qu'ils ont joué? Il me semblait connaître cette mélodie-là, mais j'ai pensé que c'était God save! . . .

The chapters on the opera difficulty and the employment of women in orchestras have been well discussed in the daily press. Excellent reading is that giving us 'Two Glimpses of Queen Victoria,' the slice of life 'An Adventure in a Train,' and the long section describing the production of 'Der Wald' in Germany.

The latest addition to Kegan Paul's 'Library of Music and Musicians' is one of the best of the series, 'The Spirit of French Music,' by Pierre Lassere, translated by Denis Turner. It deals with Grétry, Rameau, the Modern Italians, Meyerbeer, and Wagner. At first sight the reader wonders what the Germans and Italians are doing in this galley, but he soon realises that no study of French music can ignore foreign composers who had so much influence on it as these. M. Lassere has a vigorous and stimulating style. His chapter on Grétry will be read with especial interest to-day, when the old composer is coming in for a good deal of notice in various ways. Of Meyerbeer, M. Lassere says some hard things, apparently on the ground that it was he who made an opening for the German invasion. If Meyerbeer's music had been French nothing would have been more justifiable than that invasion. But French music is something quite different.

Again:

There are people to-day who would like to stir up enthusiasm for Meyerbeer by emphasizing that it was Wagner who killed him. No doubt he did, but in France Berlioz, Gounod, Bizet, and Massenet contributed infinitely more than Wagner to the result. . . . Meyerbeer is dead, stone dead. Multa renascentur, many things will come to life again, as the poet says, and I hope that in time soon to come music will see many purely French things come to life again on the ruins of the German mania which choked them. Meyerbeer will not come to life again. His apologists plead the brilliance of his success. Certainly, it is an argument. But those successes belong to the worst period French art has known.

If the plain man does not get his money's worth at concerts to-day, it is not for want of help. Here are two more books telling him how to use his ears, and both have kindred titles, 'How to Enjoy Music,' by Herbert Antcliffe (Kegan Paul, 4s. 6d.) and 'The Enjoyment of Music,' by Arthur W. Pollitt (Methuen, 5s.). A useful feature in Mr. Antcliffe's book is the list of music, vocal and instrumental, in order of difficulty. There is also a selection of gramophone records. It is a pity this Kegan Paul series of books is not better treated in the matter of music illustration; they are often wretchedly copied and reproduced. For example, in the quotation from Bach's 'Saints in Glory' Fugue, the tenor and bass in the fifth bar are so badly ranged that the average reader will be puzzled; and, overleaf, where the subject and counter-subject of this Fugue are quoted the sharps are omitted from the signature. Mr. Antcliffe writes in the right, simple style, and his book will be helpful to that large body of amateur musicians who have lately awoke to the fact that there is a lot more in music than they had supposed.

Dr. Pollitt goes rather more thoroughly than Mr. Antcliffe into such matters as form, relationship of melody and harmony, &c. There are many well-produced music-type illustrations, some wise drawn from modern composers—Richard Strauss, Franck, &c. (the Strauss example, by the by, taken from what the text calls 'Pill Eulenspiegel'). Dr. Pollitt writes with enthusiasm, and his book goes so much farther in some respects than most popular works on music, that it may be studied with advantage by those who may claim to be something more than laymen where the art is concerned. I hope the reader has noticed the word 'enjoy' in the titles of these two books. Not so many years ago its place would have been filled with 'understand' which rather forbidding word later gave way to 'appreciate.' The old close preserve and mystic of music will soon be gone for ever. It totters when musicians began to visit the barber at normal intervals, and to be as other men in all sorts of little things that matter; it comes down with a sickening crash when critics and Mus.Docs. write books in plain English telling Thomas, Richard, and Henry once—to do two apparently irreconcilable things—go to a classical concert and have a good time.

Music in the Foreign Press

MAURICE RAVEL

In La Revue Musicale (April) Roland Manau whose excellent little book on Ravel, published about eight years ago, was the first to be devoted to a general survey of that composer's works, contributed further matter on the same topic. His chief object to show that Ravel found himself early, and without effort. His early works reveal no subservience to any influence, and no obtrusive reminiscence of school-training. Among those from whom—after his masters Fauré and Gédalge—he learnt much Manuel rightly names Chabrier and Erik Satie showing, moreover, that Ravel's style of writing for the pianoforte is derived mainly from Liszt and accessorially from Chopin, his methods of scoring straight from those of Rimsky-Korsakov.

To believe that Debussy has exercised any influence upon Ravel is to show that one properly appreciates neither composer. Indeed, both Debussy and Ravel have, to some degree, undergone similar influence from Chopin, Liszt, Chabrier, Satie, the Russians. But what they owe to those influences is all they have in common—and it amounts to very little. Debussy and Ravel, when all is said and done, are as different as day and night. Debussy, sensuous and sensitive, is essentially impulsive. A subtle instinct guides him, no intellectual operation intervening in the process of artistic creation. With Ravel, on the contrary, the intellect steadily controls the work of creative imagination. Although perfect in proportions and balance, the form of Debussy's works remains recondit and elusive, whereas Ravel is an expert at the game.

handling forms freely, and yet in accordance with the most classical principles. His melody, though simple, is as definite as Debussy's is fluid, and proceeds from harmonies that have little in common with those for which Debussy evinces a preference. After mentioning Ravel's influence upon younger French composers such as Louis Durey, Germaine Tailleferre, Francis Poulenc, and even Georges Auric (who, we are told, has recently been inveighing against Ravel's tendencies in La Nouvelle Revue Française), Manuel summarises Ravel's æsthetics (p. 18):

Hatred of the indefinite, contempt for the facile and the declamatory, deliberate intention to make the work of art appear at times as a successfully accomplished tour-de-force, the winning of a wager. And above all things, a desire not to intoxicate the heart, but to satisfy the mind by means of aural pleasure. Yet feeling and emotion play their part. They are the mysterious fountain whose waters the composer draws with meticulous care and deep reserve.

That perfect restraint, and the exclusively musical quality of Ravel's music are, Manuel concludes, the reason why his works will never appeal to those who yearn for exuberance and hyperbole, nor to those who like to build literature around music, and are not content with 'listening with their ears alone.'

THE IMPORTANCE OF TIMBRE

In the same issue of La Revue Musicale Alfredo Casella forecasts the time when the essential element of music will be timbre, or tone-colour:

Already we see the diatonic system falling to pieces. A comparatively new element, timbre, which, up to the 20th century, had played but a subordinate part, has nowadays conquered a standing as important as that enjoyed by the three classical elements rhythm, melody, and harmony. In proportion as the possible harmonic combinations become exhausted, timbre will gain ground. And in one essential particular, timbre differs from the other three. Whereas rhythm, melody, and harmony exploit but quantitative relationships (viz., founded on differences of pitch and duration), differences in timbre are purely qualitative. Schönberg, in his 'Harmonielehre,' foretells the advent of 'timbre-melodies.' And it is not utopian to imagine music enfranchised from rhythm and counterpoint, music in which sounds would associate according to the composer's untrammelled fancy and to the need for various colorations. The sense of timbre, new to the Occidentals, has existed in the Far East time out of mind. In Chinese music rhythm is elementary, melody childish, harmony non-existent. The whole receptivity of the Chinese goes to the strange timbres of their flutes, luths, bells, and gongs. For the Asiatic, quality of material is the all-essential point. Technique and working out are of interest only so far as they help to display and accentuate the actual beauty and the possibilities of the substance. That does not mean, of course, that our music tends to become similar to Chinese music, but simply that we are becoming aware of a new artistic resource which the Chinese had discovered many centuries ago.

A FUTURE FOR ITALIAN MUSIC

Il Pianoforte (April) publishes parts of a lecture delivered by Casella before the Bologna Musica Nova Society on the 'Renaissance of Italian music,' after stating that a certain dramatic quality is comparable, in Italy, from all forms of art and thought, Casella expresses the hope that humour, the most typical and welcome idiosyncrasy of Italian music at its best, will again come to its own:

That melodrama is dead or dying everybody realises. That the best creators are elaborating a form of musical stage-play which in an early future will replace the time-honoured lyric-drama is no less obvious. And certainly the revolution will result from a predominance of the plastic element over the poetic. What I dream of is a comic play, purely comic, to which the marvellous resources of to-day's music and painting would give something of the wonderfully convincing 'go' that we find in the works of our great Rossini.

BEETHOVEN CHAMPIONED

In the Zeitschrift für Musik (May), Emil Liepe emphatically protests against what he describes as widespread misconceptions as to the final section of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony:

That Finale is regarded by many as absolutely irregular and formless. Some people go so far as to allege that its apparent lack of form introduces a new principle, to which we owe the so-called symphonic poem. It is most unfair to describe Beethoven as a composer who found the acknowledged principles of form too restrictive, and, by infringing them, opened the way to arbitrariness, to the school of the 'never mind so long as it is interesting.'

The writer proceeds to demonstrate that Beethoven's glory remains unstained, that he never set to future generations an example justifying modern infringements of the rules of form. The Finale of the ninth Symphony, he tells us, is, so far as form is concerned, a perfectly intelligible set of Variations. If a new theme appears with the G major Andante maestoso, what then? Genius does not work according to school-wisdom. And if in the D major Allegro energetico the two themes appear associated in a double fugue, this constitutes a new Variation of a perfectly legitimate kind. What follows, however, is no longer Variations, but a grandiose conclusion, a kind of Coda.

After having thus championed Beethoven, the writer points out that the revolt against form would have come even if the ninth Symphony had never been written. The movement is powerful and healthy enough to endure even after the misconception upon which it is founded has been done away with. But he rejoices to think that Beethoven has nothing to do with that movement.

In the same periodical (April), Karl Pottgiesser explains why we should consider Beethoven's use of the minor mode as derived not from the conception of that mode which obtains in the General-Bass system, but from the dual conception of harmony of which Dr. Riemann is the latest exponent—the conception according to which the major and the minor are two opposite poles:

The C minor of the Funeral March in the 'Eroica,' in the first section of the fifth Symphony, the D minor of the first section of the Ninth, are something more than mere derivations from the major, through the lowering of the third, could be.

Thus is another dispute settled.

THE EVOLUTION OF CHAMBER MUSIC

In the Musikblätter der Anbruch (March), Dr. J. A. Dasatiel writes:

To say that chamber music writers of to-day are straying ever further from the legitimate path is to erect around chamber-music a Chinese wall, separating it from all other types of music, and foolishly to deny it the right to evolve. The classical type of chamber-music is not something final and invariable. Chamber-music has progressed towards deeper and broader expression of feeling, from the polyphonists to Beethoven, through Haydn and Mozart, constantly renewing itself in the course of its progress. Brahms, at first, followed Schumann's lead. But his art, devoid of sensuousness and hostile to freedom, progressed towards the very antipodes of romanticism. Yet Brahms, although a devotee of classical ideals, and one whose eyes remain turned towards the past, afforded a starting-point to progressive composers. It was his pessimism and his intellectuality that exercised a marked influence on Reger—a typical exponent of mind-music—and to a degree on Pfitzner. Whichever type of modern music we consider, we see that the changes which have come to pass affect the material rather than the form. And we cannot fail to notice the ever-increasingly important part played by timbre, a comparatively new factor of contrast, as well in the works of composers whose methods are polyphonic (Strauss, Reger, Pfitzner) as in the homophony of Debussy or in the 'homophonic polyphony' of Schreker.

JULIUS BITTNER

In the same issue of the Musikblätter R. St. Hoffman describes the healthy vitality and restless energy of Bittner, editor of the Merker, critic, journalist, director of the Tonkünstlerverein, and composer of eight lyric plays and various instrumental and choral works. He describes his music as essentially cheerful, genial, unsophisticated.

An article by Karl Alwin gives particulars of Bittner's 'Kohlhaymerin.'

ERNESTO BLOCH

In the same periodical (April) Paul Rosenfeld bestows high praise upon the works of Ernesto Bloch, especially the Suite for viola and orchestra recently performed at New York. Bloch, we are told, has much of his own to convey, and is a bold and original orchestrator. His scoring 'differs from Debussy's as an alto differs from a soprano.' In Rosenfeld's opinion, his best works are the Psalms and the String Quartet.

MUSIC FOR MARIONETTES

Also in the April issue Richard Specht speaks with approval of the younger composers' tendency to seek expression in works of small compass. Wonderful results, he continues, might be achieved upon a miniature stage, with puppets as actors, beautiful scenery, and music. At Berlin, Max Trapp has produced a charming play with music, after Mörike's 'Maler Nolten,' using not puppets, but cut-out figures and pictures. The writer believes that productions such as he suggests would have a great future and a most beneficial influence. M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

New Music

ORGAN MUSIC

Charles Quef is well known and esteemed in this country as the successor of Guilman at the Madeleine. His gift for writing short expressive pieces is shown at its best in his 'Desespoir' (Novello). It is simple, and easy to play—a broad tune as a solo over a throbbing accompaniment, with some striking harmonic touches. George J. Bennett's 'Three Preludes' (Novello) are good examples of short dignified movements suitable for voluntary purpose. They make slight demands in the way of technique and registration, and are sufficiently weighty for use at the end of a service when nothing loud or festive is called for. No. 3 is a particularly good piece for writing for diapasons. Dr. Bennett relaxes with excellent results in a Scherzo (Novello), a bright recital piece which begins quietly and works up good climax. The pull-up on the last page, and the rather protracted cadence are open to question. As a rule a movement of this kind loses more than it gains by a slackening of impetus. The Scherzo is not difficult, and may easily be made effective on the average three-manual instrument. J. A. Sowerbutts' Caprice (Novello) shows a somewhat lighter conception of the form. The power nowhere rises above mf, and the texture is more slender. There is some effective use of three contrasted and uncoupled manuals, and the polyphony runs easily and gracefully. Good contrast is provided by a middle section in 5/8 time. This attractive recital piece, the better for being somewhat easier than Mr. Sowerbutts' previous essays. Alec Rowley's Andante Religioso (Novello) is a quiet piece in 5/4 time, calling for diapason tone, and excellent for use as a voluntary. Paul de Maleingreau's 'Offrande Musical' (Chester) is a pair of pieces, published separately. No. 1, in G, is the easier of the two—a flowing melody over sustained accompaniment, with a well-contrasted middle section containing a fine climax and some striking harmony. It is easy except for this portion. No. 2, in G, opens with the pedals delivering the theme on an 8-ft. stop against quiet manual chords—a delightful effect. No less attractive is the double pedalling later, with shifting fifths under rich harmony. The harmonic interest is a strong point throughout, though it must be confessed that some of it does little more than startle. The construction and the writing are rather loose, and the effect of the music depends overmuch upon a few purple patches. In the way, surely the close would be rather unregistered as the composer directs. The long sustained right-hand chord seems to call for something much less aggressive than the Great 8-ft. a 4-ft. stops indicated. On the whole we prefer M. de Maleingreau in the set of short pieces he has just published under the title 'Opus Sacrum' (Chester). There are seven of them, and they deal with fragments of plainsong from antiphons, &c., used at Christmas. They have a good deal of the effect of first-rate improvisation by an organist who has at his fingers' ends not only the modal system but modal idiom as well. They are only moderately difficult, and easy to register. Although they will naturally be most useful to organists in Roman Catholic churches, they will appeal to many others as well, by reason of the musical interest and their markedly ecclesiastical flavour.

H. G.

A NEW WORK FOR ORGAN STUDENTS

Organ students of the present day have no cause to complain of the lack of material for their studies at the organ. One need only mention the excellent tutors bearing the names of Dr. Percy B. and Dr. Alcock which have appeared within recent years. Now comes a new work* by Mr. Ellingford, the well-known organist of St. George's, 111, Liverpool. So far, Part I, only is to hand.

* 'The Organ. A study of its principles and practice.' Part I. By Herbert F. Ellingford. (Novello.)

SHORT ANTHEM OR INTROIT.

Words by ST. THOMAS AQUINAS (1227—74).

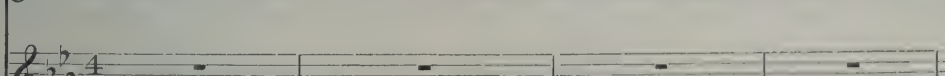

Composed by STANLEY MARCHANT.
(Sub-Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.)

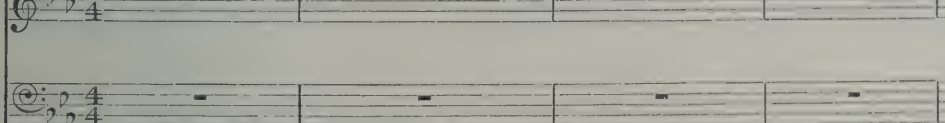

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Slow, and with expression.

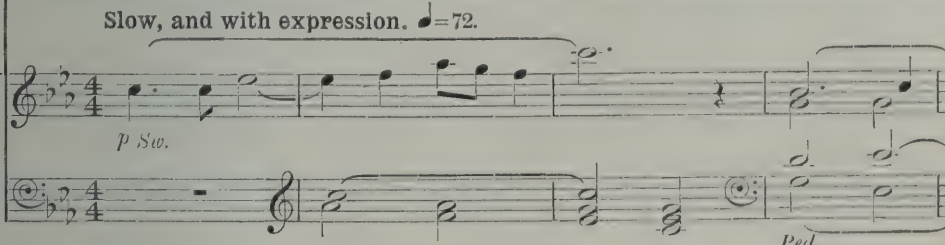

SOPRANO.

ALTO.

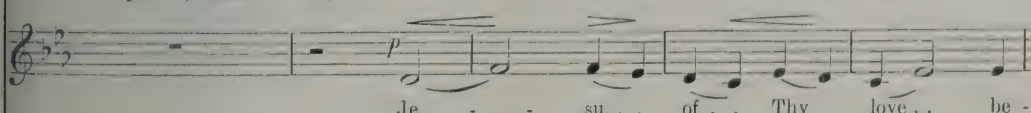

TENOR.

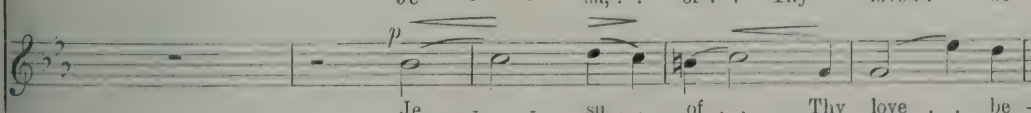

BASS.

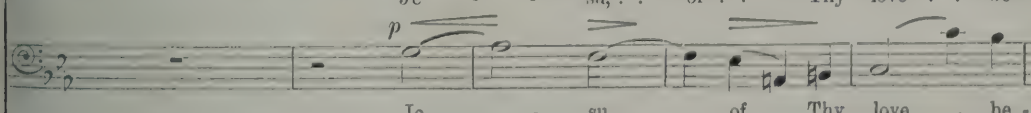

Slow, and with expression.  $\text{♩} = 72$ .

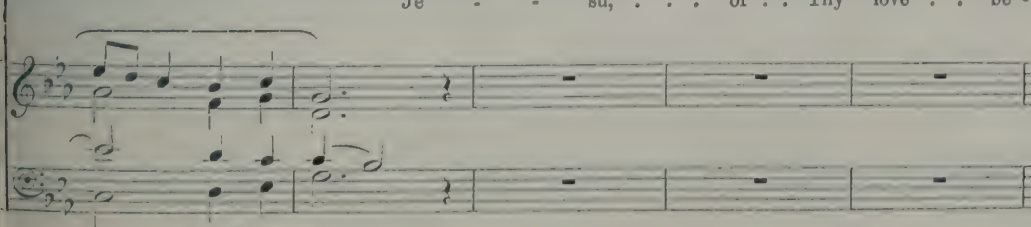

ORGAN.

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

mf

- friend . . . us, Thou re - fresh . . . us, Thou de -

- friend . . . us, Thou re - fresh us, Thou de -

- friend . . . us, Thou re - fresh us, Thou . . . re - fresh us,

- friend . . . us, Thou re - fresh . . .

mf Sw. Man. Ped.

cres.

- fend us, . . . Thine e - ter - nal good - ness send us . .

- fend us, . . . Thine e - ter - nal . . good - ness send us . .

cres. Thou de - fend us, Thine . . . e - ter - nal good - ness send us . .

cres. . . . us, Thou de - fend us, Thine e - ter - nal good - ness send us . .

cres.

f poco rit.

. . . In the land . . . of life . . . to see.

f . . . In the land . . . of life . . . to see.

f . . . In the land . . . of life . . . to see.

f . . . In the land . . . of life . . . to see.

f poco rit.

f Gt. Man. Ped.

p Who . . .

p Who . . .

p Who . . . on

Thou who all things canst and know - est, Who on

p Sw.

mf on earth . . . such good be - stow - - - eth, Grant . .

mf . . on earth such good be - - stow - - - eth, Grant . .

mf earth such good be - - stow - - - eth, Grant . .

mf earth such . . good be - stow - - - eth, Grant . .

mf Gt.

us with Thy saints, though low - est, . . . Where the us with Thy saints, though low - est, . . . Where the us with Thy saints, though low - est, . . . Where the us with Thy saints, though low - est, . . . Where the heaven - - ly feast Thou show - est, . . . Fel - low heaven - - ly feast Thou show - est, . . . Fel - low heaven - - ly feast Thou show - est, . . .

heaven - - ly feast Thou show - est, . . .

Sw.

heirs . . . and guests . . . to be.

heirs . . . and guests . . . to be.

p Fel - low heirs and .. guests . . . to be.

p Fel - low heirs and guests . . . to be.

p Sw. dim. Ped.

(Continued from page 418.)

ers the ground of the earlier difficulties of organ-playing, viz., the natural balance of the player, the position on the organ-stool, independence of hands and feet, elementary management of stops, the application of the above to simple service playing. A brief description of the organ is also included.

The outstanding features of the work appear to be the careful analysis of the actual movements of feet in playing the pedals, and the exercises dealing with specific points of pedal technique. The author lays great stress on what is undoubtedly an important principle in pedalling, viz., that unoccupied toe or heel should always be directed towards the direction of the next note to be played, whenever this is practicable. He gives as a preliminary exercise a passage for toe and heel pedalling, consisting of the notes F, G, B $\flat$  for the right foot, and C, D $\flat$ , C, B $\flat$  for the left foot. An explanation is given of the correct movements of the feet for each note of the exercise, which is intended to be played chiefly with both feet together. Then follows a set of short exercises for pedals alone on similar lines, mainly on middle notes of the pedal board, all designed to develop facility of foot movement with special regard to the rapid rise and fall of heels and toes, and the outward and inward oblique-angle movement of the foot from the ankle-joint.

Later on, exercises are given with more extended pedal range and wider intervals. Other exercises in this group include the holding down of a short note with the toe while the heel plays alternately—with a wide oblique-angle movement of the foot—the long note a 3rd above and below this note. Similarly, the heel holds down a long note while the toe plays a short note a 3rd above and below.

The author then gives detailed consideration to various other pedalling problems—sliding of toes or heels upon separate keys, changing feet without repetition of sound, sliding from one key to another, lifting the toes on the short keys. Numerous exercises are given dealing with each of these points.

The work concludes with a group of five studies for manuals and pedal embodying in the form of short organ pieces all the pedalling principles discussed in the book. These, we are told, are the author's extemporisations upon themes set at the Royal College of Organists' Fellowship Examinations, slightly modified to suit the requirements of the book. Their musical value is perhaps slight, but they will doubtless prove of interest to aspiring candidates for the F.R.C.O. diploma.

The chief value of the work lies in the various groups of exercises for pedal alone. These could with advantage be used in conjunction with any of the well-known tutors for the instrument. G. G.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

The music of 'The Three-cornered Hat' needs no introduction to readers. Many will be glad to hear that a pianoforte solo arrangement of Manuel de Falla's delightful Ballet has just been issued by Boosey & Tames. By way of preface a synopsis of the Ballet appears in French and English. From the same publisher comes a pianoforte version of an extract from Falla's Ballet, 'El Amor Brujo.' This appears to be the process less well than 'The Three-cornered Hat,' the purely musical interest being slight—at all events, on first acquaintance. An attractive album of rather difficult short works is N. Tscherepnine's set of Eight Selected Pianoforte Pieces (Chester). Roger Quilter's knack of writing good light music is well shown in the Intermezzo, 'Moonlight on the Lake,' from 'Where the Rainbow ends' (Elkin). Ten of Couperin's delightful pieces have been well edited and fingered by Alex. Roloff, and published in album form by Augener. From Durand come some works of a type that call for more discussion than we have space for. All are difficult and characteristic examples of modern French music. It must suffice to draw the reader's attention to them: 'Dans le style rococo' (three pieces under one cover), by Rhené-Baton; Ballade in A flat, by Rhené-Baton; 'La plainte, au loin, du Faune . . .', by Paul Dukas; 'A la mémoire de Claude Debussy,' by Florent Schmitt; 'L'accueil de Muses,' by Albert Roussel; and 'Trois atmosphères slaves,' by Marcelle de Manziarly. The pieces by Dukas, Schmitt, and Roussel, were written for the In Memoriam set recently produced under the title 'Le Tombeau de Claude Debussy.' Gerrard Williams' Three Preludes (Winthrop Rogers) are good examples of this imaginative composer's work. They show his unfailing instinct for keyboard effect, especially in the glittering cascades of 'By Haworth Falls.' 'Solitude' is expressive without slopping over, and 'Autumn' gives us a rich harmonic scheme, beautifully laid out. Three capital little pieces of moderate difficulty are Eric Webster's 'Vignettes' (Novello), a Valse, Reverie, and Petit Scherzo—all neatly turned, and just the thing for the young pupil with taste. More difficult is 'A Dickens Note-Book'—Suite of four pieces by Felix White (Novello). The pieces bear the titles: 'Tom Pinch drives to Salisbury'; 'Ruth and John—Fountain Court'; 'In Salisbury Cathedral'; and 'Mark Tapley.' The music is well-written and attractive. If it fails to suggest Dickens, the failure is due to the fact that, of all writers to represent in music, Dickens is surely the most hopeless. It is not so much that he represents a peculiarly English aspect of life as that his strong points lay less in story and characterisation than in graphic touches of description and dialogue—details that depend for their success upon felicitous turns of speech, and so are reproducible in no other medium. Mr. White has wisely chosen subjects that appear more suitable than most for musical representation, only to remind us of another difficulty. We cannot think of any of Dickens' characters apart from their period, hence the use of the musical idiom of to-day strikes us as an anachronism. As a result, we must come to the conclusion that Mr. White's Suite is successful only when regarded as abstract pianoforte music. It comes through this ordeal well. The last piece is particularly good, being jolly, but not a bit Tapleyish—fortunately, for Mark was a bit of a bore with his 'jolly' catchword. C. W.

SONGS

James Thomson's striking little lyric, 'The Vine,' has been set to vigorous music by Herbert E. Crimp (Novello). A tenor with a big voice will be able to use it to great advantage here. It may be worth while pointing out that the song 'has to do with love rather than wine. John Ireland's 'The East Riding' (Enoch) has a very singable melody in the style of the composer's 'Sea-Fever,' with an accompaniment that contrives to include a few Irelandish progressions without sacrificing its general straightforwardness. Two songs by Gerrard Williams, 'An Irish Peasant Love Song' and 'A Song in Autumn,' published separately (Winthrop Rogers), are notable for the well-written pianoforte part and harmonic suggestiveness that we expect from the composer.

Felix White's setting of 'Golden Slumbers' (Novello) contains so much that is charming and interesting that one dislikes having to point out that the simple old cradle-song calls for quite other treatment. A composer who essays to provide a new musical dress for such an old favourite is handicapped already by the popularity of the original. He naturally makes a point of giving it a setting that shall be on fresh lines, but he has to see that these lines are just as fully in keeping with the text as was the original music. Here we think Mr. White has gone astray. Perhaps this is due to his habit of putting rather too much into his accompaniments, and of underlining his points in general. His 'Thou hast left me ever, Jamie' (Novello), shows this failing. Burns' poem is poignant chiefly because of its simplicity; Mr. White's setting is elaborate, and its expressiveness lies in a harmonic luxuriance that suggests a decadent modern poet rather than the most direct and natural of lyricists. The same lack of appropriateness strikes one in Arnold Bax's 'Green grow the rushes O!' (Murdoch). The music is full of interest, but much of it seems to be good matter out of place. I do not suggest that a modern composer should adopt a make-believe Scottish idiom in setting such songs. The music must be genuine, not imitative. That is the problem—to provide a musical dress that is natural both to composer and text, and neither Mr. White nor Mr. Bax have solved it. On the other hand, Mr. Bax's 'Youth' (Murdoch) is one of his most delightful songs, because he is entirely himself, and at one with his poet. C.W.

London Concerts

By ALFRED KALISCH

The most memorable happening in the London concert-halls since the last issue has undoubtedly been the reappearance of Kreisler. It is no exaggeration to say that the demonstrations which took place have been the most remarkable that Queen's Hall has witnessed. One would have understood a demonstrative outburst of welcome at his first concert, but the fact that the ovations should have grown more and more enthusiastic at each appearance has puzzled even those who thought they knew most about the psychology of London audiences. There have been four concerts, and the tickets for the first (May 4) were all sold some days beforehand; which was in itself not to be wondered at, though it would not have been surprising if it had not been so. And for each of the other three concerts, which were announced only after the first, all tickets were sold in every case within a few hours of the first advertisement appearing. At the first concert, as everybody now knows, Madame Melba gave a large laurel wreath to Kreisler after his first Concerto, and Mr. Albert Sammons did the same after the second Concerto. This last was certainly what the French call a beau geste, but it is regrettable that it has been condemned in some quarters as superfluous. The vast majority of the public, however, were entirely in accord with the originator of the happy idea.

At the first concert Kreisler naturally was, as he himself expressed it, very much 'émotionné.' It would not have been strange if his playing had shown some signs of the stress of feeling under which he laboured, but after the first few bars of the Vivaldi Concerto which he played he was completely master of himself. His tone has, if anything, gained in mellowness and sweetness, and for the rest he is unique among players of to-day for combination of astonishing technique and great musicianship. It is long since we have heard such a satisfying performance of the Beethoven Concerto with such a union of sheer beauty and vigour and strength, which was especially remarkable in the slow movements. The accompaniments were excellently played by the Albert Hall Orchestra under Mr. Landon Ronald. We left the concert feeling that we had had a great experience, in the light of which we were now able to revise our standards of violin playing.

It is not necessary to discuss in detail his playing at the subsequent concerts on May 11, 17, and 20. At the second concert he played with Mr. Charlton Keith the Sonata of César Franck. Kreisler's reading of the Sonata rather surprised us, because he eliminated from it all traces of struggle and passion, and made it from first to last a song of the serenest beauty. In the playing of the Bach Chaconne we could listen with unquestioning admiration to the rare mingling of beauty and force; we almost entirely forgot that it was a matchless display of technique. The playing of Brahms' Sonata in G at the third concert was a full of incomparable charm, and here Mr. Charlton Keith (who had in the Franck Sonata kept himself too much in the background) held his own like a first-class artist. In this concert perhaps Kreisler reached his greatest heights in the playing of an unaccompanied Adagio and Fugue from the E minor Sonata of Bach, the Allegro of Pugnani, and Tartini's Variations on the Theme of Corelli. It was the very perfection of the style—true style of the 18th century—with a most supple vitality, a complete object-lesson also to those who think that the music of that epoch should be made to sound like a Hungarian Rhapsody, and those who would relegate it to the category of academic exercises.

KREISLER'S QUARTET

If, strictly speaking, this is not in the right place it will be convenient to mention here the Quartet of Kreisler which was played by the London String Quartet at its concert on May 9. In this work the composer has been content to refrain from innovation and audacity—unless indeed it be an audacity of these days not to eliminate altogether the tonic as the dominant. There is a note of tragedy in the opening movement, which suggests the experience of the last seven years. There is a lyrical Scherzo movement, a brilliantly written Scherzo, and a Fine which suggests a Bohemian folk-dance. The whole is lucid and gracious, and the striking feature is the gratefulness of the writing for each separate instrument. The work was very warmly received by the audience, which included more distinguished musicians than at any quartet concert within recent memory.

THE MODERNS

At Mr. Clark's second concert, which was given at Aeolian Hall, a slight miscalculation as to time resulted in the new music not being played up upon five o'clock. The first half of the concert devoted to the 'Haffner' Serenade of Mozart (in circumstances, to play so much of it was an error of judgment) and the 'Pastoral' Symphony of Beethoven, which also we should have liked better had heard only part of it. The first modern thing in the programme was Mlle. Germaine Tailleferre's 'Age' for pianoforte and eight instruments. This was well, but loses itself in a mere succession of monophones of the newest school. Another such number was Poulenc's 'Cocardes,' a couple of parodies on a Parisian street song, not unamusing, but a little more or less obvious fun got out of the tuba and cornet, set to nonsense verses by Cocteau, whom we all know as the literary partner of the French firm known as 'The Six.' We are told that this is 'exploring the treasures of Parisian folklore,' and it may be suggested that Carpentier could have done it better in 'Louise.' Then came Darius Milhaud's Cinema Symphony, 'Le Bœuf et le Toit.' This has already been heard at the Museum, when it was adapted to the Ballet, 'The Thing-doing Bar.' It is a quite clever adaptation of fantasia on, South-American dance-rhythms. This is perhaps not the place for a serious discussion of the French 'Six' and their aims and objects. The best exposition of these is to be found in an article by 'One of Them,' which appeared in Musical News of April 17, 1921, from which it appears that though they are supposed to be a school, each one is free to express his own personality and goes his own way. It is a unique phenomenon in the history of music that six young people under twenty-five, as they are, should have been able at an age when most of the greater composers of other times were in a state of pupilage, to try to persuade the world that they are heaven-sent disciples of a new creed, and meet with some success—any rate in achieving publicity. It must be said, however, that their works do not justify their high marks. The trouble is that if one criticises their works as serious, he is told that these things are but humorous experiments. If one says they are not humorous, he is met with the retort that they are not meant to be. How then do these elusive gentlemen come to be judged?

Anyway, Mr. Arthur Bliss' 'Conversations,' which was played at the same concert, are infinitely superior to anything the young Frenchmen have given us, but he is disqualified by age—he is about thirty—from membership of the Group.

At Mr. Clark's third concert the two new works were of German origin. The first was the 'Concertino' for Busoni, for clarinet, the solo part of which was ably played by Mr. Haydn Draper. It is a serious work, written in an idiom in which the 20th and 18th centuries alternate in a manner that on a first hearing seemed arbitrary. The solo instrument is chiefly to be playing either the very highest or the very lowest notes of which it is capable, which hardly the way to get the best out of it. It came Arnold Schönberg's 'Chamber Symphony' for fifteen instruments. This is not far removed from the very latest vein of Schönberg, and is sufficiently advanced to satisfy most of us. There can be no doubt of the composer's mastery of counterpoint in the old sense of the word, and the Chamber Symphony contains some passages which are from the point of view certainly remarkable, although not always euphonious. At the same time some definite defects are apparent in it all, and the whole work does cohere. The middle section, the slow movement, has passages of real beauty, in the sense in which that word was used twenty years ago. The Sextet had of course shown us that Schönberg is not indifferent to sensuous charm. The concert ended with Arthur Bliss' 'Rout,' a new version specially scored for this occasion. Here we have real musical wit with abundant vitality; and the voice part, excellently sung by Miss Grace Crawford, though wordless, does really express the growing excitement of the personage concerned remarkably well. Moreover Mr. Bliss has some respect for the limitations of the human voice.

The seasons of the Queen's Hall Orchestra and the London Symphony Orchestra have both come to an end. The last concert of the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood, on April 30, was notable for the first performance in London for some years of the 'Hebridean' Symphony of Bantock, which was conducted by the composer. It has been described as telling the story of a raid of pirates on a peaceful coast, but it would be fairer to say that it is a series of mood-pictures evoked by some such happening. First, peace among the unsuspecting dwellers by the sea, then the warning, the battle, and calm again. That the battle music should be picturesque and vigorous is what we have a right to expect from the composer; but it is not strikingly original save for the effect obtained by the almost too persistent repetition of a trumpet-call of three notes. The opening and closing sections, however, are deeply poetical and imaginative, and the suggestion of the ever-heaving sea is most beautifully conveyed. At the same concert Dr. Ethel Smyth conducted the 'Love Duet' from the second Act of her opera, 'The Wreckers.' The excerpt was slightly long for concert use, but the music has dramatic fibre and individuality, and repetitions of a slightly condensed version would be welcome. Mr. John Coates and Miss Rosina Buckman sang the solos admirably.

The programme of the last London Symphony concert had to be changed considerably, Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony and Holbrooke's 'Gwynn ap Iudd' having to be withdrawn. Instead we had Beethoven's fifth Symphony, 'Wotan's Farewell,' sung by Mr. Robert Radford, and Holbrooke's 'The Ravens,' one of his earliest, but still most effective and original works. The concert ended with a great ovation for Mr. Coates. At both concerts the audiences were very large.

The only other orchestral novelty calling for notice is Ravel's Fantasia, 'La Valse,' which was played under Sir Henry Wood at the concert given by M. Moiseiwitsch on May 3. It is based on qualities and suggestions of waltz themes of Johann Strauss and Lanner. The composer imagines himself to be seeing a vision of a great ball during the Empire, and, as in the 'Tombeau de Couperin,' his aim is not so much to copy the old idiom as to strive to suggest the impression which it produces on a hearer of to-day. It is brilliantly scored, and full of happy musical thoughts.

At this concert M. Moiseiwitsch played the 'Emperor' Concerto, Schumann's Concerto, and Schnelling's Fantasia. Chronologically his recital at Queen's Hall on April 23 should have been mentioned first. He has returned to us with a style considerably matured, and has developed a kind of aloofness which was less noticeable before, along with a severer self-restraint which rather contradicts the commonly received notion as to the probable effect a stay in America would have upon an artist. His performance of the Brahms-Handel Variations was a particularly good achievement, for the technique was made subordinate to a fine musical conception, while the rhythm was deliciously crisp and the climaxes all splendidly managed. He introduced three particularly attractive new slight pieces of Palmgren, which derived most of their value from the way in which they were played. His playing of the Beethoven Concerto had fine simplicity and dignity, and warm but restrained feeling. One was specially glad to notice that he did not drag the slow movement.

PURCELL AT BROOK GREEN

On Whit Monday the students of Morley College, under Mr. Holst, gave an open-air performance of Purcell's 'Masque of Dioclesian.' The text is by Betterton, from a play of Beaumont and Fletcher, and the Masque was first produced in 1691, being revived in 1784. The book had been altered for this occasion, and a final pageant was added. The performers attained excellent results with the simplest possible means, and the right feeling was evident throughout. Such performances of such music do more real good than much preaching as to its value. There is now less excuse than there was a few years ago for music-lovers' ignorance of the best works of England's greatest composer.

'Dioclesian' possibly does not contain anything of such outstanding beauty as 'Dido and Æneas,' but there is much which deserves to be remembered, and is very far in advance of anything that was being composed in any other country at the same time. There are many picturesque touches in the music which illustrates the fight with the dragon (a very good dragon, by the way), and the solo 'What can I do to show how I love her?' which Dr. Pepusch pressed into his service for 'The Beggar's Opera,' the Chaconne with some delicious effects for two flutes, and the rest of the Wedding Procession music all deserve to be remembered. The pageantry was very well managed, and the colours of the dresses made a brave show against the background of trees. The orchestra of students—the ladies in picturesque dress—played well, and the trumpeter had fewer accidents than trumpeters generally have on such occasions. It was altogether thoroughly enjoyable.

The League of Arts promises a possibly more elaborate performance of the music in Hyde Park later on in the summer.

PARRY AND THE BACH CHOIR

The concert of the works of the late Sir Hubert Parry, given by the Bach Choir at the Royal College of Music on May 10, was officially termed a private one, but it was of sufficient interest to warrant the reproduction of the programme in full:

1. 'De Profundis' (1891).
2. 'Symphony Fantasia,' in B minor (1912).
3. 'Ode on the Nativity' (1912).
4. 'Songs of Farewell' (1916).
5. (a) Motet in seven Parts:
'At the Round Earth's Imagined Corners.'
- (b) Motet in six Parts:
'There is an Old Belief.'
6. English Suite for String Orchestra.
7. Choral Ode:
'Blest Pair of Sirens' (1887).

The music thus illustrated the various phases of Parry's development, and was also a tribute to the close connection with the Bach Choir, for the 'Ode on the Nativity' was first produced by the Choir in 1911, shortly after its production at the Hereford Festival.

'At the Round Earth's Imagined Corners' was dedicated to Sir Hugh Allen and the Choir, and 'Blest Pair of Sirens' was dedicated to Sir Charles Stanford and the Choir. Moreover, each number was typical and characteristic, and the whole concert was heard with greater respect for the personality of the composer, and served to remind one of the important part he played in the renaissance of English music in the last twenty-five years of the 19th century. Reminders of this sort seem not unnecessary to the younger generation. The concert, the last to be conducted by Sir Hugh Allen, served also to heighten regret for his resignation from the office of conductor. The Choir now stands much higher in the public estimation than it did when he took over the reigns of government, and his magnetic personality will be greatly missed. It is understood that his successor will be Dr. Vaughan Williams, who can be trusted to carry on the good work in the right spirit.

The King and Queen journeyed to Kensington on May 8, when Dame Nellie Melba gave her only concert previous to her world tour. The Hall was packed to the utmost corner, the programme was on familiar lines, and Madame Melba was an excellent voice.

CHAMBER MUSIC AND RECITALS

In the department of chamber music the most important happening has been the performance of the Beethoven Quartets in chronological order by the London String Quartet. Detailed criticism is a course out of the question, but it should be said that during its travels in America the Quartet has gained in unity and cohesion. The success of the play on the other side of the Atlantic has been remarkable. The eulogies which they have received here in the past must seem cold and colourless after those which the American press has lavished on them. A curious incident in connection with these concerts deserves record. One of the leading dailies criticises each concert, and it was noticed with surprise that the reports were very enthusiastic and three very unfavourable. They cancelled each other, with the result that the influence of the journal in this matter is null. There are two obvious remedies. The first is that in such cases the work of recording the whole should be entrusted to one and the same writer, and second that if such a course is not possible, there should be some method of indicating who is the author of each notice. Such happenings as these are among the many disadvantages of unsigned journalism.

STUDIES IN CONDENSATION

Criticisms of the other musical happenings of the month will, unfortunately, have to be of the potpourri order. To take the singers first: Miss Florence Woodman gave an orchestral concert with Sir Herbert Wood at Queen's Hall, on April 26, and with great advance she has made as an interpreter was universally recognised. At his recital on April 27, Mr. Roland Hayes, the West African tenor, scored a striking success, and at his two concerts at Queen's Hall, M. Smirnoff, the Russian tenor, greatly impressed his audiences by the beauty of his voice, though his tendency to vibrato was open to criticism. M. Georgio Corrado, at his recital on May 6, gave wed that he is one of the best young baritones I have heard recently, and Miss Ethel Frank gave another highly successful recital at Queen's Hall, in which she sang in seven languages. An unusually good impression was created by Miss Margaret Harrison, a young new-comer, with a more shaded sense of interpretation than is usual among young singers. The return of Mlle. Yvonne St. André on May 5, at Wigmore Hall, was welcome.

Violin recitals have also been innumerable. The first recital to be mentioned is that of Miss Daisy Kennedy, who made her reappearance after her long absence. Her playing has gained in breadth and length, and is full of charm. Another lady violinist who is steadily improving is Miss Lena Kontorovitch. Isaac Losowsky is a young player of sterling accomplishment and laudable ambition. A newcomer of whom more may be heard is M. Kaplanisky, who gave a recital on May 9. Mr. Alfred Salmon gave another of his extremely artistic recitals of old violoncello music on April 27 at Wigmore Hall.

The activity among pianists has also been extremely hectic. M. Jascha Spivakovsky, who appeared here as a very brilliant boy before the war, gave a recital. His youthful freshness compensates for a good many excesses. Mr. Victor Benham is a player who always interests his hearers, although one frequently becomes inclined to question his views. In place of the farewell recital of Mr. Mark Hambourg at the Albert Hall, prior to a South African tour, should be mentioned, as well as the Beethoven recital given by Mr. Lamond at Queen's Hall on May 7.

The Guild of Singers and Players has made a good beginning, and has given six concerts at the end of writing, with which I hope to be able to deal next month. Many interesting novelties are promised for the course of this month.

It may interest the public to know that between the writing of the report for May and finishing this month, the writer received invitations to attend a hundred and fourteen concerts and other musical occasions. This is what is called a life of cultured ease.

NOTES FOR JUNE

The first event to be noted is the series of six recitals of Bach begun by Mr. Harold Samuel at Wigmore Hall on May 31. The second recital is for June 11, the remainder on the following days.

On Saturday, June 4, there is the concert on the Festival scale at the Crystal Palace, under F. H. Cowen. The choir and orchestra taking part in 'The Hymn of Praise' will number two thousand five hundred, and the soloists are Dame Nellie Melba, Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Laura Williams, Mr. Maurice d'Oisy, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford.

The orchestral concert of Mr. Eugène Goossens, on June 7, should be a notable event. The principal feature in the programme will be 'Le Sacre des Printemps' by Stravinsky, which was severely criticised by the critics when heard at Drury Lane in a Ballet before the war. It is now looked upon by the ultra-modernists of Paris as the high-point of the newest music. A good deal of interesting music will be heard at the two orchestral concerts to be conducted by M. Kussevisky at Queen's Hall on June 3 and 10.

There will be several concerts in connection with the Congress of the British Music Society. On the evening of June 14 Mr. Goossens and Mr. Adrian C. Boult conduct at Queen's Hall, and on June 16 the conductors are Mr. Walter Damrosch and Mr. Hamilton Harty. On the afternoon of June 15 there is a concert of chamber music at Æolian Hall, and a recital by Mr. John Coates in the evening. On the afternoon of June 17 there is a concert of Old English music at Æolian Hall. The programmes have been drawn up with a view to giving a comprehensive survey of British music, and Mr. Damrosch conducts some American works.

Miss Amy Evans and Mr. Fraser Gange make their reappearance after their long Australian tour at Queen's Hall on June 7.

Opera in London

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

Opera is gradually approaching the Metropolis, which has been so long without it. But so far it has come no nearer than Hammersmith. There, at the King's Theatre, the Carl Rosa Company began a four weeks' season on May 9. The repertoire is of the familiar order, the only exceptions to the round of 'Faust,' 'Carmen,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' and 'The Bohemian Girl,' being 'The Mastersingers' and 'The Valkyrie.' The company has the same constitution as at Covent Garden last autumn. The opening performance of Saint-Saëns' 'Samson and Delilah' was of all-round smoothness, with special distinction in the Samson of Mr. William Boland, who, now that he is getting to know the extent of his powers, is developing into one of the best robust tenors we have had for many a day. Miss Doris Woodhall was the Delilah, and the remainder of the cast more than adequate. Public approval was hearty, and took the most satisfactory form of large audiences, and this state has been the rule in spite of, or even because of, transport difficulties.

For the rest—silence. The Danish Royal Opera Company's visit did not materialise. The reasons are various, but the truth is that the operatic story will have to be begun afresh. The opening chapter of that story will be in English. It will be begun in the autumn when the season is inaugurated at Covent Garden under the auspices of the Carl Rosa Company. For that special efforts are being made. I trust that they will extend to a strengthening of the company for London purposes. Much will depend on that season, and those undertaking it will do well to make it their special business to see that as good a company as possible is got together. There must be no hesitation in the appeal made. The public must be attracted and held, or operating will go back to the hands of the foreigner.

Generally the autumn is going to be a busy operatic time. The Covent Garden season will begin in October, but by that time I think we shall find the Gilbert and Sullivan operas in full swing. It has been realised at last that London wants this form of light opera so peculiarly its own, and it is to be given ad lib. In other words, the Gilbert and Sullivan season will continue so long as the public supports it. Unless I am much mistaken, and provided the exponents are well chosen and the repertoire varied with some of the later examples, the season will last all the year round, as 'The Beggar's Opera' has done at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith. London wants good light opera; it has always been accustomed to it, and those who will supply it will reap their reward.

While on the subject of light opera I may add with pleasure that Mr. Montague Phillips' 'The Rebel Maid' is continuing to 'rebel' to good purpose at the Empire, and that at the Old Vic. Mr. Nicholas Gatty's operatic fantasia, 'Prince Ferelon,' is due as I write these lines. It is to be noted with satisfaction that this is the first time that the Old Vic. has given its attention to modern British opera as part of its scheme. And the fact is significant.

Choral Notes and News

By W. McNAUGHT

'THE APOSTLES' IN NORTH LONDON

The neglect of Elgar's Oratorio 'The Apostles' is unaccountable. When a performance does occur it makes a profound appeal on musicians and laymen alike. Hardly any music goes so deeply into things—not by laborious solemnity but by sheer beauty, the subtle touch, the flash of imagination. It may be difficult, but we have learnt now that a choral society from a residential suburb of London can face its difficulties. Perhaps it is that few conductors are so competent for the great task of preparation and interpretation as is Mr. Allen Gill. When his Alexandra Palace choir sang 'The Apostles' at the Northern Polytechnic on May 7, nothing in the performance so strongly impressed itself on the mind as Mr. Gill's thorough knowledge of the music and his firm grip upon all the details of his work. The choral singing was fully in the spirit of the music, and when in a few cases it was not smooth in practice one was reminded of the conditions under which this choir works as compared with those that sing in large halls or with festival backing. For adequate rehearsal with full orchestra had been denied—because the Northern Polytechnic Hall does not admit a large enough audience to provide the wherewithal. It is understood that the hall could have been filled twice by those who had wished to hear 'The Apostles.'

The solo-singing left little wanting. Miss Doris Manuelle and Mr. Stewart Gardner sang the music of Mary Magdalene and of Jesus with imaginative power, with the right measure of expression, and with good voice. As Judas, Mr. Robert Radford was magnificent, and the great scene at the Temple was given with a strength and vividness that remain in the memory. The other parts were well filled by Miss Florence Mellors, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Samuel Mann.

The composer was present, and in the interval he received a great welcome.

The newly-formed Malden and Coombe Choral Society gave an excellent performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The Revenge' on April 28, and great credit was thereby reflected upon Mr. R. Frederick Tyler, the conductor. The recitation of the poem before the singing of 'The Revenge' added greatly to the enjoyment of the work.

The Central London Choral Society, under Mr. David J. Thomas, gave a miscellaneous concert at Central Hall on April 28, at which Percy Fletcher's lively cantata 'The Deacon's Masterpiece' was the principal feature. The orchestra played, among other things, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' Ballet Suite.

The programme of the concert at Battersea Town Hall by the Battersea, Clapham, and Wandsworth L.C.C. Institutes' Choral Union on April 29 consisted of Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' and Fletcher's 'The Deacon's Masterpiece,' Schubert's 'Rosamunde' Overture and German's 'Nell Gwynn' dances. Mr. D. Ritson Smith and Mr. A. G. Gibbs were conductors.

The Ealing Philharmonic Society concluded its twenty-fourth season on May 2 with a concert at which 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'Les Cloches de Corneville' were performed. The choral singing under Mr. E. Victor Williams was fully up to the level that has built up the Society's solid reputation. Special plans are being considered to celebrate, next season, the completion of Mr. Williams' twenty-five years of work with the choir.

An excellent concert was given at Cannon Street Hotel on May 9 by the Harmony Glee Singers, a male-voice choir that sings under Mr. Pettit. The list of pieces included Morley's 'My bonnie lass she smileth' and Lee Williams' 'The Haven.'

A year of energetic work by the Langham Choral and Orchestral Society, a body of singers from the Telephone Service conducted by Mr. Hugh Marleyn, was celebrated by a 'Birthday Concert' at Queen's Hall on May 10. As was proper to the occasion, the choral singers were not greatly exercised with work, and they were only called upon to sing a scene from 'Prince Igor' and the choral parts in 'Cavalleria Rusticana.' The whole programme, with the exception of the March from Berlioz's 'Faust,' was operatic. The solo-singing was wisely put into the hands of practised operatic artists, and Miss Beatrice Miranda and Mr. William Boland were a tower of strength in a duet from 'Aida' and in 'Cavalleria.' There were Wagner excerpts, which included the Valkyrie scene.

Kingston and Surbiton District Choral Society recently gave 'The Dream of Gerontius' with the help of a professional orchestra of forty. Mr. Ronald Dussell conducted with insight.

CASTLE CARY.—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha' were performed by the Castle Cary Choral Society at its annual concert on April 14, the performers numbering about seventy. 'Onaway, awake!' was sung in good style by Mr. Seymour Dossor, and the solo work in the second part was in the capable hands of Mrs. Jack Day and Mr. R. T. A. Hughes. There was a small but effective orchestra under the leadership of Miss B. Heginbotham. Mr. W. H. McKerrow was at the piano forte, and Mr. D. J. Gass conducted. There was a record attendance.

Craven Arms.—On May 4, 'Elijah' was sung by the Craven Arms and District Choral Society, the choir numbering fifty. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Freeman, Miss Muriel Boughton, Mrs. Morgan, Mr. Aikens, and Mr. W. Batey. The Rev. W. M. D. La Touche conducted.

EASTBOURNE.—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' was creditably performed by the 'Red Triangle' Choir on April 25 under the direction of Dr. W. A. Hall, who sang the tenor song 'Onaway, awake!' The choir has been in existence about six months.

EWELL.—Sterndale Bennett's 'The May Queen' was performed at the Lecture Hall, on May 2, by the Ewell Choral Society and Orchestra under Mr. A. E. Davies. German's part-song, 'The Chase' and Frederick Rosse's 'Merchant of Venice' music were other items in a varied programme.

HERTFORD.—The East Herts Musical Society won well-deserved success with 'Samson' on May 3, Mr. W. J. Comley conducting. Miss Doris Montrave, Miss Doris Arnell, Mr. John Collett, and Mr. B. D. Hylton-Stewart were the soloists, and Mr. Solomon played the trumpet obbligato.

LINCOLN.—The Musical Society added to a long list of triumphs by a highly successful concert in the Corn Exchange on April 19, under the direction of Dr. G. J. Bennett. For financial reasons a band was dispensed with on this occasion, the greater part of the programme being occupied by the choir of some two hundred voices in the singing of madrigals and part-songs. These included John Benet's 'All creatures now are merry-minded,' Wilbye's 'Adieu, sweet Amarillis,' W. G. Whitaker's arrangement of the ballad, 'Elsie Marley' (published in 1784), Pearsall's 'Who shall win my lady fair?' G. T. Holst's arrangement of the Hampshire folk-song, 'Swansea Town,' C. Wood's 'Full fathom five,' Balfour Gardiner's 'Cargoes,' Brahms' 'The Maiden,' Parry's 'There is an Old Belief,' and Eaton Fanning's 'Moonlight.' Solos were given by Capt. Herbert Heyner (vocalist) and Miss Irene Scharrer (pianoforte).

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A course of four lectures on Wagner's 'Der Ring des Nibelungen,' given at the Duke's Hall by Mr. Frederick Corder on Wednesday afternoons, began on May 11, when the subject was 'Das Rheingold.' One lecture was devoted to each of the four works forming the 'Ring,' the work under consideration being described and analysed and extracts sung from it by the pupils of the Academy.

The increased importance which in recent years has been given to the teaching of aural training and sight-singing in classes, in so many secondary and higher-grade schools, and the knowledge and skill which are required in all such teaching if it is to be really efficient, have influenced the authorities of the R.A.M. in taking an important step in connection with their diploma for Licentiate. In the Syllabus recently issued for the September and Christmas Examinations a new diploma for teachers is included—namely, one for the teaching of Aural Training and Sight-Singing. The requirements are of an essentially practical character, and cover all the ground of the work of such a teacher. The holding of this diploma should be of very great value to all who teach music in classes.

The Goring Thomas Scholarship (Composition) has been awarded to William H. C. Evans (a native of Cilgerran, Penn.), Frederick T. Durrant being commended. The adjudicators were Messrs. Paul Corder and Percy H. Miles, and Sir A. C. Mackenzie.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet with good violinist and 'cellist for regular weekly practice of chamber music (classical and modern). Plymouth.—'AVILIO,' c/o Musical Times.

Young violinist would like to join trio (pianist and 'cellist), for study of classical and modern chamber music. Hampstead or Brondesbury districts.—F. C. W., c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman, violinist, wishes to join trio, quartet, quintet, &c., or local orchestra at Croydon, or immediate neighbourhood. Classical music only.—C. C. D., c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (lady) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for mutual practice. Good music only.—CLASSICAL, 5, Lulworth Road, Peckham, S.E. 15.

Violinist, with a few years' orchestral practice, would like to join trio, orchestra, or small concert party. North Kensington district.—A. M., c/o Musical Times.

A good amateur 'cellist wanted for chamber music (string quartets, &c.).—W. A. MARSH, 35, Murchinson Road, Leyton, E. 10.

Good accompanist (young lady), also vocalist and beginner on violin, wishes to meet violinist-pianist for mutual practice. Kentish Town district. Practice-room at advertiser's home.—'CECILIA,' c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist (L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for practice of trios.—L., 57, Oakfield Road, Clapton, E. 5.

'Cellist wanted to complete chamber trio; must be accomplished. Large library of music, classics and moderns, the latter including pieces by Scriabin, Glinka, and Borodin. Practice, advancement, and mutual enjoyment.—EDWARD W. ORGAN, 'Milverton,' Mayfield Road, Acocks Green, Birmingham.

Pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet violinist and/or 'cellist for regular practice. (Bradford, Yorkshire.) Classical music preferred, and would like to arrange with another pianist for pianoforte duets.—Write 'ENTHUSIAST,' c/o Musical Times.

Pianist-Violinist (lady) would like to meet with another pianist-violinist, near Liverpool, for mutual accompaniment.—'LOVER OF MUSIC,' c/o Musical Times.

Experienced lady cornet-player wishes to join good orchestra.—'RISOLUTO,' c/o Musical Times.

Vacancies for all instruments in new amateur orchestra. Must be experienced players for advanced music. Rehearsals every Friday, 7.30 p.m., at County School, Hildrop Road, Camden Road, N. 7.—T. G. WILLIAMS, at above address.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

A few months ago I suggested that records of vocal works in foreign tongues should be provided with a slip giving an English translation. The Æolian-Vocalion Company has gone even farther, having just issued some double-sided records with the music on one side and a lecturette on the other. Operatic records with this feature are 'Salve Dimorah,' from Gounod's 'Faust,' sung in Italian by Lenghi-Cellini; Micaëla's air, 'Je dis que rien,' sung in French by Destournel; 'Ernani, involami,' from 'Ernani,' sung in Italian by Caroline Hatchard; and 'No, Pagliaccio, non son,' sung in Italian by Rosing. All are accompanied by the Æolian orchestra. The reverse side of each record gives a sketch of the opera plot, with a special word about the particular item. This is an idea that has great educational possibilities. Soon we shall no doubt be able to hear a short work analysed, the music broken up, and explanatory remarks interpolated, the themes being repeated, and so forth. The explanatory remarks on these Æolian records are good, and clearly spoken. An instrumental record with this addition is the second movement of Grieg's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata (Op. 45), finely played by Albert Sammons and Frank St. Leger.

An Æ.-V. record of outstanding excellence is a 12-in. d.-s. giving us the Handel-Halvorsen Passacaglia and a Duet by Robert Fuchs, both for violin and viola duet unaccompanied, played by Albert Sammons and Lionel Tertis. The Passacaglia created a stir when played at the first concert of the Chamber Music Players. It is certainly a brilliant affair, and the recording is very successful. Fuchs' Duet is more ordinary, but a pleasant piece of music. In both works the effect is frequently that of a string quartet.

An Æ.-V. of popular type is the First Life Guards Band playing 'Reminiscences of Scotland,' in which 'Auld Robin Gray' is, as usual, represented by the poor tune of Lady Somebody or other instead of by the fine old original air. The harmonization of the melodies is sufficiently military-bandish to please the crowd and annoy the musician.

An excellent pianoforte record is a 12-in. d.-s. Columbia giving us William Murdoch's performance of the Presto from Beethoven's Sonata in F (Op. 10, No. 2) and a Scarlatti Pastorale. Here is a good pianoforte lesson for the fairly advanced pupil.

SWELL ORGAN (13 stops)

		FT.
Lieblich Bourdon	... wood	16
Open Diapason	... metal	8
Stopped Diapason	... wood	8
Echo Gamba	... metal	8
Voix Céleste (Tenor C)	... ..	8
Flute	... wood	4
Principal	... metal	4
Dulciana Mixture	... metal, 3 ranks	16
Contra Fagotto	... metal	16
Horn	... ..	8
Oboe	... ..	8
Claron	... ..	4
Eolian	... ..	8
Tremulant.	... ..	8

os. 23 and 25 carried up an Octave, 73 notes for Octave-Coupler.

CHOIR AND SOLO ORGAN

Enclosed in Swell box.) II stops. Soundboard carried up an Octave. 73 notes for Octave-Coupler.

		FT.			FT.
Contra Gamba ...	metal	16	33	Harmonic Piccolo metal	2
Violin Diapason	"	8	34	Clarinet ...	8
Dulciana ...	"	8	35	Orchestral Oboe	8
Lieblich Gedact	wood	8	36	Tuba ...	8
Suabe Flute	"	4	37	Tremulant.	"
Gemshorn	metal	4

stops 27 to 33 inclusive can be disconnected from this Manual by Coupler No. 62.

PEDAL ORGAN (II Stops)

	FT.
Sub-Bourdon (prepared for)	wood 32
Open Diapason	" 16
Bourdon	" 16
Gamba (from No. 27 Choir)	metal 16
Lieblich Bourdon (from No. 13 Swell)	wood 16
Violone (from No. 1 Great)	metal 16
Flute (extension of No. 40)	wood 8
Octave (extension of No. 35)	" 8
Trombone	metal 16
Fagotto (from No. 21 Swell)	" 16
Trumpet (extension of No. 46)	" 8

COUPLERS

Swell to Great,	57 Swell Unison Off.
Swell to Choir.	58 Choirland Solo Octave.
Swell to Pedal.	59 Choir and Solo Sub-Octave.
Great to Pedal.	60 Choir and Solo Unison Off.
Choir and Solo to Pedal.	61 Great Piston to Pedal Com-
Choir and Solo to Great.	binations.
Swell Octave.	62 Solo only.
Swell Sub-Octave.

ACCESSORIES

adjustable Pistons to Great Organ.
" " Swell
" " Choir and Solo Organ.
" Combinations to Pedal
Double-Acting Pedals controlling (Walker's Patent):
Great to Pedal Coupler.
Swell to Great
Choir to Great
Tuba.

The Pedal Organ combinations can be coupled to Great Pistons by Coupler No. 61.

WIND PRESSURES

from 4½-in. to 13-in.
ell Great and Choir, 4½-in.
ell and Great Reeds, 7½-in.
ion Work, 8-in.
ba, 12½-in.
tons, &c., 13-in.

balanced Swell Pedals to Swell and Choir and Solo boxes.

Subular-pneumatic action throughout.
All stops full compass, except No. 17. Harmonic Trebles to all Reeds.

The wind supply is generated by a 'Discus' blowing installation placed in a specially constructed chamber under the floor of the nave and situated mediately in front of the gallery. An horse-power electric motor drives three blowers (automatically controlled) which provide light, edium, and heavy wind to the various reservoirs. Tonally and constructionally this organ contains me of the finest work of Messrs. Walker. The mechanical arrangements are such that there is actically no limit to the possible stop combinations. om the softest to the loudest tone there can be no ubs as to the excellence of the proper characteristic usical quality, and for its size the instrument will nk as one of the best in the country.

Incidentally it might be mentioned that over eight miles of tubing have been used in the construction of the pneumatic action, and that the organ contains 2,515 pipes.

The gifts were dedicated by the Archbishop of Canterbury on Sunday, May 8, when the following programme was performed, with Dr. Buck at the organ:

Concerto in G minor	... ..	Handel
Violin Solo	... Benedictus ...	Mackenzie
	Mr. Ackroyd
'Why do the Nations?'	... ..	Handel
	Mr. Mercer
Berceuse	... ..	Arcensky
Violin Solo	... Aria for the G string ...	Bach
Litany for All Souls' Day	... ..	Schubert
Prelude to 'Parsifal'	... ..	Wagner

CHANTING

Under the auspices of the Church Music Society, lectures were given at St. Martin-in-the-Fields on the Saturdays in May. The third and fourth take place too late for notice in this issue. The series opened with Prof. Walford Davies talking to a large audience on 'Chanting,' and backing up his remarks by getting his hearers to put them into practice. Copies of the canticles, as pointed in a forthcoming new psalter 'in accordance with the natural speech-rhythms,' were distributed, the principles explained, and the Venite practised, verse by verse being first read and then chanted. Certainly the results attained a freedom rarely approached even in churches where much time is spent on the psalms. The system may be applied to any psalter, being in fact nothing more than that set forth as an ideal in the preface to most books of the kind. It is merely a matter of adapting the chant to the constantly varying rhythm of the text. When this is done we get a beautifully varied set of rhythms, and the deadly monotony that makes chanting an infliction disappears. As Prof. Davies said, we may regard the form as that of an air (the chant) with variations (the pointing). Perhaps an even better analogy is that of an ostinato, the chant being the theme, with variations of rhythm instead of melody and harmony. An important point made was that each psalm has its own pace. We should not sing (for example) 'Have mercy upon me, O God' and 'Bring unto the Lord, O ye mighty, bring young rams unto the Lord,' at the same speed. Prof. Davies said the minim should be regarded as the syllabic unit. As to freedom of rhythm, the fourth and tenth notes of the chant were anchors, the rest free. No doubt the audience, containing as it did a large proportion of organists, was especially favourable for purposes of demonstration, but even when due allowance is made it was clear that there was nothing in the method that could not be accomplished by the average choir and congregation. But of course both must practise, and must begin with keenness and an open mind.

TUDOR MUSIC

At the second lecture Dr. R. R. Terry spoke on the old English music he is editing for the Carnegie Trust. In the limited time at his disposal he could do no more than merely glance at a subject big enough for a series of lectures, but he said sufficient to make his hearers realise that the discovery and publication of this mass of old music is an event of national importance, and one that we shall later regard as a romance of musical history. Dr. Terry made a point that was new to most of those present, though it has long been familiar to organists and others who have taken a part in the revival of plainsong. He said that his most able helpers in the transcription and editing of old music were often young musicians with ultra-modern tendencies. Those who revelled in Scriabin and Stravinsky were usually the most ready to appreciate 16th-century works, whereas the musician who had stopped short at Schumann and Brahms saw nothing in it. Dr. Terry might have pointed to a similar state of things in Italy, where the recent revival of old Italian music was mainly due to the 'futurist' group. Similarly, the old French clavecinists have no more sympathetic champions than the modern French composers. It may be the result of open-mindedness, but more probably it is due to the feeling of nationality, which in the matter of art is now more pronounced than ever it was, despite our internationalism. The lecture was illustrated by an Easter Motet by John Shepherd, and three examples from Taverner, all for five-part men's chorus, sung by five members of Westminster Cathedral Choir. Listening to this virile and sonorous music one felt that Sir Henry Hadow was not exaggerating when he said that if we wished to realise the importance of the discovery of these works we must use a literary parallel, and imagine that the whole of Elizabethan poetry had been lost, and had now been brought to light. Dr. Terry's lecture gave us a really engrossing hour—too short measure.

The practice of playing pianoforte concertos at organ recitals, the organ supplying the orchestral part, is growing. Given a well-equipped modern organ the effect is excellent. At St. Chad's, Far Headingley, a recital of three such works was recently given by Miss Kathleen Frise-Smith and Mr. H. Percy Richardson, the examples played being Mozart in D minor, Beethoven in C minor, and Franck's 'Variations Symphoniques.' It is hoped to give similar recitals in the future.

Parts 2 and 3 of 'The Messiah' were sung at the City Temple by the Choral Society on April 23, Mr. Allan Brown conducting and Mr. F. W. Holloway accompanying on the organ. The solos were sung by Miss Bessie Lang, Miss Beatrice Ashton, Mr. Holden Heywood, and Mr. Samuel Dyson.

Gaul's 'The Holy City' was well sung to a crowded congregation at All Souls', Eastbourne, on April 18, conducted by Prof. Storer, with Mr. F. E. Wilson at the organ.

ORGAN RECITALS

- Mr. J. Crowther, Fitzalan Street Church, Glossop—Fantasia in E minor, Faulkes; Pastorale, Guilmant; The Storm, Lemmens.
- Mr. Walter Hoyle, Coventry Cathedral—Toccata in F, Bach; 'Schiller' March, Meyerbeer.
- Mr. G. Bernard Gilbert, Town Hall, Stratford—'Christus Resurrexit,' Ravanello; Fantasia in B flat, Silas; Question and Answer, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. Leitch Owen, Edge Hill Parish Church—Allegro Maestoso, Driffill; Coronation March, Meyerbeer.
- Mr. W. G. Breach, St. John the Evangelist, Clapham Rise (two recitals)—Largo ('New World' Symphony); Offertoire on a French hymn tune, Grisson.
- Mr. Allan Brown, Higham Hill Baptist Church, Walthamstow—Fantasia on Scottish airs, P. Mansfield; Symphony in E minor, Holloway. Pisgah, Penygraig, South Wales (two recitals)—Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Finale from Sonata in F minor, Rheinberger; Melodie in E, Rachmaninov; Fugue, Reubke.
- Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Allegro and Adagio (Symphony No. 3), Vierne; Adagio and Toccata in F, Widor.
- Mr. J. Gray, Adam Smith Hall, Kirkcaldy—Prelude on 'Hanover,' Parry; 'Londonderry Air'; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn; Marche Solennelle, Mailly.
- Mr. Sidney Smith, Christ Church, West Hartlepool—First movement, Sonata in F minor, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Rhapsody No. 3, Howells; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.
- Lieut. Sydney H. Wéalé, King's Hall, Stoke-on-Trent (six recitals)—Romance, Sibelius; Basso Ostinato, Arensky; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Clair de Lune, Debussy; Symphony in E minor, Holloway; 'Finlandia,' Sibelius.
- Mr. James M. Preston, Stocksfield Wesleyan Church—Madrigal, Lemare; Rhapsody on Breton Melodies, Saint-Saëns; Andante and Scherzo (Symphony No. 4), Widor. St. George's, Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne—Variations on an Old English melody, Stuart Archer; Chant de Mai, Jongen. St. Mary's, Tyne Dock—Allegro (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Fantasia, Silas; Toccata di Concerto, Lemare.
- Mr. Alan Burr, Jesus College, Cambridge—Pavana, Byrde; Andantino, Couperin; Prelude in E flat, Stanford; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prelude o 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams.
- Mr. Richard Tattersall, Old St. Andrew's, Toronto, Canada—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Prelude on Darwell 148th, Harold Darke; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Elegy, Baird; Toccata in E, Maleingreau.
- Mr. Eric Brough, Regent Square Presbyterian Church—Passacaglia (Sonata in E minor), Rheinberger; Largo ('New World' Symphony); Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Choral in B minor, Franck.
- Miss Ada Petherick, Addiscombe Parish Church—Fantasia in G minor, Bach; Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Mendelssohn; Harmonies du Soir, Karg-Elert; March Solennelle, Mailly.
- Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, Maze Hill Congregational Church—Greenwich—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Sonata da Camera, Peace; Preludes on 'Martyrdom' and Croft's 136th, Parry.
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Bromley Congregational Church—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Berceuse, Bonnet; Marche Pontificale, Widor. Beckenham Congregational Church—Grand Chœur alla Handel, Guilmant; Sonata in E flat minor, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach.
- Mr. Ezra Edson, Conisbrough Parish Church—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Reverie, O. Mansfield; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Grand Chœur, Guilmant.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Fantasy-Prelude, Charles Macpherson; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Fugue in G, Bach; Air with variations, Beethoven; Allegro Moderato, Silas.
- Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (four recitals)—Phantasy 'O Filii et Filiae,' Pearce; In Memoriam Rheinberger; Old Easter Melody with Variations, West; Marche de Fête, Büsser; Recessional, Alan Gray.
- Mr. Harold Rhodes, St. John's, Torquay—Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Three Choral Preludes, Bach; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Allegretto con Grazia (Heroic Suite), H. Rhodes. Parish Church, Paignton—Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Bach; Rhapsody No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Symphony No. 5, Widor.
- Mr. J. A. Meale, Central Hall, Westminster (five recitals)—Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Symphony No. 1, Guilmant; Toccata in C, Bach; Passacaglia, Cyril Scott; 'Finlandia'; Symphony No. 5, Widor; Fanfare in B flat, Meale. New College Chapel, Swiss Cottage—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Largo ('New World' Symphony); Concert Overture in C, Hollins.
- Mr. H. S. Wallbank, Hexham Abbey—Prelude, 'Sleepers wake' and Fugue in B flat, Bach; Allegro Cantabile, Widor.
- Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (five recitals)—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Meditation-Elegy, Borowski; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Prelude on Croft's 136th, Parry; Capriccio, John Ireland; Toccata in D minor, Holloway; First movement, Sonata in E minor, Rheinberger.
- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—First movement from Sonata, Elgar; Preludes on 'Melcombe,' Parry, 'Old Hundredth,' Harvey Grace, and 'Martyrdom,' Charlton Palmer.
- Mr. Ernest H. Smith, St. James' Parish Church, New Brighton—Overture in E, Morandi; Evensong, Johnston.
- Mr. Stanley E. Lucas, Bishopsgate Chapel, E.C. (three recitals)—A Bach programme; Prelude and 'Angel's Farewell' ('Dream of Gerontius'); Prelude and Fugue No. 2 and Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn. Trinity Presbyterian Church, Canonbury (three recitals)—Allegretto Grazioso, Hollins; Homage Hymn, Rowley; Preludes on 'Martyrdom' and Croft's 136th, Parry; Preludes and Fugues in G minor, and F, Bach.
- Mr. S. Maurice Poplestone, High Street Baptist Church, Abersychan—Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C, Bach; Evening Song, Baird; Scherzo in C minor, Guilmant; Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor.

C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Minuet, Saccherini; Hungarian March, Berlioz.
 J. A. Sowerbutts, St. Stephen's, Wallbrook—Fantasia on 'Come, Holy Ghost,' Bach; Sonata No. 5, Stanford; Psalm Versets, Dupré; Offrande Musicale, Maleingreau.
 C. H. Trevor, St. John's, Mortimer, Berks—Fantasia on A minor, Lemmens; Three Old Pieces, Zipoli, Stanley, and Clérambault; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prayer and Cradle Song, Guilmant.
 Archibald Farmer, St. Dunstan-in-the-East—Fantasia in D minor, Merkel; Meditation, Ropartz; Three Chorale Improvisations, Karg-Elert.
 Henry Poole, Parish Church, Burley—Adagio in B minor, Mozart; Nocturne in D, Goss Custard; Grand Chœur in D, Salome.

APPOINTMENTS

I. N. Harding, organist and choirmaster, Merrow Parish Church.
 Stephen Kirby, organist and choirmaster St. Agnes', Kennington Park.
 W. E. Kirby, organist and chormaster, St. Luke's, Southport.
 D. Leeke Rowe, organist and choirmaster, St. Mary's, Guildford.

Letters to the Editor

THE IMPORTANCE OF CORRECT PLACING OF THE VOICE

SIR,—Mr. Charles Tree's article in the April number of Musical Times is interesting, not so much on account of theory he propounds—which merely touches the fringe of the matter—as that it affords evidence of a certain consciousness that all is not as it should be in regard to voice-production as now taught in this country. My interest in this subject is sincere and profound, consequently I willingly let myself of the opportunity afforded by the appearance of Mr. Tree's article to take part in the discussion of a question of such far-reaching importance. It is necessary to face my remarks by stating that it is not an easy matter to give full and accurate expression in writing to all one would like to say, for written observations are incapable of conveying the convincing power of example, or demonstration with voice.

I regard voice production as but a part of the larger question of voice-training. It is doubtless an important part, but, to my mind not the most important, because it does not properly commenced otherwise than on a firmly established foundation of rational breathing. The perfect control of the breath is the first thing to be attended to, if the voice is to be developed to its full capacity. Even when the term 'diaphragmatic breathing' is enounced, the whole has not been said. The complete control of the breath by the diaphragm is necessary, but in order to obtain the full, free, and unhindered influence of the breath on the vocal cords, the position of the larynx must be such as to render it possible. Any pupil of average intelligence will be able to grasp these fundamental theoretic facts in a single short lesson; some may be able to induce their physical members to commence the necessary co-operation in two or three lessons, but the majority do not find it quite so easy to convert theory into practice.

I merely mention in passing that Mr. Tree takes no notice whatever of this all-important aspect of voice-training. Without it, I maintain, nothing really serious can be done, and the attainment of the forward position by means of direct speech developed into song looks extremely like building minus a foundation. I readily admit that the method proposed by Mr. Tree may be helpful in a roundabout and exceedingly protracted way, but more I cannot say in its favour.

In order to arrive at an adequate conception of that which we are accustomed to call method, let us get down to first principles. Ordinary speech—whether we call it 'correct' or not—is vastly more sonorous in the Latin languages than, for example, in English. That is caused by the number and breadth of the vowels used in them. The Italian language is the best example, because it seldom admits the collation of three consonants, has no gutturals, few sibilants, and nothing like our th. When we northerners first hear it we are charmed by the delicious sonority of pure Italian speech. In order to pronounce the broad vowels a 'mouthful' must be taken of the words. Otherwise expressed, full advantage is taken of the natural resonator provided in the mouth, which is not always done in English speech. The enlargement of the resonator unconsciously induces the lowering of the larynx by the flattening of the tongue, so that the column of breath issuing from the lungs has free play on the vocal cords.

Thus the Italian has, if I may say so, a vocal handicap in his favour, and his old singing masters had little more to do than develop such favourable beginnings. To this they devoted long years of patient work, with the result that their pupils finally became complete masters of their voices before they were allowed to study opera. Naturally only those who had real talent stood the test of patience and perseverance, but the world was enriched by having those great vocalists whose memory we cherish in tradition. Unfortunately the more strenuous days which succeeded rendered it impossible for all except a few students to afford the necessary time and expense, so now we have to be content with less perfect artistry. Sadder still, the old generation of real maestri di canti has died out, and has been replaced by instrumentalists who, while they still retain to a greater or less extent the traditions of opera, and can teach their pupils to sing the grand old works, are incapable of training the voice properly.

In that way a premium came to be placed upon the acquisition of the so-called 'Italian production,' but that, too, has become a tradition. I prefer to call it simply classical voice-training—first, because it is classical, and secondly, because it can be adopted by people of all nationalities.

In order of their adaptability for singing, of the languages known to me I venture to place, after Italian—Spanish, French, Russian, German, and English, in that sequence. I must reluctantly place my own language last, because it is the least sonorous, has gutturals, may be spoken with almost closed mouth, and has the greatest tendency to render the voice throaty. I am very far indeed from wishing to convey the impression that English men and women are more difficult to train than those of other nationalities, but in order to train them properly and quickly I insist on the necessity for devoting the greatest possible attention to laying such an immovable foundation as that described above. I regard the human voice as a very precious gift, on the rational development of which it is impossible to expend too much care and patience.

Mr. Tree's expression, 'nasal resonance without nasal quality,' is a technical error. To begin with, the mouth, not the nose, is the natural resonator. Were this not so, nature had provided larger means for the emission of sound from the nose. Further, such resonance as may be produced in the pharynx—apart from its being detrimental to the tone produced—must necessarily remain to a great extent within the singer, whose ostensible purpose is to cause his vocal efforts to become audible to his hearers. It is easily demonstrable that the maximum of vocal resonance can be attained without any visible effort on the part of the singer, such as 'neck-swelling' or 'face-bursting.'

It would be interesting to know why Mr. Tree makes mention of Maurel amongst other great singers who retained their voices long. Maurel was a great actor, not a great singer. My authority is Rossini, who, on being asked one evening in the theatre what he thought of Maurel, replied: Guocca bone, non canta bone, and the man who wrote 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia' was a judge! Maurel was a pupil of the ultra-French school of his day, and had far too much nasal quality in his voice to please an Italian ear, or even mine, although I was but a student when I heard him in Verdi's 'Otello,' at Milan.

In conclusion I wish to express my profound conviction that teachers who are merely instrumentalists ought not to undertake to train voices which have not first been placed.

Advice and suggestion are useful in their way, but nothing is so helpful to a pupil as to have a practical example given of what he is required to do.—Yours, &c., A. KEAY.

National Liberal Club.
April 5, 1921.

CROSS-TREMOLO EFFECT

SIR,—In response to the query of your correspondent A. M. G. (to whom I present my kind regards), the first instance of the 'cross tremolo' effect is probably in Haydn's 'Creation,' No. 29, at the words 'Ye dusky mists.' It is not a good example, but the intention is there. The earliest to employ the effect systematically was the despised Mendelssohn in his G minor Pianoforte Concerto slow movement, and especially in his 'Trumpet' Overture. That obsolescent writer Beethoven very nearly invented it several times in the slow movement of his once popular 'Pastoral' Symphony. It needed no great effort of invention after all, for if you divide your violins and do this wave-tremolo on a common chord, what are you to do for a fourth part unless you invert one of the existing three? Of course we solve that problem now by writing just any notes that don't fit, but our forefathers were so dull as to prefer notes that belonged.—Yours, &c.,

13, Albion Road,
South Hampstead, N.W.
May 8, 1921.

F. CORDER.

MODERN MUSIC

SIR,—The other day I asked myself the following questions, and along with them are the answers I received:

Do you find any joy or honest merriment in modern music? No, a false cynicism, a leer, a contemptuous smile.

Do you find any nobility of thought, expression, or treatment? No, such appeared to die with Franck.

What then are the characteristics of modern music? Surely brilliance, shallowness, technical correctness on the one hand, and noise, boredom, and incompetence on the other.

Does it tend to encourage the hearer to be energetic and vigorous, and to elevate him out of the mire of materialism? No, for the most part it leaves him absolutely cold. If not, it incites him to languor, moral irresponsibility, and deep depression.

Is the continual boosting of fourth-rate, insignificant, ephemeral writing by opportunists and others good for the community at large? Inasmuch as it calls attention to the art of music as a whole, yes; beyond that it appears to be productive of nothing but harm.

The above answers must be taken in a general way. It is easy enough to point to Elgar, German, Somervell, Saint-Saëns, Puccini, for they are isolated names and indeed are not of the generation I am considering. But the whole matter can be put in a nutshell. Modern music is from the head—not the heart.—Yours, &c.,

C. À BECKET WILLIAMS.

WAS IT REALLY LOEILLY?

SIR,—Two of your correspondents in your current issue fall foul of your reviewer for his ignorance of a composer named Loelly. But was there such a person? Sir John Hawkins mentions a John Loeillet, 'a relation, as it is supposed, of John Baptist Loeillet, of Ghent, a famous master of the flute, and the author of four operas of solos for the instrument.' The former was a player on the harpsichord, and 'was also celebrated for his performance on the hautboy.' (The italics are Sir John's.) The end of his life he lived at New North Street, near Red Lion Square, and died about the year 1728. 'There is extant among his printed lessons a Minuet in the key of A, with the minor third, which was a great favourite with the ladies of the last age. The vulgar pronunciation of Loeillet's name led the world into a mistake, so that it was ascribed to Jean Baptist Lully.'

'A Dictionary of Musicians' (1827) gives 'Loeillet (Jean Baptiste) of Ghent,' but confuses him with the London man.

Theo Baker's Dictionary has the same mistake—if mistal it be. The 'Encyclopédie de la Musique,' in the Belgian section, has only a casual reference to J. B. Loeillet, without giving details of his life.

There may be doubt as to whether Loeillet were 'two single gentlemen rolled into one,' but there can be no doubt as to the spelling of his name. Pauer possibly may have taken 'Loelly' as the composer of the G minor Suite from the vulgar spelling of Walsh, the publisher of the (London) Loeillet's works. Oddly enough, Pauer also edited 'Gavotte in G major by J. B. Loeillet.' I trust your reviewer did not cry Peccavi too loudly.—Yours, &c.,

St. Leonards-on-Sea,

TOM S. WOTTON.

May 1, 1921.

P.S.—Your correspondent A. M. G. will find an example of 'cross tremolo' in Berlioz's 'Eight Scenes from Faust,' composed in 1828 (not 1829, as given in the Berlioz Edition). For half-a-dozen bars of the opening of the 'Concert des Sylphes,' above a tremolo arpeggio for the cellos, the upper strings have this style of thing:

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

well-planned programme of unaccompanied choral music was sung by the Novello Choir at Bishopsgate House on May 10. Programmes of this type frequently suffer from scrappiness owing to the difficulty of finding an opella work of the right type to serve as main dish. On this occasion the choice fell on Bach's five-voice motet, 'O priceless Treasure,' the miscellaneous items consisting of madrigals by Bateson, Benet, Orlando Gibbons, and others, and part-songs by John Pointer and Gerrard Philips. The singing reached a very high standard, especially in the motet.

Mr. Harold Brooke, who conducted, must have felt well rewarded for his indefatigable pains at rehearsal. Relief was provided by Miss Caroline Hatchard and Mr. John Riley, who each contributed two delightful groups of songs. Miss Marguerite Swale accompanied admirably.

The Choir, which was formed fifteen years ago by Mr. McNaught, consists of about a hundred voices, drawn from the Novello employés and their friends. The rehearsals were held in the main hall at 160, Wardour Street, on Wednesday, at 6.45. New members will be welcomed. They will write for particulars to the hon. secretary, Mr. H. A. Smith, The Novello Works, Hollen Street, W.1.

Sharps and Flats

We have to admit that nine-tenths of the modern music of our day has no more spiritual value than the silver paper in which chocolates are wrapped, and its manufacturers, like the manufacturers of that silver paper, will not be remembered to-morrow.—W. J. Turner.

Who's a-denying of it? Can Mr. Turner point to any work of musical history of which the same might not be said with equal truth? Has there ever been a period which has given more than one-tenth of its art, its music, or its literature to posterity?—Edwin Evans.

Or may, if we like, repeat the old tag that the beaten ones have the best songs, the melancholy of defeat and defeat drawing the heart out of the race. But I should like to put forward that theory in Scotland as an explanation of the beauty of the Scots folk-songs. I might speak, with every variety of accent, when and where the songs were beaten by anyone.—Ernest Newman.

The boldnesses are amazing, and they all 'come off.' It is interesting to compare this virile early English polyphony [byrd] with that of the Russian a cappella school. (Oh, what are our Cathedral choirs doing? When will they wake up to the real thing, which will alone justify their existence—the best only of English Church music?)—Anglefield Hull.

In any way, everybody [at the meeting of the Music Society] seemed optimistic, and in good spirits—Mr. Bliss chirpy, Goossens confident, Mr. Henry full of japes. So much the entertainment appreciated that it was decided to include no business, but to repeat it, with additions (why bring in Mr. de Courville and Nelson Keys), this next time.—T. W. Wharton.

I did not attend the great Melba concert at the Albert Hall on Sunday. In view of the noble-hearted and most successful efforts of a generous section of the Press to collect an audience for this worthy and struggling young singer, I cut a couple of lines I cut, a few weeks before, from the ago Musical Leader: 'Madame Melba is reported to be seriously ill with influenza at Monte Carlo.' Many of us will be disposed to repeat the remark once made to a gentleman who was suffering from alcoholism: 'I wish I had your complaint.'—P. A. Scholes.

Several years ago Lord Curzon suggested I should write a paper. . . .—Algernon Ashton.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of June, 1861:

Mälzel's Metronome is a useful assistant to enable the pianoforte student to preserve equable measure in his exercises. It ought not, however, to be placed upon the instrument on which he is playing, because its regularity might be disturbed by the devious energy of his execution, as differently-going clocks will assimilate in their movements if placed upon the same board.—Musical Education and Instruction, by Dr. Marx, of Berlin.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The season of 1861 was inaugurated on May 1, by a monster performance of Haydn's 'Creation.' The metropolitan contingent of the Sacred Harmonic Society, numbering 1,600 vocalists, reinforced by deputations from Bradford, Birmingham, Gloucester, and other places, brought up the executive power, in conjunction with the instrumentalists, to about 3,000. . . . The delivery of the choruses was characterised by great precision and with admirable expression. The effect, however, of the display varied, as heretofore, with the position of the listener. In one place it was bright and clear; in another it was dull and obscure. It cannot be denied that very little is gained in a musical point of view by these gigantic demonstrations. The vast amplitude of the palace, and the consequent dissipation of the sound, robs the choral utterance of much of its sonority, certainly of much of its distinctness, and the wonder is that so large an outlay of means produces comparatively so small a result; but there is nevertheless a peculiar prestige, and an intrinsic grandeur in these festivals which constitute, as it were, a new epoch in the practical history of the art.

BELFAST.—Herr Malmène, of Necton, Norfolk, has been appointed conductor to the Belfast Presbyterian Musical Association.

GLASGOW.—A promenade concert, under the management of the Choral Union, took place on the 22nd ult., in the Nave of the Cathedral, with the special permission of the first Commissioner of Works, the proceeds of which were applied in aid of the funds of the Glasgow Royal Infirmary. The programme consisted exclusively of sacred music, comprising chorales, motets, chants, and choruses. The singers were composed of the vocal section, and the orchestra of the instrumental section of the Choral Union, conducted by Mr. H. Lambeth.

Miss Margaret Fowles, aged 15 only, has been appointed organist of St. James's Church, Ryde.

GRATIS.—An Organist of decided character would give his services in any Christian Church or Chapel. Address, stating number of stops, Mr. Taylor, 9B, New Broad Street, City.

MUSICAL WORK.—5,000 Agents wanted to obtain subscribers to a musical work. Commission, 30 per cent. Address, A. B., Post-office, Winchester.

HARMONIUM WANTED.—A person having two Model Boats, wishes to exchange the same for an Harmonium. Apply by letter to A. B., Foot & Co.'s, King Street, Cheapside, E.C.

PIANIST WANTED at the Dog Concert Hall, Manchester; must be a quick reader and brilliant player. To a suitable person this would be a permanent situation. Salary, £2 per week.—Apply to H. Hardy, as above.

HARMONIUMS.—Five stop, £10 10s.; 11-stop, £12 12s. A. ROBERTS, 8, William Terrace, Blue Anchor Road, Bermondsey. These beautiful Instruments are now used in many churches and chapels. Read the following, from Mr. E. Packer, for many years the respected clerk of Unicorn Yard Chapel: 'Dear Sir,—I have now for many years been accustomed to lead singing, both at Chatham and London. Some months since some of my friends thought that an Harmonium would assist me materially. We came to the conclusion to have one, and after looking through the stocks of the largest makers, I was directed to you, and can honestly say, that they are the Best, and by far the Cheapest, I ever saw.—April 1, 1861.—ELIJAH PACKER.'

Croydon, on April 27, a concert was given by Miss Petherick in which her small orchestra and female-choir known as the 'Bonnie Part-singers' were heard notably. The programme included Elgar's 'The Snow.'

GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL

A Festival of Old English music-drama will be held at Glastonbury from August 29 to September 10. The programme is as follows:

'Cupid and Death.' Mask by Shirley (1653), with music by Henry Lawes and Christopher Gibbons. Edited by E. J. Dent.

'King Arthur.' Dryden and Purcell.

'Venus and Adonis.' Mask by John Blow.

Concerts of Old English music and dances.

Four complete cycles of performances will be given. Goodall's Library, High Street, Glastonbury, will supply particulars. A holiday school of music will also be held by the Festival School from August 8 to 27.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

After a strenuous musical season which practically closed in April, we suddenly entered upon our customary saison morte, and there is but little to record which is likely to interest readers of the Musical Times. Madame Gell's Ladies' Choir, an exceedingly well-trained body of singers, gave Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater' at the Midland Institute on April 21. The instrumental portion of the work was provided by a string quartet, and the vocal solos were sung by Miss Doris Watkins and Miss Hilda Raybould. It was of great interest to hear a revival of this old-world music, especially as one cannot recall a previous performance of the work at Birmingham. The Choir was especially at home in Elgar's beautiful part-song 'Fly, singing bird.' The programme also contained Gustav Holst's songs for voice and violin given by Miss Watkins (soprano) and Mr. Alex Cohen (violin), and a Mozart String (quartet).

Mr. Eugène Goossens lectured to the Birmingham Centre of the British Music Society at the Midland Institute on April 22, on the subject of 'Tendencies and Personalities in Contemporary Music.' The writer was not able to be present, but the following is culled from a local report that is available. The lecturer said the change in music to-day compared with the music of two hundred years ago was purely one of accent. The essentials remained the same; it was merely the extreme that had changed. The same spirit informed the new as the old. In classic music there was too much wordiness—it was of undue length. In modern music one tried to do away with that, and to get nearer to the point. The modern endeavour was to express the emotion of a thing by getting rid of its superfluous side. Art was like journalism. People did not want to be told things over and over again: they wanted to be told something that was very much to the point, and which got to the keynote of what was trying to be expressed in the minimum of time and with the maximum of effect.

At the Town Hall, Walsall, on April 21, Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted the Walsall Philharmonic Society and the Birmingham City Orchestra in Brahms' 'German Requiem.' The vocalists were Miss Margaret Harrison and Mr. Arthur Cranmer, and Mr. T. W. North was at the organ. The programme also included selections from 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin.'

The talented young pianist, Miss Edna Iles, gave her second pianoforte recital at the Royal Society of Artists' rooms. The programme included the first performance here of B. J. Dale's Sonata in D minor.

The concert given at the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, in aid of the funds of the National Council of Women (Birmingham Branch), on May 2, was very successful. The Moseley Musical Club String Orchestra, conducted by Mr. T. Henry Smith, gave an exceedingly enjoyable performance of Tchaikovsky's 'Serenade,' Op. 48, and other items. Miss Irene Scharrer delighted her hearers in well-known pianoforte pieces, and a feature of the concert was the perfect singing of Liza Lehmann's song-cycle, 'In a Persian Garden,' by Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Mary Foster, Mr. Frank Titterton, and Mr. Arthur Cranmer.

Opera at the Repertory Theatre extending over a month forms an entirely new feature at Birmingham. The operas are Cimarosa's 'Il Matrimonio Segreto,' Rutland Boughton's 'Immortal Hour' (heard here for the first time), Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale,' and Mozart's 'Così fan tutti.' The principal artists with one or two exceptions are local singers.

Mr. Richard Wassell, who not long ago was appointed the organist and choir-master of St. Martin's, the parish church, recently gave a graphic and impressive performance of Haydn's 'Creation,' selecting Parts 1 and 2, the chorus 'Sing the Lord' with which Part 3 concludes.

BOURNEMOUTH

A very successful winter series of Symphony Concerts was completed on May 5, and all those engaged in the undertaking can look back with real satisfaction upon a season in which high endeavour has yielded abundant fruit.

During twenty-six seasons, one of the finest artistic enterprises in the country has been slowly built up from small and experimental beginnings, until it has now become a feature rivaling similar institutions on the Continent, and at the same time a practically unique effort in a gradually awakening England. A considerable part in this country musical renaissance has thus been played by Mr. Godfrey and the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra, and for that reason alone, if for no other, it should be the pride of Bournemouth municipality to maintain this artistic reputation at whatever cost.

The writer was unable to attend the twenty-eighth concert of the season, on April 14, when the programme consisted of Glazounov's Symphony in E flat, a Prelude to the 'Choephoroi' of Æschylus by W. G. Whittaker (who was new to Bournemouth, and was conducted by the composer), Paul N. Kerby's 'As you Like it' Overture (also conducted by the composer), and Bach's Piano Concerto in D minor, played by Miss Harriet Cohen.

A second performance this season of Vaughan Williams' 'London' Symphony was the outstanding event on April 15. This fine work was played with an even closer realisation of its many beauties than on the first occasion, and there is little doubt that the impression the music made upon the audience was increased in like proportion. We congratulate Mr. Godfrey and his orchestra upon a very noteworthy achievement. Wieniawski's well-worn D minor Violin Concerto was played in exceedingly commendable manner by Miss Gertrude Ramsden.

Special importance was imparted to the following week's concert by the visit of Sir Edward Elgar, the seat of accommodation at the Winter Gardens being taxed more severely than usual by an audience in excess of the average—the town's music-lovers being desirous, without a doubt, of once more witnessing the distinguished composer upon the platform from which he has too long been absent. The Symphony in E flat was the work chosen by Sir Edward for the performance, this being the second time within two months that it had been presented at the Symphony Concerts, the first performance having been that given under the direction of Mr. Godfrey. Sir Edward's reception was of quite an enthusiastic description, and the applause that greeted the Symphony was both loud and prolonged. The work was exceedingly well played, the finest section—the serene and expressive Finale—being especially attractive in its clarity and nobility. Another important modern work included in this programme was Delius' Piano Concerto, the solo music being undertaken by Mr. Aubyn Raymar. The beauties of the composition are undeniable, although the solo part is not of a particularly grateful nature. Mr. Raymar is, however, a thorough artist, and a performer instinct with musicianly feeling ensued.

The season came to a finish on May 5, when Dvořák's 'New World' Symphony, Sibelius' 'Karelia' Overture, and d'Erlanger's Violin Concerto in D minor figured in the programme. After some trifling unsteadiness at the start, the picturesque Symphony proceeded very smoothly and ingratiatingly, making its usual effect upon a frankly delighted audience. The Overture, which is one of the Finnish composer's best pieces, was also played in a very charming manner. Madame Adila Fachiri is a violinist ing attainments, and her performance of d'Erlanger's odious Concerto was one of the most enjoyable events of eventful season.

The course is now completed, and the destinies of music Bournemouth are uncertain. But if Bournemouth is to in its popularity, the Orchestra that Mr. Godfrey has light into so much prominence must be ready to fulfil its important part in the sphere of national artistic education in the principal concert season comes round once more.

BRISTOL

On April 16 a large audience at Colston Hall listened to enjoyment to 'Samson and Delilah' as performed by the Bristol Choral Society, under Mr. George Riseley. Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Frank Mullings, Mr. Herbert Brown, Mr. Glyn Eastman were the solo singers. The opera had not been given by the Society since the occasion, many years ago, on which Miss Marie Brema was Delilah.

The Glastonbury Festival Players after their week at Bath came on to Bristol for a week, on April 18. Artistically their work was among the most beautiful things of the whole season, but financially the venture was a total failure. The very small audiences which did go to Colston Hall sat entranced while Mr. Boughton's 'Immortal Hour' and 'Moon Maiden,' Mr. Napier Miles' 'Music comes,' and Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas,' were set before them in purest art and in the simplest stage guise. Miss d'Orsay, Miss Ffrangcon Davies, Mr. Jordan, Mr. Woodhouse, and other members of the company would grace the boards of any theatre, where many would be to hear them, and see the dances under adequate lighting conditions.

A new quartet (the 'Dolce Quartet,' comprising Miss Stride Cass, soprano, Miss Clara Muscant, pianoforte, Mr. I. Singovski, flute, and Mr. R. Hind, clarinet) made their first appearance, under Sir Oswald Stoll, at the Bedminster Promenade in the week commencing April 25, and was well received in musical contributions of a good class. The combination is likely to be heard of 'on the halls,' which did more turns of this kind.

One of the most attractive recitals of the season was given at Victoria Rooms on May 10 by Miss Madge Thomas (contralto of excellent interpretative powers), Miss Irene (a firm pianist), and Mr. Percy Lewis, whose tone as a violoncello player is always a delight. The programme was excellently chosen, and it is rare indeed to hear such regret pressed by members of the audience that it was ended all too soon. John Ireland's 'Island Spell,' Frank Bridge's 'To not, happy day' and 'Water Nymphs,' Somervell's 'Shepherd's cradle song,' Head's 'Sea Gypsy,' Mendelssohn's 'Variations Concertantes' for violoncello and pianoforte, Beethoven's 'In questa tomba,' Haydn's 'Spirit song,' Debussy's 'Cathédrale Engloutie,' Chopin's 'Tarantelle,' Schott's 'Lullaby,' and Fauré's 'Elegie,' are some items of a programme that was music, music all the way.

CORNWALL

Bodmin Male Choir closed its season on April 13 with a concert in aid of charities, and sang several pieces from its repertoire with the increased success that results from increased practice. Mr. Joseph Williams conducted, and Miss Maria Velland sang solos.

St. Austell Wesleyan Church is distinguished by the title Nonconformist Cathedral of Mid-Cornwall, and it proved excellent auditorium on April 20, when a choir of seventy voices and a capable orchestra performed Gaul's 'The Holy City.' Mr. Morley Richards conducted, and Mrs. Morley Richards played the organ. The choral singing was characterised by good attack and musical quality.

'Elijah' was chosen by Wadebridge Choral Society, numbering eighty voices, for its spring concert, and a good performance was given on April 27 under the direction of Mr. H. S. Derry. On May 5 Penzance and District Choral Society performed the same oratorio. Mr. Hubert Middleton, organist of Truro Cathedral, gave valuable assistance at the organ, Mr. Hugh Bramwell conducted, and the principal vocalists were Miss Nora Delmar, Miss Phyllis Thomas, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Joseph Harrington. The band and choir numbered a hundred and fifty, and the standard reached was unusually high.

We are glad to note the marked progress made during the season by Liskeard Orchestral Society, as evidenced on April 20, when Mr. C. E. G. Busbridge conducted very creditable performances of Mendelssohn's G minor Piano-forte Concerto, with Miss L. H. Austen as soloist, the 'Unfinished' Symphony, the 'Rosamunde' Overture, 'Poet and Peasant' Overture, Sibelius' 'Valse Triste,' and a Coronation March by Eidelberg. The occasion was the most important music-making that has taken place at Liskeard for many years, and with knowledge of the district we heartily congratulate Mr. Busbridge on achieving a difficult task. Songs sung by visiting vocalists represented Brahms, Saint-Saëns, Granville Bantock, Harold Lake (a Plymouth composer), Stanford, and Herbert Oliver.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

As is customary, the month of May has witnessed the termination of the indoor concert season, and there will be little music-making at Coventry during the summer months apart from the municipal band concerts at Naul's Mill Park. If the musical fare set before the local public in the winter just past has had little novelty, it has been full of interest. Well-known works hitherto new to the city have been heard, in several instances being interpreted with the aid of British soloists of repute. A welcome feature to be observed, however, in looking back over the city's musical life during the past nine months is the growing strength of its local societies. Coventry is becoming less dependent on outside professional help for the fulfilment of its winter programmes.

In the interests of economy, in view of the industrial situation, the Armstrong-Siddeley Orchestra abandoned its concert arranged for April 16. Considerable disappointment was occasioned, as an ambitious programme had been prepared.

Coventry Chamber Music Society gave its last concert of the season in St. Mary's Hall on April 19, when a large audience welcomed the Arthur Hytch String Quartet on its reappearance. The programme included Mozart's Quintet in G minor (Mrs. H. C. Hill, a Coventry player, acting as second viola), and Beethoven's Quartet No. 5, Op. 18. The vocalist was Miss Gladys Hems, and Miss Marjorie Astbury, a talented young violinist, played Bach's 'Chaconne' with much executive skill.

Coventry Musical Club gave its final concert on April 20 at the Craven Arms Hotel. Selections upon the oboe by Mr. F. H. Shephard, a well-known local instrumentalist, were a noteworthy feature of the programme.

Coventry Philharmonic Society at its annual meeting on May 10 reported that its adverse balance, amounting to over £50 twelve months ago, had now been converted into a credit balance. The past season had been a very busy one. The Society has included among its future fixtures the concert version of Gounod's 'Faust' and Parry's 'King Saul.' The customary 'Messiah' oratorio service will also be given at the Cathedral at Christmas.

Leamington Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Lionel Wiggins, gave 'Hiawatha' in the Winter Hall, Leamington, on April 20. The singers gave a painstaking reading of the well-known music. Miss Margaret Harrison, Mr. Arthur Gilbert, and Mr. John Huntingdon were the soloists.

Kenilworth Choral Society, which is under the guidance of Mr. T. C. Hurley, has Stanford's 'Revenge' and Dunhill's 'Tubal Cain' in active preparation for performance.

DEVON

Apologising for omission last month, we offer belated congratulations to Exmouth Choral Society for a very good performance on March 30 of the 'Hiawatha' trilogy. Mr. Raymond Wilmot had a fine choir and a better band than has been heard in the district for some time. The soloists—Miss Fifi de la Côte, Mr. Rowland Huyshe, and Mr. Charles Knowles—were all excellent, and something more.

The final performances for the season of Sidmouth and Honiton Choral Societies clashed on April 14. The former, conducted by Mr. J. A. Bellamy, gave 'Elijah,' the choir, apart from unequal balance of parts, singing quite satisfactorily and pleasantly. The string department of the band was quite good, but some reservations must be made for the wind. Miss Fiffine de la Côte sang very delightfully, with freshness of quality and dramatic sense; the other soloists were Miss Gertrude Winchester, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Charles Knowles.

At Honiton Mr. Lancelot Holden obtained good performances of 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' (Parry) and 'The Revenge' (Stanford), in which the choir was better than the band. The soloists in a miscellaneous part were Madame Isabel Hickson, Mr. Rowland Huyshe, and Mr. N. Granger.

Combined choirs of two Wesleyan churches (ninety voices) at Plymouth, on April 17, sang 'Hear my Prayer' and choruses from oratorios, conducted by Mr. H. Woodward, with Mr. Cecil Palmer at the organ.

A newly-formed Hut Choral Society at Dawlish was supported by an orchestra on April 17 in Cowen's 'St. John's Eve,' conducted by Mr. King. Though the performance was not free from accidents, it was such as to deserve encouragement. Mr. Rowland Huyshe and Mr. Walter Belgrove were the principals, the soprano being a local vocalist.

Considering the many difficulties which have beset Exeter Oratorio Society during the season, not necessary to enumerate but none the less harassing, the performances in the Cathedral on April 27 were in the nature of a triumph. Works by two local musicians were selected, Dr. H. J. Edwards' 'The Risen Lord,' and 'Balaam and Balak' by Dr. Ferris Tozer, hon.-treasurer of the Society. The composers conducted their own works, and Mr. Allan Allen conducted a satisfactory performance of 'Out of the darkness' (Gounod). Dr. Ernest Bullock was resourceful and artistic at the organ. Choir and orchestra numbered two hundred and fifty. The balance of the choir was better than usual, and the singing was good; but being behind the band, and not raised, the choir was not always sufficiently in evidence. The principal vocalists were Miss Fiffine de la Côte, Mr. Frank Webster, Mr. Walter Belgrove, and Mr. S. J. Bishop.

Teignmouth Choral Society's concert took place on April 28, and Mr. W. Smyth, a careful and capable conductor, obtained a bright and attractive performance of 'The May Queen.' The choir sang with vitality and confidence in all parts, the band was small but efficient, and the principal vocalists were Miss Fiffine de la Côte, Miss S. Dymond, Mr. Dean Trotter, and Mr. Walter Belgrove.

Two concerts on May 4 closed the season of the Barnstaple Music Society, of which Dr. H. J. Edwards is conductor, he being assisted by Mr. Sydney Harper. 'The Ascension' (H. J. Edwards), and Parts 1 and 2 of 'The Creation' were performed. The Barnstaple Society stands high in the standard of the county, both as regards choir and orchestra, which are entirely local in personnel. The singing was musically and bright. The orchestra, in addition to oratorio work, played the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, and the 'Ruy Blas' Overture. The solo vocalists were Miss Nora Delmarr, Miss May Keene, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. J. M. Northcote.

On April 13 Northtawton Orchestral Society, a new venture, was conducted by Mr. R. Phillips in an interesting programme. Mr. Albert Sammons visiting Torquay on April 14, with Miss Ethel Hobday, played Beethoven's Sonata in F for violin and pianoforte, Mendelssohn's Concerto, and three of his own compositions—a 'Cradle Song,' 'Humoreske,' and 'Hungarian Dance.'

The Kendall String Quartet played at several places in Devon and Cornwall in the week beginning April 18, and at Exeter gave a splendid performance of Frank Bridge's Quartet in E minor, and also played Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 6. The pure charm of violin solos (played by Miss Katharine Kendall) with string trio accompaniment (arranged by Miss Marjorie Clemens, second violin of the Quartet), made one dissatisfied with the effect of pianoforte with stringed instruments. The pieces played were a Handel Menuet, a Grave by Friedmann Bach-Kreisler, and a Bourrée, arranged by Moffat. Songs with string accompaniment were less successful, the singer being Miss Sybil Cropper. The songs, however, were interesting—Purcell's 'I attempt from love's sickness to fly,' 'O Death, rock me asleep' (Ann Boleyn, 1536), and 'Faire, sweete, cruel' (Thomas Ford, 1607). A Bach aria, 'Fall asleep,' was somehow not satisfactory.

Exeter Chamber Music Club closed the session on May with performances of Mendelssohn's Octet in E flat strings, the Bach Concerto in D minor, for two violins and pianoforte, Brahms' Liebeslieder Walzer, Op. 52, for pianoforte (four hands) and four voices, and songs by Frank Bridge and Morgan-Brown. It is surprising to note what has been accomplished during this first session, and how much interest has been aroused and education achieved. Dr. Ernest Bullock is the initiator and director of music.

DUBLIN

A very interesting concert was given at La Scala on April 17, in aid of the unemployed members of the Amalgamated Musicians' Union, under the capable direction of Mr. John Moody.

The last 'Mater' concert, on April 24, had for its chief attractions Mr. Harry Dearth, announced as 'the world's greatest baritone,' and Miss Kitty Fagan, the popular soprano. All credit must be given to the orchestra, and Mr. Vincent O'Brien, for its performance of Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite, Hadyn's 'Farewell' Symphony, and Tchaikovsky's Overture, '1812,' and to Dr. Ann Patterson, who conducted her own beautiful Interlude from the 'Dream of Grania' and 'Tara.'

Dr. G. E. P. Hewson gave two interesting organ recitals in St. Patrick's Cathedral on April 26 and 27, and displayed his acknowledged gifts in the interpretation of various styles, including Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, and Reubke's Sonata, the latter being much appreciated. The proceeds of both recitals were devoted to the special organ fund.

A very appreciative audience assembled in Aberdeen Hall on April 27 to enjoy a varied programme provided by Mr. Hubert Rooney, the Irish composer, whose vocal abilities are now sufficiently recognised. His selection revealed a catholic taste, but his dramatic items lacked vigour. Perhaps he was heard at his best in the 'Ballynaballad,' and in songs by Debussy. Miss Rhoda Coghlin played several pianoforte pieces with brilliant effect.

Aberdeen Hall was also the venue, on May 3, of Mr. W. F. Cope's concert, and it must have been gratifying to find that this old favourite was well supported. He himself sang in wonderfully good style such hackneyed songs as the Prologue from 'Pagliacci' and Allitsen's 'Lull Player.'

On May 8 the last of the Dublin Symphony Concerts was given at La Scala, under Mr. Vincent O'Brien, an proved a fitting wind-up of an excellent series. The outstanding attractions were Mr. Norman Allin, a really fine bass, and Miss Teresa Owens, a delightful soprano, one of Dublin's best, with a winning personality.

A movement is on foot to erect a suitable monument to the memory of Dr. Charles Marchant, who was for over forty years organist of St. Patrick's Cathedral, and who upheld the traditions of Roseingrave, Murphy, Robinson, and Stewart.

The annual distribution of prizes to the students of the Royal Irish Academy of Music took place on May 12, and the ceremony was carried out by the Lord Chief Justice who pointed out that this Institution, now in its sixty-fifth year, had done an enormous amount of good out of very slender resources. Needless to add, the present building acquired in 1871, is altogether inadequate for present requirements.

Prof. Robert O'Dwyer is to be congratulated on the enjoyable concert provided by the University College Musical Society on May 13. Mr. Arthur Darby led the orchestra, which did ample justice to the 'Ceirbhallan' Overture (O'Dwyer).

Following up the success of the recent campaign for making Kingston a self-contained centre for chamber music its performance, and its appreciation, it has been arranged to give twelve free Sunday concerts next winter, with chronologically arranged programmes and preliminary talks.

EDINBURGH

The annual concert of Mr. Moonie's Choir took place on March 30. The conductor having met with an accident a few days before the event his son, Mr. W. B. Moonie, took place and carried through the interesting programme. Licen David's ode 'The Desert' was excellently interpreted. W. B. Moonie's choral work 'Glenara' received a second performance, and was well received. Lydn's 'Spring,' and a female chorus from Moussorgsky's 'Alambo,' completed the list.

On April 2 Mr. Julius Harrison conducted an orchestral programme at the last concert of the Mossel series. Mr. Vin Godfrey continues to do splendid and solid work with the preparatory Royal Choral Union Class, and on April 9 a miscellaneous programme was given with distinction.

Choral Music shows distinct signs of revival at Edinburgh. The new Society with a fine membership, and known as the Catholic Choral Society, gave its first concert on April 4 under the conductorship of Mr. W. B. Moonie. Goring Thomas' 'The Sun Worshippers' was the feature of the programme.

The Royal Choral Union gave a Good Friday performance of 'Elijah' that made a fitting climax to an excellent season's work.

Mr. de la Haye is a local musician who is doing an extraordinary amount of spade work for music in the city. On April 7 his St. Andrew's Orchestral Society gave a highly successful concert. He has just completed a week's performance of comic opera in the Lyceum Theatre as conductor of The Southern Light Opera Company. 'The Pirates of Penzance' and 'The Country Girl' were exceedingly well performed. A new operatic venture, of which he is also musical director, with Mr. Hédmont as producer, is the Grand Opera Society. Performances of 'Provatore,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and 'Pagliacci,' will be given at the end of May.

KENT

For nearly thirty years Great Chart Parish Church has been endeavouring to instal a new organ. On April 6 these hopes were realised, and Dr. C. H. Merrill (organist of Ashford Parish Church) gave the first recital on a new organ built by Messrs. F. Browne & Sons, of Canterbury.

The outstanding features of the Hither Green Choral and Orchestral Society's concert on April 9 were Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet,' with Mr. Topliss Green as soloist, and Saint-Saëns' Piano-forte Concerto, in which the solo part was played by Mr. Benjamin Martin. Mr. Ernest Sumayne conducted.

Successful performances of the musical comedy, 'Havana' were given at Chatham by the Medway Amateur Operatic Society, from April 18 to 23, with Mr. Leslie Mackay as conductor.

The newly-formed Sandwich Choral Society gave its first concert on April 15, under the baton of Mr. J. D. Smith. 'The Daughter of Jairus,' miscellaneous part-songs, and songs by Miss Daisy Anderson, Messrs. Arthur Johnson and Frederick Noakes, comprised the programme.

The performance at Woolwich on April 14 of 'Judas Macabreus' by the Choral Society was highly satisfactory. The soloists were Miss Ethel Bilsland, Miss Margery Hammond, Mr. David Ellis, and Mr. Graham Smart. Mr. R. Grier-Thomas conducted. Eltham Choral and Orchestral Society gave a performance of the same oratorio on April 19, under the direction of Mr. Gilbert Lawson. Miss N. Williams, Miss G. Palmer, Mr. D. Ellis, and Mr. F. Taylor were the soloists.

Tenterden Choral Society performed 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' on April 15, with Mr. R. A. Whiteman conducting. 'Hiawatha' (Part 3) was chosen by Ashford Choral Society for its concert on April 19, under Dr. C. H. Merrill's conductorship. Miss Mary Armstrong and Mr. John Key were the soloists.

Hawkhurst and Northfleet Choral Societies both gave performances of 'Elijah' on April 20, Mr. G. Sivyver conducting at Hawkhurst and Mr. Geoffrey Hatten at Northfleet.

The Oriana Madrigal Society's concert at Blackheath, on April 18, was one of the finest heard in this locality. Miss Harriet Cohen was solo pianist, playing pieces by Arnold Bax and her own Sonata in one movement. Miss Gladys Marloe sang songs by Bax, and Mr. C. Kennedy Scott's choir sang beautifully in some French chansons.

Mrs. Ethel Clout's second concert of chamber music, at Dover, on April 27, attracted a large audience. Quartets by Beethoven and Mendelssohn were played, and Mr. Cecil Apled was the soloist in Beethoven's Violoncello Sonata in C.

Miss Daphne Ring's concert on May 12 aroused great interest. The benefit of her technical study under Sevcik was clearly shown in Sonatas of Handel and Grieg, and her own innate expressiveness added to the all-round appeal of her interpretations.

LIVERPOOL

The Liverpool Welsh Operatic Society made a highly successful début in three stage performances of Dr. Joseph Parry's Welsh opera, 'Blodwen,' in the David Lewis Theatre. It is the mission of the Society to stir up the interest of Welsh folk in dramatic as well as musical art, especially in subjects of historic and romantic incident, of which Wales possesses an ample store. The late Dr. Parry wrote three operas, of which 'Blodwen' has had the greatest success, both in Wales and in America. Some years ago it was taken in hand at Liverpool, but the projected performances fell through, and it is due to the energetic and enthusiastic people who have brought the admirable Welsh Operatic Society into being that 'Blodwen' has received its first performance in the city where its composer was once a resident. The music is lyrical, somewhat conventional (it was composed in 1876), and at its best in the chorus writing. The performance was superintended by Mr. Lewys James, who also took a leading part and shared the honours with Madame Laura Evans-Williams and Mr. David Evans.

Sir Ivor Atkins, of Worcester, has accepted the invitation of the Liverpool Church Choir Association to attend the forthcoming Festival as guest-conductor. The date fixed is October 18, and Sir Ivor will no doubt receive a warm welcome as a representative Church musician, Cathedral organist, Bach-lover and editor, and conductor of a Three Choirs Festival. As the guest-conductor of the Liverpool Association he will be the latest addition to a list which includes the names of Sir Hubert Parry, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. Varley Roberts, Dr. G. J. Bennett, and Mr. Tertius Noble.

A notable concert of the waning season was that given by the Oxtan and Claughton Orchestral Society in Birkenhead Town Hall on May 7. The fine combination of amateur and professional instrumentalists of both sexes, which possesses an able and experienced director in Mr. J. E. Matthews, was enjoyably heard in the 'Rienzi' Overture, German's lilted 'Nell Gwynn' dances, and Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the solo part in which was superbly played by Mr. Arthur Catterall.

Thanks to the enterprise of Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper the famous organist of Notre Dame, Paris, M. Marcel Dupré, has again been engaged to give a recital in St. George's Hall. The announcement (for Monday, June 6) creates keen pleasurable anticipation, and as a representative French organist M. Dupré will follow Guilmant and Saint-Saëns, whose performances, and especially improvisations, on the famous instrument at Liverpool still linger in the memory.

The musical public and especially students of the evolution of the piano-forte are indebted to Messrs Rushworth & Dreaper for a magnificent collection of clavichords, spinets, and harpsichords now on view in Rushworth Hall. The majority of these priceless instruments belong to Messrs. Broadwood. The exhibition was formally opened on May 10 by Dr. J. G. Adami, Vice-Chancellor of Liverpool University, who spoke with perception of the evolution of musical art, and expressed the opinion that these were good auguries for the future of music at Liverpool. It behoves all interested musical people in a wide radius of Liverpool not to lose the present rare opportunity for inspecting and perchance touching the clavichord of English make, 1770, the Hitchcock spinet, 1710, the Schudi two-manual harpsichord, 1790, with its swell louvres and six stops, the Zumpe pianoforte, 1766, and other supremely interesting examples in the Broadwood pianoforte, 1848, used by Chopin at his recitals in London, an instrument of great beauty of tone and wonderful preservation, and the quaint little conductor's pianoforte made in 1805 for Sir George Smart.

The three weeks' season of Gilbert and Sullivan operas at the Royal Court Theatre has been phenomenally successful. The chief event was the revival of 'Ruddigore,' one of the least known but most humorous of the series.

The phenomenal success of Mr. Joseph Greene's recent pianoforte recital was repeated on a second occasion in Crane Hall, on May 11, when he again played an assemblage of big items which only a really big player could carry through with such fine feeling, interpretative vision, and unflinching energy. This was evidenced in the case of the C minor, Op. 111, Sonata, Schumann's Carneval and Toccata, Liszt's Rhapsody No. 2, and Chopin's Berceuse, and Andante Spianato and Polonaise. In addition Mr. Greene played Norman Peterkin's 'Centaur,' a strongly original work and virile in its modernity of expression. This composition of our gifted townsman proved one of the successes of the recital.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

Manchester's orchestral season was brought to a brilliant conclusion on May 7, when Sir Henry Wood conducted a Verdi-Puccini-Wagner programme of operatic excerpts at Mr. Brand Lane's final concert. This date had been associated with Pachmann's last appearance here, but as his visit was deferred, Mr. Lane organized this additional orchestral concert. With Miss Agnes Nicholls, and Messrs. Mullings and Allin singing at the top of their form before a huge audience, all concerned may be congratulated on the result.

The Hallé Society annual meeting was held on May 11. The balance sheet revealed a loss of £1,500 on the working of fifty-two concerts, roughly divisible in equal proportions between those given at Manchester and what are termed the country concerts. Probably not less than £1,200 of this deficit may be allotted to increased salaries to members of the band, and under the present régime the conductor's salary is now a charge on the receipts. Sir Thomas Beecham's services in recent years were gratuitous.

The gross takings at each Manchester Hallé concert in past seasons are of interest in these days of deficiencies in all forms of artistic enterprise. In 1913-14, £320; 1914-15, £254; 1915-16, £204; 1916-17, £206; 1917-18, £234; 1918-19, £254; 1919-20, £297; 1920-21, £333. The last two periods were at the increased subscription rates, from which it would appear that although to-day orchestral hunger is greater than before, it is being satisfied rather by casual concert-going than by subscription. A hundred and fifty additional subscribers would float the concern on the tide of success. True, the guarantors to-day are more numerous than before, but too few of them are subscribers. A feature of the report of the annual meeting which impressed me was the rather matter-of-fact way in which the announcement appears to have been accepted that the conductor, 'apart from his strenuous artistic work, was devoting himself heart and soul to the task of examining and controlling every item of past expenditure, with the view of economising wherever possible.' With respect, it must be urged that it is no part of a conductor's job to shoulder duties of this sort. The business side of the Hallé Society's affairs wants reorganizing root and branch. Its executive should exercise more watchful oversight. The most praiseworthy artistic developments will founder if the business control does not supplement them with wise and far-seeing publicity schemes. The Hallé band feeds every choral enterprise in the North and Northern Midlands. Without those outside engagements the players cannot live. During our opera experiences there was work and to spare; now the alternatives are concerts, teaching, or cinema, and unless the executive wakes up to the need for a policy which is reasonably related to current requirements there is only one end—extinction. A continuance of the present passivity can only mean that the Society is digging its own grave. Possibly the articles of association preclude an increase of the numbers on the executive, which appears to have the power of nominating anyone. The guarantors do not possess this power, although they have to stand the rack when a loss is incurred. Autocratic control of this sort was not done in the Manchester of to-day. When Hallé directors were different, and to-day's chairman (Mr. Gust Behrens) can never be too highly praised for action taken, which resulted in Richter's early benevolent, ultimately harmful, autocracy. I am very sure that where Richter failed, the present executive will not succeed, and is for the elder statesmen on the executive to make provision for the future and see that there are those able to handle the Society's affairs who can do for the Hallé Orchestra now what they did in their prime in 1895. The two most recent nominations to the executive do not appear to carry much conviction in some well-informed quarters.

Mr. Hamilton Harty announced the reversion to two Thursday concerts as in pre-war times; but the Society is giving in conjunction with the Manchester Beecham Opera Society (presumably the Beecham Manchester choir conducted by Mr. W. A. Lomas) four Saturday Hallé operatic nights—viz., 'Carmen,' 'Samson and Delilah,' 'Pagliacci,' and some Russian excerpts. In addition there will be an extra 'Messiah,' the Pensioner Festival concert (which last January yielded £259, the nine members drawing pensions to-day absorbing £205), and probably the now popular Good Friday concert. I mention was made of next season's musical scheme, but the following have been engaged: Casals, Siliti, Josef Hoffmann, Busoni, Jascha Seidel, Arthur Catterall, Frederic Dawson, Thibaud, Michele Esposito, Agnes Nicholls, Carrie Tubb, Phyllis Lett, Norman Allin, and Robert Radford.

Our chief musical sustenance in recent weeks has been drawn from the mid-day series on the busy Tuesday market. From the overflowing character of the audience music would seem to provide harassed business men with some alleviation of to-day's burdens. On May 3 the Catterall Quartet played the Mozart G minor Quintet (second viola Mrs. Rawdon Briggs), and on May 4 the Beethoven C sharp minor (Op. 131). It is difficult to write in language of restraint on these two performances. For the present writer this Beethoven is the ideal expression of the idyllic. The graceful, swaying beauty of the music as of a grove of silver birches in the breeze recalls scenes of perfect loveliness. The vernal rapture of the music is as intoxicating as the spring-time airs by Schubert and Brahms, and the Catterall playing had that quality of unearthly tender beauty as of leafage in all its exquisite virgin purity. It was a glorious culmination to a winter of music. Writing in the Centenary number of the Manchester Guardian recently, John Masefield used the words: 'When people are happy together, I am quite certain they build something eternal, something both beautiful and divine which weakens the power of all evil things upon this life of men and women.' Of few things can this be said so truly of audiences listening to music such as this of Beethoven.

The same Centenary number contained two appreciations by Prof. Granville Bantock of the Hallé Choir and Mr. R. H. Wilson, and of the Manchester Orpheus Gladiators Society under Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt. It is not given everybody to go down to posterity in this manner, and musicians throughout Lancashire will rejoice with them in the distinction thus conferred upon these choirs.

From a street hoarding near the Royal Exchange I rescued the following:

Great revival of 'Intolerance.' D. W. Griffiths' Mighty Spectacle. Supported by 'Elijah,' 'The Messiah,' the Hallelujah Chorus!

(The Picture House was styled 'The Futurist.')

Miss Maria Brena's opera class at the Royal Manchester College of Music during the first fortnight of May gave a sequence of performances from 'Mignon,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Tristan,' and the 'Little Matchgirl,' which have proved most successful, whether from the performers' point of view, or that of the audience. During studentship the entire opera often quite needlessly exposes interpretative weaknesses. Miss Brena's method is less audacious, but probably more satisfactory.

ention must be made of distinction attained at the recambe Festival by the Manchester choirs conducted by Alfred Higson in the chief classes for male-voice and ed-voice choirs.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE

On April 9, Dr. Vaughan Williams lectured to the local branch of the British Music Society on 'A Musical Nation,' support of our claim to be a musical nation he instanced the wealth of folk-song and our pre-eminent position in the 16th century. Audiences must take a share of the blame for the state of English music during the 18th and 19th centuries, in that they encouraged foreign, and slighted native compositions. Composers were also partly in fault, because they had so often attempted to speak in the language of the foreigner that they had almost forgotten their own tongue. The present trend seemed to show that music would probably be ripe for another Bach in about a century, and there was no reason why he should not be from England.

The local Church Musicians' Union is fortunate in having H. Y. Dodds as one of its workers. He has on several occasions delighted the members with brilliant performances on musical interpretation, and on April 16 he again gave his hearers much sound, practical instruction in this exhaustible subject.

The V.W.C.A. Musical Club gave several performances of the 'Gondoliers' during the week ending April 9. This society has made marked progress since last season, the concerted items especially being sung with much more confidence. Miss Gladys Strachan conducted.

The Bach Choir made a new departure at its recital at the Cathedral on May 7. Chorales dealing with the birth, death, and resurrection of Christ, were sung, followed by the playing of the chorale preludes based on them. The chorists, 'The Spirit also helpeth us,' and 'Sing ye,' interpreted in the style that distinguishes the Choir's performances, opened and closed the recital. Mr. W. G. Whittaker was at the organ, and Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

The concert version of Edward German's 'Tom Jones' was given on April 21 by the Guild of Insurance Officials and Mr. V. Sadler's Musical Societies. The principals were Miss Hilda Nelson, Miss Lily Webb, Miss Bertha Light, Mr. J. Rogers, and Mr. H. Jones. A special word of praise is due to the orchestra. Nottingham University students' concert was again an interesting event on April 25. The coincidence of this concert with the restricted tram service had an unfortunate effect, and a smaller audience assembled than should have been the case. The principal was Elgar's 'The Black Knight,' Stanford's 'The Lark,' and Lee Williams' 'Song of the Pedlar' being also in the programme. In all cases the choir sang with much effect and freshness of tone, under Prof. Henderson's direction. The orchestra and ensemble class had been rehearsed by Mr. Allen Gill. The orchestral compositions were Mozart's 'Magic Flute' Overture and the first movement of Tchaikovsky's Serenade for strings. The ensemble played two movements from Dvorák's 'Dumky' quartet. The soloist was Miss Elfrida Ewen, the possessor of a pleasing mezzo-soprano voice.

On April 22 a large congregation attended St. Mary's Church at Lowdham, when J. Farmer's 'Christ and His Disciples' was given by Mr. Shaw's choir. The soloists were Miss S. Simpson, Miss Goulding, Mr. E. Fisher, and Mr. Jeacock. Mr. F. Slater was at the organ. On April 21 and two following evenings, the Chesterfield Operatic Society, greatly daring, ventured on grand opera for the first time, and gave a highly creditable performance of 'Faust' that reflected credit on the conductor, Dr. Staton. On April 30 a musical Festival took place at Chesterfield Parish Church, also under Dr. Staton, with twenty-three churches in the Chesterfield diocese taking part. The last Festival of the kind held upwards of twenty years ago. The anthem chosen was Tallis Trimmell's 'I have surely built Thee an house,' in which the tenor and bass solos were respectively sung by Mr. W. Shaw and Mr. L. Hartley. Orchestral accompaniments were provided by members of the Chesterfield Orchestral Society.

The numerous supporters of the Nottingham University College chamber music concerts of the past season will be glad to learn that it is hoped the series will be continued. The dates arranged are November 9 and December 1, 1921, January 24 and April 5, 1922. Miss Cantelo will be the pianist on each occasion, and the London Philharmonic, and Catterall String Quartets are announced to take part in the scheme.

SHEFFIELD

The spring concert of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society, like the winter concert, was marked by a first performance of an important choral work. This time it was not merely a first performance at Sheffield, but a first performance, on a complete scale, anywhere. The late Hamish MacCunn on more than one occasion took a Scottish Border ballad as a basis for an orchestral work, and the success of the orchestral Ballads 'The Ship o' the Fiend' and 'The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow' led him to attempt a setting for chorus and orchestra of four other of the best known and most dramatic of these old metrical tales. The method adopted is pretty much the same throughout the four. The tale is told as vividly as possible, the music following the story from point to point with wonderful closeness and dramatic effect. All the resources of a large orchestra, which includes unfamiliar 'extras' in a stage 'crash' rattle and 'a piece of clanking and jingling steel chain,' are used with masterly skill. There is a good deal of unison singing for the whole choir or for the parts in turn, the four-part harmony (in 'part-song' style) being reserved for special stanzas. The constantly changing speed, tonality, and character of the music, and its unflagging dramatic interest give a good deal of scope to an imaginative choir, and the Sheffield Amateurs, trained by Mr. G. E. Linfoot, chorus-master, took full advantage of their opportunities. Of the four Ballads 'Lamkin,' 'The Jolly Goshawk,' and 'Kinmont Willie' were given. 'The Death of Percy Reed,' for male chorus and orchestra, was omitted. Sir Henry Wood conducted, and secured a stirring performance. Miss Carrie Tubbs sang the 'Alleluiah' from Bach's 51st Cantata, Handel's 'Lusinghe più care,' and Elizabeth's 'Greeting' and Isolde's 'Narration' in the Wagnerian second half of the programme with brilliant success. The orchestra was effective both in the Ballads and in several orchestral works.

The Chesterfield Operatic Society, under Dr. Staton's direction, gave a series of well-prepared performances of Gounod's 'Faust' in the Corporation Theatre, Chesterfield, from April 21 to 23.

Mr. G. E. Linfoot, musical adviser to the Sheffield Education Committee, is continuing the organization of concerts for the Elementary School children. Two thousand children were present on April 22 at a delightful concert given by Miss Eva Rich's Ladies' Choir. Miss Rich, conductor, Miss Ethel Cook, accompanist, and all concerned gave their services to the cause with splendid generosity.

The Sheffield Branch of the British Music Society has established a music lending library. Sir Henry Hadow, president, and Mrs. J. A. Rodgers, hon. secretary and treasurer, have both contributed valuable collections of books and music, on long loan. The library already contains some five hundred works, all of great interest.

Mr. C. H. C. Biltcliffe's organ recitals at St. Augustine's Church, held fortnightly through the concert season, have regularly attracted large audiences. They came to a close with the recital given on May 13.

As we go to press we hear that the Harvard Glee Club has received an invitation to sing in France during the summer. Concerts are arranged for July 4 (Paris) and July 14 (Strasbourg), and other dates and places are under consideration. The Club consists chiefly of undergraduates, and has a great reputation in the States. The party will be in England for a few days in July, and again in August. Surely arrangements should be made for some performances here.

SOUTH WALES

The reform of the Welsh National Eisteddfod has been urged for some years past, and the committee appointed at Barry, last year, to consider this question, has now formulated its proposals for discussion at the Carnarvon National Eisteddfod in August next. At the sitting of the full committee at the City Hall, Cardiff, it was recommended, inter alia, that the National Eisteddfod consist of: (1) The Gorsedd; (2) The Eisteddfod Association; (3) Representatives of the permanent provincial and county eisteddfodau, and also (4) Representatives of the higher education authority in Wales, viz., the Welsh University, which shall be represented by eight persons nominated by the University Court—one for the University Court itself, one for each of the constituent colleges (Aberystwith, Bangor, Cardiff, and Swansea), and one for each of the boards established under the new charter, viz., the Board of Celtic Studies, the Council of Music, and the Extension (or Extra-Mural) Board. Perhaps the most important features of this 'Reformation' are the wider representation sought, and the endeavour to enlist, in the National Eisteddfod, the sympathy and ideals of the University authorities.

A performance of 'King Olaf' was given on April 14 by the Newport Choral Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. Arthur E. Sims. The Birmingham Symphony Orchestra provided the accompaniments, and the artists were Miss Annie Rees, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Joseph Farrington. The performance was completely successful.

At Cory Hall, Cardiff, on April 20, the Cardiff Musical Society, for its final concert of the season, presented a most interesting programme of unaccompanied part-songs: 'Sing we' (Morley, 1595), 'Ah, dear heart' (Orlando Gibbons, 1612); and in contrast, Bantock's 'March of the Cameron men,' Somervell's 'Weep you no more,' a Country Dance by Boughton, and Redford's 'Rejoice in the Lord.' Miss Caroline Hatchard (vocalist), Capt. Herbert Heyner (baritone), and Miss Kathleen Moorhouse (violinello) gave solos. The veteran conductor, Mr. T. E. Aylward, was accorded a splendid ovation, and the singing of the choir afforded ample testimony to its careful training. It is greatly to be regretted that no more suitable hall could be obtained than Cory Hall, with its limited capacity, for such an important occasion.

Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' was performed by the Barry Harmonic Society on April 24 at the Theatre Royal, Barry, under the conductorship of Mr. D. J. Thomas. The cantata was supplemented by a programme of miscellaneous character. The singing of the choir and of the principal artists—Miss Winifred Lewis, Mr. Manuel Jones, and Mr. Powell Edwards—coupled with the fine work of the orchestra, was of a highly satisfactory character.

The second concert of the Cardiff Catholic Choral Society was held at the Empire on April 17. The crowded audience thoroughly appreciated the choir's fine interpretation of Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle.' Choir and orchestra numbered two hundred and fifty, and were directed by Mr. T. J. O'Leary. The artists were Miss Rosina Buckman, Mr. Maurice d'Oisly, and Mr. Joseph Griffin.

The Roath Male-Voice Choir gave its first annual concert before a large audience at Cory Hall, Cardiff, on April 28. Under the conductorship of Mr. Stanley Barrett several choruses and part-songs were sung with acceptance. The Choir was assisted by local artists, who were well received.

The last of the Sunday series of orchestral concerts at Park Hall, Cardiff, on May 1, took the form of a complimentary concert to the conductor, Mr. Garforth Mortimer. The orchestral items included the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien,' and Coleridge-Taylor's suite from the Ballet music to 'Hiawatha.' Mr. Tom Bryant (harp), was heard to advantage in the first movement of Renie's Concerto for harp and orchestra, and Mr. H. C. Tonking ably officiated at the organ.

The Williamstown Royal Male-Voice Choir visited Tredegar on April 10, at the invitation of the Tredegar Orpheus Male-Voice Choir, to give a concert in aid of the funds of the latter organization. These two famous choirs are the keenest rivals in the most prominent competitions in the Principality. The choir, under the conductorship of

Mr. Ted Lewis, created a deep impression by its magnificent singing. 'Crossing the Plain' (Price) opened the concert, and was followed by 'The Tyrol' (Ambroise Thomas), 'The Crusaders,' 'Here's to Admiral Death' (Vaughan Thomas), 'Invictus' (Prothero), and 'Martyrs of the Arena' (De Rille).

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

In the last Abonnements concerts Mengelberg has given us a retrospect of his American tour by making up his programmes with the works he had conducted at New York, and naturally these programmes consisted for the most part of pieces which revealed his capacity in the most favourable light. The prominent features of these concerts, therefore, consisted of works such as Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, Strauss' 'Don Quixote' and 'Heldenleben,' Brahms' first Symphony, Debussy's 'Iberia,' and Mahler's first Symphony. More especially the last-named item received marvellous treatment at his hands. The consummate mastery which is embodied in this work reveals itself more and more at each hearing, and one cannot but wonder that it is not more widely known. Mahler wrote it at the comparatively youthful age of twenty-eight, and it is in reality his fifth work of that description, the preceding four symphonies having never been produced in public. They are preserved in the Weber museum at Dresden, having been rescued from destruction by a descendant of the great Carl Maria.

The only novelty to find a place in one of the programmes was Ernest Bloch's Jewish Rhapsody, 'Schelomo,' for violoncello and orchestra. An earlier work of Bloch's (his four Jewish Poems), heard here under rather unfavourable circumstances in February last, had prevented our forming a conclusive opinion of his powers, therefore an acquaintance with another of his compositions was very welcome, all the more as 'Schelomo' is considered to be the highest manifestation of his talents. It doubtless reveals rare musical craftsmanship; yet notwithstanding it must still be regarded as promise rather than achievement. The work reflects strikingly Oriental characteristics. The composer, however, refutes the idea of figuring as redeemer of the ancient Jewish music, much less of having resorted to borrowing his thematic material from authentic sources. He maintains that the Oriental colour is the outcome of his having been imbued by his Biblical subject. His 'Schelomo,' he says, was conceived under the impression derived from the sensuality of the Canticles of Solomon (i.e., Schelomo). It may be arguable whether the idea of letting this mighty personage be represented by a solo violoncello can be called a very happy one, nor has Bloch succeeded by so doing in bringing the figure of Solomon within easy reach of the audience. Indeed, we cannot too highly admire Handel's prescience in not having introduced into his 'Israel in Egypt' the person of Moses, who nevertheless is felt to dominate the work in spirit to a far greater extent than would have been the case if the prophet had figured in the cast of soloists. Apart from these considerations, Bloch has given evidence of no mean capacity as a composer. His orchestration is masterly, even though his demands in that direction may be regarded as somewhat extravagant. One drawback, however, is that his inventive powers fall short of his lofty intentions. 'Schelomo' met with a very favourable reception, which in no small part was due to the brilliant interpretation under Mengelberg's direction, and the inspired reading of the violoncello part by M. Marix Loevensohn. After the performance at New York, the composer was not slow in recognising his indebtedness to the famous conductor, giving evidence thereof by presenting Mengelberg with the original manuscript score.

The annual Easter performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion had this year, for obvious reasons, to be postponed. It was given on April 30 with Mesdames Noordewier, Reddingius and Ilona Durigo, and Messrs. Carl Erb, Tom Denys, and Max Kloos as soloists—a splendid ensemble. A novel feature in the performance was presented by Madame Wanda Landowska sustaining the cembalo part. She appeared also as soloist at one of the symphony concerts, en she 'presided' at the cembalo in Bach's fifth Brandenburg Concerto. She also provided an extra treat by playing the 'Italian' Concerto. Unfortunately her otherwise beautiful instrument proved on each occasion to be too weak for the large hall.

The winter season was concluded by the annual concert of the Pension fund for the members of the Orchestra. A fine performance of Beethoven's first and ninth symphonies marked the occasion as one of the great events of the season. The members of the solo quartet (Messdames a Bruhn and Meta Reidel, and Messrs. Louis van Tulder and Hendrik van Oort) acquitted themselves with a beautiful unity in the ensemble numbers, M. van Oort receiving special praise for his fine rendering of the fugitives.

The scheme of the last symphony concerts had provided a limited room for the appearance of soloists. Of these M. Alexander Schüller, who had accompanied Engelberg to America, has first to be mentioned for his masterly playing in Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto, in which he scored a well-merited success. No less successful was Madame Vera Schapira, who exhibited her stupendous technique in Liszt's 'Hungarian Fantasia' and Strauss's 'Juleske.'

On May 6 a church concert was given by the boys' choir of the Kreuzkirche of Dresden, well known to the great English and American colony that in pre-war times had sided at Dresden. This choir, which only lately made a successful tour through Sweden, is now visiting the more important towns of Holland in order to collect funds to provide poor children of the ill-fated Fatherland with the means of spending a few weeks in one of the neutral countries. Although the church in which the Kreuzkirche choristers were heard does not boast of very favourable acoustic properties, their singing was the object of much appreciation.

The last week showed a considerable ebb in solo recitals, which, however, that of the renowned violinist, M. Jacques Bibaud, who had not been here for a number of years, stood out prominently. His programme did not take a very high artistic flight, but his playing proved to be as fine as ever. Madame Leciair has visited us again, this time in company with Mr. Norman Wilks, whose distinguished pianoforte playing aroused great interest.

W. HARMANS.

BERLIN

Richard Strauss and a ballet! It seems an incongruity. In 1899, during a study of the pictures of Watteau, Lagard, and Bouchers, Strauss conceived the idea of writing an anacreontic ballet in the style of these masters. The scheme came to nothing. Years afterwards, Count Kessler turned his attention to the Russian Ballet, whose art meant a revolution of all æsthetic, plastic, picturesque, and musical conceptions. Strauss felt the breath of a new art, and the result was the 'Joseph's Legend' (Op. 63).

It was a memorable night of the musical season of Paris when, on May 15, 1914, Strauss conducted for the first time his new work. Djagilev had brought his celebrated Russian ballet to interpret the old story of the adventure of Potiphar's wife with the fair Joseph whom his brothers had sold to Egyptian traders and whose Parsifal-like ignorance stands in contrast to the voluptuous life of the puissant minister of Pharaoh. The war put the 'Legende' on the shelf, and it was nearly forgotten until Schillings, the new manager of the Berlin State Opera, brought it out for the first time in Germany. It is not likely that many theatres will follow suit, for the work can be adequately performed only by a corps de ballet that has been trained on the lines mainly laid down by the Russian Ballet. Such a corps is to be found at the Berlin theatre. There may have been more splendour in the Paris production, and the dancing was probably in a way superior, but taken as a whole the Berlin performance was artistically better, not only as regards the staging but also the art of the leading characters—Mlle. Filla Durieux as Potiphar's wife and Herr Heinrich Kröller as Joseph.

The Legend offers a tempting subject for a composer, and Richard Strauss, the symphonic writer with dramatic tendencies, was predestined for the work. The score brings nothing new, but in its way it is a master work. It is altogether of a youthful strength and clarity that seem to point to a return to a certain simplicity, a fact that deserves special mention. Strauss scored a great success. He has shown that he is still the leading musician of Germany, even though he may produce no more revolutionary works.

The other great musical event at Berlin was the reappearance of Busoni. Thereby hangs a tale. A set of young Viennese composers have clubbed together under the title of 'Anbruch,' i.e., 'break,' with the purpose of furthering the interests of men of ultra-modern tendencies. Following the Zeitgeist, and carried away by anti-intellectual ideas, they threw off the fetters of materialism and intellectualism. Instinctive power is pitted against the results of experience and observation. Woe betide the fine art of music if these young firebrands are successful. Luckily two factors are necessary to secure success: the artist, and—the public. The society was ill-advised when it brought its productions to Berlin, for the concert was a failure financially and artistically. The Berliner, with his Northern idiosyncrasies, is not easily carried away. He declined the unwholesome enthusiasm and unripe works of nascent musicians, foisted upon the public by a cleverly conducted press propaganda. Not only the controlling critics declined these emanations of mediocrity and incapability, but the public would have nothing of it. Thereupon the 'Anbruch' bethought itself of Busoni, and invited him to give three concerts, consisting of his own compositions. These took place within ten days with great success, a success that must be assigned to Busoni, not to the 'Anbruch.' In his very lengthy Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra, as well as in the 'Indian Fantasia' for pianoforte and orchestra, he revealed himself the phenomenal artist that he always was. Busoni does not possess the passionate pathos of Frederic Lamond or the brutal heroism of Eugen d'Albert, the personal 'Verinnerlichung' of Conrad Ansoor or the delicate formalism of Max Pauer—yet he is one of the greatest of living pianists. He scored less as a conductor, yet the orchestral concerts proved a great attraction for Berlin, and were of the highest interest. The programmes contained orchestral suites from 'Turandot,' 'Brautwahl,' portions of Busoni's new 'Faust' music, the Concerto for clarinet, a 'Berceuse élégiaque' for small orchestra, a Waltz in Viennese style, the Violin Concerto, a 'Nocturne symphonique,' &c.—music that on the whole appealed less to the senses than to the intellect. Yet there is a great deal of real creative work, and the general impression of these concerts was highly creditable to the composer.

F. ERCKMANN.

PARIS

REPRESENTATIVE CONCERTS

Recently Paris has been given over to concerts, as many as half-a-dozen often taking place in one day, with large proportions of the audiences apparently paying for their seats. Dêbutants, however, have considerable difficulty in filling even the smallest hall. The public simply will not pay to hear untried artists; nor are critical persons anxious to risk the boredom of listening to indifferent singing and playing. In the circumstances it is to be feared that such events are neither profitable nor do they advance the concert-givers' interests.

A particularly skilful singer, M. J. Ivantzoff-Moussorgsky, was heard at the Russian concert lately given at the Cercle Interallié. He is the fortunate possessor of a baritone voice of extensive compass, which is unusually even, and his command of tone-colour is remarkable. He has considerable flexibility, this being exemplified in 'Largo al factotum.' The programme also included Lensky's plaintive air from 'Eugène Onegin,' in which M. Bobrovitch displayed a lyric tenor voice of good quality, his observance of nuance being everything that could be wished. Madame Harchine's interpretation of the air from Rimsky-Korsakov's 'La Nuit de Noël' made an excellent impression. Satisfying, too, was the playing of M. Belosousoff, the violoncellist, whose tone in Rebikov's 'Chant sans paroles' and Glazounov's 'Sérénade' was delightful.

Meanwhile, tout Paris hopes that the Union Interallié, under whose auspices the concert took place, will extend its activities. Indeed, a concert given by representative English artists (the genuine article), and devoted to really good English music, would not come amiss.

At M. Paul Diéy's recent musical an especially pleasing group of songs by the Marquis François de Breteuil, who has gone to Shelley for his inspiration, had their first hearing. Graceful, always atmospheric, and charmingly melodious, they breathe the very spirit of the words. Should the cycle be published it would prove a boon to English vocalists of intelligence and taste. The songs were most artistically sung by Mlle. Hélène Baudry, whose delightfully fresh voice, always under admirable control, did them every justice.

Mention may be made of M. Louis Fleury's concert, at which Henschel's 'Thème et Variations,' for flute, had its first hearing at Paris. The well-balanced and essentially musical composition was skilfully played by M. Fleury, whose mellow, romantic tone and finished technique so often have enchanted London. M. Fleury also contributed de Polignac's 'Menuet' and 'Une Flûte dans les Vergers,' and Madame Fleury-Monchablon's interpretation of Debussy's 'Les Collines d'Anacapri' and Granados' 'Danse' showed exactly the right feeling.

Orchestral concerts have been chiefly remarkable for a difficulty experienced by the directors of the Padeloup series in obtaining permission to give excerpts from Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande' and Dukas' 'Ariane et Barbe Bleue.' The Opéra-Comique raised no difficulties, but to obtain the publishers' consent was another matter. Dukas' work, by the way, has been revived at the Opéra-Comique, and with success. Nothing new, however, has been produced. This perhaps accounts for the complaint of a French writer, who demands the revival of 'the works of Monteverdi, Marcello, Rameau, Méhul, Weber, and Beethoven.'

THE OPÉRA

The Opéra management has been content to ring the changes on the regular répertoire, a policy which at least yields crowded houses. A new ballet, 'Maimouna,' however, has been produced, with music by Gabriel Grovlez, who has made good use of local colour for his Eastern subject. Suppleness and delicacy distinguish the music, along with a certain elegance of tournure, which stamps M. Grovlez as a musician of unusual ability. The principal rôle is danced by Mlle. Aida Boni whose appearance at Covent Garden will be remembered. Apart from the actual perfection of her dancing, she thoroughly enters into the spirit of the story.

'Tristan' has had two performances at the Théâtre des Champs Elysées, so enterprisingly directed by M. Jacques Hébertot. The work was sung in Dutch by the National Netherlands Opera Company, with M. Jacques Urlus and Madame Poolmann-Meissner in the name-parts. Both singers triumphed, particularly in the inordinately long duet, while Madame Poolmann's singing of the 'Liebestod' had points in common with Ternina's unforgettable interpretation. Shortly before the appearance of the National Netherlands Company 'Tristan' had been performed by an Italian troupe. But the palm must be awarded to the Hollanders.

The Museum of the Opéra has been enriched by two of Patti's guises, those worn by her in 'Barbiere' and 'Romeo et Juliette.' Musical Paris respectfully takes stock of these vestures.

GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

THE COSTANZI

April saw two premieres at Rome's principal theatre, viz., 'Anima Allegra' (A Happy Soul) of Franco Vittadini and 'Piccolo Marat' of Mascagni. First in point of time comes 'Anima Allegra,' which met with success under the direction of Signor Eduardo Vitali, and with Signorina Gilda della Rizza as prima-donna. With a libretto by Giuseppe Adami and plot taken from the 'Anima Allegra' comedy of the brothers Quintero, the opera relates a simple love story which takes place in Spain about the year 1830. The music is happily inspired, and the work will be repeated in the principal cities of Italy.

The new opera of Pietro Mascagni, which has been announced for over a year, has at last been staged amidst universal applause. The libretto is by Forzano, and is based on an episode of the French Revolution. The work, however, contains no historical figures, the author holding the opinion that it is 'ridiculous to bring the heroes of history before the foot-lights.'

The opera was conducted by the composer himself, with the famous tenor, Signor Hippolito Lazaro, as the Lit Marat and Signorina Gilda Della Rizza as Mariella. The first representation took place on May 2. Mascagni immensely popular at Rome, and it is no exaggeration to say that his new opera gained him a delirious success. To the intrinsic merits of the work, it contains many beautiful and Mascagnian pages, particularly the splendid love duet between Marat and Mariella in the second scene and the curious and characteristic 'Round of the black devils' (The march of the negro soldiers of the Revolution with which Act 3 opens. On the other hand, it must be owned that there is a good deal of music, especially in Act 2, which is reminiscent, particularly of 'Iris,' and the prominence given to the chorus has led to a regrettable weakening of the orchestral part. Mascagni's fame remains what it was, and it is not likely that this—his thirteen—opera will substantially alter the position which he has gained with thirty years' labour. The Costanzi has also to record two highly successful concerts given by Toscanini on his return from America. The programmes included Brahms' Variations on a theme of Haydn, the Prelude to the 'Meistersinger,' and a symphonic poem 'Juventus,' which is the finest work hitherto produced by Victor de Sabata, the young composer dealt with by Signor Gatti in the April number of the Musical Times. Amongst the concerts held at the hall of the Royal Philharmonic Society, three are of special interest. On April 18 a Bach commemoration was given when the programme contained the Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue; 'Dear Jesus' (air for soprano, with obbligato); Gavotta, Prelude, and Fugue in A minor, for pianoforte; 'List to the choir of sweet flutes' (air for soprano and three flutes); and Concerto in D minor, for three pianofortes and strings. On April 11, the famous Polish pianist, M. Augustus de Radwan, gained a notable triumph with a programme chiefly devoted to Chopin, the remaining items being the Passacaglia of Bach, and Schubert's Impromptu in G major. The third concert to be noticed also closed the present season of the Philharmonic, and was devoted to modern Italian music all performed for the first time at Rome. The occasion was a phenomenal success, and worthy of a longer notice than can be given here. The principal performers were Casella and the Venetian violinist, Remy Principi, who is without doubt one of the finest exponents in Italy. The concert opened with a Sonata for violin and pianoforte of De Guarneri, in three movements; then came an extraordinary composition of Casella, called 'Pupazzetti,' which bears the date 1916, is written for the pianoforte and small orchestra, and is described as 'Music for Marionettes.' It is a queer hotch-potch of squeaks and squalls, a sort of apotheosis of unheard-of orchestration with a playful mixture of famous themes—the Swan motive of 'Lohengrin'—blandly allied to the classic originality of 'Three Blind Mice'—and it certainly has the merit of producing uncontrollable laughter in the audience. But the music . . . ! We then heard the same composer's latest pianoforte work, dated 1920, and entitled 'Eleven Infantile Pieces,' divided into a Prelude (a diatonic waltz on the white notes), a Canon (on the black notes), a Bolero, a 'homage to Clementi' for five fingers, a Siciliana, Gigue, Minuet, Carillon, Ninna-Nanna, and final Galop. Some of these miniatures, particularly the Siciliana, Carillon, and Ninna-Nanna, are distinctly melodious, but the entire composition seems to be an ironic exercise of exceptional technical skill. The third item was the Siciliana and Burlesque for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, also by Casella, and this production prepared the way for a delightful musical poem for violin and pianoforte inspired by the story of Mary of Magdala, and written by Albert Gasco, the talented musician who is also critic of the Tribune. This composition is deeply inspired and is of great artistic value. Its merits were amply recognised by the great audience. A spirit of mischief, however, must have prompted the compilers of the programme, who have wished this masterpiece between Casella's Burlesque a banality of Castelnovo-Tedesco, for violin and forte, entitled 'Captain Fracassa.' The concert was led by a magnificent poem for soprano, choir, and orchestra, derived from the myth of Endymion, with poem by Alexander Fraglia and music by Julius Bornard, both written expressly for the Philharmonic Society. Signor Bornard revealed himself a composer of no mean order, who learnt much in the school of Wagner, and is a capable writer of orchestration. This memorable concert was led by Maestro Setacciolo.

He Sala Bach continues to maintain the prominent position it has acquired from its opening. One of the most interesting of its concerts was that given on May 3, when the celebrated Spanish violinist, Señor Joan Manen, performed marvellously on the Strad which once belonged to Paganini.

Erruiccio Busoni has lately been at Rome, giving recitals at the Augusteum. Also he gave one delightful concert in semi-privacy for the members of the Musical Academy of the Roman University, when he played Franck's Prelude, Choral, and Fugue, a Sonata of Beethoven, Chopin's Six Studies, and his own Toccata and Fantasy du concert on 'Carmen.' On May 1 he 'débutted' at the Augusteum as conductor, to the general regret, since the public is not able—or willing—to see in his conducting qualities the same almost divine qualities that it attributes to him as pianist.

The Augusteum has also had a visit from Joseph Bonnet, organist of St. Eustace at Paris, who was heard in the following programme: Canzona (Gabrieli), Ricercare (Bach), Toccata (Frescobaldi), Grand Jeu (Du Mage), Pour Monique (Couperin), Prelude (Clerambault), Concerto for organ and orchestra, Op. 7, No. 4 (Handel), Mass and Fugue in G minor (Bach), Symphony-Concerto in D minor (Guilmant).

It is possible only briefly to notice the interesting concert given by the Society of Friends of Music on April 9, when Signor Respighi accompanied his wife, Signora Elsa Olivieri, who sang ancient and modern songs, including some of her own compositions and of her husband's, and the splendid pianist, Signor Eugène Albini, delighted us with a virtuoso exhibition of music for the viol da gamba, comprising the Sestetto (Bononcini, 1672-1750), Sarabande (Visconti, 1600-1750), 'Le Papillon' (Caix d'Hervelois, 1700- ?), and ended on an original 17th century instrument.

A concert of altogether exceptional interest was given in the church of St. Ignatius on April 20, in aid of the fund for the restoration of churches damaged or destroyed in the war. The singers of the Sistine choir, reinforced by singers from the Roman basilicas, performed unpublished music of Don Lorenzo Perosi, and the famous silver trumpets, which have never been heard except in Papal functions, were sounded from the cupola of the church. The singers were vested in the traditional violet cassocks of the Sistine Chapel, and were accommodated on a raised gallery at the east end of the church, in front of the High altar, on which an intense white light was shed from above, the rest of the church being in the half-light of late afternoon. As a spectacle the result was very impressive, but one could not help feeling that much was lost by taking the Sistine choir and the trumpets out of their original setting. Especially was this noticeable at the entry of the choir in procession to the mystic sounds of the hidden trumpets; for it was a procession which meant nothing, as the climax—the Sedia statoria with the peacock fans, and the white-robed figure of the Pope—was, of course, lacking. Whatever one's religious opinions may be, this ritual is certainly superb and unique, and cannot be reproduced except in its entirety. The concert nevertheless was a great success. The programme comprised Chorale for organ (Bach); the five trumpets, 'at the entry of the Pope'; 'Tu es Petrus,' for five voices (Perosi); Benedictus for six voices, Perosi; Exhortory from the Grand Requiem Mass, for four and eight voices, and Gratia Dei (Perosi); Preghiera, for organ (Bassi); the silver trumpets, 'at the Elevation'; Pater noster, for four voices (Perosi); Dies Iræ and Libera from the Grand Requiem Mass (Perosi); Cantate Domino, for four voices (Perosi). Maestro Renzi, organist of St. Peter's, presided at the organ.

The annual funeral commemoration of the late King Humbert, postponed from March 14, took place in the Pantheon, where are the Royal tombs, on April 18. On this occasion the Royal Philharmonic Society of Rome always offers a prize for the best Mass written for the commemoration, and this year the competition has had a particularly successful result, the prize having been awarded to Signor Adolphus Bossi, brother of the better known M. E. Bossi, and organist of the Duomo of Milan.

LEONARD PEYTON.

VIENNA

The first performance of Julius Bittner's new opera, 'Die Kohlhaymerin,' was given at the Opera on April 8. The story is laid at Vienna in the early part of the 19th century, and deals with the love affairs of a widow, Helene Kohlhaymerin. The work is in three Acts, the first in the widow's house, the second at a Viennese ball, and the third in the office of the chief of police. While containing some good individual numbers, the work as a whole is not of outstanding importance, the items worthy of mention being a rollicking baritone song in Act 1 and a very fine chorus in waltz time in Act 2. The title-rôle was sustained by Fräulein Lehmann. Other artists who appeared whose work deserves mention were Herr Gallos (Pichler), Herr Krenn (Giacomelli), Herr Fischer (Salvatore), Herr Maikl (Chief of Police), and Fräulein Jovanovic (Babette). The opera was taken out of the repertoire after only three performances.

On April 12 Mr. Albert Coates conducted the Wiener Symphony Orchestra in the Grosser Konzertsaal at a concert in aid of the British relief fund for Viennese children. The programme consisted of the 'Enigma' Variations of Elgar, the 'Siegfried Idyll' and the Trauermusik from Götterdämmerung, and Scriabin's 'Divine Poem,' the last-named receiving its first performance at Vienna on this occasion. Mr. Coates was accorded a great reception. Especially noticeable was the warm applause at the end of the Elgar Variations, due mainly to the conductor's masterly handling of the orchestra in No. 14. The 'Divine Poem' was on the whole very well interpreted. Two or three slight slips were no doubt due to the players' lack of familiarity both with the conductor and the work being performed.

Hubermann has given three concerts during April which have all been well attended, though they contained no novelties.

The Opera Ballet has just returned from a tour of Spain. Unfortunately the company arrived at Madrid at the same time that the Russian Ballet was performing there, and the contretemps proved a financial disaster that has stopped all likelihood of the contemplated tour of South America being undertaken by the Viennese artists.

Last summer, Shakespeare's 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' with Mendelssohn's music, and Weber's 'Preciosa,' were performed as pastorals in the gardens of the Belvedere Palace. It is proposed to continue these performances, and a start was announced for May 28 with Shakespeare's 'Tempest,' to a new musical setting by Felix Weingartner, the director of the Volksoper. STANLEY WINNEY.

The adjudicators' report of the Carnegie Trust music publication scheme announces that the following works have been chosen, out of sixty-seven, at the recent examination:

- Arthur Bliss—Chamber Rhapsody for two voices, wood-wind, and strings.
- Ivor Gurney—'Ludlow and Teme.' Song-cycle for solo voice, pianoforte, and strings.
- J. B. McEwen—Symphony, 'Solway.'
- E. S. Mitchell—Fantasy Overture.
- W. G. Whittaker—Theme and Variations for pianoforte and strings.

In addition to these the adjudicators recommend the following supplementary awards:

- P. Napier Miles—Opera, 'Markheim.' MS. copy of score and parts.
- Harry Farjeon—Mass, 'St. Dominic.' Publication of vocal score.

The Mendelssohn Scholarship has been awarded to Arthur Lawrence Sandford. Mr. Sandford is twenty-two years of age, and was trained at the R.A.M. His compositions include a setting of 'The Blessed Damozel,' a one-act opera, 'Drinos and Cassandra,' and a comic opera, 'A Lover of Japan,' produced at the R.A.M. in 1916.

The Guild of Singers and Players, whose excellent series of concerts at Steinway Hall is in progress, was founded by a committee of well-known musicians, and not, as stated in our last issue, by Madame Lily Henkel and Mr. Norman Notley.

Maidstone Orchestral Society gave a concert on May 11, under Mr. Frederic Cole, with Miss Carrie Tubbs as vocalist. The programme included Grieg's 'Sigurd Jorsalfar' Suite and two Elegiac melodies for strings, and a Prelude, 'Aurora,' by Mr. Horace Dunn, a young Maidstone composer.

CONTENTS.

Page.

The Jubilee of the Royal Albert Hall and the Royal Choral Society. III. Profitable Utilization. By Herman Klein	393
The Dramatic Works of Vincent d'Indy. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	400
Some Italian Composers of To-day: V. Vincenzo Davico. By Guido M. Gatti	403
The Organ Works of Bach: IX. Bach and the Transcription. By Harvey Grace (continued)	405
New Light on Early Tudor Composers: XVIII. Thomas Ashwell. By W. H. Grattan-Flood	408
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	409
Decentralisation: An Experience. By C. & Becket Williams	411
Rutland Boughton's 'The Immortal Hour.' By Robert Lorenz	412
Old Italian Music at the British Museum	414
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	415
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	416
New Music	418
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	424
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett	427
Choral Notes and News. By W. McNaught	428
The Royal Academy of Music	429
Chamber Music for Amateurs	429
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	429
Church and Organ Music	430
Harrow School Memorial Organ. By W. W. Starmer	430
Letters to the Editor	433
Sharps and Flats	435
Sixty Years Ago	435
The Novello Choir	435
Glastonbury Festival	436
Music in the Provinces	436
Musical Notes from Abroad	442

Music:

'Very Bread, good Shepherd, tend us.' Short Anthem or Introit. By STANLEY MARCHANT	419
--	-----

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. 'O Lovely May.' Trio for Female Voices. By Edward German.
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

- BESLY, M.—"In the hour of my distress." Anthem, S.S.A.A., together with Chants for certain Psalms. 3d.
- BOYCE, ETHEL—"The Vision of the Simple." Cantata for female voices, in three parts. 2s.
- FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"Folly's Song." Four-part Song. (No. 1391, Novello's Part-song Book.) 4d.
- "A lullaby of love." Part-song for Male Voices. (T.T.B.B.) (No. 574, The Orpheus.) 3d.
- "Vision of Belshazzah." Dramatic Ballad for Male Voices. (T.T.B.B.) (No. 573, The Orpheus.) 4d.
- HARWOOD, BASIL—"A heavy heart" (Op. 36). Motet for unaccompanied chorus. 6d.
- MARCHANT, STANLEY—"Very Bread, good Shepherd, tend us." Short Anthem or Introit. (No. 940, The Musical Times.) 2d.
- QUEF, C.—"Désespoir." (No. 80, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 1s. 6d.
- SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 348), contains the following music in both notations: "Little Boy Blue." Unison Song. ALLAN BIGGS. 2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

SCHOOL SONGS, Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notation, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A B

No. 942. "Elftintown." Two-part Song. GRANVILLE BANTOCK — 1½d.

SOWERBUTTS, J. A.—Caprice in D flat. (No. 81. Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series. 2s. 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 3248. "O Lovely May." Arranged as a Trio for Female Voices. EDWARD GERMAN 3d.

No. 2351. "Beside Thy Cradle." Choral from the "Christmas Oratorio." J. S. BACH 1½d.

No. 2353. "Hark! hark, my soul!" Hymn-Anthem. P. E. FLETCHER. 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—Scherzo-Caprice. For Organ 75 cents (3s.).

DELAMARTER, E.—March. For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

—Intermezzo. For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

HYDE, H. E.—"Le Bonheur." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

—"Spring." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

THOMPSON, VAN D.—Theme Arabesques and Fughetta. For Organ. $1.50 (6s.).

MR. JACQUES E. HOPKINS

OF THE

Albert Hall Ballad and Sunday League Concerts, and 1st Grand Prize winner of Singing at the Paris Conservatoire of Music.

LESSONS GIVEN IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND INTERPRETATION.

SPECIAL COACHING IN FRENCH.

Write for terms, &c.,

160, Wymering Mansions, Maida Vale, W.9.

ESSAY, A.R.C.O.—"Seven Lamps" and "Judgment," both 3 models and hints. Enclose 3s. 6d. each case 1 "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy Descriptive Song "THE VOICE OF THE DEEP" (Oakley). Compass: G (or low E flat) to E flat. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—Handsome One-Manual Pipe-Organ 3 Stops. Mahogany case. Foot blown. Price, £55. Apply Parkinson, 12, Ashburnham Gardens, Eastbourne, Sussex.

HOME AND COLONIAL TRAINING COLLEGE WOOD GREEN N.22.

WANTED, in September next, RESIDENT WOMAN LECTURER for Music. Highest qualifications. She will also take full part in supervision of Students' School Practice. Salary, Secondary Burnham Scale with "carry over." Candidates should be members of the Church of England. Apply, The Principal, not later than June 7.

FOR SALE.—Two-Manual and Pedal Reed Organ (Karn). 14 Stops, hand and foot blown. Polished oak case; a new. Suitable for student or Church. Cheap. Apply, J. Berry, 18, Colwick Road, West Bridgford.

TENOR WANTED.—All Saints', Devonshire Road, South Lambeth. £12. Walter Attersoll, 21, Thurleston Road, S.E.27.

ST. JOHN'S, Notting Hill, W. — Male ALTOS required. Salary, £12 per annum, plus £4 per annum temporary bonus. Write J. S. Robson, 33, Colville Terrace, W.11.

COMMUNION SERVICE in E flat, suitable for Parochial use, by ALBERT E. HALLS, Organist of South Weal Presbyterian Church, Novello, 1s. Send 6d. for specimen copy to Composer, 39, Madras Road, Ilford.

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male Quartet, by Arthur Mangelsdorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd. 160, Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarsbaw, 49, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

ELKIN & CO.'S PIANO AND STRING SERIES.

NEW SERIES OF GOOD MODERN PIECES SPECIALLY ARRANGED FOR PIANO TWO VIOLINS, 'CELLO, AND BASS AD LIB.

CARISSIMA ... ..	Edward Elgar	7. VESPERALE ... ..	Cyril Scott
ROSEMARY ... ..	Edward Elgar	8. REVERIE... ..	Ed. MacDowell
INTERMEZZO ... ..	Cyril Scott	9. DREAM CASTLES ... ..	Brian Hope
PASSACAGLIA ... ..	Cyril Scott	10. NOCTURNETTE ... ..	Brian Hope
THREE LITTLE WALTZES (No. 1)	Cyril Scott	11. TWO EASTERN SONGS	Agnes Mary Lang
THREE LITTLE WALTZES (No. 2)	Cyril Scott

(FURTHER NUMBERS IN THE PRESS.)

Price, each, 2s. 6d. net.

"An excellent new departure. . . . Should be extremely popular in places where resources are limited, and light but not noisy music is required."—Musical Opinion.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.
AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,
L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post in T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, and Essay Course with models. 44 Successes in One Year.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 171 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 45 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), gives
Lessons, by post, in Harmony and other Theoretical Subjects, and prepares for Examinations. Terms very moderate. 18, Chanters
Road, Bideford.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 390 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-
INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c.,
apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Over 100 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920),
specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., will resume her
Private Lessons in Singing in September. Studio, 32,
Wigmore Street, W. 1.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incor- porated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY AND COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
- COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
- DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
- FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
- ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
- DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
- PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
- DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
- MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
- IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes.
L.R.A.M. &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private
Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and
R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

DR. TAYLOR gives LESSONS by correspondence in all Musical Subjects, Elementary or Advanced. Diploma and Degree work. Manuscripts revised. Accompaniments written, &c., &c. Terms moderate. Portland Place, Lancaster.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) A.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (3) F.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

RECENT SUCCESSSES:

- |                         |                          |
|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| 6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. | 11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914. | 12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.  |
| 5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915. | 9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.  |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.  |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.  |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. | 7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.  |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

KING'S COLLEGE SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE.

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL for the Public Schools. CHOIR SCHOOL for King's College Chapel. Inclusive Fees, 80 guineas, reduced to £25 for CHORISTERS who follow the regular curriculum.

A TRIAL OF VOICES to fill vacancies in the Choir will be held on Tuesday, July 12.

Candidates must have a good ear and good voice, and should be between nine and twelve years of age.

For particulars apply to The Dean.

Names to be sent in not later than July 4.

SOLO SOPRANO (or MEZZO) WANTED for American Episcopal Church, Nice. October-May. Salary 400 francs per month. Second-class fare both ways. Very light work. Candidates must have some private means. Address, John W. Potter, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., London, W.1.

ALTO WANTED for St. Peter's, Bayswater. Good reader. £20 per annum. Write, Organist, 28, Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W.13.

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Tenor Lay-clerk wanted. £100. For particulars, apply to The Precentor, The Cathedral, Ely.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

There is a VACANCY in the CHOIR for a BASS CHORAL SCHOLAR. Choral Scholarships are tenable by those who intend to take a University Degree. The value of the Scholarship is £80 a year with certain allowances.

The COMPETITION will be held on WEDNESDAY, July 13.

Applications to be sent in not later than July 6.

For further information apply to the Dean, King's College, Cambridge.

SOPRANOS WANTED for CHOIR of West-End Church. Apply, "G. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST EXHIBITION.—Election to an Organist Exhibition at Jesus College, Oxford, will be made during the present term. Value £60 a year. The Exhibitor will be required to matriculate and pass through the ordinary course to the Degree of B.A. Applications should be sent at once to the Principal, from whom particulars may be obtained.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, young, good Churchman. Willis 3-manual organ, recently rebuilt. Salary, £80. Apply, Vicar, St. Andrew's Vicarage, Halstead, Essex.

ORGANIST (experienced) required for Lewisham High Road Congregational Church, Brockley, S.E. Applications, with full particulars, to Mr. Clayton C. Hall, 14, Clifton Road, Brockley, S.E.4.

ORGANIST of considerable experience available for temporary duty. Highly commended. Church of England. Wright, Derry Downs, St. Mary Cray, Kent.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER wanted for St. Matthew's Parish Church, Redhill. Anglican and Congregational Music. Fine three-manual organ, by Hunter. Salary £105. Apply, enclosing copies of qualifications, by letter only, to Churchwarden, 24, Gloucester Road, Redhill, by June 8th.

WANTED, ORGANIST for the First Presbyterian Church, Ballymena. Particulars as to salary, prospects, &c., can be had from the Secretary to the Committee, Mr. F. J. Hinds, Bank of Ireland, Ballymena.

DERRY LORAN PARISH, COOKSTOWN, ULSTER.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER required for Parish Church. Salary, £50. Good prospects for tuitions. Apply to R. H. Twigg, Hon. Sec. to Vestry, Cookstown, Ulster.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER (male or female) WANTED for Larkhall Parish Church. Salary, £60. Applications with testimonials to be lodged not later than Saturday June 4, with John Paterson, Claremont, Montgomery Street, Larkhall.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, Galway, Ireland. Very light duties. New 3-manual organ by Norman & Bear, electrically blown. Salary, £75. Apply, Canon Berry, B.D., The Rectory, Galway, Ireland.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED. July Commencing Salary, £60. Excellent private connection for disposal. Apply, stating qualifications, age, with testimonials, to Rector, Wincanton, Somerset.

LADY, L.R.A.M., living in seaside town, wishes (through family bereavement) to exchange an excellent connection of pupils for one in suburb of London (S.W. district preferred). Highest references. Address, "L. M.," c/o Novello & Co. Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

HOLIDAY Exchange of House and Duty offered by Organist of Ottery St. Mary, Devon (near Sidmouth) August-September. Three Sundays. Stanley Chippardfield, F.R.C.O. Cromwell House, Ottery St. Mary, Devon.

THE PIONEER CLUB for Professional and Business Women has been reopened at 12, Cavendish Place, W.1. Annual Subscription, £4 4s. No entrance fee (pro tem.).

DEGREES IN MUSIC and how to obtain them. The American Degrees of Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. Also Degrees of Oxford and Cambridge. Thorough preparation. "Zeta," care Deacon's, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

A SONG-WRITER, with a "Gift of Melody," seeks collaborator with good knowledge of TECHNICAL THEORY, who is in a position to launch the songs. "B.," 23 Albert Square, Clapham Road, S.W.9.

ORCHESTRELLE by Aeolian Co., New Bond St. Exceptionally fine tone. Condition practically as new. Walnut case, ivory keys. Pre-war cost, £350. A real bargain at £175, with 100 rolls music. Size 6-ft. 2 in. by 5-ft. 8 in. by 2-ft. 6 in. Davidson's, Lyndhurst Gardens, Finchley, N.3.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

PIANO (German Grand).—Excellent tone and condition. Offers. Seen by appointment, 12, Eaton Rise, Ealing.

TWO-MANUAL Chamber ORGAN.—Great, 5 Swell, 5; Pedals, 1; 3 Couplers, 4 Composition Pedals, Tremulant (including 2 full-compass 8-ft. Reed-). Hydraulic blowing engine £400. Seen by appointment, Northernhay, Dollis Avenue, Finchley, N.3.

IMPRESSIONS

(L'ALMANACH AUX IMAGES).

A VOCAL SUITE

FOR SOLO AND CHORUS OF LADIES' VOICES.

THE POEM BY

TRISTAN KLINGSOR.

The English Version by W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

GUSTAVE FERRARI.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Orchestral Score by JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

Parts for Strings, Wood-Wind and Horn (5 players), or Organ, may be had on hire.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR HARVEST

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS IN E—CHANT SERVICE ... ..	4d.
BENEDICTE IN E ... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE IN E ... ..	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN E ... ..	4d.
ANTATE DEUS IN E ... ..	4d.
COMMUNION SERVICE IN E ... ..	1s.

ANTHEMS.

RESSED BE THOU—FOUR VOICES ... ..	4d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
INE, O LORD—SHORT ANTHEM ... ..	2d.
CLAP YOUR HANDS ... ..	4d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
AS GLAD—FESTIVAL ANTHEM ... ..	4d.
RVEST OR FESTIVAL HYMN, with words—
" SING TO THE LORD" ... ..	1d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of churches and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."
Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c. &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
g to the Lord of Harvest ... ..	4d.	3d.
hile the earth remaineth ... ..	4d.	3d.
ressed be the Name of the Lord ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES

ERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
--------------------	-----	---------

Or, separately:—

Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Jubilate ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
ERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... ..	1s. 4d.	10d.

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
e Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison) ... ..	4d.	2d.
magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

oix Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
entence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use) ... ..	2s	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

- "THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD."
 "SUN OF MY SOUL."
 "THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
 "DIVINE LOVE."
 "THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."
 "LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
 "THE NAZARENE."
 "THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
 "JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES).

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

A SHORT AND EASY SETTING OF

THE OFFICE FOR THE

HOLY COMMUNION

IN THE KEY OF E FLAT.

- 1 KYRIE.
 1a RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS.
 2 CREDO.
 3 SANCTUS.
 4 BENEDICTUS QUI VENIT.
 5 AGNUS DEI.
 6 GLORIA IN EXCELSIS.

COMPOSED BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 35.)

PRICE, ONE SHILLING.

Voice Part only (for congregational use) price Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A NEW HARVEST ANTHEM

BY

REGINALD SILVER

"WHILE THE EARTH REMAINETH"

(FOR SOPRANO OR TENOR SOLO, CHORUS AND ORGAN).

Price Fourpence.

(SIMPLE, EFFECTIVE, AND STRONG).

J. C. GUEST &amp; Co.,

199, HIGH STREET, EXETER.

Specimen copy, post free, from The Composer,
2, Belmont Terrace, Beer, Devon.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
60.	THREE CHORALE PRELUDES ... .. Harold E. Darke	3
61.	SOLEMN PRELUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1 6
62.	INTERMEZZO ... .. Hugh Blair	2 3
63.	CAPRICCIETTO ... .. Hugh Blair	2 3
64.	POSTLUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1 6
65.	POSTLUDE (with Violins ad lib. ) ... .. A. C. Mackenzie	1 6
66.	FANTASIA ON THE TUNE "TWRGWYN" ... .. T. J. Morgan	2 3
67.	MINUET ... .. Alfred Hollins	2 3
68.	EPITHALAMIUM ... .. Alfred Hollins	2 3
69.	THREE SHORT PIECES ... .. S. Coleridge-Taylor	2 3
70.	TOCCATA ... .. A. P. F. Boëly	2 3
71.	A SOUVENIR ... .. H. Douglas	2 3
72.	LAMENT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
73.	ELEGIAC PRELUDE ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
74.	CRADLE SONG ... .. R. G. Hailing	1 6
75.	CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN" ... .. J. E. Wallace	3 0
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1 6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
80.	DÉSÉSPOIR ... .. Ch. Quef	1 6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

---

SELECTED EDITION.

---

SONGS AND BALLADS.

(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

---

Price      ...      ...      ...      Eighteen Shillings each.

---

PREFACE.

THIS Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, chanteys, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purposes of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises—counting variants, and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series, in which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

---

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BARBARA ALLEN
VARIATIONS
FOR STRING ORCHESTRA
COMPOSED BY
ADAM CARSE.

Conductor (Pianoforte) ... .. 2s. 3d.
String Parts (Four) ... .. 6s. od.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LAMIA
SYMPHONIC POEM
FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.
BY DOROTHY HOWELL.

FULL SCORE.

Price, Twenty Shillings.

String Parts, 6s. 8d.; Wind Parts, MS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SUITE
FOR STRINGS.

FROM THE DRAMATIC MUSIC OF
HENRY PURCELL

ARRANGED AND EDITED BY ALBERT COATES.

SCORE.

Price, Two Shillings.

String Parts, 2s. 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN ENGLISH SUITE
FOR STRINGS.

COMPOSED BY
C. HUBERT H. PARRY.
SCORE.

Price - - - Eight Shillings.

String Parts, price 10s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

WILLIAM BAINES'
FOUR SKETCHES FOR PIANO.

1. THE CHIMES.
2. ONLY A FEW WOODEN SOLDIERS.
3. DREAMING.
4. LITTLE IMPS.

Price, 2s. net each.

Played by FREDERIC DAWSON, ESQ.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENT
VOL. I.

Development of the Rhythmic and Metric Sense of the Instinct for Harmonious and Balanced Movements, and of good Motor Habits.

BY

EMILE JACQUES-DALCROZE.

Price Six Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH
DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Three Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON
WOODLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER
EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE
THREE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Four Shillings.

SCHUMANN
PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 2s. ; Part II., Price 3s.

ARNOLD KRUG
TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

SCHUMANN
THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

ARNOLD KRUG
SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Four Shillings each.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

TH. KULLAK
TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price Two Shillings each.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

MAX MAYER
BAGATELLES

Price Five Shillings.

E. A. SYDENHAM
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN
SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY
CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price Two Shillings each.

FRANCESCO BERGER
FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MURDOCH'S PUBLICATIONS

NEW WORKS BY ARNOLD BAX.

EEN GROW THE RASHES O!

Sung by Mr. John Coates. Words by Robert Burns.

Musical News and Herald (22/1/21).—"Because of its effectiveness it is worth any amount of study."Daily Mail (8/1/21).—"So intensely vivacious and full of character is it, that idolaters of Burns need not frown on its title."

JTH. Song. Words by Clifford Bax. 2s. net.

Musical News and Herald (22/1/21).—"A song for baritone; it is beautiful and direct, and not difficult."Daily Mail (8/1/21).—"Tender and romantic."

JLLABY." Piano Solo. 2s. net.

Musical Times.—"Lullaby" is a charming piece of moderate length."Daily Telegraph.—"In the charming 'Lullaby' which Miss St. Cohen had to repeat, Mr. Bax gives us freshness of thought, fully expressed without a superfluous note. Mr. Bax is far from being that contempt for a tune which too many of our more ambitious young composers are apt to assume."

BURLESQUE. Piano Solo. 2s. net.

Musical Times (February, 1921).—"It has humour—deliberately uncouth at times—and fine rhythmical variety. Mr. Bax should score this for orchestra. It would give us a jolly ten minutes."

TOCCATA. Piano Solo. 2s. net.

Musical Times.—"A lengthy and well-developed movement. Mr. Bax give us here a good deal more than the toccata form usually carries. It is something more than a mere showy moto perpetuo, and Mr. Bax relieves the necessary brilliance with a delightful cantabile middle section."

A HILL TUNE. Piano Solo. 2s. net.

Musical Times.—"Consists of a melody of folk-song type, treated for the most part with a background of graceful arabesques."Dublin Saturday Herald.—"A charming and descriptive Tone-Poem in which an unusual accompaniment proves an attraction to a well thought out theme. There is a modern and novel treatment of the melody which has a particular charm."Daily Mail (8/1/21).—"The 'Toccata,' 'Burlesque,' and 'A Hill Tune' are piano music of rare colour and body."

MEDITERRANEAN. 2s. net.

Musical Opinion.—"Soft and languorous, not too difficult, and likely to become popular."

TRADITIONAL SONGS OF FRANCE.

FREELY ARRANGED BY ARNOLD BAX.

ARABANDE (Amours tant tu me fais de mal)

(Old French)

ANGUEO D'AMOUR; MA DOULCE

FILLETTE (Old French Poem and Melody)

IE SUIS MISE EN DANSE (Bas Quercy)

Daily Mail.—"The vocal part remains more purely songful than modern composers will allow their original compositions to be. The whole set is a charming offering to the clever singer."

4. FEMMES, BATTEZ VOS MARYS

--- (Old French Poem and Melody)

5. LA TARGO (Provençal)

Complete, 6s. net; or separately, 2s. net each.

Sung with great success by ANNE THURSFIELD.

Musical Times.—"Mr. Bax has chosen delightful tunes. There is something very attractive in the skill with which he has retained the old-world spirit while employing the most modern means."

STRING QUARTET IN G MAJOR

Daily Chronicle.—"A work which deserves to be heard oftener, for its slow movement and the Finale contain some very charming features."Daily Mail.—"Delightful in each of the three movements, coloured with Celtic strains here and there, and original in many delicate details."

All Arnold Bax's compositions, wherever published, are obtainable at Murdoch's Music Shops.

THE MAYFAIR PIANO CLASSICS.

One hundred pieces now ready. A collection of the World's Masterpieces. Annotated and arranged by Frederick Corder, F.R.A.M., and Felix Swinstead, F.R.A.M. Absolutely correct, rapidly printed, large and clear engraving. Piano Solos, 2s. net each. Complete List on Application. The Mayfair Classics are unencumbered by superfluous editorial distinctions and totally unlike any other publications of their kind now on the market.

THE MAYFAIR VOCAL CLASSICS.

Nos. now ready. Each 1s. net. New translations by Paul England, F. Corder, and G. H. Clutsam.

JUST PUBLISHED.

DR. MARKHAM LEE.

WHEN THE CHILDREN PLAY. Book of 12 easy pieces without octaves. 2s. net.

10 PRELUDES. Piano Solo.

No. 1. Hesperis. No. 2. Serapis. 2s. net. each.

J. CLIFFE FORRESTER.

12 LITTLE PASTORALS. 2s. net.

HERBERT SHARPE.

UNCLE BEN. Yorkshire Song. 2s. net.

J. SUTCLIFFE SMITH.

HOLIDAY TIME. Nine easy pieces with preparatory Exercises. 2s. net.

FELIX SWINSTEAD.

RACHMANINOFF PRELUDE, C minor. Simplified. In the original key. 2s. net

LILY BOYD.

IF I COULD UNDERSTAND.

Words Tennyson. D♭, E♭, and F. 2s.

MURDOCH, MURDOCH &amp; CO.,

LONDON'S CENTRAL MUSIC SHOP, 23, PRINCES STREET, OXFORD CIRCUS, W.
AND AT 463, OXFORD STREET.

ORGAN - STOPS

AND THEIR

ARTISTIC REGISTRATION

NAMES, FORMS, CONSTRUCTION,
TONALITIES, AND OFFICES IN SCIENTIFIC COMBINATION

BY

GEORGE ASHDOWN AUDSLEY, LL.D.

ECCLESIASTICAL AND ORGAN ARCHITECT.

Author of "The Art of Organ-Building."

ILLUSTRATED.

Price, Cloth, Twelve Shillings and Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED.
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO.

CHORALE PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

FIRST SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 1.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Dundee."
2. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Rockingham."
3. CHORALE PRELUDE on S. S. Wesley's "Hampton."
4. CHORALE PRELUDE on the "Old 104th."
5. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Melcombe."
6. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Christe Redemptor omnium."
7. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Ann's."

SECOND SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 45.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Croft's 136th."
2. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Martyrdom."
3. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Thomas."
4. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Mary."
5. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Eventide."
6. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Cross."
7. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Hanover."

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH SET

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

ERNEST FARRAR.

VIOLIN AND PIANO.

CELTIC SUITE ... .. 6

SONGS.

BRITTANY.

Three Keys ... .. each 1

O MISTRESS MINE.

Two Keys... .. each 2

TWO PASTORALS.

Come you, Mary.

Who would shepherd pipes forsake?

Two Keys... .. each 2

TWO SONGS.

Diaphenia.

The Lover's Appeal.

Two Keys ... .. each 2

ANTHEM.

PREVENT US, O LORD ... .. 0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

FELIX WHITE.

A DICKENS NOTE-BOOK.

Suite for Piano ... .. 5

GOLDEN SLUMBERS.

Song. In F and G ... .. each 2

SING, CARE AWAY.

Song. In E flat and F ... .. each 2

THOU HAST LEFT ME EVER, JAMIE.

Song. In D minor and E minor each 2

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

POT-POURRI. A Cycle of Fragments on Verses by Isobel Scott Bremner ... .. 6

SONGS.

DESPAIR. For High or Low Voice ... .. each 1

LOVE OUTWITTED. Phantasy Duet for Voice and Pianoforte ... .. 2

MARCH MORNING. For High or Low Voice each 2

TWO SONGS: "Absence" and "Serenade." For High, Medium, or Low Voice ... .. each 2

PART-SONGS.

DIAPHENIA. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 20

FAIR, SWEET, CRUEL. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 40

HUNTING SONG. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 40

SWEET KATE. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 40

THREE SLEEPS. (S.A.T.B.) ... .. 2

WHEN LAURA SMILES. (S.A.T.B.)... .. 40

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON

WITH PREFACE BY

SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

Times, September 16, 1920.—"Useful advice, clearly stated and conveniently arranged, on the subject of preparing musical MS. for the press. There is a delightful preface by Sir Edward Elgar, who makes one wonder more than ever what subject there is of which he has not penetrated below the surface."

Daily Telegraph, October 30, 1920.—"A preface by Sir Edward Elgar gives additional weight to a recent publication of Novello . . . 'System in Musical Notation,' by H. Elliot Button. Chapter after chapter the author gives unfailing commonsense reasons for a revised revision of our notation. Mr. Elliot Button has systematised the whole thing in an admirable text-book, the value of which can only be fully realised by a study of the illustrations. Here you will find familiar passages taken from Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann, and others, so set out that they are infinitely easier to read. . . . But the least of the improvements is in the direction of rhythmicalness, a phenomenon apparently due to the simple device of treating the crotchet as the pulse unit."

Musical News, September 25, 1920.—"The little book should be read by all who write music, for we lack definite rules in this matter, anything that serves to draw composer, printer, and reader together and establish one custom or use in presenting musical compositions to the public is to be commended."

The Queen, October 9, 1920.—"The book is well-conceived and read, and the author sweeps away preconceived ideas due to long use wherever they obscure the issue from the performer's point of view. The chapter headings do not give much indication of the immense amount of information so succinctly packed into their pages. Edward Elgar has confessed his indebtedness to the author (see preface). Mr. Button deserves every praise for his valuable contribution to a much neglected subject."

Sunday Mercury, Birmingham, September 19, 1920.—"The book deals expertly with the art of musical notation, so brilliantly and so usefully illuminated by Mr. Button, who has proved himself not only a finished expert, but also a public benefactor, showing as he does how scores, apparently intricate and obscure, can be made comparatively easy to read, and therefore more understandingly played. Originals are given side by side with the author's suggestion, and in all cases with illumination, and in some cases with results that may fairly be called amazing. The price of this quite remarkable book makes it worth while for the amateur to place it in his collection; to the professional player and to the composer it will be invaluable."

Western Morning News, September 17, 1920.—"If all writers would adopt Mr. Button's system the reader would be spared much confusion."

The Choir, April, 1921.—"All composers, in fact, all who have to write or copy music, will find much valuable advice and many useful hints in Mr. H. Elliot Button's 'Musical Notation.' . . . The proper uses of rests, slurs, marks of expression, are all dealt with, Mr. Button's main idea being to bring about a uniform system of musical notation. . . . The examples he gives fully bear out the writer's theories, which are consummated in a series of musical examples wherein the contrast between the old and the new demonstrates to the full the excellence of Mr. Button's carefully-reasoned theories."

Music Student, November, 1920. — "Every teacher who has struggled with our often haphazard 'system' of musical notation, and every writer of music who has endeavoured to make his piano-part-writing at once intelligible and playable, will welcome Mr. Elliot Button's new booklet on 'Musical Notation' . . . Composers will surely call blessed the name of every composer who reads, marks, learns and puts into practice the rules in this book."

PRICE - - THREE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MINOR MELODIES

Lyrics and Songs for Musical Setting

BY

J. M. STUART-YOUNG.

Ready about May, 1921, through Messrs. T. & A. CONSTABLE, at the University Press, Edinburgh, at 10s 6d. net per copy, to the general public, first edition of 2,000 copies. 250 pp., Crown 8vo.

NOTE.—Composers may secure single copies on sending one or more of their published songs, as proof of their bona fides, and ad. (to cover cost of packing and postage) to

THE MISSES HARVEY, TYPISTS,
45, ST. ALBAN'S ROAD, SEVEN KINGS, ESSEX

"MINOR MELODIES" will be followed a few months later by a second volume of Lyrics, this time with more tropical settings. Stuart-Young is permanently resident in West Africa) under the patronage of "THE SEDUCTIVE COAST." Composers who acquire Minor Melodies, and who wish to hold an early reserve on the notes now being written, should ask the Misses HARVEY to note their wish for the new volume. It will be supplied to composers on the same terms (cost of postage and packing only).

No. 93, NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

THE ORGAN

STUDY OF ITS PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE

PART I.

BY

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD.

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

VALE LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO
FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND THREEPENCE.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRAS

	s.	d.
String Parts . . . . .	2	6
Wind Parts . . . . .	5	4
Harp (or Pianoforte) . . . . .	1	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR OLD FRENCH

HARPSICHOORD PIECES

1. Vaudeville à danser, 1712 (Auteur inconnu)
2. Petit air tendre . . . L. J. Saint-Amans
3. La Bourrée de Vincent . . . J. P. Rameau
4. Tambourin Chinois . . . E. G. Chedeville

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY ALFRED MOFFAT.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

VOICE TRAINING EXERCISES

BY

EMIL BEHNKE

Teacher of Voice Culture and Lecturer on Vocal Physiology,

AND

CHARLES W. PEARCE

M.A., Mus. D., F.T.C.L., F.R.C.O., Director of Studies, Trinity College of Music.

In separate Books for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass.

Price ... .. Two Shillings and Sixpence net.

TESTIMONIALS.

“Admirable, and doubtless will prove of great utility.”

“Far more precise in plan than anything I have seen.”

“I like the exercises very much; they are scientific, systematic, and ingenious.”

“A personal experience enables me to speak in the highest terms of Mr. Behnke's method, which is absolutely invaluable for increasing the power, resonance, and flexibility of the voice; and I am glad to be able to recommend the exercises as being thoroughly practical and most useful.”

“May be safely and cordially recommended to vocal students, and even to practised singers.”

“The exercises are, with great skill, arranged so as to give a maximum of benefit with a minimum of fatigue. They are melodious and natural, and are consequently pleasant of performance.”

“Besides the high commendation which we can give them as voice-training exercises per se, they possess the additional merit of being very melodious throughout.”

“The combined simplicity and utility of the plan upon which these exercises have been written will commend them to the notice of professors and students alike.”

“It may be said with confidence that no better exercises for the purposes of voice cultivation are to be met with.”

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.
NEW YORK. SYDNEY. MELBOURNE.And may be had of all Music Sellers.

A CHARMING NEW COMPOSITION

BY

RICHARD DRIGO

“LES TRÉSORS DE COLOMBINE”

Piano Solo, 2s. Violin or Violoncello and Piano, 2s.

Orchestra, 2s. 6d. Piano Conductor, 1s. Extra Parts, 4d. each.

Net Cash.

With “Les Trésors de Colombine,” Richard Drigo has produced a worthy companion piece to his celebrated Serenade (“Les Millions d'Arlequin”), which bids fair to run that enormous success very close, if indeed it be not destined to outrival it. This light but captivating composition will doubtless very soon find its way to popularity by reason of its melodious charm and a certain refinement that makes it infinitely superior to most of the light music of to-day.

The work has been published in an attractive edition, with a delightful coloured title-page in the “Pan” style by Mr. E. H. Shepard.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.,
11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W. 1.

This Supplement is part also of the June issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 155.

PEOPLE'S PALACE (EAST LONDON).

The fourteenth Festival took place on May 6, 7, 11, 12, 18, 19, 20, and 21 (the children's concerts had been on February 22 and 26). Two points in connection with this event are worthy of notice—there are no solos, and, save for a few challenge trophies, the prizes consist of nothing more substantial than certificates, plus our and glory. Despite this limited appeal to the social element, the Festival is firmly established—a sign of not only of good organization, but even more of the educational work done by the promoters.

There was a good entry, though at the last moment some of the events lost their competitive character, a few choirs withdrawing owing to the crowded and infrequent train service in the evening. A welcome feature was the large entry in the vocal trio, S.A.T.B. quartet, and male-voice quartet classes. This points to a growing appreciation of the delights of singing together by a few friends—a kind of informal chamber music. Mothers' meetings were again a popular class. This event is so unusual (so far as we know) as to be peculiar to the People's Palace until the recently-terminated South-East London Festival also introduced it with success that we inquired into its origin. It appeared that a few years ago a mothers' meeting entered for a girls' club class. Obviously such a contest would be unsatisfactory, and the executive pointed this out, at the same time expressing its willingness to form a separate class for the mothers. This was done, with excellent results. On the present occasion the old ladies sang 'Come, lasses and lads' to an Irish lullaby. They gave the first with immense gusto, and with so much gesture (even to putting their best foot foremost in a half-repressed jig) that the item became a nation-song. In the case of the winners the vocal tone was excellent, partly as a result of good training, but even more because the class consisted mainly of mere mothers, whereas some of their rivals contained a large proportion of grandmothers. Altogether, a contest that was at once amusing and touching.

Church choirs proved to be rather disappointing, owing apparently to shortage of practice, and (except in the case of mixed-voice choirs) the usual difficulty of balance where the part has to be given to a few boys. The best choral work was done in the advanced choral classes, where a very high standard was reached, such difficult tests as Whittaker's 'Captain's lady' being admirably sung. Male-voice choirs were few, but large, powerful, and of first-rate quality. The arrangements, as usual, worked smoothly, and there was the customary happy family feeling all round. The guests were Messrs. Martin Akerman, T. F. Dunhill, Percy Grace, Granville Humphreys, Geoffrey Shaw, and H. Walthew.

The concert on May 21 was a fine wind-up. The massed boys sang Bach's 'Blessing, glory, wisdom,' Wesley's 'Praised be the God and Father,' Holst's 'Turn back, O man,' and Parry's 'Jerusalem.' Prof. Walford Davies was again the dominating influence, accompanying, conducting, taking, and kindling the singers and the large audience with his own enthusiasm. By the way, during the playing of his 'Memorial Melody' for organ and orchestra (a memorial to Gervase Elwes) the audience stood, and there was the merest flicker of applause at the end, which died at once—a good example to audiences elsewhere.

Mr. Thalben Ball was at the organ, and, in addition, played pianoforte solos—Chopin's Polonaise in A flat and a solo part in a couple of movements from Bach's D minor concerto. The official orchestra was made up of the South Place Orchestra, assisted by students of the R.C.M., members of competing orchestras, and friends.

A new feature was the inclusion in the programme of five songs by the audience, the words being printed on leaflets. Prof. Walford Davies held a half-hour rehearsal of these before the concert, and the audience showed its appreciation by its hearty singing. The songs were Morley's 'Now is the month of maying,' 'The Bay of Biscay,' 'Ye banks and braes,' 'All through the night,' and (with the massed choirs and orchestra), Parry's 'Jerusalem.' People who find the tone of West End concerts blasé should try the other end of the town on such an occasion as that under notice. They would hear some fine choral singing, and (what is far more rare) they would breathe an air of eager enthusiasm and enjoyment so tonic that even the Mile End and Whitechapel Roads would not dissipate it on the journey home. The writer has rarely had a more moving experience than the singing of 'Jerusalem' by the audience at this concert. Blake and Parry, sung by a great crowd led by choirs of Scouts, Girl Guides, Choral Societies, and Mothers' Meetings:

Bring me my bow of burning gold !

I will not cease from mental fight,
Nor shall my sword sleep in my hand
Till we have built Jerusalem
In England's green and pleasant land.

Incongruous? Not a bit. We came out into the neither green nor pleasant Mile End Road feeling that, though the City will be long a-building, a few stones are added to the walls every time such a Festival as this is held.

The winners in the chief competitions were:

Choral Societies.—Homerton District Permanent Choir (Mr. F. E. Creed).

Choirs of Selected Voices.—Stepney Orpheus Choir (Rev. C. J. Beresford).

Church Choirs of Men and Boys (Advanced).—Second prize awarded to St. Paul's, Shadwell (Miss K. Bray).

Church Choirs of Mixed Voices.—Approach Road Wesleyan (Mr. A. Morgan).

Ladies' Choirs.—Homerton District Permanent Choir (Mr. F. E. Creed).

Choirs from Girls' Clubs, Guides, &c.—First Section.—St. James', Ratcliff (Mrs. Atherton Knowles). Second Section.—St. John-at-Hackney (Mr. F. E. Creed).

Choirs from Mothers' Meetings, &c.—St. Mary, Stratford-Bow (Rev. H. J. Kitcat).

Male-Voice Choirs.—Millfields Male-Voice Choir (Mr. A. Morgan).

Lads' Club Choirs.—St. Mark's, Dalston, Lads' Bible Class (Mr. Eardley).

Boy Scouts.—17th Stepney (Ratcliff) Troop (Mrs. A. Knowles).

Sight-Singing.—Homerton District Permanent Choir (Mr. F. E. Creed).

Secondary Schools (Girls).—Coborn School, Bow (Miss A. H. Black); (Boys) Coopers' School, Bow (Mr. A. W. Durnall); (Sight-singing) Coborn School for Girls.

Full Orchestras.—(1) Highgate Village Orchestra (Mr. P. Farquharson); (2) Trinity Men's Own Orchestra (Mr. T. A. Hull); (3) Passmore Edwards Settlement (Miss E. E. Buchanan).

String Orchestras.—Passmore Edwards Settlement Junior Orchestra (Miss E. E. Buchanan).

The total number of entries for the Festival was 170. There were 4300 singers in the different choirs, &c., and about 100 players in the bands.

GAINSBOROUGH.—April 27-30.

(The West Lindsey and North Lincolnshire Competitions.)

The fifth annual Festival, extended from two to four days, was an unequivocal success. Competitors and public gave good support, and Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, the adjudicator, had ample praise to bestow, especially on the choral singing.

The children's day produced great enthusiasm. The chief prizes were carried off by Marton Council School (small villages), Winterton C. E. School (large villages), Lincoln Municipal Technical School (town schools, boys), and Ropery Road (town schools, girls). The three awards for sight-singing were made to West Stockwith Council School (among eleven competitors), Frodingham and—for singing from the staff—Crowle.

The second day was occupied by solo singing and playing. Pianists and violinists were all tested in sight-reading as well as in their prepared work, and there was a class for pianoforte accompaniment.

Village choral societies and Church choirs were heard on the Friday. Gate Burton and Marton choir, Crowle Choral Society, and Saxilby Church Choir were the most successful. In two classes for female-voice choirs the prizes were won by Gate Burton and Gainsborough Ladies. Only Gainsborough Musical Society entered in the open choral competition. In this and the class for large villages, choirs had to prepare special works for combined performance at the evening concert—a passage from them being chosen by the adjudicator as an additional test. In this way an excellent performance of Vaughan Williams' picturesque 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols,' with orchestral accompaniment, became one of the features of the Festival.

The final day was devoted to nine competitions in folk-dancing for schools, with Mr. Cecil Sharp as adjudicator.

STRATFORD AND EAST LONDON.—April 16-22.

Any doubt as to the permanence of the Festival movement may be removed by a visit to the Stratford Musical Festival, which is in its thirty-ninth year, and continues to grow numerically and artistically. A well-known educationist missed the concerts for the first time for many years. He did the next best thing. He visited another festival, and wrote to the secretary: 'What surprised me at X was the lack of interest by the general public. It must have proved a financial failure, as the hall was never more than half-full. What a contrast to Stratford, where you are overcrowded!' Such was the case even during those anxious hours when the train service was in the balance. Notices to thousands of competitors had to be issued and re-issued. On the final day the competitions had to be spread over five halls.

An outstanding feature at Stratford is the excellence of the elementary school choirs, both boys' and girls' classes. This has been proved whenever these schools and other East London junior choirs have visited other festivals both at home and abroad. The standard of the adult choirs is also high, and this fact attracted choirs from St. Alban's, Luton, Chelmsford, and nearer places. The need of the present time is to recruit choirs of a less advanced type.

London festivals from the first have found that popular interest centres round the solo vocal and instrumental competitions. This is of great advantage in raising the tone of the music used at home and in the practice-room. Where solo competitors run into four figures the adjudicators have strenuous times. Each is a specialist, and decides singly the subject allotted to him. Some six hundred prizes and certificates were awarded at this Festival. Only a few of the first-prize winners can be named here.

CHOIRS AND ORCHESTRAS.

Choral Societies (two Challenge Shields).—Mansfield House Choral Society (Mr. C. Ernest Coward). Two of the test-pieces were 'Sister, awake' (Thomas Bateson) and 'The Shower' (Elgar).

Choral Societies (Challenge Cup).—Ilford Labour Party's Choral Society (Mr. Frederick Taylor). 'There is a garden' (Hamish MacCunn).

Ladies' Choirs (Challenge Shield).—Mansfield House Choral Society (Mr. C. E. Coward). 'Spanish Gipsy Girl' (E. Lassen).

Ladies' Choirs (new class).—Stratford Co-operative Ladies' Choir (Mr. Alfred Sears). 'A Celtic Lullaby' (Hugh & Robertson).

Men's Choirs.—Mansfield House Choral Society (Mr. C. E. Coward). 'My love is like a red, red rose' (Granville Bantock).

Church Choirs.—Leytonstone G.F.M. Choir (Mr. Ernest W. Harbott). 'See what love hath the Father' (Mendelssohn).

Girls' Clubs.—Browning Settlement Girls' Club (Mr. John Rodgers). 'The dream seller' (E. Markham Lee).

Children's Choirs.—Holy Trinity, Canning Town, Boy's Choir (Mrs. Rushby Smith, two prizes). 'Orpheus with his lute' (Charles Wood); 'Tirra Lee' (F. Kent).

Secondary School Girls.—East Ham Secondary School (Mr. G. Day Winter, two prizes). 'Shepherds' Dance' (Edward German); 'Serenade' (G. M. Palmer).

Elementary Schools.—Beckton Road Boys and Girls (Mr. W. H. Dodd, Miss E. M. Wheeler, two prizes). 'To June' (W. Creser); 'Gipsies' (Alec Rowley).

String Orchestras.—Metropolitan Academy of Music (Madame May Masters, two prizes). 'Carissima' (Elgar). 'Caliph of Bagdad' Overture (Boieldieu).

School Bands.—Oxford Boys' School, Ilford (Mr. W. L. Norman). 'Les Huguenots' Selection (Meyerbeer).

SOLO SINGERS.

The winners in open classes were: Miss Marjorie Kinipple (soprano), Miss Doris W. Birnage (mezzo soprano), Miss Edith Varley (contralto), Mr. George Raple (tenor), Mr. Frank Watts (baritone). The gold medal was won by Miss Lilian R. Staples.

INSTRUMENTAL SOLOS.

The gold medal was gained by Miss Grace Rapkin (pianoforte). Pianoforte solo winners in open classes were Miss Gladys Willis (Seniors), Miss Millicent I. Silve (Intermediate), and Miss Muriel G. Crowther (Juniors). Other prize-winners were Mr. John W. Bourne (organ), Mr. Douglas Crittenden (violin, Seniors), Miss Elga Collin (violinocello), Miss Norah Hannar, Miss Gertrude Richardson and Mr. Albert Young (instrumental trio).

COLERAINE.—May 10, 11, 12.

Various causes interfered with the attendance of school choirs, but the success of the Festival left little wanting. Dr. R. R. Terry was favourably impressed with the standard shown, as also were competitors and audiences with his adjudications. In several cases he brought choirs of soloists together on the platform for a lesson after the competition. The sight-singing, he reported, was unusually good.

Among the school choirs the most successful were those of the Hon. The Irish Society, whose four choirs—conducted by Miss Perry, Mr. W. Kane, Mr. H. Turbitt, and Miss Blaney—won four first prizes. Of the school choirs that had never entered at a previous festival Termon Carna Girls' School, Limavady (Miss Brogan), took the prize. Mash Street Choir, Portrush (Miss Porter) was first in sight-singing.

Female-voice choirs sang Brahms' 'The Gardener,' and Fletcher's 'Follow me down to Carlow,' the best of these being Y.W.C.A. Choir, Coleraine (Mr. F. W. Crofts). The only male-voice choir was Killowen, also conducted by Mr. Crofts. The three mixed-voice choirs which sang Benet's 'Come, shepherds' and 'Gossip Joan' were, in order of marks, Ballymena (Rev. J. Clinton), Aghadowey (Mr. A. E. Boyd), and Ballycastle.

WEYMOUTH.—With Dr. Somervell and Dr. Vaughan Williams as adjudicators, the eighth Festival of the Dorset Choral Association was held here on May 3. Thirty choirs entered in ten classes.

MORECAMBE.—April 28-30.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

Comment is confined to the open chorus classes of the including day, during which about forty choirs sang, drawn from the Potteries, West Riding of Yorkshire, South-East Lancashire and its coast, Carlisle and the Furness District, and all came by motor transport. Female-voice choirs opened the day, and set a high standard in Berlioz's 'Ballad of Ophelia,' and a setting of marvellous beauty of Thomas Moore's 'How dear to me the hour when daylight dies,' by Herman Brearley. Only first-class choirs may attempt this. The contraltos towards the close sang down to bass D, E, F. They will easily rank among the dozen best bits of female-voice singing of recent years, and is Morecambe's chief contribution to the little-known work to the repertory of the small-scale choirs. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson adjudicated here, and commented strongly on the exceptional character of finished technique and powerful emotional qualities displayed by any, and especially the winning choirs. Sudden curtailments of the railway service compelled his return at noon to London, and so thrust on Sir Ivor Atkins the burden of sole adjudicator in the principal mixed- and male-voice choir events.

The piece chosen for the evening concert in the male-voice class was Cornelius's arrangement of a well-known Schubert pianoforte-duet march. Its brisk, martial quality made a much wider appeal than did the afternoon items 'Jenkins' 'Lament for Prince Llewelyn' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'O who will worship the great god Pan'. As music it falls far behind the composer's best work; as an adaptation it is hazardous in the extreme.

Accuracy in the excessively difficult chromatic passages was extremely rare, and with the exception of the Manchester W.S. and Colne Orpheus the work was carried through rather by high-spirited vitality than strictly musical quality.

The final round madrigal in the mixed-voice challenge shield class was Nicolson's Elizabethan 'Sing, shepherds all,' in five parts. Neither soprano voice sings higher than E, and at several points alto and tenor parts are easily interchangeable. Over-elaborated it is, perhaps, with a ringing tenor part as not its least attractive feature. Even the best performance was not fully satisfactory, most choirs getting tied up at the passage named above, where parts are interchangeable. This work would make an admirable male-voice test-piece. A fine personal triumph was gained by Mr. Alfred Higson, who led the Manchester Co-operative Wholesale Choir to victory in the male-voice class, as well as retaining the Mixed-voice Challenge Shield for his Sale and District Choir. Never before have two Manchester choirs attained such distinction at an important festival. Appended are the chief results:

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'How dear to me the hour' (Brearley).
'Ophelia' (Berlioz).

- 1st. Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. Herbert Whittaker).
- 2nd. Mr. Aldous' Lancaster Choir.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'O who will worship the great god Pan' (Coleridge-Taylor).
'Lament for Prince Llewelyn' (Cyril Jenkins).
'The riders' song' (Cornelius).

- 1st. C.W.S., Manchester (Mr. Alfred Higson).
- 2nd. Crossley Motors, Manchester (Mr. W. Harris).
- 3rd. Colne Orpheus Glee Union (Mr. Luther Greenwood).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'Sing, shepherds all' (Nicolson).
'I thought that love had been a boy' (Byrd).
'The surrender of the soul' (Cornelius).

- 1st. Sale and District (Mr. Alfred Higson).
- 2nd. Carlisle Madrigal Society (Mr. J. R. Cockbain).
- 3rd. Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. W. H. Whitaker).

ALDERLEY EDGE.—April 29, 30.

A record was established by the two days' Festival in this pretty Cheshire village, when over four hundred competitors entered the thirty classes, in the majority of which a high standard was attained. Several of the subjects were of a distinctly educative character, including vocal and pianoforte sight-reading for juveniles and adults, instrumental trios, and pianoforte accompaniments, in which the competitors had to accompany Mimi's Song from 'La Bohème' and play the accompaniment to another song at sight.

In the choral contests St. Philip's Church Choir, Alderley (Rev. G. N. Cooper); Edgellow Female-voice Choir, Alderley (Mrs. Storey-Hesketh); and Congleton Male-voice Choir (Mr. F. Green), gained the first prizes.

The principal adjudicators were Mr. R. W. Wilson, Mr. Thomas Keighley, and Mr. Frank Greenwood.

NORTH NOTTS.

Mr. Geoffrey Shaw adjudicated upon the musical competition at this successful Festival at Retford on April 19, 20, and 23. The entries were very satisfactory on the children's day, even though a restricted tram service kept competitors away. About six hundred children took part in the combined unison singing. A high standard of two-part singing was shown by Mansfield Rosemary choir in Ethel Boyce's 'Ursula Dancing,' and Retford Council School in the new vocal setting of German's 'Shepherds' Dance.' In the open competitions for adult choirs, Doncaster Choral Union (Mr. S. Ward Casey) carried off the three prizes (for male, female, and mixed-voice choirs), and in two cases Retford Choral Union (Mr. T. Hercy Denman) had second place. The classes for village choral societies were well supported. Leverton was first among seven choirs that entered to sing Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' and C. Wood's 'Full fathom five.' Tuxford won in the female voice competition. The standard of the choral singing was generally high.

On the last day folk-dance competitions were held, with Mr. Cecil Sharp as adjudicator. The entries were excellent. Four sets performed the difficult Flamborough Sword Dance.

WIRRAL AND EDDISBURY.

Dr. R. R. Terry again adjudicated upon these competitions, held at the Town Hall, Chester, on April 28, 29, and 30. Over twenty competitions were held, and a feature was made of two grand concerts by prize-winners, junior and senior. The school competitions were well supported, six choirs appearing in the class for schools with average attendance over two hundred. Chester Road Council School girls, New Ferry (Miss E. Lythgoe), were the best of these. Four choirs produced a high standard in Bainton's 'Ballad of Semmerwater' and Stanford's 'Heraclitus,' the prize being won by Christleton (Rev. G. M. V. Hickey).

The syllabus included an important new feature in the competition for small string orchestras. Two appeared—the Abbey Amateur Orchestra and the Queen's School Orchestra—the former gaining first place by a narrow margin.

ESKDALE (WHITBY).—May 10, 11, 12.

Success again attended this—the fourteenth—Eskdale Tournament of Song, and rewarded the efforts of the joint organizers and secretaries, Misses C. and M. Yeoman. Nearly forty competitions were held, and soloists, school choirs, and village adult choirs, came in strength to show what vitality of musical life the festival had brought into being in this corner of Yorkshire.

Ruswarp C.E. School, Cholmley C.E. Girls' School, and Goathland G.F.S., were among the junior choral prize-winners. Whitby female-voice choir was best (of six) in Vaughan Williams' 'Sound sleep'; Hackness Choral Society was the best of six village choirs in Lee Williams' 'Song of the pedlar'; and Whitby proved superior to Sleights and Saltburn in Bairstow's 'The dawn of song.' Loftus, a band of fifteen, was the only string orchestra.

The adjudicators were Mr. Geoffrey Shaw and Dr. Leonard Fowles. Folk-dance competitions had been held on May 7, Mrs. Kennedy adjudicating.

GLASGOW.—May 4-14.

The Glasgow Festival has attained dimensions which make it one of the largest in the kingdom. There were about eleven thousand competitors in ninety-two classes, and the public, judging by the crowded audiences, has thoroughly awakened to the fact that a great movement for the musical uplifting of the community is in operation. Generally, the level of performance was high in all the classes, and in several there was evidence of considerable advance, notably in Junior Choirs, Class C (Sunday Schools, &c.), the Boys' Solo Class, the Church Choir, Class C, and in some of the solo singing classes. The number of entries and the quality of the instrumental competitors were promising, and one may hope for developments, especially in the string, wood-wind, and brass classes. It is curious to note that in the senior class in pianoforte solos not one female performer got beyond the eliminating stage.

The Elocution Classes, successfully inaugurated last year, were again a popular feature of the Festival. The inclusion of Ecclesiastes xii. and 1 Corinthians xiii. was a brilliant idea, and so impressive was the delivery of these fine passages of Scripture that had the audience been composed mainly of clergymen—comparatively few of whom seem to be alive to the religious, moral, and social value of the Festival movement—much improvement would result in their reading of the 'lessons.' Mr. John Drinkwater, who, with Mrs. Tobias Matthay, judged these classes, was inclined to discourage the continuance of the dramatic performances owing to the improbability of securing performers of equal talent to maintain a perfect ensemble.

The Manfield Choir, from Northampton, the only competing choir from England, got a rousing reception from its Scottish confères, and its award of first place in the Mixed-Voice and Female-Voice Open Challenge Classes was well-merited and popular. Only three or four conductors used batons, the rest making use of their hands and arms (occasionally their entire bodies), suggesting an exaggerated form of eurhythmics which, while often securing the interpretation aimed at, occasionally provided the audience with a highly amusing spectacle.

The Selection Committee cannot this year be unreservedly complimented on its choice of test-pieces, several of which were ungrateful alike to competitors, adjudicators, and audiences, and in a few instances were positively unworthy of a place in the Glasgow Festival.

Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson appeared for the first time as an adjudicator at Glasgow, and in the same capacity Sir George Henschel made his début. On the principle that 'example is better than precept,' Sir George sang his own song 'Young Dietrich' to the competitors in the solo bass class. Mr. Ernest Newman was again a tower of strength in the adjudicators' box, and his remarks were always helpful, kindly, and instructive. It might be suggested that Mrs. Matthay's collaboration in adjudicating the Scots song classes would have been peculiarly appropriate and valuable. So far as the actual working of such a complicated machine as the Glasgow Festival is concerned, nothing but praise can be given. Those responsible for that side cannot be too heartily congratulated on the foresight and management which resulted in the running of three sessions daily without the slightest suggestion of a hitch. The Festival closed by the audience singing the psalm tune 'Old 124th' (to words by Arnold Bax), a fitting climax to a singularly fine ten days' music-making.

The following were the tests and awards in the open challenge classes:

SCHOOL CHOIRS (six entries).

Two-part songs: 'The moon is on the water' (Dunhill).

'Pan' (Bantock).

1st. Onslow Drive Public School, Glasgow (Miss Marie S. Irving).

2nd. Our Lady and St. Francis' Secondary School, Glasgow (Miss Norah Gilfillan).

JUNIOR CHOIRS (five entries).

Three-part songs: 'I saw lovely Phyllis' (C. E. Miller).

'To daisies' (Cynthia C. Cox).

'Storm song' (Cyril Jenkins).

1st. Clydebank Co-operative (Miss Catherine B. Wood).

2nd. Kinning Park Co-operative (No. 2) (Mr. David Houston).

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS (four entries).

Three-part songs: 'Weep ye no more, sad fountains' (E. L. Bainton).

'Cherry ripe' (arr. Robertson).

1st. The Manfield Choir, Northampton (Mr. W. F. Marshman).

2nd. Greenock Festival Choir (Mr. J. Calder).

CHURCH CHOIRS (one entry).

'Crucifixus' from Mass in B minor (Bach).

'Sing joyfully unto God' (Byrd).

Clydebank Union Church Choir (Mr. J. D. Fleming).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (four entries).

'Come away, Death' (six-part) (H. Graham Godfrey).

'The night march' (four-part) (Schumann).

1st. Clydebank (Mr. J. D. Fleming).

2nd. 'Ossian Choir,' Glasgow (Mr. A. D. Archibald).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (five entries).

'A lyke-wake dirge' (Harold E. Watts).

'Arise, awake' (five-part madrigal) (Morley).

1st. Manfield Choir, Northampton (Mr. W. F. Marshman).

2nd. Helensburgh Lyric Choir (Mr. T. H. Allwood).

THE FEIS CEOIL (DUBLIN).—May 2-7.

Although the number of entries for the Feis Ceoil of 1920 dropped to six hundred and five, it is gratifying to have to record that notwithstanding the very disturbed state of the country, and the drastic curfew restrictions, the number of entries for this year's Irish Festival was six hundred and fifty—the same number as in 1919. The adjudicators included Signor Denza, Mr. Hamilton Harty, Mr. Spencer Dyke, Sir Ivor Atkins, Prof. O'Dwyer, Mr. Vincent O'Brien, and Mr. Arthur Darley.

The solo competitions were the making of the Festival. Among so many results we have space to mention only that the coveted Plunket Greene prize, for which fifty-one singers competed, went to Miss Violet Pearson; and that for the third time Miss Rhoda Coghill won the George O'Neill Cup for 'quick study' of a pianoforte piece, the cup being now her permanent possession.

No doubt curfew conditions had much to do with the very poor show in choral competitions, and the entries were disappointing. Sir Ivor Atkins awarded merely a second prize for Church choirs, the only entry being the Augustinian Choir. A second prize was also awarded to the Church of Ireland Training College; and in the chief mixed-voice class the Brighton Road Choral Society, ably conducted by Mr. J. Turner Huggard, won without opposition. Miss Terry O'Connor was responsible for the admirable finish of the Loreto National School choir in another class, and was complimented by the adjudicator.

Alas for the national instrument! Though there was a solitary entry ('to show that still she lives') for the Irish Harp, nobody appeared at the competition.

In the String Orchestra and the Small Orchestra classes only one entry appeared, and in each case this was the Dublin Amateur Orchestra (Mr. P. Delaney), which was awarded a third prize.

In children's choirs the Royal Hibernian Military School Choir, under Mr. B. Westwood, had a popular victory.

As customary, the last day of the Feis was given over to solo wind instruments, Irish pipes, and Irish fiddlers.

BIRMINGHAM.—The eighth festival of the Midland Adult School Union was held at the Friends' Institute, Moseley Road, on May 7. Clark Street Adult School (Mr. H. J. Lewis) sent the winning choirs in the three choral classes for male-, female-, and mixed-voice choirs. The tests were German's 'O peaceful night,' Este's 'How merrily we live,' and Elgar's 'The Shower.'

LITTLE GADDESSEN.—A new Festival was held here on April 23, and entries were received from eight of the neighbouring villages. Miss Lushington acted as adjudicator. An evening concert was given, with Miss Sybil Cropper and Miss Rhoda Legge as soloists, and combined choirs sang Dowland's 'Awake, sweet love,' and other pieces.

A report of the Midland Festival is given in the School Music Review edition of the Competition Festival Record.

No. 472.

NOVELLO'S OCTAVO EDITION OF TRIOS, &amp;c., FOR FEMALE VOICES. Price 3d-4d.

TO THE CLAUGHTON ST. CECILIA CHORAL SOCIETY.

O LOVELY MAY

TRIO

WORDS BY HENRY WETHERED

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

ARRANGED AS A TRIO FOR FEMALE VOICES BY THE COMPOSER.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro con spirito.

1st VOICE. f Come a - way! . . . come a -

2nd VOICE. f Come a - way! . . . come a -

3rd VOICE. f Come a - way! . . . come a -

Allegro con spirito. ♩ = 80.

ANO. f sf

Ped.

way! . . . Bleak win - ter's storms have way! . . . Bleak win - ter's storms have way! . . . Bleak win - ter's storms have * sf

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

Original edition for Mixed Voices in NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK, No. 726; and in NOVELLO'S TONIC SOL-FA SERIES, No. 847.

O LOVELY MAY!

left the skies, . . Winds their fu - ry end - ed. . .

left the skies, The Winds their fu - ry end - ed, So

left the skies, . . Winds their fu - ry end - ed, bright and free on . . shrub and tree, so bright and free on . .

So bright and free on . . shrub and tree, so

The blos - soms are sus - pend shrub and tree The blos - soms are sus - pend bright and free The blos - soms are sus - pend

Ped. *

O LOVELY MAY!

Meno mosso (only slightly slower).con espress.

ed. O love - ly May! how sweet the lay! O love - ly, love - ly May! . . how sweet the

ed. O love - ly May! how sweet the lay! O love - ly May! . . how sweet the

ed. O love - ly May, . . O love - ly May! . . how

Meno mosso (only slightly slower).con espress.

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * lay . . That's call - ing, that's calling from a - far to-day, that's lay That is call - ing, that's calling from a - far to-day, Come, . . come .

sweet the lay . . That's call - ing to - day, . . that's calling, that's calling to -

Ped. * Ped. *

call ing to - day. Then leave, O leave the

a - way. Then leave, O day, to - day. Then leave, O dim. e rall. p Giocoso.  $\text{♩} = 100.$

f dim. e rall. p

Ped. * Ped. *

O LOVELY MAY!

toils of life, The cares that press with sor - row, And seek the glad - ness na - ture brings, . . .

leave . . . the toils of life, . . . And seek . . . the glad - ness

leave . . . the toils of life And seek . . . the glad - ness

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

. . . the glad-ness na-ture brings, . . . the glad-ness na-ture brings, . . . Bright, na - ture brings, and seek . . . the glad - ness, the glad-ness na-ture brings, Bright.

na - ture brings, and seek the glad - ness, the glad-ness na-ture brings, Bright,

Ped. * Ped. *

bright will be . . . the mor - - row, Come a - way, . . . come a - way, come a - way, come a -

. . . will be the mor - - row, Come, come, come, come, come, bright will be the mor - - row, Come, come, come, come, come,

pp.

O LOVELY MAY!

f dim. pp

way, come a-way, come a - way.

f dim. pp

come a - way, a-way, a - way, a-way, a - way.

f dim. pp

come a - way, a-way, a - way, a-way, a - way.

f dim. pp

Ped. *

Allegro con spirito. f

The wood - lands now yield

f

The wood - lands now yield

f

The wood - lands now yield

Allegro con spirito.  $\text{♩} = 80$  f

Ped. *

all their charms, Spring's a-gain in - vi - ting, p all their charms, Sweet Spring's a-gain in - vi - ting, O'er all their charms, Spring's a-gain in - vi - ting,

Ped. * Ped. *

O LOVELY MAY!

p

The

hill and dale, through mead and vale, o'er hill and dale, through mead and vale The

O'er hill and dale, through mead and vale, o'er hill and dale The

pp

Meno mosso. con espress.

birds in songs de - light - - - ing. . . . O love - ly May! how birds in songs de - light - - - ing. . . . O love - ly May! how birds in songs de - light - - - ing. . . . O love - ly

Meno mosso. con espress.

Ped.

*

Ped.

* Ped.

*

sweet the lay! O love - ly, love - ly May! . . . how sweet the lay . . . That's call - ing, that's sweet the lay! O love - ly May! . . . how sweet the lay That is call - ing, that's May! . . . O love - ly May! how sweet the lay . . . That's

Ped.

* Ped.

*

O LOVELY MAY!

call-ing from a - far to-day, that's call call-ing from a - far to day, Come, . . . come . . . a - call - ing to - day, . . . that's call-ing, that's call-ing to - day, . . . to -

Ped. * Ped. *

dim. e rall. p Gioioso.

ing to - day. Then leave, O leave the toils of life, The dim. e rall. p Then leave, O leave the

dim. e rall. p Then leave, O leave the

Gioioso.  $\text{♩} = 100.$

f dim. e rall. p

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

cres

cares that press with sor - row, And seek the glad - ness na - ture brings, . . . the glad - ness

cres

toils of life, . . . And seek . . . the glad - ness na - ture

cres

toils of life, And seek . . . the glad - ness na - ture

cres

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

( 7 )

O LOVELY MAY!

cen do.

na - ture brings, . . . the glad - ness na - ture brings, . . . . . Bright,

cen do.

brings, and seek the glad - ness, the glad - ness na - ture brings, Bright . .

cen do.

brings, and seek the glad - ness, the glad - ness na - ture brings, Bright,

Ped. *

pp

bright will be the mor - - - row, Come a - way, . . come a-way, come a - way, come a -

pp

. . will be the mor - - - row, Come, come, come, come, come,

pp

bright will be the mor - - - row, Come, come, come, come, come,

pp

f

- way, come a-way, come a - way.

f

come a - way, a - way, a - way, a - way, a - way.

f

come a - way, a - way, a - way, a - way, a - way.

f sf sf

Ped. *

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

Vol. 941.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

JULY 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

(Season 1921—1922.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have LONG VOICES of GOOD QUALITY, and should be prepared to pass examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W. 7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

100 GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: SIR A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

As the Academy is still quite full, Students wishing to join in September are advised to have their names added to the waiting list once.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted. CHAMBER CONCERT, Duke's Hall, Wednesday, July 6, at 3. FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, Saturday, July 9, at 3.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES, Queen's Hall, Friday, July 22, at 3.

L.R.A.M. EXAM.—Entries will be accepted up to July 15th on payment of a late fee of 5s.

Scholarships in the following subjects will be competed for in September: Pianoforte, Violin, Violoncello, Organ, Singing, and Composition. Last day for entry, August 29.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams: "Initiative, Southkens, London." Telephone: "1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

Intending Students who wish to enter the College in the Christmas term, 1921, are asked to send in their forms as soon as possible.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

The Royal College of Organists

The DISTRIBUTION OF DIPLOMAS by the President, Dr. C. MacPHERSON, will take place on Saturday, July 23rd, at 11 o'clock. ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING, 11.45.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Books of Examination Papers may be obtained by members only. Vol. I., 1881-96, price 6s.; Vol. II., 1897-1906, price 8s. 3d. (including postage).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical Instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £35. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC. FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,

96, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

A SHORT HOLIDAY COURSE

(Under the direction of Mr. ERNEST READ).

In the Teaching of Aural Training, Kindergarten Music, Improvisation (Keyboard Harmony), School Class-Singing, and also in Pianoforte Teaching, will be held on SEPTEMBER 15th, 16th, and 17th.

LECTURERS:

MISS LILIAN BUCKE.

DR. STANLEY MARCHANT, MR. FREDERICK MOORE, and MR. ERNEST READ.

Further particulars from (MRS.) MARION COLE, Secretary.

How to play difficult music with ease, . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

THE IDEAL METHOD

OF

MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.S.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-eight Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in Scotland and Ireland in JUNE, and at all other Local Centres in JULY.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary. Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A.M.L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L.Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,
A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.
Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 387.

THE TECHNIQUE

AN APPARATUS FOR DEVELOPING THE HANDS OF ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Copy of a valuable testimonial received from

H. A. HARDING, Esq., Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O.,
Hon. Sec. The Royal College of Organists
June, 1921.

"The 'Technique' is undoubtedly a very valuable apparatus. I am able to state that when intelligently used, it increases flexibility and suppleness of the fingers and wrists. I cordially recommend it to pianists and organists."

"H. A. HARDING."

Send for full particulars and testimonials.

"Hand Development," 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.
B. Cooper, Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

Modern Correspondence College

PRINCIPAL:

ARTHUR MCALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.)

GUIDE TO

Matric.

Mus. Bac.

FREE - - A.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

L.R.A.M.

A. Mus. T.C.L.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Couple

This wonderful invention supercedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRs,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

THREE CHOIRS FESTIVAL.

HEREFORD,

SEPTEMBER 4th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th, 1921.

the 201st Meeting of the Three Choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester.

Principal Performers:

ROSINA BUCKMAN. Captain JOHN COATES.
AGNES NICHOLLS. Mr. ROLAND JACKSON.
DOROTHY SILK. Mr. FRANK MULLINGS.
MARGARET BALFOUR. Mr. NORMAN ALLIN.
MARY FOSTER. Captain HERBERT HEYNER.
PHYLLIS LETT. Mr. GEORGE PARKER.
BEATRICE HARRISON (Solo 'Cellist). Mr. ROBERT RADFORD.
H. REED'S STRING QUARTET.
DON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA (Principal 1st Violin, Mr. W. H. Reed).
ORGAN (Mornings), Sir IVOR ATKINS, Mus. Doc.
ORGAN and PIANOFORTE (Evenings), Dr. A. HERBERT BREWER.
Conductor - Mr. PERCY C. HULL.

IN THE CATHEDRAL.

SUNDAY, Sept. 4th, 3 p.m.

AND OPENING SERVICE WITH CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA
TUESDAY MORNING, Sept. 6th, 11.30 a.m.

"Mijah" ... .. Mendelssohn
TUESDAY EVENING, 7.30 p.m.

"Creation" (Part I) ... .. Haydn
Fantasy for Strings (on a theme of Tallis) Vaughan Williams
"et (unaccompanied)—

"At the round earth's imagined corners" ... Parry Antata—
"Come, Redeemer" and Aria, "Comfort Sweet" Bach
Symphony in G minor ... .. Mozart

WEDNESDAY MORNING, Sept. 7th, 11.30 a.m.
"Apostles" ... .. Elgar
"Airsifal" (Finale, Act I) ... .. Wagner

THURSDAY MORNING, Sept. 8th, 11.30 a.m.
"Stabat Mater" ... .. Dvorak
"The Hymn of Jesus" ... .. Holst
"Rhapsody" ... .. Brahms
"Heaven's Gate" ... .. Walford Davies

"Airsifal" (Good Friday Music) ... .. Wagner
"Airsifal" on a theme by Haydn ... .. Brahms

THURSDAY EVENING, 7.30 p.m.
"Gerontius" ... .. Elgar
"Before the Paling of the Stars" ... .. Dale

FRIDAY MORNING, Sept. 9th, 11.30 a.m.
"Messiah" ... .. Handel

IN THE SHIREHALL.
WEDNESDAY EVENING, Sept. 7th, 8 p.m.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT.
Concerto for Violoncello ... .. Elgar
"Brandenburg" Concerto (No. 3, in G) for Strings Bach
"Overture" ("The Bartered Bride") ... .. Smetana
"New Work for Orchestra" ("The Lincoln Imp") ... .. Reed
"New Work, "Jillian of Berry" (Pastorals) ... .. Brewer
For Tenor Solo and Orchestra.
Three Orchestral Pieces ... .. Bainton
Songs, &c. ... ..

FRIDAY EVENING, Sept. 9th, 8 p.m.
CHAMBER CONCERT.

The W. H. Reed String Quartet. Songs, &c.
Chorus and Orchestra of about 350 Performers.

REAL TICKETS admitting to all Oratorios and Wednesday Evening
Concert, £5 10s. od.

ADMISSION TO CATHEDRAL, Division 1, Nave, 20s.; Division 2,
Aisles, 12s.; Division 3, Transepts and Lady Chapel, 7s. 6d.;
Division 4, Choir Aisles, 2s. 6d. REHEARSALS IN CATHEDRAL, 10s. 6d.
REHEARSAL IN SHIREHALL, 7s. 6d.

SHIREHALL, Wednesday, Grand Orchestral Concert, one class of tickets only, 10s. 6d.

SHIREHALL, Friday, Chamber Concert, 1st Division, 7s. 6d.; 2nd
Division, 5s.; 3rd Division, 2s. 6d.

The above prices include Tax.
Chappell Grand Pianoforte.

Positive Organ kindly lent by the Vicar and Churchwardens of St. John's Church, Hereford, and erected by the Positive Company.

For any further information and all particulars as to Stewards, &c., apply to Mr. GEORGE HOLLOWAY, General Hon. Secretary, The Aspect, Aylestone Hill, Hereford.

The Plans will be open to the Public on Monday, July 4th, Cathedral, 1st and 2nd Divisions, and Wednesday Concert, at Messrs. Heins & Co., Broad Street, Cathedral, 3rd and 4th Divisions, and Friday Concert, at Messrs. Duck Son & Pinker, High Town.

Complete Programme, Post-free, 6d.

HOLIDAY COURSES

Technique, Touch, Tone

In Piano Playing.

TO TEACHERS OF MUSIC.

During the holiday season you will have an opportunity to improve your playing and your methods of Teaching.

The Advanced Postal Course of the Gillett School is just what you need to invigorate your playing after the strain of months of teaching.

It will bring your methods up-to-date. It will help you to overcome your individual difficulties.

One Student writes:—"I have found a vast improvement in tone and ease," while another says:—"I can now play octaves for an hour on end without my arms aching."

You cannot afford to let this opportunity of improvement go. Call between 3 and 5, or send a postcard for booklet and full particulars of Mr. Gillett's tuition.

CHARLES A. GILLETT (Studio M.T.)

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET,

NEW BOND STREET, W. I.

ROYAL CARL ROSA SCHOOL OF OPERA

Directors: Mrs. CARL ROSA and ALFRED VAN NOORDEN, Esq.
Principal: ARTHUR FAGGE.

COMPLETE COURSE OF TRAINING

IN

GRAND OPERA

AND ALL BRANCHES OF MUSICAL ART

DANCING, ENSEMBLE, CORRECT ARTICULATION,
DRAMATIC WORK, FENCING, LANGUAGES, ETC.

By Experienced Artists and Professors, at

17, PUTNEY HILL, S.W.15.

For Prospectus, Inclusive Fees, and full particulars, apply.
The SECRETARY, The Royal Carl Rosa School of Opera,
17, Putney Hill, S.W.15.
Telephone: Putney 573.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

is now booking for next season his
LECTURE-RECITALS on

HOW TO SING with ease FOR FORTY YEARS or more.

Mr. Tree's answer to the letter in the June Musical Times will, with the editor's permission, be in the July edition. It is generally acknowledged on all hands that the vocal position of the country spells chaos, and Mr. Tree is determined to do everything in his power to do away with that position, and to show how really simple the whole matter is. In order to arrive at a healthy and sane vocal position we must do away with the prevalent "wise talk" of the anatomy of the throat, &c. That camouflage has killed enough voices, now let us get down to commonsense, and digest that simple method which enables the voice to remain unimpaired during a long career.

Dr. ARTHUR POLLITT, Liverpool, writes, June 13, 1921: "Your admirable book I have read with great interest and pleasure. It contains the essential truths concerning voice-production as being the sole prerogative of an Apostolic band of magicians or High Priests."

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s.).
(If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W.5

POSTAL TRAINING IN MUSIC.

COMPLETE AND INDIVIDUAL PREPARATION FOR L.R.A.M.
A.R.C.M., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc., AND ALL DIPLOMAS OF T.C.L.
AND R.C.O.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES IN THESE EXAMINATIONS.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

- (1) L.R.A.M. Paper Work for September.
- (2) Durham Mus. Bac. Revision Course for "First" and "Final."

These lessons give a grip of all vital points essential to success.

Special Courses for those who wish to study Theory and Composition apart from Examination Work.

Write for Terms, &c., to

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Tutor in Music to U.C.C., Cambridge; Examiner in Music to College of Preceptors, London.

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL

Telephone: Bristol 3933.

THE ART OF VOICE TRAINING

MR. F. C. FIELD HYDE

(Lecturer at the Royal Academy of Music, &c.)

WILL CONDUCT HIS

SUMMER HOLIDAY COURSE in the Rushworth Hall, LIVERPOOL,

From THURSDAY, JULY 28TH, to FRIDAY, AUGUST 5TH, 1921.

FOURTEEN LECTURE DEMONSTRATIONS will be given, each of about 1½ hours' duration and the Course includes:

1. A COMPLETE VOICE TRAINING METHOD with practical teaching demonstration
2. THE ART OF TEACHING as applied to Voice Training.
3. COMPARISONS OF VARIOUS SYSTEMS which are founded upon diverse theories.
4. Questions and Discussions.
5. Complete VOICE
TRAINING EXERCISES and Studies.
6. VOICE REPORT CHARTS for practice in Diagnosing Voices.
7. PERMANENT NOTES of the Vocal Method.

During the Course FOUR EVENING LECTURE-DEMONSTRATIONS will be given on THE TRAINING OF THE SINGING-CLASS AND CHOIR.

The following OPINIONS have all, in essence, been expressed spontaneously by different members of the Lecture Courses. The quotations here given are, respectively, from a leading Medical Authority, a Cathedral Organist, University Organist, the Principal of one of the largest Musical Institutions, a West-End Organist, a Master of Music and Modern Languages.

"I congratulate you on placing such a practical and theoretically sound system before those who are engaged in teaching. It appears to me that the science of voice-production must advance along the lines that you have laid down."

"One of your lectures was alone worth to me the fee charged for the whole course."

"Your course is such a fine example of the Art of Teaching, that it is now no surprise to me that the many pupils whom I knew whilst they were studying with you were so enthusiastic about your teaching, and also 'came on' so fast in the various branches of the vocal art."

"No teacher could go through your course without being a better teacher afterwards."

"My only regret in connection with your Lecture Course is, that I did not know of you and your method years ago. . . . The last part of your printed method would alone have made it worth my while to come to you."

"I have attended numbers of Holiday Courses in musical and educational subjects, but for sheer interest, helpfulness, and real value, yours surpasses them all."

For full particulars, address:

MR. F. C. FIELD HYDE, 3, WIGMORE STUDIOS, 52, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

A. E. MILGROM'S

CONCERT DIRECTION

RECITALS CONCERTS

ORATORIOS,

arranged and managed under the personal direction of

A. E. MILGROM

over 400 Vocalists and Instrumentalists on books.

MR. MILGROM CAN ARRANGE

the Entire Programme for Week-Ends

AT ANY

COUNTRY PLACE OR SEASIDE RESORT.

For terms, please write

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, Regent Street, W.1 (near Queen's Hall).

Phone: MAYFAIR 4123.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Miss Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I can recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly novel, interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Full Particulars, address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., c/o FORBETH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral,
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

ALBERT DOWNING

(CANADIAN TENOR).

Soloist: Toronto Oratorio Society, "Elijah," 1920.

"Toronto Masonic Chorus, 1921.

Winnipeg Choral Society, "Elijah" and "Hiawatha," 1921.
Will arrive in England October, and will be available for engagements in Oratorio, Concerts, Recitals, &c.

For open dates, address, The Milgrom Concert Direction, Regent Street, W.; or c/o Redpath Lyceum Association, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, U.S.A.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MILLARD THOMPSON

(L.T.C.L.)

Principal Tenor, St. George's, Southwark.

32, Selwyn Avenue, Highams Park, E.4.

CYRIL WORSLEY

(TENOR.)

Oratorio, Concerts, Recitals.

31, Elmfield Road, Bromley, Kent.

FRANK LE PLA

BASS-BARITONE.

Oratorio, Concerts, &c. 35, Villiers Road, Southall, W.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.

Audition and Advice free.

For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W.1.

(CAPTAIN)

LEWIS STAINTON

(BASS).

ORATORIOS, ETC.

The Cloisters,
Windsor Castle.

Telegrams:
Stainton, Cloisters, Windsor.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).

8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E.5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7253.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

GIVES LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER

Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,

A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.

COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—

Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch," and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."

Over 500 Successes at Exams.

"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

ROMAN JACOWLEW

Violinist to the Royal Court of Spain. 1st Prize Paris Conservatoire, 1st Diploma Leipzig Conservatoire. Pupil of Alfred Brunn, Henry Berthelier, and Hans Sitt, has vacancy for a few pupils. Preparation and recommendation to Paris and Leipzig Conservatoire. 6, Angell Park Gardens, S.W.9.

G. HUBI-NEWCORNE

(LYRIC AUTHOR).

"Whisper and I shall hear" (Piccolomini), "Within your heart" (Trotère), "Love's Devotion" (A. F. Tate), "Heart's Delight" (Tosti), "A Summer Song" (Guy d'Hardelot), "I heard a Sweet Song" (Dorothy Foster), "Song of Gladness" (£100 Prize).

ADAPTATIONS AND TRANSLATIONS. 1,300 Songs sold. 300 Adaptations.

Libretti for Cantatas, Operettas, Cycles, &c.

"OVERBURY," FUNKIE LANE, PURLEY, SURREY.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

** The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),
c/o "The Faith House," 22, Buckingham St., Charing Cross, W.C.2.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, and Essay Course with Models. 44 Successes in One Year.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDEN, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 171 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 45 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

DR. CROSSLEY.—Singing, Piano, Composition,

Special Coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons by Correspond. And at FORSYTH BROS., Manchester. Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), gives

Lessons, by post, in Harmony and other Theoretical Subjects, and prepares for Examinations. Terms very moderate. 18, Chanters Road, Bideford.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 390 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Over 100 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.

Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920),

specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., will resume her

Private Lessons in Singing in September. Studio, 32, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for

L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes. L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Persons or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holles Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.

COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.

DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.

FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.

ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.

DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.

DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.

MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.

IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Priv. Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., &c. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

DR. TAYLOR gives LESSONS by correspondence

in all Musical Subjects, Elementary or Advanced. Diploma & Degree work. Manuscripts revised. Accompaniments written, &c., Terms moderate. Portland Place, Lancaster.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING

Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, a my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A. I. Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing) 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (3.) F.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (4.) Mus. Bac. Degree.

RECENT SUCCESSSES:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

(Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher) Registered Teacher (T.R.C.)—Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, History, Interpretation. Successes R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

There are two VACANCIES for Leading SOLO BOYS. Candidates should be between nine and twelve years old. They must have had sound voice-training, and be good readers of music at six Bar, lodging, education, and medical attendance free. Apply Rev. M. Hardey (Sub-chantor), The Close, Lichfield.

ST. ALBAN'S CHURCH, Holborn.—WANTED

good SOLO BOY. £20-£30, according to ability. Apply, G. Cunningham, 6, Leaside Avenue, Muswell Hill, N.10.

WANTED a SOLO BOY for Choir School

the country. Board, lodging, and education free. Evelyn Countess of Craven, Ashdown Park, Shrivensham.

ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE, TENBURY.

ALTO LAY-CLERK WANTED. Commence duties September £80. Communicant. Age, not over thirty-five. Opportunity for other work. Apply with copies of three recent testimonials), The Rector, The Warden.

ALTO and TENOR REQUIRED. £15. Good

Readers. Light duties. Write, Choirmaster, St. Andrew's, Undershaft, Leadenhall Street, E.C.3.

SOPRANOS WANTED for CHOIR of West-End

Church. Apply, "G. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 10, Wardour Street, W. 1.

TENOR WANTED.—St. Matthias, Earl's Court

£15. Organist.

WEST END CHURCH.—TENORS required

£20. Two services. Friday practice. Apply letter only. Organist, 22, Warwick Chambers, W.8.

HANDSWORTH PARISH CHURCH. BASS
WANTED. £15. Good reader essential. Communicant.
by letter, Choirmaster, 93, Oakhill Road, S.W.15.

RGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED in October, for Highgate Presbyterian Church. Lewis two-tual. Salary, £70. Write, stating age and experience, with copies ree testimonials, to "Lewis," c/o Street's, 30, Cornhill, E.C.3.

RGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED
for Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Stirling, N.B.—To begin es on August 1. Salary not less than £100. There is a first-class ing for a thoroughly competent man who is prepared to teach ing, pianoforte, organ, &c. Reply to Rev. G. S. Osborn, The sonage, Gladstone Place, Stirling, N.B.

RGANIST REQUIRED for North London
Congregational Church. Willis three-manual. Salary, £40.
ress, "J. P. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

RGANIST WANTED.—Queen Street Congre- gational Church, Wolverhampton. Fine 3-Manual Willis in. Two Sunday and one mid-week service. Salary, £80. Apply irmaster, above address.

HRIST CHURCH, Oxford, intend to hold an ELECTION to an organ scholarship (value £100 a year), on nesday, October 12. Intending candidates should write to the v y Rev. The Dean for particulars.

RGANIST of well-known London church avail- able for HOLIDAY DUTY. Seaside resort. F.R.C.O., c/o ello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

IE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

olo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church vices, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

A. CANTAB., A.R.C.O., University Scholar,
... seeks appointment in London as ORGANIST-ORMASTER. Prepared to do temporary work there or else-
re. "D. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

RGANIST of considerable experience available for temporary duty. Highly commended. Church of England.
ight, Derry Downs, St. Mary Cray, Kent.

HE PIONEER CLUB for Professional and
Business Women has been reopened at 12, Cavendish Place, W.1.
ual Subscription, £4 4s. No entrance fee (pro tem.).

MATEUR (Gent.) desires experience with refined Concert Party or Troup, Solo or Character Sketches. Will pay expenses and help with arrangements. North preferred. Apply, Observer Office, Lancaster.

CCOMPANIST - SECRETARY to Singer or
Violinist. Lady (Certificated Pianist) DESIRES POST.
F., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

RGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—
Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed.
well & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

HURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two
Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built.
e to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the es at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ
orks, Manchester, S.W.

TWO-MANUAL ORGAN, by Gray & Davison.
Stops, For early disposal. Apply, Willis, 234, Ferndale Road, xton, S.W.9.

RGAN FOR SALE.—Two-Manuals, 21 Speaking
Stops, and usual Couplers. Tenders invited. The instrument be inspected and heard. Apply, The Churchwardens, Wem, Salop.

VANTED.—Two-Manual Second-hand Pipe
ORGAN, in good condition, suitable for small Church. Apply Gilson, Rayleigh.

N SALE.—MUSTAL ORGAN, with Celesta.
Good condition. £325. Can be seen by arrangement. J. H. al, Market Place, Hyde, Cheshire.

VANTED, Piano Pedal Attachment. Full par- ticulars to 19, Packington Street, Stoke, Devonport.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy "SONGS OF THE Night" (Oakley). Two Sets Numbers 1-4 and 5-7. Price 2s.
h Set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male
Quartet, by Arthur Mangelsdorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd., Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarshaw, 497, ventry Road, Birmingham.

MEMORY.—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON
undertakes to develop Perfect Memory
Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W.3.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES.

SET I.

No.
1.	Andante ... ..	Alfred H. Allen
2.	Spring Song ... ..	W. H. Bell
3.	Andante con Moto ... ..	G. J. Bennett
4.	Song of Thanksgiving ... ..	Josiah Booth
5.	Church Preludes No. 5 ... ..	R. E. Bryson
6.	Postlude ... ..	H. Elliot Button
7.	Postlude ... ..	G. Calkin
8.	Prelude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
9.	Andante ... ..	J. W. Gritton
10.	Allegro Moderato ... ..	Kate Loder
11.	Allegro. Op. 21 ... ..	Gustav Merkel
12.	Andante. Op. 162 ... ..	Gustav Merkel
13.	Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn ... ..	J. T. Pye
14.	Prelude No. 2 ... ..	A. Redhead
15.	Larghetto and Allegro ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
16.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	C. Steggall
17.	Contemplation ... ..	John E. West
18.	Postlude ... ..	John E. West
19.	Moderato Maestoso ... ..	Kate Westrop
20.	Andante Pastorale ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET II.

No.
1.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	George J. Bennett
2.	Church Prelude ... ..	R. Ernest Bryson
3.	Andante Tranquillo ... ..	George Calkin
4.	For Holy Communion ... ..	J. Baptiste Calkin
5.	Postlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
6.	Largo ... ..	Handel
7.	Berceuse ... ..	Oliver King
8.	Adagio, from Sonata No. 2 ... ..	Kuhlau
9.	Allegretto ... ..	Kate Loder
10.	Andante in G ... ..	G. F. Wesley Martin
11.	Andante Quasi Allegretto ... ..	Gustav Merkel
12.	Cavatina in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
13.	Epilogue ... ..	Joseph Rheinberger
14.	Andante in A ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
15.	Andante in G ... ..	Charles Steggall
16.	March in G ... ..	Henry Smart
17.	Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funebre") ... ..	John E. West
18.	Pastoral Melody ... ..	John E. West
19.	Andante ... ..	Kate Westrop
20.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.
1.	Melody ... ..	A. Herbert Brewer
2.	Maestoso ... ..	George Calkin
3.	Ave Maria ... ..	Edward T. Chipp
4.	Interlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
5.	Intermezzo ... ..	Alan Gray
6.	Postlude ... ..	Alex. Guilmant
7.	Sursum Corda ... ..	John Ireland
8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22 ... ..	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
9.	Andante ... ..	Gustav Merkel
10.	Duetto in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
11.	Cavatina ... ..	Joachim Raff
12.	Monologue No. 5 ... ..	J. Rheinberger
13.	Melody in F ... ..	Anton Rubinstein
14.	Dreaming ... ..	Schumann
15.	The Poet Speaks ... ..	Schumann
16.	Soft Voluntary ... ..	B. Luard-Sely
17.	Menuetto ... ..	Berthold Tours
18.	Aspiration ... ..	John E. West
19.	Sketch in C minor ... ..	John E. West
20.	Andante con Moto ... ..	W. G. Wood

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.

CLOTH, EIGHT SHILLINGS EACH SET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

July 6th, at 3 p.m.—Lecture-Recital by Dr. C. W. PEARCE.
Subject: "18th Century Chamber Music." Illustrations by the Lecturer and Messrs. L. PECSKAI and L. LEBELL.

July 9th, at 3 p.m.—Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W. (Sole Lessees of the Hall: Chappell & Co.)

July 13th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

July 14th, at 3 p.m.—Vocal and Instrumental Concert at Steinway Hall.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution.
The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC
CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

TO ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES AND CONDUCTORS

MESSRS. ELKIN & Co., LTD., desire to draw attention to the following specially attractive works for Orchestra recently issued.

SUITE FROM

"WHERE THE RAINBOW ENDS"

BY

ROGER QUILTER.

s. d.

Full Orchestra (including Piano Conductor) 10 0

Small ... .. 7 0

CORONACH

(A HIGHLAND LAMENT.)

BY

EDGAR BARRATT.

Full Orchestra (including Piano Conductor) 2 0

Complete Orchestral List, post free on application.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., LIMITED.

THE CELEBRATED

RHYTHMIC METHOD

BY

T. H. YORKE TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc.

The Rhythmic Gradus.

An Elementary Text-Book of Music. In Four Grades.

Grade I., 3s. Grades II., III., IV., 3s. 6d. each.

Ear-Training and Sight-Singing,

With Exercises for use with the "Rhythmic Gradus" and

"Constructive Harmony." In Seven Grades.

Grades I., II., III., IV., 1s.; Grades V., VI., VII., 1s. 6d. each.

Constructive Harmony.

Together with a Book on Form. In Three Parts:

Part I.—Diatonic Harmony and Elementary Con- s. d.

struction ... .. 2 0

" II.—Chromatic Harmony and Composition ... .. 2 0

" III.—Form ... .. 4

Rhythmic Gradus Scale Chart.

(Mounted on Rollers and Varnished) ... 2s. 6d., 3s., 4s. 6d.

Wonderful and extraordinarily good results have been obtained by this method in England, and it is at present arousing great interest in the U.S. of America, where Dr. YORKE TROTTER is to lecture and introduce it at the end of this year.

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS RAPID
TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY
TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC
LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

IMPRESSIONS

(L'ALMANACH AUX IMAGES).

A VOCAL SUITE

FOR SOLO AND CHORUS OF LADIES' VOICES.

THE POEM BY

TRISTAN KLINGSOR.

The English Version by W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

GUSTAVE FERRARI.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Orchestral Score by JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

Parts for Strings, Wood-Wind and Horn (5 players), or Organ, may be had on hire

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Photograph by]

[A. C. Taylor Peterborough.

HAYDN KEETON

1847—1921

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JULY 1 1921

HAYDN KEETON,

1847-1921

I have been asked to write a few words about my life-long friend, Haydn Keeton, whose sudden death has, I know, given great sorrow to many. To me it is a real grief, for we were close friends, and had spent many happy hours together for many years. I first met Keeton when, in 1866, I was appointed organist of Holy Trinity, Windsor. He was then an articled pupil of Dr. Elvey. Keeton and I had much in common—we were both desirous of rising in our profession, and both realised that it could be done only by work. I think it was I who stirred up Keeton a little in the direction of working for a musical degree. The ambition was by no means common in those days. Many young organists thought that ability to play the organ well was all that mattered, and the degrees of Oxford and Cambridge were not so much sought after as they are to-day. However, we made up our minds to go in for the Oxford Mus. Bac., and to achieve this end we met nightly in my rooms—or in his—and worked, correcting each other's exercises.

We took our degrees in due course, and then set about attaining the one great ambition of our lives. Early in 1869 Manchester Cathedral organistship became vacant, and we both applied for it. I was fortunate enough to be selected. But Keeton did not have to wait long, for he secured the next Cathedral that became vacant. So we were both very happy, and went on with our work in very different places—he at his quiet city and delightful Cathedral, and I at busy Manchester. I never passed through Peterborough on my way to and from Manchester without finding Keeton at the station waiting to have five minutes' chat. He often told me that if he could he would not have changed with me—he could not stand the strenuous life, and knew the charm of quiet. But he did his work at Peterborough right well. With a slender force of men, and an admirable set of boys, he kept the services up to a high standard. He had a remarkable gift for picking out boys with good voices and for training them. I have never been to Peterborough without hearing a good solo boy, and often two or three. This was the more to his credit, for as a rule he was restricted to local boys.

He has contributed to Cathedral music. I do not know all his compositions, as he was rather reticent regarding publication, but I do know his splendid anthem, 'Beloved, now are we the sons of God,' and I do not think it has been equalled by many modern writers. In one direction Keeton was a leader—he assisted Canon Westcott (then a Canon of Peterborough, afterwards for a short time of Westminster, and later Bishop of Durham) in putting forth the Paragraph Psalter, one of the finest and most valuable efforts made to improve the rendering of the Psalms.

I do not think he liked ordinary teaching, but he did like coaching for degrees, and he was very successful therein. He worked out the papers himself, and thus was able to explain their difficulties to his numerous pupils. He was, of course, often one of the examiners for musical degrees, as well as at the Royal College of Organists and Trinity College.

For many years he came to me in Scotland and enjoyed it greatly, learning to land salmon, and taking a hand in shooting. He had never done much of this, and was a little troublesome sometimes. He was so afraid of catching cold that he would walk about and eat his lunch instead of sitting down with us. This mattered little, but he rather annoyed my keeper more than once. He delighted in shooting a wood, but when placed at the spot to which the game was being driven, he was inclined to march up and down like a sentry, instead of standing motionless. He kept his own blood in circulation, but he also kept the rabbits in circulation, and they ran back towards the beaters, instead of towards Keeton. He liked going to the Scots kirk at Glass, and he was with me when the minister scored off us so well—a story I have told elsewhere. The lady organist was ill. We went and offered to play, and as we took the hymn paper from the parson I said, 'It will be all right; we shall both take part in the playing.' 'Oh! yes,' said my friend the parson, 'It will be all right. We are no' very particular at Glass!'

Keeton's life at Peterborough was, I am sure, a happy one. He loved his garden, and in his last letter to me—written only a few days before he died—he spoke of the promise of fruit, &c. Curiously enough, in this letter he made an allusion to his age. He mentioned that a Canon had come into residence who was in his ninety-second year, and went on to say, 'Alas! we are both getting old, and a few years will see a difference.' In a few days he had passed away. In the same letter he told me of his Cathedral work, and of having just sung Purcell's 'O sing unto the Lord,' and also an anthem of my own. He could not bear the idea of retiring, and I think he would have been very unhappy if he had lost his daily Cathedral work.

I am afraid this is a poor tribute to his memory, but I write simply about him and his connection with me. We were both spared to do over fifty years of work, and to be friends all that time. I cannot remember ever falling out with him (unless it was when he would frighten the rabbits), and I know he always rejoiced in any success I had had in the fifty years of my own 'pilgrimage.' His name deserves to be held in respect not only at Peterborough but in all 'quires and places where they sing.'

J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

THE DRAMATIC WORKS OF VINCENT D'INDY

BY M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

(Continued from June number, page 403)

'FERVAAL'—(continued)

It is when d'Indy resorts to the modalities of plainsong and folk-song that he achieves the most interesting results. The first instance I shall quote is a tune which appears in Acts 1 and 2, and may be either an actual folk-tune, a shepherd's or woodcutter's call, or invented by the composer. I believe it is invented. It is in itself most lovely, but owes much of its wonderful appeal to the way in which it is introduced and to its treatment:

Ex. 1a. Very slow.

The last quotation calls for particular attention. It is, I believe, the earliest instance of what I shall call, for want of a better designation, atmospheric treatment of the accompaniment to a tune perhaps, as regards folk-tunes and other tunes complete in themselves, the most satisfactory from the points of view of general fitness and of artistic effect. If properly applied, it generally proves far more suitable than any of the stereotyped modes of accompaniment which are met with even in collections of folk-songs edited by excellent musicians.*

The passage is noteworthy, too, because it illustrates d'Indy's extraordinary power to suggest natural scenery, to interpret into sound the character and appeal of landscapes—not in a romantic spirit, nor for directly sentimental or dramatic purposes, but straightforwardly and simply, for their own sake. Here we find, as in many other passages of 'Fervaal,' as in the 'Symphonie sur un thème montagnard,' an unmistakable feeling of spaciousness, of open air. Elsewhere, other methods will be resorted to with equally telling results: for instance, in the Prelude to Act 1 (Fervaal asleep in Guilhen's garden) and throughout the first part of Act 2—from which that very passage is quoted.

An important part is played by the 'Pange lingua,' which d'Indy utilises as a symbol of the new religion whose advent is to follow the destruction of Cravann. It appears at first as follows:

Ex. 2.

(a) Orchestra.

(b) Choir.

and in the final scene constitutes the main element of the grandiose climax in the music, while Fervaal climbs towards the peaks where the mystic voices are calling. It goes through various tonal transformations, and at the end, in the key of D major, assumes a triumphant character. To the student of Liszt, that part of 'Fervaal' will suggest a comparison with the middle of the admirable 'Nächtliche Zug,' in which the 'Pange lingua' is used very much in the same fashion, with equally wonderful results. It is likely, however, that d'Indy, when he wrote 'Fervaal,' was not acquainted with the 'Nächtliche Zug,' one of the least known of Liszt's masterpieces.

* To make the point clearer, we may refer to the fifth of the Greek folk-songs harmonized by Ravel, and to No. 4 in Kodaly's pianoforte pieces, Op. 3—both of which thoroughly illustrate the principle of 'atmospheric treatment.'

Among the countless passages illustrating d'Indy's methods of employing old modes or irregular scales, a few call for special notice. Very typical the following, from the Prelude to Act 2:

Ex. 3.

&amp;c.

which the rhythmic disposition greatly increases the weird effect of the ascending scales. In effect, little further, we see the usual melodic minor scale assume, owing to the same artifice, an equally striking character:

Ex. 4.

The whole of the music accompanying the mythological apparitions, the religious ceremonies, and the call to arms, teems with instances no less worthy of study. Indeed, this part of Act 2, which might easily have become conventional and tedious—for scenes of the same kind belong to the stock-in-trade of opera—is instinct with vitality and originality. One of the main factors of that originality is the genuinely archaic character of every rhythm, motive, and colour scheme. Here we have something very different from the conventional effects familiar to operatic music whenever characters belonging to primitive races occupy the stage; music which, however strange in design or in progression, whether complex or simple, rings true and goes deep. I think that Rimsky-Korsakov, in 'Mlada,' is the only other composer to have achieved the like. Here are three short quotations of typically archaic motives appearing in the above scenes.

The first, it will be noticed, is an ingenious derivation from the tune given above (Ex. 1):

Ex. 6.
ORCH. & CHOIR.

Ex. 7.

After the epic grandeur of the closing scenes of Act 2—Fervaa's election as leader, the alarm, and the call to arms—the contrast afforded by the grim, muffled, woeful opening of the Prelude to Act 3 is profound. But even in the absence of contrast—for instance, at a concert performance—the stupendous tragedy of the Prelude stands unparalleled.

Having thus enumerated, and very inadequately described, some of the beauties and features of interest that I find in 'Fervaa,' I fear that I have failed to convey an impression of the work as a whole. It is best described, perhaps, as an epic, with many splendours and a few unavoidable and negligible shortcomings. It may be, as M. Louis Laloy asserted long ago, the last of heroic music-dramas: for, indeed, signs are not wanting to show that not heroic music-drama only, but music-drama in general is not a form for which the leaders of the present generation evince any particular fondness. It may be that d'Indy's tendency to linger over explanatory scenes and to indulge in long perorations, will dissatisfy those who believe exclusively in the unvaried terseness of 'Boris Godunof' and 'Pelléas.' Undoubtedly, at times, d'Indy the symphonist yields to his predilections, and builds up things like the chorus of the Saracen peasants at the end of Act 1, or the colloquy of the chiefs and the war-chorus in Act 2. Even in this type of chorus he displays a sense of fitness as great as his mastery of treatment. And when he uses the human voices for mere colour effects, he does so with extraordinary genius. In this respect the scenes of the apparitions and the concluding mystical chorus show surpassing originality and efficiency. It should be added that when occasion arises, he knows how to begin in medias res, to proceed, and to conclude swiftly: one could wish for no better example of terseness than that afforded by the Prologue. And when all is said and done, surely a tendency to which we owe the splendid final scene amply justifies itself.

'L'ETRANGER'

'L'Etranger,' a brief drama in two Acts, presents a remarkable admixture of realism and of mystic, rather elusive symbolism, which may seem disconcerting when one reads the poem, but becomes thoroughly acceptable in conjunction with the music—especially if the stage setting is artistic, simple, and broad enough to co-operate efficiently in the general effect. Few works, indeed, are more difficult to stage adequately, although the difficulties are more of the artistic than of the technical order. Realism in the setting and in the action plays but the part of a counterfoil to the broad sway of symbolism which is the essential element of the poem, and predominates even more fully in the music. And the wrong kind of stage setting very easily destroys the balance which the composer has skilfully maintained in the words and the music.

For the same reason, the necessary task of describing the plot is fraught with difficulties. Without resorting to extensive quotations of both text and music, one can hardly avoid dwarfing essentials, and giving undue prominence to the realistic details whose actual part is far less obtrusive than would appear from the following digest.

In a fishermen's village, an unknown man has taken his abode. The inhabitants dislike and mistrust him. They think him a wizard, because he wears on his cap a big emerald, and because he is extraordinarily successful in his fishing, the proceeds of which he usually distributes among the poor. Alone, a young girl, Vita, feels herself drawn towards him, and for his sake wishes to break off her engagement to André, a conceited and heartless coastguard. But the Stranger, although he loves Vita, does not comply. He feels he may not, because his life is devoted to the fulfilment of a sacred duty, a mission of charity, of which the emerald, a gem that of yore 'shone on the prow of the boat which carried the resurrected friend of Jesus, our Lord,' is the tangible symbol. By yielding, eventually, to his love for Vita, the Stranger breaks his faith. He must depart, and may no longer wear the emerald, which he gives to Vita as a token of remembrance. Vita vows that she will remain faithful to the remembrance, and as a pledge casts the emerald into the sea. At that very moment, a long impending storm begins to rage. Soon a vessel in distress is sighted. It appears impossible to rescue its occupants. Yet the Stranger calls for the life-boat. None come forth to help man it but Vita. The life-boat is launched, but at the instant when it reaches its goal, a wave overturns it; the Stranger and Vita are united in death.

The inner meaning of the drama may be considered elusive, but it is not altogether obscure. That Stranger, whose mission is to serve all men, who tears himself away from the woman he loves rather than have his devotion to one being stand in the way of his duty, is not unlike Ibsen's Brand—with the corrective that his ideal is loving-kindness, will-power, and that from the outset he knows the truth proclaimed at the very end of 'Brand'—'God is love.' Yet again, he may, as I have suggested at the time when 'L'Etranger' appeared, be an idealisation of the artist, whose mission, d'Indy tells us in his 'Treatise of Composition,' is 'to serve all men and expect nothing for himself of the time in which he lives.'

Vita (who follows the Stranger in self-sacrifice very much as Agnes renounces Eynar for the sake of Brand) bears a name characteristic enough to render explanation superfluous. Her love for the Stranger is unselfish, inspired by her comprehension of his sublime benevolence and lofty purpose. In contrast, the narrow-mindedness and selfishness of the world at large are epitomised in the persons of the villagers and of André.

The emerald is introduced in order to accentuate and enhance the mystical character of the action. Its appearances, and all references to it, are accompanied in the score by a motive derived from the antiphon, 'Ubi Caritas et Amor, Deum ibi est'—which antiphon is actually used as the chief leading motive of the work, supplying an unmistakable key to its intended meaning.

It may be added that the emerald provides a valuable element of picturesqueness. After Vita has cast it into the sea, a green light illuminates the waves, and in conjunction with a well-chosen distant chorus of voices, used merely for the sake of colour (very much as in the passages of 'Fervaa!' referred to above), produces a most striking impression.

(To be continued.)

SOME ITALIAN COMPOSERS OF TO-DAY

(Continued from June number, page 415)

BY GUIDO M. GATTI

VI.—ALFREDO CASELLA

Casella is an important figure in the contemporary Italian musical movement because of his twofold activity as pianist (and, through this, as fervid propagandist of all good modern music) and composer; nor can we say which of these two aspects carries greater weight in the general scheme of the present musical output in Italy. If the latter raises endless discussions and insuperable opposition (it could not well be otherwise in view of the extreme opinions) there can be no doubt regarding the former. Casella's presence in Italy and his untiring and courageous activity have contributed not a little to the country's musical awakening, and constitute a factor that cannot be left out of the record. Undoubtedly Italian composers, artificers of the contemporary revival, existed before Casella's return from his long exile in France; but what should not be overlooked is the impulse that he has given to the productiveness of some who were discouraged by the difficulties they found in the way of execution and his really fraternal readiness to help those who now rank among the potent forces of our sical life. Moreover, it must not be forgotten he has been almost the discoverer of some, leading them to themselves before disclosing them to the public, and, in his unshaken faith in the modern tendencies of art, directing them along a path by which perhaps they would not have dared venture alone.

It may be mere chance, but it cannot be denied that Casella's return from Paris—about a year before the outbreak of the Great War—coincides with the first manifestations of that handful of young and valorous musicians of whom we are speaking in these articles. Casella conducts in person a campaign for modern music, filling his concert programmes almost entirely with modern examples, founding societies of modern musicians, editing, reviewing, and collaborating with kindred spirits, always with the sole purpose of making known whatever good thing is found in Italian musical soil, so many years barren of true musical art. These activities alone would justify our singling out for honour so attractive and disinterested a figure.

But, as we have said, the other aspect of our musician's personality—that of composer—is also highly important, and attracts the critic's attention as an almost unique phenomenon in the musical movement of Europe. However much we may differ from certain of his theories—and the present writer does not always agree with them—we cannot in good faith reject all Casella's works (or, at least as some do, those in his latest manner) as things of no account. The artistic insight of their inspiration, their avoidance of any concession to public taste, and their undoubted sincerity, make his compositions worthy of the most careful and calm consideration of the critic who is a true lover and investigator of every phenomenon of modern aesthetics.

The sincerity and logic of Casella's work in its line of development, embracing nearly twenty years, stand out clearly for all who carefully examine his compositions, each of which marks a further step towards that which we have agreed to call his latest manner. (To speak of the latest manner of a composer who is not quite thirty-eight is, however, rather risky.) From his early pages, from the Symphony and the Violoncello Sonata to the most recent composition for string quartet, what difference of expression, but at the same time what continuity and logic of language, and what unity of those elements which we will call notional!

Going back to his compositions of 1902 we may observe that even if they bear no decidedly personal mark, still here and there we already see traces of Casella's temperament, and of one of his special characteristics in the equilibrium and clarity of the construction.

They are pages which cannot be positively classified as scholastic, and in which the culture of the musician, already gifted with a very considerable technique, does not prevent his inspiration from expressing itself freely. This is an indication of a pronounced temperament in the case of one whose youthful education was exclusively classical. Born into a family of musicians, the first music which spoke to his heart was that of Mozart, Beethoven, Bach, who at that time represented the food of the initiated few. And traces of this and of other more recent music are to be found in the two Symphonies, in the Sonata for violoncello, in the Sarabanda, in the Variations for pianoforte, which at the same time reveal to us a musician familiar with the most complicated constructions of counterpoint and a real connoisseur of the possibilities of the instruments.

Notwithstanding this, we seem to see that in certain passages the second Symphony of Casella, saturated as it is with chromaticism and Wagnerian-Straussian polyphony, succeeds in freeing itself from the husk of the influence of ancient and modern German masters and in giving forth a lyricism that is the fruit of a keen Italian sensibility. A similar feature is always present in each of Casella's works, even if it is not always very easy to grasp. It is revealed by many a small sign, but above all by a trenchant vein of song which could be neither French nor of a Northern country. It is a wholly Latin emotion; not expanding itself in a winding fashion like the melodrama of the 19th century, but expressed in broad and telling lines.

By a process of elimination we can easily see that Casella's genius is purely Italian. It has no affinity with any other prevailing at the present day. It is as far removed and as different from Debussy as it is from Stravinsky or Schönberg: from French impressionism as from the barbaric primitiveness of 'Petrouchka'; and from Stravinsky's pieces for clarinet solo as from the cold science of the Austrian composer. What surprises us more than anything else is that notwithstanding his long residence at Paris, and his intimate friendship with Debussy and his followers, there is no trace at all of Debussyism in Casella's pages. His deep love for plastic expression, for solidity of line, for boldness of plan, prevented this. The impressionism of the poet-musician of 'Nuages' is the antithesis of outline, of osseous frame, of melodious unity. Subtle vibrations of colour take the place of design, and up to a certain point (i.e., in the hands of an artist like Debussy) it succeeds in expressing minds and mental concepts with exquisite emotion. In Casella, on the contrary, the preoccupation of rhythmic dynamism, of plastic construction, of strophic solidity, is such that under certain aspects we might almost speak of a greater voluntary attachment to tradition in order to prevent himself succumbing to the fascinations of the impressionistic siren—for example, the Suite in C major for orchestra, which is a composition of such equilibrium and purity of line that it might be called in truth a classic.

With the ballet 'Le couvent sur l'eau' (1911) we find ourselves face to face with a turning point in the way of the musician's expression. On the plot of a ballet by Vaudoyer—a pretty, slender plot, with the scene laid in the Venice of the 18th century—he has written music in which his hand has worked miracles of grace, and his spirit has succeeded in finding just the right equilibrium between the languid tenderness and slight cynicism which characterise the action. The themes of the Barcarola and of the Sarabanda, which reminds us a little of that of the Suite, expand with amplitude of voice and merge into a dream atmosphere: they have that sensual savour which on summer evenings rises from the dark sleeping waters of the lagoon. The vocalised melody of Consuelo, undulating in the popular rhythm of the gondolier, blossoms amid the orchestral accompaniment like one of those huge lily-flowers on the tranquil lake.

The writing of the 'Couvent sur l'eau,' instead of being almost exclusively contrapuntal, as was the second Symphony, becomes almost completely harmonic. Although the tonal-diatonic sense continues to be active, on the other hand harmonic and rhythmic research abounds, and many are the chords which herald the coming work—that work which we may say fully shows us for the first time the true personality of the musician: the 'Notte di Maggio,' for soprano and orchestra. In this poem, inspired by the well-known lyric by Carducci, traditional diatonic and harmonic elements are, it is true, still to be found, but the author here grasps and defines for the first time the new tonal sense, a mysterious and indefinable tonality which is neither major nor minor nor anything else. The new harmony is decisively and conclusively affirmed by the last chord (which set the Parisian musicians and critics talking for some time), in which the major and minor elements exist together without reciprocal predominance, a perfect chord in E minor adorned with four appoggiature.

This particular technical proceeding (which a French critic called 'harmonic counterpoint,' that is, a horizontal movement of chords rather than of melodies, a promiscuousness of traditional chords hitherto considered incompatible) is abundantly exploited by Casella in the 'Nove pezzi' for pianoforte, and with greater assurance in the later compositions. Here he extracts from the device a multiform variety of new chords in which the freshness of his inspiration finds an adequate and vibrating expression.

Side by side with the harmonic novelty proceeds the plastic evolution: the traditional 'quadratura' is replaced by the most complete rhythmic liberty, all the classical and romantic melodious clichés being inexorably condemned and abandoned.

From 'L'Adieu à la vie,' the four lyrics on the poems from 'Gitanjali,' by Tagore, of such noble aspiration towards an ideal heaven of luminous serenity, to the poem for pianoforte 'A notte alta' (which the composer has now arranged for pianoforte and orchestra), there is, as it were, a leap from ecstasy to life and passion.

Casella was deeply moved by the war from the very beginning, when he lived through some tragic hours on French soil. Those terrible visions of flight and pillage, of destruction and ruin, were all laid up in his mind and never be forgotten. They saturated the 'Paginella' first, and later the 'Elegia eroica'—the latter the expression of the deepest emotion, the former fleeting apparitions on the screen, rapidly drawn sketches from real life, viz.: 'Sfilata artiglieria pesante tedesca'—German heavy artillery on march (the noise of motors, confusion of wheels, monstrosity of howitzers). 'Dina alle rovine della cattedrale de Reims'—Before the ruins of Rheims Cathedral (mutilated and broken statues of holy virgins, universal pity for the glorious martyrdom). 'Carica di Cavalleggeri cosacca'—A charge of the Cossacks (with barbaric violence, to the galloping rhythm of the Asiatic horses and their terrible riders). 'Crocce di legno in Alsazia'—Wooden crosses in Alsace (little cemeteries in flower in April with the sound of a paladin's horn in the distance for all those who have died for liberty). 'Corazzi italiani in crociera'—Italian ironclads cruising (great masses of steel pass rapidly, heavy and agile, vaguely outlined in the morning mist).

Five symphonic frescoes these, which affect irresistibly by the impetus of their rhythm, the flash of an incandescent instrumentation, the dazzle of light of harmonic aggregations in which the twelve sounds of the European scale gathered into chords press against, crush each other, and dissolve in devastating explosions.

In 'Elegia eroica' the musician, although moved by the sight of Death, absolute mistress of the whole world, does not give himself up to the dramatic frenzy; to disordered cries of grief, he restrains himself in a line of classical beauty. The vision of a grave and melancholy funeral procession in the dim twilight is pervaded through and through with a deep and tender musical lament. The mothers rock the souls of their sons to sleep in a sweet dream, murmuring a cradle song, the echo of a far-off hymn comes to fortify their hearts, sacred to the love of country, in the final apotheosis whose boundaries fade away in the clearness of the dawn.

In the 'Pupazzetti' and in the Sonatina we find ourselves, on the contrary, face to face with the ironic side of the musician, that side which re-appears every now and then in his compositions—without doubt because it is one of his fundamental characteristics—beginning with the charming and successful imitations of celebrated musicians, collected under the à la manière de. The 'Pupazzetti' belong to that species of humorous-grotesque performance which finds its graphic analogy in caricature, and its literary in certain well-known pages of English literature. The Sonatina is planned exactly in the classical model except that the tempi are reduced to such a minimum that a charmingly humorous motif springs from the falsified proportions.

The transformation of Casella's musical language has happened, as we said before, gradually and ically. Strictly speaking we might fix four periods in the musician's output, the fourth of which, however, is in many respects only the consolidation of the third, as we shall show further.

In the first period the composer does nothing to follow this or that æsthetic direction, as yet certain of his way (the 1902-10 period). In the second he has stripped off the classic-romantic crust and starts on his research phase (1911-15), approaching a form which grows more and more concise and dynamic, frankly anti-expressionist inasmuch as it is based on contrasting æsthetic values and a harmony free as air, tending to the absorption of the consonant elements by the dissonant. In the third period (1915-18), a period of affirmation, he has succeeded in substituting an entirely new tonality, consisting of a sort of simultaneous fusion of the various scales—Western, Greek, and Eastern. Whereas in Debussy, for example, these various scales follow each other—with a special predilection, especially in his imitators, for the whole-tone scale, which is quite worn out and no longer to be found in Casella—here they dwell together, in a certain sense overlapping each other (see ex. 1 and 2) :

From "In Alsazia: croci di legno (Pagine di guerra, IV.).
Andante.

Ex. 1.

Ex. 2. From "5 pieces" for string quartet.

giving rise to an indefinable tonality, to a tonal sense which is already dodecaphony, but yet co-ordinates all the surrounding sounds with two central notes having the clear character and function of tonic and dominant notes. (For example, in the poem 'A notte alta,' it is easy to perceive an introduction founded on a vast pedal of C sharp, dominant of F sharp at the beginning, in the centre, and at the end. But nobody could safely attribute any key whatever to this mysterious tonality, neither major nor minor, nor Gregorian, nor Oriental, nor any other.) Only the first part of the Sonatina is absolutely atonal; but in all Casella's other music the atonality is merely episodic and transitive, and always meant to contrast with the aforesaid tonality. This system even in its originality yet has its roots in the past in so far as we find co-existent in it the latest conquests and the old tonal sense, understood as the faculty of attributing to any note whatever the function of the tonic note. And in this it appears in absolute harmony with the special conception of a new Italian musical lyrical form, very modern, and at the same time traditional in the widest meaning of the word.

Casella's fourth manner dates from last year, after two years of inactivity as a composer, and (to express it briefly) it is, more than anything else, a simplification of the preceding period. The expression, which used to be sometimes harmonically overlaid, grows more transparent; there is greater balance between the harmonic, rhythmic, and melodious elements; and these latter are more incisive, simpler, and sometimes have almost popular touches (as in the 'Cradle-song' for quartet). However, in its general lines the musician's physiognomy, as we knew him, remains unaltered, with his predilection for the concise, brief forms (see the delicious 'Undici pezzi infantili'—Eleven Infantile Pieces—for the pianoforte), and a renewed serenity of vision, which had deserted him in the preceding years, and which gives us back the freshness and gaiety of the Bourrée of the Suite in C, and of the 'Couvent,' and is an excellent augury for the composer's future. It should be added that Casella was born at Turin on July 25, 1883.

COMPLETE WORKS BY ALFREDO CASELLA

1902.	Pavane, pianoforte	...	Enoch
1902.	'Variations sur une chaconne,' pianoforte	...	Mathot
1903.	Five Lyriques, voice and pianoforte	...	Mathot
1904.	Barcarolle and Scherzo, flute and pianoforte	...	Mathot
1904.	Toccata, pianoforte	...	Ricordi
1905.	First Symphony, orchestra	...	Mathot
1906.	'Soleils couchants, Soir païen, En ramant,' voice and pianoforte	...	Mathot
1907.	Sonata, violoncello and pianoforte	...	Mathot
1908-10.	Second Symphony, orchestra	...	—
1909.	'Italia,' rhapsodie for orchestra	...	Universal Edit.
1909.	Suite in C major, orchestra	...	Universal Edit.
1909.	'Berceuse triste,' pianoforte	...	Mathot
1910.	Barcarolle, pianoforte	...	Ricordi
1910.	Sonnet, voice and pianoforte	...	Mathot

COMPLETE WORKS BY ALFREDO CASELLA.—Contd.

1910.	Sarabande, pianoforte ... ..	Mathot
1911-12.	'Le Couvent sur l'eau,' suite for orchestra ... ..	Ricordi
1913.	'Notte di maggio,' voice and orchestra ... ..	Ricordi
1913.	'Pianto antico, Il bove,' voice and pianoforte... ..	Ricordi
1914.	Nine pieces, pianoforte ... ..	Ricordi
1915.	'L'adieu à la vie,' voice and pianoforte ... ..	Chester
1915.	'Pagine di guerra,' pianoforte, four hands, Ricordi; orchestra ... ..	Chester
1916.	'Pupazzetti,' pianoforte, four-hands, Ricordi; small orchestra ... ..	Chester
1916.	Sonatina, pianoforte ... ..	Ricordi
1916.	'Elegia eroica,' orchestra ... ..	Universal Edit.
1917.	'A notte alta,' pianoforte, Ricordi; pianoforte and orchestra ... .. (In preparation)
1917.	'Siciliana e Bulesca,' violin, violoncello, and pianoforte (originally, 1914, for flute and pianoforte) ... ..	Ricordi
1918.	'Inezie,' three pieces for pianoforte ... ..	Chester
1918.	'Grazioso and Antigrazioso,' for pianoforte ... ..	Chester
1918.	Three pieces, for auto-pianoforte ... ..	Æolian Co.
1920.	Five pieces for string quartet ... ..	Universal Edit.
1920.	'Fox Trot,' for pianoforte, four-hands ... ..	Universal Edit.
1920.	'Il pieces infantines,' pianoforte ... ..	Universal Edit.
1921.	'Introduzione e burlesca,' pianoforte and small orchestra ... .. (In preparation)

'Preludes, vales, and nocturnes' of Chopin		Orphée, Paris
'Pieces pour clavecin et orgue,' of G. Frescobaldi ... ..		Notari, Milan
Pianoforte Sonatas of Beethoven ... ..		Ricordi
'Islamey,' of Balakireff, transcribed for orchestra ... ..		Jurgenson
Seventh Symphony of Mahler, transcribed for pianoforte ... ..		Universal
'L'évolution de la musique' ... ..		Chester
'Deux cadences,' for the Concerto No. 20 of Mozart ... ..		Chester

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY HARVEY GRACE

(Continued from June number, page 408.)

THE EIGHTEEN CHORALE PRELUDES

Collected and revised (and in some cases composed) during the last years of Bach's life, the Eighteen Chorale Preludes (xvii.) show this side of his art at its best. True, the set as a whole is less intimate and poetic than the Little Organ Book. On the other hand, it is almost entirely free from the austerity—not to say aridity—that marks a good proportion of the Catechism Preludes. The chief characteristics of The Eighteen are pure musical beauty, and workmanship as nearly flawless as we have a right to expect from a mere human.

Six forms of prelude are represented. There are three trios, five coloratura treatments, three pieces with vigorous manual writing over the chorale in the bass, three in the style of Pachelbel, three descriptive movements, and one example of the melodic use of the pedal with a 4-ft. stop. This classification is necessarily rough, for some of the pieces show the characteristics of several types. For example, the second of the three Preludes 'Nun Komm, der Heiden Heiland' (p. 49), is both a trio and an example of coloratura treatment. Again, the second of the two long pieces 'Komm, heileger Geist, Herr Gott' (p. 11), combines the florid and the Pachelbel method. Other less obvious overlappings will discover themselves to the observant player. Indeed, much of the supreme excellence of the collection lies in this free manipulation of a few forms that in the hands of Bach's predecessors (and occasionally even of Bach himself) were liable to become stiff and dry.

This easy mastery is well shown in the great Fantasia on 'Komm, heileger Geist, Herr Gott' with which the set opens. Over a tonic pedal Bach launches out into a movement strongly suggestive of a toccata. At the eighth bar the pedal walks up to the dominant and proceeds to deliver the chorale melody. This remains its function throughout, the manuals meanwhile being engaged in animated discussion of the open subject:

successful example of this method of treating a chorale. For one thing, it is shorter and more compact, and the chorale melody makes a better bass. The movement is a free fugue on this subject:

an ornamentation of the opening phrase of the tune. (See Ex. 14.)

It is difficult to overpraise the vigour and animation of the polyphony. Note the delightful dialogue in the episodic portions:

that germ of which is seen in the counter-subject in bar 5:

Observe, too, how skilfully Bach solves the problem presented by movements in this form—how to obtain both unity and variety in the manual texture over a bass that must be made prominent, and that enters in short phrases at long intervals. He ensures unity by the fugal working, variety by first-rate episodes and by inversion of the subject. The inversion is first used over the second phrase of the chorale melody, where the music takes a welcome spell in the relative major. Over the final phrase we have a fine stretto by inversion, with yet another over the tonic pedal, both so natural that they may easily escape notice. This piece is marked 'In Organ pleno,' and clearly calls for full manual power (without Great reeds), and as telling a pedal as we can provide. Indeed, we may take it as a pretty safe rule that vigorous pieces of this type with the melody in the bass should be regarded as tremendous bass solos against a polyphonic background that should be solid or brilliant according to the mood of the music.

The third example of this treatment is less successful, though it is an effective piece. It is an expansion of the 'Little Organ Book' prelude on 'Komm, Gott, Schöpfer, heiliger Geist,' the melody of which is a form of the plainsong 'Veni Creator.' In the early treatment Bach put the melody in the treble; here he tacks on a section with the tune in the bass under florid manual parts. Both halves are good, but they differ so markedly in style that they do not make an entirely satisfactory whole, though the combination is neatly managed by a bridge-passage which leads us gradually from the somewhat stolid first section to the florid second.

Two of the trios are in the style of the quick movements of the trio-sonatas. That on 'Herr Jesu Christ, dich zu uns wend' is one of the most engaging movements in the whole of Bach. Its tunefulness and polish, and the genial—almost humorous—interplay of parts ought to make it a popular recital piece. It is as happy as a ring of bells—the simile is suggested by such chiming passages as:

The main theme is based on the first phrase of the chorale, which is not otherwise referred to until the end, when Bach introduces it on the pedals.

Bach seems to have had no aim here beyond turning out a delightful piece of music. In fact, these later preludes as a whole show very few attempts at programme music save in a general way. In 'The Little Organ Book' Bach seizes on a word or phrase; here he is usually content to express the general mood of the hymn, or, as in this case, to take a fragment of the tune, and from it evolve a piece of abstract music. His head must have been full of themes suggested by fragments of chorales, and we may easily imagine him working out the more promising or insistent of them as studies or pieces, regardless of the text with which they were associated.

Equally happy, though perhaps a little less striking in some of its material, is the long Trio—eight pages—on 'Allein Gott in der Höh' sei Ehr' (p. 66). The reference to the chorale melody is slight—the theme is based on its opening notes, and the pedals introduce its first and second phrases at the end. There is some charming writing of the 'stringy' type, and the piece is a fine study. How much this species depends upon phrasing is shown by such passages as:

Ex. 7.

The remaining Trio—on 'Nun komm', der Heiden Heiland' (p. 49)—is one of the most curious of all the chorale preludes. What did Bach mean by the sombre duet which serves as background to the floreate chorale melody?

Ex. 8.

The diminished fourth of the theme, the numerous clashes, the falling sevenths, and the consistent use of the lower part of the keyboards, combine to make the piece so dark in mood as to be repellant on first acquaintance. One ends, however, by enjoying its asperities. As a study for left hand and feet its value is obvious. It is so little like organ music at times that we wonder if it is an arrangement of the Schübler kind. Is it an instrumental movement from one of the lost cantatas?

The five coloratura preludes form a group of which it is difficult to write without seeming to indulge in hyperbole. The best known (but not quite the best, I think), 'Schmücke dich' (p. 22), has probably called forth more rhapsodical comment than any other organ work of Bach. Schumann's little pæan is too well known to call for quotation. Pirro muses thus for two pages of his 'L'Orgue de Jean-Sébastien Bach':

'Schmücke dich, o liebe Seele!' orne-toi, ô chère âme! Et Jean Sébastien prend une phrase du très calme et trop austère choral: cette bure un peu sévère, il la pare sous des ornements simples et suaves comme des lis qui vivraient sur un autel uniforme et nu... et c'est ainsi qu'un prêtre habile et saint dit des paroles qui charment en sanctifiant, et que ses mains ne restent pas croisées sur sa poitrine, mais que son geste monte vers Dieu, à peine attristé d'un éloignement qui bientôt cessera... la vertu est une chose joyeuse!

'Schmücke dich, o liebe Seele!' orne-toi, ô chère âme! Et voici que, tout à coup, sur un très lointain clavier, le cantique calme et moins austère se fait entendre: ces voix vont-elles vers Dieu, ou si c'est du ciel qu'elles appellent? est-ce une prière qui monte, ou la rosée d'une grâce qui pleut doucement?... Et les ornements suaves d'une simple mélodie vivent ainsi que des lis et ne respirent nulle tristesse, car la vertu est belle et joyeuse... 'Schmücke dich, o liebe Seele!' orne-toi, ô chère âme!...

We may subscribe to all this, however little we may feel disposed to hold forth in similar strain. 'Schmücke dich,' once thoroughly assimilated, never fails to throw a kind of spell over us. Mysticism in music is one of the most rare and elusive of qualities. We feel it in certain works or passages, but cannot ascribe it to given progressions. The musical material for the more straightforward emotional states is so well-known as to have become almost a recipe. Love, hate, joy, sorrow—give any average clever student an orchestra to play with, and he will run the gamut of these emotions, with sub-sections, in a very few minutes. But only a handful of composers—Bach, a Franck, or an Elgar—can give us mysticism, and even they achieve it so rarely that the effect seems almost fortuitous. 'Schmücke dich' has it, unmistakably.

Had Bach written this Prelude in his early period he would probably have seized on the word 'Schmücke' and spun a long-drawn florid melodic thread with simple harmonic support. As it is, he gives us something far more subtle—a modest ornamentation of the chorale with, for background, a beautifully-woven three-part texture based on the chorale. The effect is not so much that of a tune elaborated as of one garlanded by the attendant parts. The registration that most clearly brings this out is that suggested in the Novello edition—an 8-ft. solo stop for the melody, with 8-ft. and 4-ft. for the accompanying manual. The 4-ft. stop should be soft: a cutting tone, such as that of the Principal, will ruin the movement. With a 4-ft.

top of the right power and quality the accompaniment will float round the melody, whereas an 8-ft. will keep it usually below. Here is a quotation showing the opening phrase of the chorale:

Ex. 9.

There is no need to detail the beauties of this movement, but I cannot refrain from drawing the reader's attention to the D flat in the alto at the beginning of the last line of p. 23, and the final cadence. The pace should not be slow. The text — 'Deck thyself, my soul, with gladness'—gives us the cue: a kind of rapturous meditation. If we forget some of the ornaments we shall do the movement good rather than harm.

Somewhat similar in mood and method is the first Prelude on 'Allein Gott' (p. 56). The background is no less subtle, and the colorature is more elaborate. Ornaments are lavishly used, and many of them are integral parts of the thematic material, and so cannot be omitted. Indeed, none of us will want to omit the delightful 'slide' and appoggiaturas of the main subject:

Ex. 10.

played:

Ex. 11.

It is a pity these ornaments are not written in all throughout: they are difficult to fit in from the signs alone when they occur in the middle voice of a complex passage. There is no definite expressive quality about this Prelude. It is just a beautiful and melodious piece of polyphony.

Much the same may be said of the prelude on the same chorale which follows it. The florid version of the chorale melody is played in the tenor part of the keyboard, but the mood of the piece is kept bright by the delightfully tuneful treble and alto, which lie rather high. The mood darkens once where the tenor part becomes chromatic and rhapsodical, followed by a bar marked adagio, otherwise the music is grace itself, despite its abundance of imitative and canonic writing.

Another example with the melody in the tenor is the Prelude on 'An Wasserflüssen Babylon' (p. 18). The decoration is slight, and, as in 'Schmücke dich,' it is pretty equally shared by all three manual parts. An unusual feature is the almost continuous use for accompanimental purposes of the opening two phrases of the chorale, especially the first, which becomes a kind of ostinato. In a plain form it appears even in the bass (bars 4-7 and 15-18, and again in the last line). It is a beautiful theme:

Ex. 12.

and its insistence, combined with the 'cello-like tenor solo, results in one of Bach's most expressive pieces.

For real poignancy, however, we must go to the first Prelude on 'Nun komm', der Heiden Hieland' (p. 46). Here Bach throws himself into the long-drawn melodic elaboration of one of the simplest of chorales, though the accompaniment, especially the bass, is full of character, and not least when it subsides into fragmentary motives—expressive little gestures rather than themes. It is a simple matter to elaborate a hymn-tune—not so simple to evolve such a theme as this:

Ex. 13.

from so bald a series of notes as:

Ex. 14.

The Coda over the tonic pedal a few bars before the end is something to linger over, especially the startling B flat at *, and the consecutive 6-4 chords:

Ex. 15.

Which of Bach's chorale preludes is the most beautiful? 'Schmücke dich'? 'Herzlich thut mich verlangen'? 'An Wasserflüssen Babylon'? The writer may be allowed to say that some years ago his choice fell on this 'Nun komm' prelude, and has stayed there ever since.

If it wavered, it would probably be in the direction of the exquisite piece on 'Von Gott will ich nicht lassen' (p. 43). Here the melody is played by the pedals with a 4-ft. stop, surrounded by arabesques evolved from it. The expressive effect is heightened at the close by the use of the last note of the melody as a pedal point (inverted, of course, owing to the 4-ft. pitch of the pedal stop), with a persistently throbbing alto part and an octave-falling bass.

The great setting of 'O Lamm Gottes, unschuldig' (p. 32) is one of Bach's most elaborate pieces of programme music. The text is a metrical version of the 'Agnus Dei.' Bach devotes a section to each verse, the result being very long (perhaps too long) and somewhat straggling, despite the constant presence of the chorale as a unifying element. Sections 1 and 2 are in three-part harmony for manuals, with the theme in the treble and alto respectively. The writing is fluent, and the springing figure in verse 2 is effective, but as a whole the result is somewhat dry, chiefly because the theme does not stand out, especially when it is the alto. Soloing is impossible in both cases. The finest part is the opening of verse 3, where the chorale is given to the pedal, under three-part imitative treatment of a flowing theme. Note that there should be no change of pace here, three crotchets equalling four quavers of the preceding movement. Half-way through this verse Bach breaks off, and introduces a fresh manual figure, the chorale being resumed a few bars later. We find still more new material when the text makes a reference to the Passion. Here Bach introduces the chromatic scale, with which he usually treats such references. The Coda, with its diatonic scales, evidently refers to the flight of angels, the heralds of peace, suggested by the prayer for peace with which the third verse ends. It will be seen from this brief description that there are no fewer than six strongly-differentiated motives employed. As, once superseded, they are referred to no more, the effect is distinctly scrappy. The fact is, of course, a long piece in which the descriptive treatment is particular rather than general is bound to fail on the structural side unless the text admits of recapitulation, or unless the themes have something in common, or grow out of one another almost imperceptibly.

This last method of solving the problem is employed in the splendidly sombre Prelude on 'Jesus Christus, unser Heiland' (p. 74). The chorale is present throughout, more or less prominently exposed; four descriptive motives are used—the dragging, syncopated one representing the carrying of the Cross (the semi-quaver subject of the opening section), a theme which Schweitzer suggests is representative of flagellations (first appearing in the bass of bar 4, p. 75); the chromatic scale representing the Passion, and a figure typical of the Resurrection (bar 5, p. 77).

The reader will have no difficulty in seeing their suitability to the four lines of the first verse of the hymn:

Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour,
Who freed us from the wrath of God,
By His death and anguish sore,
Redeemed us from the pains of Hell.

The themes come on the scene so naturally, and there is so little change of feeling until the fourth section, that we feel no lack of unity. The treatment of the chromatic scale is perhaps the finest feature of the Prelude. It is used with growing intensity, until its final appearance in four parts, moving in pairs by contrary motion over a pedal-point. There are several effective ways of registering this Prelude. Perhaps the most satisfying, as well as the simplest, is to begin mp or mf, gradually increasing the power at each section (still keeping the colour dark) until the close of the chromatic scale-passage, which should be ff or at least f. The final section should be played full organ, reserving the Great reeds till the final bar. This method admits of no soloing. The pace should be slow at the opening, but a very gradual quickening seems to be called for from the third page to the end.

The other piece on this chorale is much simpler but no less beautiful. It is for manuals only until the close, at which point a tonic pedal appears. The only attempt at definite description seems to be at the Coda, where the rising arpeggio and the increased animation of the manual part evidently refer to the Resurrection.

We have already seen that the Pachelbel form of prelude led to loose and sprawling results when employed for a long chorale. A good example of this is seen in the Prelude on 'Komm, heilige Geist, Herre Gott' (p. 10). It runs to about two hundred bars, and although it contains much beautiful music, we soon grow weary of the constant pulling-up and the starting of fresh fugue expositions. It is overloaded with ornament, too. Perhaps this is an early work which Bach touched up in his last years, improving the details, but being unable to overcome the inherent drawback of the form.

A much better example is the sturdy piece on 'Nun danket alle Gott' (p. 40). The Pachelbel method is carried out strictly, but the polyphony is so animated and interesting, and the whole fabriso well-knit, that the considerable length of the chorale matters little, if at all. This is an excellent voluntary for festival occasions, because the tune is familiar in our churches set to its proper text. The music is easily followed, too, the melody standing out boldly, and being free from confusing ornament. It should be played on a powerful reed, against a solid background of diapason tone.

A perfect example of the Pachelbel form is the Prelude with which the volume ends. The circumstances in which it was written are so familiar that there is little need to recapitulate them, but for the sake of completeness they must be set down.

Worn out at last, the old man lay on his death-bed. A stroke had left him helpless, and his overworked sight was nearly gone. But composition was to him almost as natural a function as breathing. Blind and helpless as he was, habit still triumphed; he dictated to his son-in-law, Altnikol, the completion of a Prelude on 'Wenn wir in höchsten Nöthen sein' ('When we are in deepest need'), changing the title to that of another hymn to which the tune was sung—'Vor deinen Thron tret' ich allhier' ('Before Thy Throne I come'). There is no hint of failing powers in the music, which is full of placid charm, although packed close with such devices as imitation by inversion and augmentation. The final cadence is of great beauty—the last phrase of the chorale, diminished, in a string of 6-4 chords. Here are the closing bars:

Ex. 16.

Fifty years before, a boy at Luneberg, Bach had begun as a composer by writing chorale variations. Throughout his long career the chorale had been a never-failing source of inspiration. He could not have rounded-off his life more fittingly than by thus choosing for his Nunc dimittis the medium that, above all, had served him for the expression of his most intimate feelings.

(To be concluded.)

THE GRAMOPHONE—PRESENT AND FUTURE

By ULRIC DAUBENY

The writer, some short time since, had the good fortune to inspect a gramophone of a new type that must be destined to influence in a very considerable degree the art of tonal reproduction.

It is difficult to write convincingly of this matter. For many years there has been, and still is, far too much 'hot air' in connection with gramophone development. A mere piling-up of superlatives will no longer impress the serious critic, still less so those of us who, time and again, have tested the 'revolutionary improvements' effected by the use of So-and-so's records, or sound-box, or needles, or other patent appliances, only to find that such improvements, if evident at all, are evident in too slight a degree to merit very serious attention.

But at length there is about to appear the new instrument that cannot fail to be acclaimed far and away superior to the most ambitious of its predecessors.

This, be it understood, is the opinion of no enthusiastic novice in gramophone matters. To his ears, the present gramophone, at its best, reveals too many obvious shortcomings to stand in the remotest likelihood of superseding original performance, where this is conveniently accessible. Not so with the new instrument. The hardened listener was all along obliged to remind himself that a singer was not really secreted behind the mystic curtain, or rather, that the cabinet did not mask an opening into another room, wherein singer and orchestra were giving a performance. It was the same with the orchestra—the definition of each distinct quality of tone was truly amazing; the same with the string quartet; the same with a pianoforte solo. The last is worthy of italics, for pianoforte records, even when reproduced in the very best manner possible, are still painfully obvious in what they leave to be desired. The inventor of the new machine claims, and we think justly, that, given his machine and a pianoforte in the same room, a listener outside the door could scarcely distinguish from which source the sounds came.

It is impossible at this stage to offer more detailed particulars, for the machine in question is hardly ready for the market. This much, however, it may be permissible to add. The reproducer is not fundamentally different from others as now used; in fact, any ordinary reproducer might be substituted, though not with such satisfactory results. The secret lies mainly in the acoustic properties of the cabinet, for the results above indicated are obtained from records sold by any of the leading firms. Unfortunately it must—at any rate for a time—remain a rich man's machine. This fact, however, the gramophonist should bear in mind: the present mode of manufacturing records may be open to improvement, but the main improvement must take effect not in the record, but in the machine. Let him therefore treasure his records, and treat them with every possible care. They are of great value, and may be more so in the future. Much more lies imprisoned in those composition discs than he at present credits: they contain original performances, and given a better method of reproduction, these original performances can be rendered an indefinite number of times for all to hear.

Turning to a consideration of standard machines, there still appears to be a good deal of doubt among gramophonists as to the respective claims of hornless and horn models. The so-called hornless machine is, to the unmechanical, something of a mystery, yet in the majority of cases it simply differs in that the horn is contained within the body of the machine, instead of forming a separate, projecting feature. So disguised, the horn—amplifier were a better term—is for convenience made approximately rectangular in section, and except in the very large models, its size would be appreciably less than the average conical horn fitted externally. The object of a horn is to act as a sound-wave chamber and amplifier, much as does the body of a violin or the 'bell' of a brass instrument. The larger the horn—within reasonable limits—the greater volume of tone a gramophone will give, and the greater the depth of such tone. The very small hornless model machines produce comparatively little realism of tone, because the horn is so small that it can neither sufficiently amplify the sound-waves (to give loudness) nor stimulate the slower moving vibrations whereby is added depth of tone. Unless one of the larger hornless models can be obtained, the musician is therefore advised to use a machine with external horn, the latter to be of as great a size as is conveniently possible. In speaking of the larger hornless machines, however, a 'cabinet model' is not necessarily indicated, for, so far as concerns the working parts, these are exactly similar to corresponding table models, their greatly enhanced cost providing nothing beyond an ornamental pedestal and record cupboard. A hornless table model of reputed make, such as is sold at from fifteen to twenty guineas, if not capable of producing quite so rotund a tone as the instrument with extra large external horn, at least would be sufficient for the average room, and should satisfy any reasonably exacting listener.

But it is a much more important consideration which results in the growing popularity of the hornless gramophone. The more expensive models are now provided with lids, whereby both record and reproducer are entirely enclosed while playing, and a noticeable proportion of the surface scratching thus shielded from the listener. It is this that gives the larger hornless machine its undoubted superiority over the external horn model, though a little ingenuity and a fairly simple piece of carpentry would soon convert the old model, so as to retain all its own good points (if any), yet at the same time participating in the undoubted advantages (barring only compact appearance) of the enclosed machine.

As regards surface noises, the presence of which still mars many an otherwise fine record, it may be safe to forecast that this powerful objection to the gramophone will, in the near future, be triumphantly overcome. The process of record manufacture should be aided by new discoveries, but without relying solely upon chance, it may be pointed out that records of the reputable makers are undoubtedly improving, and may with reason be expected to continue to do so. During the war, and after, inferior material had perforce to be used, and the process of very fine-mesh straining was considerably modified, with the result that highly noticeable surface noises often appeared, owing to the presence of minute grit. But here again, other avenues to perfection are open, these perhaps taking a direction unsuspected by the average gramophonist. Surface noises depend very largely upon the type of reproducer—these remarks still apply solely to machines and records which require the standard type of steel needle. The needles themselves, whether thick or thin, have comparatively little effect on surface scratching, but anyone with the curiosity to experiment with several makes of reproducer, using the same record and the same type of needle each time, will be astonished by the marked variation in intensity of surface scratching. The writer has at last found a reproducer which, in his opinion, is the most satisfactory on the market, though not one, so far as he is aware, that is manufactured for any particular make of machine. It is of large diameter, the actual diaphragm being approximately two-and-a-half inches across. With it, surface noises, except in impossibly bad cases, are practically unnoticeable. Using an enclosed machine, and with the best records, they may be said to be non-existent, even in the softest passages. Another advantage is that it produces a depth of tone which makes the performance much more true to the original than is usually the case.

In the early phonograph, it may be remembered, all the sounds were absurdly artificial, because lacking in depth. The modern gramophone has enormously improved upon this, but still the fault remains: its tone is palpably artificial (in a manner being too high-pitched) when it comes actually to be compared with the pianoforte, the violin, or any other instrument. In what quarter does the (gramophone) 'cello really give the same sensation of deep sound as does an actual 'cello? In what record does the majestic, rich-toned trombone really sound as such? It is these lower-tone instruments especially which reproduce so well with the sound-box above-mentioned (this being in part due to the large diameter of the diaphragm), which favours the amplification of the slower vibrating tone-waves. How valuable this is when playing that (in some ways) most unsatisfactory form of record, the string quartet, is obvious. The crisp brilliancy of the violin may be, to a slight extent sacrificed, but by giving additional prominence to the lower tones, the original balance and effect are in a great measure preserved. Thus the quartet no longer takes the form of a high-pitched violin solo, with plenty of surface scratching and occasional indistinct mutterings from the 'cello. There is about it a far stronger savour of the real thing, and as such it gives immeasurably greater pleasure to the listener.

This, in the opinion of the writer, is a step forward but only a step. We wait in expectation of better things. The new instrument mentioned at the beginning of this article takes not one step forward but a leap: it gives us amplitude, depth, balance and very little surface noise; in fact, given a good record, it is astonishingly near actuality.

A MASTER VIOLINIST

Prof. Auer's 'Violin Playing' as I teach it' (Tokes & Co., New York) is one of the books that could find its way to every violinist's book-case. So many nowadays are the false prophets that it is a necessity for every good player to refresh his mind from time to time by the study of the tables of the w. Prof. Auer is not only a true prophet himself, but also the descendant of true prophets. His own experience is extremely valuable in itself, and it is also the outcome of the experience of such men as Joachim and Hellmesberger, who were both amongst Auer's teachers. Prof. Auer descends as from the royal line; he has, moreover, seen to it that the tradition shall be worthily upheld in the future. The teacher of Elman, Zimbalist, and, above all, Heifetz, is well entitled to act as arbiter in all matters of technique and style.

But, perhaps, there is as much merit in the presentation as in the matter itself. The latest books on violin playing have almost invariably adopted a quasi-scientific attitude which, instead of convincing, bewilders the reader. Science is not a thing for the profane—writer or reader. It is easy enough to pick out phrases from scientific treatises and embody them in the text of your writing. But it is certain that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the quotation will be misplaced. To attempt to present them as the writer's own discovery is merely childish. Such attempts never succeed. A real violinist never reckons his results in figures but in artistic achievement, and Prof. Auer does not count the number of vibrations on any given note—the quality is all that concerns him. It is hardly necessary to discuss in detail his advice on technical points, for it does not differ essentially from that all true teachers will give. Violin playing is as individual as speaking or singing. There are no two men whose voices are exactly alike, nor are two violinists to be found whose playing does not reveal some difference. Thus the study of the violin and the teaching must be adapted to each individual case. But for the great majority of students these are the golden rules from which you depart at your peril. Since, however, it has been asserted that all violinists must to-day constantly use the 'vibrato' and spare not, the following quotations may save players from inevitable disappointments and audiences from torture:

'Violinists who habitually make use of the device (vibrato) are pitifully misguided. . . . Their own appreciation of musical values ought to tell them how false the notion is that vibration, in good or bad taste, adds spice and flavour to their playing . . .'

The attempt 'to conceal bad tone production and intonation' by such means is, Prof. Auer declares, not only fatal to sound development, but 'out and out dishonest artistically.'

This is important, for the habit of making every note 'pathetic' by a wave-like motion of the finger which robs it of firmness and dignity is but too common. The present state of things has obviously been brought about by the success of café orchestras and their leaders. In the restaurant, the clatter of cups and the chatter of guests invite exaggeration. It is deplorable that players of unquestionable talent should be led to imitate some leaders of café orchestras, and pander to the vitiated taste of the least intelligent. Nothing surfeits the appetite sooner than sweetmeats, and vibrato is mere confectionery. It amounts, as Prof. Auer justly remarks, to a physical defect traceable to nervous weakness and exhaustion. To urge its abuse is to confess utter inability to grasp the most fundamental laws of musical art.

Canons and rules, no matter how clearly worded, usually make dull reading. The author of 'Violin Playing' has avoided this danger by his personality, without, however, propping it up with innumerable 'I's.' No doubt a literary man would have made more effective use of materials used in the early chapters dealing with the writer's own experience as a student. But no apology for literary shortcomings is needed. The writing is always clear and intelligible. No more is wanted in a record of a long and exceptionally honourable career. Its first claim is that of a practical summary of all the basic laws of violin-playing and teaching. It is also a historical document in that it chronicles all the facts relative to the most successful 'school' of the present time. Teachers whose experience brought them in contact with different types from those that have gathered round Prof. Auer may possibly wish to add something to his dicta. But not one word can be gainsaid nor a sentence omitted without loss.

F. B.

MUNICIPAL CONCERTS IN LONDON

BY GEORGE LANE

An attempt at promoting a series of municipal concerts in the season 1920-21 by the Battersea Borough Council has resulted in a great success. On the twelve concerts there is a loss of just over £100, but the initial cost of advertising and the extravagant cost of printing will be considerably reduced next season, and the Council has decided to promote a further series of ten chamber concerts to be held fortnightly on Sunday evenings commencing October 16. The story of their creation and the methods employed to carry them through, may be of interest to others wishing to initiate and persevere with a similar movement.

This is not Battersea's first attempt in the direction of giving municipal concerts. Previously the borough had a musical director receiving a substantial fee, and other expenses were also fairly heavy. For this expenditure the Borough Council was surcharged by the Local Government Board, so that at the outset the present attempt to establish municipal music had to be on an entirely different basis. The concerts had to be self-supporting, and there could be no financial guarantee from the rates.

The writer undertook to manage the concerts without any fee or charge whatever, and trusted that with the help of many local friends regular concerts of the best music might be established. To do this it was necessary to interest from four thousand to five thousand people within the Borough, sufficient to assure a regular audience of five hundred.

In deciding on the type of concert to be given, the Amenities Committee of the Council was guided largely by me. The seating capacity of the hall was a thousand, and the prices of seats were to be 2s., 1s., and 6d. The maximum receipts possible were therefore £50. Halving this, we estimated on a £25 hall—little enough—but quite enough if only it resulted in creating a desire for good music locally: and this was our main objective. We considered ballad concerts, recitals, miscellaneous concerts, chamber concerts, and orchestral concerts. The last-named was the kind all desired, but an efficient orchestra could not be obtained under £60 to £70 per concert, so it was out of the question. Ballad concerts led nowhere; miscellaneous concerts would compete on unfair terms with those given by local people. Recitals, for the most part, exist for the glorification of the performer rather than the composer, and so we were compelled to fall back on chamber concerts—firstly because they would be inexpensive, and secondly because they would introduce to so many people the best efforts of our musicians in creative art. There is no justification for any Municipal Council providing a type of concert that merely affords amusement. That form of entertainment needs no municipal aid. A representative body can, and should, do all in its power to propagate that which it knows to be good, but which can hardly exist without official encouragement.

The decision to give chamber concerts was at once our weakness and our strength. Chamber music does not appeal to the many, and so we did not attain the financial success that we had hoped for. On the other hand it was our strength, because those who have grown to appreciate it will never lose their love for it. It is well known that chamber music players are the most generous of artists: they are so often ready to give of their best and to receive very little in return except the joy the true artist always has in the giving. This we found to be the case. Artists responded with a generosity, good-will, and enthusiasm such as perhaps exists in no other walk of life.

It was decided to base the programme on similar lines to those of the South Place Concerts. Here is a typical example:

1. Quartet for pianoforte, violin, viola, } Brahms.
and violoncello, in G minor, Op. 25. }
2. Songs. By Goring Thomas, Grieg, and John Ireland.
3. Pianoforte solos by Orlando Morgan, Cyril Scott, and Liszt.
4. English Folk-Songs, arr. by S. Baring Gould, Cecil Sharp, Lucy E. Broadwood, and J. A. Fuller-Maitland.
5. Quartet for pianoforte, violin, viola, } Schumann.
and violoncello, in E flat, Op. 47 }

There were many difficulties to avoid and overcome: a cold aloofness; a sniffing at the impertinence of a Borough Council catering for the real musical needs of a district: covert remarks about high-brow music, and heaps of suggestions that the concerts should be of a more popular nature. A bitter party political feeling had also to be placated.

The balance sheet speaks for itself:

BATTERSEA MUNICIPAL CONCERTS

RECEIPTS AND PAYMENTS ACCOUNT

Dr.			Cr.
RECEIPTS.			PAYMENTS.
	£	s. d.		£	s. d.
To Cash (Wed. Concerts):			By Artists' Fees:
Season and other			Wednesday Concerts	80	17 0
tickets ...	104	7 0	Sunday Concerts ...	84	10 6
Programmes ...	10	17 3	.. Printing, stationery,
To Cash (Sun. Concerts):			advertising, &c. ...	130	6 2
Season and other			.. Hire of grand
tickets ...	111	17 7	pianoforte ...	9	9 0
Programmes ...	12	10 0	.. Commission on sale
Donations ...	2	1 0	of tickets ...		6 6
Deficit due to Bar-			.. Bank charges ...		12 6
clay's Bank ...	116	19 3	.. Entertainment Tax	40	12 0
			.. Petty disbursements	11	18 5
	£358	18 1		£358	12 1

The members of the committee have personally guaranteed the deficit, but I am fairly confident that unless something quite unforeseen occurs, we can straighten this out and have a balance in hand next season.

The whole of the arrangements, booking of artists, advertisements, and programmes, were all carried through by the writer, and in the early days it meant ten to twenty hours per week of hard clerical work. Is it worth while? Yes! a thousand times. We divided responsibility a failure or hitch in some department is bound to occur, but once some definite procedure is established the whole will run smoothly.

The audience, never numbering more than seven hundred, and on two occasions falling to under two hundred, became gradually more and more interested in chamber music. We succeeded in creating that genial and serene atmosphere so essential to the performance and acceptance of this type of music. Musicians are extremely sensitive. They feel instinctively that without a warm sympathy they cannot give of their best. As the artists were delighted with the audience and with their reception to such an extent that I shall never have any difficulty in obtaining the services of the best performers, although the feeling that we can offer are so miserable—little more than expenses, in fact. That this may be remedied in the future is a very real hope, and shall be a real aim. Official financial support for music is an anomalous position at present. The L.C.C. has power to make grants to bands to perform in the parks and on the commons in the summer to amuse the people, but is unable to make any grants for the support of chamber concerts at popular prices in the winter months. When times are no longer 'out of joint' this should be altered.

In one way I think chamber music players can help considerably in popularising this form of music. They should use the pruning-knife freely, and cut out parts of movements—and even whole movements if these are in any way weak or tedious. No composer is always at his best, and there is much that is really great and beautiful that the average listener, but which will hardly interest the earnest student, and which will hardly interest the average listener. Each of the great masters should be represented by his greatest efforts; his weaker output should be decently interred, or, if preserved, be labelled 'for students only.'

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

Mr. Algernon Ashton has lately been raising the old question, 'Who is the greatest composer?' It is a fascinating game, this allotting of places on Parnassus—almost as fascinating as choosing teams for the test matches. But it is easier to settle the claims of cricketers than of composers, and the job far better done, because we go about it with a clear realisation that with so many and varying kinds of merit, comparison is possible in only a few cases. Mr. Ashton says that Beethoven is the greatest composer, somebody else says Wagner, a third raises hand for Handel, and yet another puts up both Bach. But how can we compare a composer who did nothing outside the field of music-drama with one whose greatest success lay in the field of abstract amental music? In such cases the voting is led by personal taste. The reader who is fond of a naturally says Wagner is the greatest composer, one who cares chiefly for chamber and orchestral music is sure that the top place belongs to Beethoven. Even if we sternly put our likings aside, we cannot settle the point. Wagner was a greater operatic composer than Beethoven. Yes; but Beethoven is ahead of him in writing pure instrumental music. But Wagner didn't set out to excel in that department, you say, whereas Beethoven did in opera. The only thing we are sure of is that we cannot say either man was the greatest composer, only that one was the greatest operatic and the other the greatest instrumental writer. Now the question of judgement starts on his award in a much more debatable way. He doesn't say that Hobbs is the greatest cricketer in the world or that Spofforth was the greatest of the last generation. He merely says Hobbs is the greatest batsman and that Spofforth is the greatest bowler. A team of Hobbses would soon pile up no end of runs, but when it came to turning the other side out they would take a mighty long time about it. Even if they didn't (for Hobbs has shown that he can bowl a bit) they would find themselves in their second knock suffering from that feeling. The title of 'greatest cricketer' must be reserved for the small handful of heroes who not only could bat, bowl, field, and captain a side, but who actually did all four things; and not for a few seasons only, but for year after year. The man who has led in this all-round way for the longest period is 'W.G.,' and so by general consent he is regarded as the greatest player in the history of the game.

Now we carry out this principle in music. The greatest all-rounder is surely the greatest composer. How are we to discover him? Not by the quantity of his work, of course. If we did we should find such prolific fourth-raters as Boccherini suddenly stepping down from the shelf. Our safest plan is as usual the simplest. We have only to inquire as to which composer is to-day indispensable in the greatest number of departments—bating, bowling, and batting, so to speak. Can we do without Handel in the concert-room? Yes. There are a few detached pieces we are glad to hear, but there are no great masterpieces or concerted pieces that cannot be left out of a selection of representative programmes. Can the pianist spare him? On the whole, yes. His concertos contain some delightful moments, but they are mostly not organ music, and they are Handel at his best, and occasionally at his sketchiest. At least the pianist and violinist can also rub along without George Frederic. Wagner we can't do without in the opera house, and concert versions of his music are so firmly established that we must have them. Beethoven? We don't want him on the stage or in church. He is still good for a long time in the concert-room and in the studio, except as a song-writer. There is only one more in the running, it seems to me. Can the organist do without Bach? Can the organist? At least sort of a pianist would one be who knew not only '48' and the Suites, or who hadn't begun with the Brandenburgs and Three-part Inventions? Can you imagine a season of orchestral concerts without some at least of the Concertos or Suites? A big choral society whose repertory did not contain at least one of the 'Masses' or the B minor Mass, the Magnificat, or the four? A smaller body of first-rate intelligence doing nothing of the Cantatas? A good church or cathedral choir without some of Bach's choruses (if not complete works) in the regular service list? This leaves out such things as the Suites for violoncello, which are often played in public (though they are better fitted for the studio), and works for flute and various chamber combinations. The Bach Festival last year was an eye-opener to most of us in the matter of the old man's varied activities.

With a natural desire to escape the wrath to come from Mr. Ashton and others, I carefully refrain from saying that Bach was the greatest composer, and most deserving of that highest of all titles—the 'W.G.' of music. Wild horses shall not drag an opinion from me. I have merely asked a few questions. The reader should develop the idea, subdividing the points, and subtracting his personal likes and dislikes, and adding as many opinions as he can get from specialists in various departments. The result ought to be instructive.

Since the above was written we have had the six Bach recitals of Mr. Harold Samuel. It was clear from the comments one heard that many of the audience were surprised that Bach wrote enough clavier music to make up six programmes. Bless their innocent hearts! Mr. Samuel might have gone on with his recitals for a week or two more, with little or no repetition, before coming to the end of Bach's output in this direction. There were still a trifle of thirty-three of the '48' waiting to be played, with a stack of other pieces of all shapes and sizes. How many composers who wrote for pianoforte alone could keep us busy for so long, and, with it all, maintain such a consistently high level of inspiration and workmanship?

Peabody was with me at these delightful recitals. Coming away from the last he began to wonder whether some of our very latest orchestral works, with their heavy demands in the way of extra players and rehearsals, give us anything like an adequate return. 'Here,' he said, 'is Mr. Samuel and a pianoforte. Result, hours of beautiful music, easy to understand, and not even too difficult for us to play ourselves, at least fairly well. Here, again, are the Chamber Music Players, only four of them, able to hold us tight while they prove that a pianoforte and three stringed instruments are ample medium for some of the great things in music. And here, on the other hand, is an orchestra of a hundred, too often a mountain in labour, and producing, not a mouse, it is true, but frequently nothing more than a very large rat. Perhaps it would be too much to ask that an orchestra of a hundred should edify us as a hundredfold more than Mr. Samuel and his pianoforte.'

'It would be,' I said, 'far too much. You must start at a more modest figure. Besides, a comparison of the kind is impossible, the mediums being so unlike. And, after all, we must have these big works. We can't exist on pianoforte or chamber music, any more than, in the matter of pictures, we can be satisfied with miniatures alone.'

'True,' he replied, 'but we have a right to demand that a composer who requires a hundred players and unlimited rehearsal, and a painter who cannot take up his brush till he is assured of canvas by the dozen yards, shall give us a result so big in ideas and development as to convince us that every instrument and every inch of canvas is a vital necessity. If the composer does little more than show us the power and variety to be obtained from a hundred players, and the painter merely exploits his ability to depict objects ten times their natural size, we may reasonably complain that, striking as the results may be, they have not given us full value.'

I deplored his inability or unwillingness to keep abreast of the amazing development in the music of to-day. 'I've tried,' he said, 'but I am getting "fed up" with composers who cannot deliver their message without the aid of frantically hard work on the part of the players, elaborate treatises in the programme book, brain-racking study of full scores, and repeated hearings on the part of the auditor. Is their message so jolly profound? Or is there something the matter with their delivery? Why can't they get it off their chest, like Bach, Mozart, and the rest of the Old Gang?'

After pointing out that his coarse method of expressing himself is even more regrettable than his hidebound conservatism, I explained that he made the mistake of approaching the left wing of the modern school in the wrong spirit. 'You make heavy weather of it,' I said, 'by trying to find out what the composers mean. But they don't mean anything. They write pure abstract music. Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," for example, is now to be regarded as abstract music, though everybody knows it has a programme. It was the same thing, you remember, with Stravinsky's pieces for string quartet. They too were absolute music. It is true that a programmatic basis was always given, but that was a humorous sop to convention, and you were supposed to ignore it. Real modern music—that is, music written by Stravinsky and his disciples—is far easier to listen to and understand than classical music, because it eliminates the unessential, and contains no wearisome development. It avoids all literary associations, and is merely highly organized sound. In a word, 'tis music, pure and simple.'

Peabody cocked an eye at me. 'Pure?' he said: 'Simple? If that's so, give me lots of the hideous cacophony the prophet Samuel has been handing out these past six days.' And on the generous curve of his waistcoat his right hand lightly tattooed:

FACTS IN SCIENCE AND ART

BY HERBERT ANTCLIFFE

A few months ago a gentleman highly esteemed for his knowledge of the arts of music and architecture, speaking at a meeting called for the discussion of modern methods of music, and after hearing a sane and well-considered, if somewhat conservative address (which pointed out the reactionary effect of some contemporary clichés), objected to 'this continual talk about progress in music.' He even protested that progress was unnecessary, if not impossible, in music. In science progress was possible, because 'science depends upon facts, of which there is a constantly growing accumulation; but art does not!'

If this last statement were true then his argument would stand; but as the statement is essentially untrue the argument falls to the ground. Nevertheless, the misconception of this speaker is a common one which many highly educated and logical-minded artists will support, as they support other fallaciés, with the best of intentions. Because they realise that in Art there is something which rises superior to facts, they ignore the essential part which circumstances play alike in science and in art as in all other affairs of life. Art does not consist of facts in the same way or to the same extent as does science, but it is not independent of facts, upon the accumulation and distribution of which progress is made or retarded. What, then, are these facts in this unsubstantial section of art of which he was speaking?

First, let us be sure what we mean by the word 'fact.' A popular dictionary defines it as 'a deed or anything done; anything that comes to pass; reality; truth; the assertion of a thing done.' Except for the last of them, each of these definitions will apply to some essential features of music itself and still more to the circumstantial history of its progress, in the same way as it applies to everyday life. Deeds are done, things come to pass, reality and truth exist in music as they do in science, and progress in the art of music is brought about by the accumulation of several or many such deeds, events and conditions.

Truth and reality are eternal, but we are made conscious of their existence only in their punctuation by means of deeds and events. Reality is a concatenation of events and conditions which are essential to the practice of music as they are to the study of astronomy or chemistry, though each subject has its own division of them. Music by its nature differs from purely scientific matters only in the less obvious character of the events and conditions which are its essential and contributing facts.

Most important of these facts is the condition of life in which music is practised, a fact which cannot but have an important bearing on the nature and progress of the art. We see this bearing best by comparing the conditions of extreme periods in its history and the music they produced. If it is to be vital and effective, music must have a direct relation to the life of those who make it and those who hear it. It cannot be separated from the rest of life without losing its own life, and while its professors must examine in detail and away from the tumult and disturbance of life in which they are created the factors and material of its make-up, the substance and form of its constitution, they cannot do this until such factors, material, substance, and form have been discovered in the hurly-burly of practical life.

Closely connected with this, and quite as much a fact or a series of facts, is the number and quality of the actual instruments and voices and their combinations, and the manner of use of such instruments, voices, and combinations. In many important details, music is not the same to-day—with its pianofortes and organs, its celestas, its trombones, &c.—as it was when Nebuchadnezzar ordered the sounding of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of music. One reason why it is different, why it has progressed, is that since those days there has been a vast accumulation of facts in the way of making instruments and combining them, and also in the conditions in which they are used and heard.

Nor is it possible to say of any art that it is independent of science in some large or small degree. Even the human voice can be, and is, developed by means of science so that it produces sounds of a more expressive character than was possible a few generations ago, while the ear, though possibly more slowly, acquires a perception and appreciation of sounds which before were unheard or rejected as harmonious. How much progress could have been made in music without the science of acoustics or anatomy, with their accumulation of facts from generation to generation? Music could not have progressed upon these lines were the singers of any unable to avail themselves of the store of scientific facts as to voice production and resonance which did not exist in the time of Handel or Palestrina. Imagine a singer of to-day with resources only of his predecessor in the time of G. Rossini, or the composer with only the resources of even, say, Bach and Handel, much more than those of Hucbald or John of Reading!

Even if music were merely an art of pleasant sounds and not, as it is, of the fullest expression of felt emotions, it would have to be progressive, to use human life in its relaxations as well as in its serious matters is progressive, and its progress would depend upon the discovery and accumulation of facts. When a scientist discovers that certain combinations of chemicals make a new and hitherto unknown gas, or that the application of a powerful light of a certain wavelength has the effect of killing the germs of typhoid, what he discovers is no more a fact than that the musician discovers in experimenting with combinations of tones to obtain new orchestral effects, or the division of voices to obtain new choral ones. The discovery of Thorough Bass, the tempered scale, the harmonic chord, and of modern arbitrary combinations of notes are just as much facts, though many would concede the possibility of their being less important, as are the discovery of radium or of the Arctic Continent.

Because music is a medium of expression, however, it must progress in order to keep pace with the widening scope and increasing impetus of an expression, and if it does not in its nature express the facts the accumulation of which is necessary for progress it must create them. Yet its history is a long and slowly growing accumulation of facts. Diaphony would have been impossible without the previous discovery of modes; polyphony without diaphony and tonality. Handel could not have written his operas and oratorios without the example and influence of the works of Purcell, Carissimi, Lulli, or even Kuhnau and Bononcini. Bach's works could not have been composed had not those of Palestrina, of Luther, of Heinrich Schütz, and others preceded them; Beethoven could not have been equally impossible without Haydn, Mozart; Wagner without Gluck and Weber, and Liszt without Schumann and Chopin. Not that the earlier of these composers in each case had necessarily a direct and traceable influence on the works of the later ones. Their attempts to find expressions suitable to the thoughts or emotions with which they had to deal added to the previous accumulation something new which enabled their successors to add still further to the expressive resources of the art.

As facts they are, as solid and permanent as any in the history of science; and because music must progress along with other human expression and other activities, it progresses by these steps; steps far removed from those by which the more tangible sciences advance and its prolongation and destruction, of the life of mundane things and the influence of the physical sciences. Art, in other words, bears comparison to life as direct and as potent as, and progresses on lines almost exactly parallel with, the sciences of Science.

SONGS AND SONG TRANSLATIONS

Too late to receive this month the detailed notice it deserves, comes the June number of Music and Letters. The principal feature of interest is the article by Mr. A. H. Fox Strangways, the Editor, on 'Song Translations,' with a selection of thirty-one versions selected by Mr. Plunket Greene, Mr. Walter Ford, and Mr. C. L. Graves, from a hundred and forty-one translations of Schubert's songs submitted. Time is too short to permit of close examination of these, or of submitting them to what, as the Editor pertinently remarks, is the only true test—that of discovering how they sound when sung. At a first glance the translations of Alexander Gray into Lowland Scots seem to have great merit. But after all, Lowland Scots is not English; and the number of English singers who can sing it to the satisfaction of a Scots audience must be lamentably few. Probably more people in an English audience would understand the original of Heine's 'Das Fischermädchen' than Mr. Gray's version:

'O, lean upon my hert, dear,
And be na fleyed o' me;
For ilka day you lippen
Yoursel' to the bouslerous sea.'

Mr. Fox Strangways' article on 'Song Translation' is extremely useful and very valuable. Most people who have really tried will agree with all he says of the intrinsic difficulty of producing any satisfactory translation which will also be singable, and there is much shrewdness in his criticism of detail. He also points out with considerable force how translators in nine cases out of ten are rewarded merely by their own good conscience. He likewise makes a remark, which I have frequently made myself, that indifferent as they are, some of the translations of some of the texts of Schubert's songs are quite as good as the originals, which it is a pose on the part of some people to consider perfect. He has also much to say that is of interest on the differences between song translation and libretto translation. He has drawn up a short code for the translator. Few people will disagree with his conclusion that translation should be fluent and interesting verse; that a translator may alter the lengths of the composer's notes, provided he does not destroy the phrase; that the important accents must correspond with those in the original; and that rhyme is necessary only where, because of the form of the stanza, it is expected. Some of the other clauses in his code are perhaps a little more controversial.

A. K.

'THE ART OF PATTI':

MR. HERMANN KLEIN'S TRIBUTE

It is quite easy to understand the spirit that prompted Mr. Hermann Klein to lecture on the subject of the 'Art of Patti.' She was a great singer and, without any suggestion of laudi temporis acti, it was well worth while to let the present generation know the reason for the faith that is in one. His lecture at Wigmore Hall on May 25 attracted many interested listeners, among them Lord Burnham, who opened the proceedings with a few commendatory remarks. Mr. Klein very rightly pointed out that Patti was a case of nascitur non fit. As her painstaking biographer, and one who knew her almost from the day of her first appearance in England, he was able to give an authoritative description of her gifts. She was the outcome of environment. There was music all round her, and her mother was singing in opera almost up to the hour of her birth. As with the Garcia family, everybody in the house sang. Childlike, Patti absorbed it all, and her delivery of 'Casta Diva' from the dining-table at the age of seven was but an expression of the result. Those who remember her in opera—and I am one of them—will recall that her singing was perfectly effortless. I think Mr. Klein was right in claiming that she would have been just as pre-eminent to-day, for the simple reason that she never failed to profit by her surroundings. Yet, all the same, Mr. Klein testified to her conservatism by stating that she sang both 'Casta Diva' and 'The Old Folks at Home' late in life just exactly in the same way as she did as a girl. Very wisely he pointed out the evenness of her scale and the perfection of her breathing. It was exemplary, but the worst of it is that we can only imitate it, for Patti owed everything to Nature and nothing to Art. Yet we should get as near as we can, and I thought Mr. Klein did well to lay stress on the fact that it is quite possible that as great a voice might appear in good time. Before that comes about, however, we shall have to alter our methods, and instil into the budding vocalist the fact that years and not months are required in the training of the voice. Mr. Klein was able to offer an idea of the voice of La Diva—as Beatty Kingston always styled her—by means of some of the gramophone records she made. Unfortunately the gramophone in those days was not what it is now, and Patti had passed her sixtieth year before she recorded. They represent nothing of her wonderful timbre, and the 'Casta Diva' and 'The Old Folks at Home' were decidedly tank-like in tone, and poor representations of a great voice and a great singer. It was only in the record of 'Batti, batti' that I was able to recognise her. This record is of particular interest because, although it gives but little of the quality of the voice, it reproduces very well the extraordinarily caressing manner and the characteristic vocal gesture that, apart from mere tone, gave Patti's singing so much charm. But that there should be some endeavour to make clear the reasons for one's convictions is eminently desirable, and where the question of belief concerns a vital matter like that of the vocal art it becomes a matter of necessity. We hear so much bad singing all around that it is quite time the question of standard was raised. And what better standard can there be than Adelina Patti? F. E. B.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY'S CONGRESS

By way of preface to the Congress, the British Music Society organized a series of three concerts called Contemporary Arts Conferences, on June 7, 8, and 9, at which the relations between the various arts were discussed. It is not necessary here to mention them in detail, except to report that a resolution was passed welcoming a Federation of Contemporary Arts, and approving the idea of an Annual Congress in a provincial centre, and desiring the promoters of the meeting to take all necessary steps to carry the resolution into effect.

The proceedings were interesting, but the interest was not specifically musical, except when Mr. Bernard Shaw denounced the latest music and pointed out that its claim to conciseness could not stand, for whereas Rossini finished his crescendos in sixteen bars, the younger school often take as many pages to do it.

The first meeting of the actual Congress was devoted to 'The State and Music,' on Tuesday, June 14, at Æolian Hall. Dr. Percy Dearmer presided. He accused musical critics of losing taste for tune, and of not giving adequate recognition to native musical art. He said that in this country the State instead of helping music encroached on it by means of the entertainment tax. Mr. Bernard Shaw pointed out that there was possibility of forcing a general election on a musical issue. He said the gentlemen at the top knew everything about Parliament, but were surprisingly ignorant about everything else. A Ministry of Fine Arts, he thought, could only be established when somebody wanted a job and a salary. Good music in the cinemas encouraged the errand boys to whistle Wagner, Schubert, &c. He would approve of an entertainment tax the proceeds of which were devoted to art, but not of a tax which went to the reduction of the supertax of millionaires. A resolution was passed drawing the attention of the Government to the irregularities of the administration of the entertainment tax, and its harmful effect on the work of voluntary entertainment societies—choral, orchestral, or educational.

The discussion of the following day was devoted to 'British Music Abroad.' Dr. Eaglefield Hull pointed out that this was probably the only civilised country, the Government of which did not help the propagation of its own music abroad. A letter was read from M. Kussevitsky, emphasising the great improvement in independence and originality made by British composers in the last decade. A resolution was unanimously passed drawing the attention of the Government to the great advantage which would follow on a regular annual grant of money for the purpose of disseminating the music of British composers abroad.

The last day's sitting was devoted to 'The Place of Music in Education,' with Prof. Walford Davies in the chair. His ideal system would be one which included weekly concerts given for the schools, the schools, in the schools. There should be a whole-time teacher in every school. A resolution was passed declaring that the Congress considered the formation of a National Council of Music to be urgently needed, and that such Councils should be composed of authorities both musical and educational.

The activities of the Congress ended with a banquet at the Great Central Hotel on Friday, June 17. Lord Howard de Walden was in the chair. Lord Burnham, proposing the health of the Society, said his chief claim to speak on the subject of music was that at the age of seven he had been kissed by Madame Patti, and that he had created the Burnham Scale, which naturally affected teachers of music as well as other teachers. He said also that he did not remember any time when the programme gave more space to musical matters. (It may here be remarked that this is true of the Daily Telegraph, but unfortunately it is not true of the rest of the press; and that is why a musical critic—not to present writer—loudly called out 'Question.') Lord Eaglefield Hull, in replying, emphasised the federative work of the Music Society in its efforts to prevent overlapping, and reminded those present that £3,600 was still needed for the Foundation Fund. Replying to the toast to 'The Visitors' (who included M. Stokovskiy, of the Philadelphia hestra, Mr. Tandler, of the San Angelo Orchestra, M. Joseph Bonnet, the French organist) Walter Damrosch drew an interesting contrast between the state of music in England when he was young and its present condition. He emphasised the fact that he was now needing little rest, and someone to take some of his weight off his shoulders; and it was a significant fact that the choice of the Directorate had fallen on Mr. Albert Coates, who is an Englishman. He also enumerated some of the younger men whom he had been able to appreciate during his recent visit, such as Mr. Eugène Goossens and Mr. Milton Harty. Perhaps the most interesting part of Mr. Damrosch's speech was that devoted to his description of his method of training audiences by means of Young People's concerts at New York. He told us that before he left the States all the concerts were already sold out for next season, and he was proud to think that some of those who had originally attended those concerts as youngsters had now brought their children, and were now bringing their grandchildren. This was the best method of training audiences, and it was just as easy to teach a child to love the best music as to become a devotee of the same. After speaking of the advantages which the United States possessed in the shape of wealthy patrons who were willing to subsidise orchestras, he ended with a plea to the younger composers not to ignore the claims of what used to be known as Beauty. In replying, Lord Howard de Walden said that having been away from England for six months or more, he was now able to take a more or less impartial outside view of things, and he was very much impressed with the present activity, especially in the direction of the more advanced types of music. He drew a contrast between last year's banquet, when Sir Thomas Beecham had severely denounced all younger composers, and that evening when everybody was united in praising them. He confessed, however, that he disagreed with some of the younger men, and that some of their music disagreed with him; and that sometimes he thought that the best literary parallel to much of the latest music was to be found in the frenzied utterances of the tape-machine when something had gone wrong with the works.

THE MUSICIANS' COMPANY AND THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL JUBILEE

So many City Companies have now but a slender connection with the trades and professions to which they owe their origin, that we are glad to note an exception in the case of the Musicians' Company. Commenting on this, the City Press of May 14 pointed out the prominent manner in which the members of the ancient Guild were identified with the celebration of the Jubilee of the Royal Albert Hall. The King is the only Gold Medallist of the Company, a position also held by his father. On the joint committee responsible for the details of the concert were the Senior Member and Father of the Company, Mr. Frederick Bridge; Sir Ernest Palmer, an Honorary Freeman; Sir Homewood Crawford, a Past Master; and Sir Hugh Allen and Mr. Augustus Strelton, Liverymen. In the programme were several compositions by members—the late Sir Hubert Parry, Mr. Frederick Bridge, Sir Edward Elgar, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and Sir Charles Stanford, all Honorary Freeman; and Sir John Stainer, a Past Master.

Mr. Landon Ronald, who conducted part of the programme, is an Honorary Member; and the oldest member of the Royal Choral Society, Mr. Albert Charles Hunter, of Richmond, is a Member of the Court. A Guild so closely identified with the leading members of its profession can hardly fail to be a vital factor, even though its scope is necessarily smaller than when it received its Charter from James I. in 1604. A brief history of the Company appeared in our issue of November, 1919.

A COLLEGE CONCERT

BY ERIC BLOM

On June 3 I heard a students' concert at the Royal College of Music—the six hundred and eighty-ninth—and, to my shame be it confessed, the first I had ever attended, a circumstance which made me suspect that there must be many other musical people in London who have only the vaguest idea of the wonderful musical activities that are going on at this institution. It was extremely and pleasantly surprising to find that these concerts are on a level of excellence by no means beneath what may be reasonably expected from professional musicians. The orchestra, almost entirely composed of College students, is remarkably fine; a body of players moulded by regular rehearsals held twice a week, into a highly efficient band by no means lacking in routine. The playing is not invariably flawless, but it is intensely, refreshingly alive, and never betrays that polished listlessness which sometimes inevitably blunts the execution of our overworked professional orchestras. These young players are imbued with the delightful spirit of enthusiasm and healthy good fellowship which is so marked a feature of the Royal College. And to see Mr. Adrian Boult, after conducting one of the finest performances of the 'Enigma' Variations I have ever heard, join the chorus to take part with the rank and file in a performance of the Scherzo from Vaughan Williams' 'Sea Symphony,' is only another characteristic instance of this happy spirit that makes for confidence between professors and pupils.

The programme was all that could be desired at a students' concert. It is in the nature of things that no recherché repast for the fastidious musical connoisseur can be provided on such occasions; nevertheless, the scheme contained at least two things I had never heard before, and would almost certainly never have had an opportunity of hearing elsewhere—the Brahms 'Academic Festival Overture,' with the choral Finale, and Tchaikovsky's third Piano-forte Concerto. It is true that it is possible to live on quite happily without either of these experiences, but it is always agreeable to satisfy one's curiosity by a taste of such unfamiliar fare. The Concerto—a patchwork of meaningless but pleasant patterns of sound—was remarkably well played by Miss Eileen Parker, a pupil of Mr. Arthur Alexander. It is customary to speak of students' performances as 'promising,' but Miss Parker may be said to have fulfilled most of her promises on the spot, revealing a very sound technique and a fine sense of style. If there was little poetry to be discerned in her playing, the blame must be laid on the prosiness of the work, which is wholly devoid of any kind of feeling. The other soloists were three tenors: Mr. Archibald Winter, who sang the Spring Song from the 'Valkyrie' rather lifelessly; Mr. Tudor Davies, who was responsible for the one blot in the programme, the theatrical and falsely sentimental Cavatina from 'Faust,' of which, however, he gave a rendering that was excellent of its kind; and Mr. Percy C. Judd, who gave a most artistic and finished performance of an aria from Bach's 'Phœbus and Pan' that was a sheer joy in its sane exuberance.

The chorus, composed of nothing but young and fresh voices—a rare thing—is excellent and full of a vitality evidently inspired by Sir Hugh Allen's spirited conducting. The Scherzo from the 'Sea Symphony' was vigorously and beautifully sung and played, but it suffered a little from being detached from the whole work. Set off by the surrounding movements, it makes an effective contrast, but it is too uniformly energetic and insistent when left to stand alone.

It really is time that music-lovers, and still more particularly lovers of all that is young and healthy and enthusiastic, should be exhorted to take an early opportunity of hearing these College concerts. A moderate annual subscription to the institution will entitle them to free tickets throughout the year.

SOME MUSICAL TEXT-BOOKS.

A number of books dealing with various branches of music are here discussed briefly. Dr. Lyons' little manual, 'The Elements of Harmony' (Banks & Son, York), deals simply and concisely with the elementary facts of harmony. The author, who is well-known as a writer on educational matters, is on the whole fairly conservative in his treatment of the subject. In a prefatory note the student is reminded that the mere answering of questions and the harmonizing of melodies and basses on paper is not sufficient: he must also be able to hear what he writes. This matter of aural training is not, however, dealt with specifically in the book. The exercises, which include, perhaps, more than a sufficiency of figured basses, are numerous and well planned. The last chapter gives some useful general hints on harmonizing melodies and unfigured basses, illustrated by model workings of a string melody, an unfigured bass, a chorale, and a 'ground' bass. Although giving us nothing strikingly novel, Dr. Lyons' compact little work provides a thoroughly sound course for the elementary harmony student.

Miss Florence Fidler's 'A Handbook of Orchestration' (Kegan Paul, London) is planned on novel lines. The author strongly advocates the study of orchestration alike by the ordinary professional student, by the amateur singer, pianist or other instrumentalist, and by the mere listener who wishes to listen intelligently to an orchestral concert. She holds the view that although a knowledge of harmony and counterpoint is of immense service in orchestration, it is not necessary until the scores become well advanced. All that is required for good elementary orchestration is an acquaintance with the rudimentary 'elements' and a working knowledge of transposition. 'The best method to follow,' the author considers, 'is to study harmony side by side with orchestration, thus developing the tonal colour-sense simultaneously with that of structure and design. The unfortunate method of postponing the study of orchestration until the final stage of a prolonged course of theoretical training in music is reached is equivalent to forbidding a child to colour pictures until he can draw correctly.' The book is arranged in two parts which are to be used concurrently. Part 1 is a graded course of study giving practical directions to the student for the scoring of passages from various pianoforte and orchestral works, and referring him to the particular section of Part 2 (The Instruments) which it is necessary to study. A useful feature is the provision of four compass charts dealing with Strings, Wood-wind, Brass-wind and Percussion, a Harp respectively. A bibliography gives a list of books dealing with the subject, with short descriptions of publisher, and price, and grouped for beginner, intermediate, and advanced students. The book, which is the outcome of the author's twenty years' teaching experience on the lines she suggests, is eminently practical, and teachers and students should certainly make its acquaintance.

'Musical Examination,' by Frank Wright (H. W. Gray Co., New York), is intended for organ students. The author, who is a member of the A.G.O. Examination Committee, gives some useful advice on how to prepare for the examination of that institution. His hints on general preparation for the playing of prepared pieces, sight-reading, transposition, harmony, &c., should be equally beneficial to R.C.O. candidates.

Teachers and students who are acquainted with Dr. Kitson's admirable and exhaustive 'Evolution of Harmony' will welcome the appearance of 'Elementary Harmony' (Clarendon Press). This work is in three parts, of which Parts 1 and 2 are in one hand, and are specially intended 'for beginners, for use in schools, and for students in musical institutions who have to acquire in a short time a knowledge of the main facts of harmony.' In attempting to make the book short and concise the author has been compelled to be somewhat dogmatic. The letterpress has been reduced to a minimum, while the rules and recommendations are made clear by means of copious musical examples. A valuable feature is the large number of short exercises provided for the students' working. From the outset Dr. Kitson insists on the importance of ear-training. As he rightly says, 'the student must never be allowed to put down on paper what he does not hear both physically and mentally.' In addition to special exercises dealing with this part of the student's training, the many short illustrative examples with which the book abounds also provide material for ear-exercises. Part 3 of this really excellent work will deal with chromatic harmony.

The rudiments of music are admirably set forth in H. J. Wrightson's little work, 'Elements of Theory of Music' (B. F. Wood Music Co.). Each section is treated very clearly and concisely, and followed by a set of examination papers.

Still another work on rudiments! Dr. Albert Ham, a well-known English musician who has for some years past figured prominently in the musical life of Toronto, Canada, has issued under one cover 'The Rudiments of Music and Elementary Harmony' (Novello). The plan and arrangement of the various sections differ in some respects from many other text-books, and the author 'has striven to deal particularly with those special points which, in his many years of teaching, he has found to be the bête noir of most students.' As a result the chapters on Time and Intervals will be found especially helpful. An Addendum gives some useful hints and suggestions on adding bar-lines and time- and key-signatures to a given melody. The section on Harmony takes the student as far as the dominant seventh, and includes chapters on modulation and the harmonization of simple melodies. Some useful tes-ers are also provided. Dr. Ham's admirable work may be cordially recommended.

For pianists, both students and teachers, might read profit James Friskin's suggestive little book, 'Principles of Pianoforte Practice' (H. W. Co.). As analysis of muscular conditions has become so much for the present-day pupil, the author suggests that the mental processes which accompany practice might with advantage receive equally full consideration. It must suffice to mention headings under which the subject is treated: function of the ear; Concentration; Definiteness; Attention; Slow practice—its uses and dangers; place of technical studies; Correction of faults; full realisation of sound and touch—impressions; playing at sight. A careful perusal of Mr. Friskin's work should materially assist in eliminating much of the misplaced energy and unnecessary idleness which are still far too commonly associated with pianoforte practice.

G. G.

Music in the Foreign Press

AN UNKNOWN SONATA BY MOZART

In La Revue Musicale (May) G. de Saint-Foix makes his discovery at the Paris Bibliothèque Nationale of an engraved copy of a Pianoforte Sonata for four hands by Mozart. Incidentally, the writer considers the difficult question, 'Who was the composer to write a duet for the keyboard?' Mozart's father, he reminds us, proudly alleged that his son was the first to have written (in 1765) a Sonata to be played by two performers on one keyboard. And we have Mozart's sister saying that she preserved the first two pianoforte duets written by her illustrious brother.

Whether the Sonata is one of those two remains doubtful. Although in many respects crude, it contains much that is attractive. The writer considers the first movement as stilted and laboured, the Minuetto as delightful and original, the final movement as shallow, and, in parts, rather vulgar. He praises, however, some of the Intermezzi which it comprises. The work was in all likelihood written in London, in 1765. It was published at Paris by Rouillé probably between 1789 and 1791.

Johann Christian Bach's Six Sonatas (manuscript, Brussels Conservatoire) appear to have been composed before 1757. The same library comprises a Sonata by Tomelli, which may have been written as early as, or earlier than, Mozart's. The only certain point appears to be that the Pianoforte Duet was born in England.

AN UNKNOWN WORK BY PURCELL

In La Ménestrel (June 3), Maurice Léna writes:

Purcell decidedly is in great favour. We have mentioned the success of his 'Beggar's Opera' . . .

THE INFANCY OF FRENCH MUSIC

In La Revue Musicale (May), Amédée Gastoué describes the earliest manuscripts that give information as to music in France before the 12th century.

In the time of Charles the Great, profane music was chiefly founded on Greco-Roman traditions so far as instrumental music is concerned, and on Church music regards singing. Towards the end of the 11th century, the appearance of songs whose words are Latin, but whose rhythm and phrasing owe nothing to Roman tradition, marks the beginning of the earliest stage of French music available for investigation. Six manuscript volumes preserved at Paris, one at the British Museum, and various fragments, enable us to study over a hundred and fifty compositions of various kinds, and supply instances of songs divided into verses, of songs with a burden, and of the Lay. About half the pieces are written in organum style, and the collection comprises two Motets (possibly written in the early part of the 12th century). The tunes (of which the writer adduces many examples) are often very attractive, although the question of their rhythms still gives rise to controversy.

WHERE TO-DAY'S EVOLUTION MAY LEAD TO

It is with the latest progress of musical art that Georges Migot is concerned (Revue Musicale, May).

After showing that the architecture of music remains as dependent upon symmetrical relationships in the works of those modern composers who write 'vertically' as it was with the classics, he proceeds:

Can there be in music no balance without symmetry? The interest of a motive decreases in proportion with the frequency of its repetitions: 'What is wanted is a work the relationship of whose various periods will be founded not upon mere similitude, or external analogy, but upon inner, secret correspondences, discovered by the artist alone, yet subconsciously perceptible, so as to convey the impression of unity, of a will-power that guides the hearer. Why should music, with the re-appearance of a motive, always revert to its starting-point? The melos of antiquity did nothing of the kind. Of that melos Bach preserved the spirit, introducing it into 'polyphony'. Let us follow Bach's example; learn the lesson, not of his scholastic artifices, but of his horizontal writing; and proceed from him in his own spirit. Let no architectural code direct our musical imagination, or assign limits to the creative emotion which alone should be the centre of the work and determine its balance.

Hans W. David (in the Musikblätter der Anbruch, second April number) wonders whether Schönberg's 'atonality,' Möllendorf's 'bichromatism,' Busoni's speculations on the trisection of tones and the possibility of doing away with themes and forms, herald the winding-up of the classic-romantic period in music, or whether men who, like Pfitzner, describe the new tendencies as the aesthetics of impotence, are right. His conclusion is:

Music may be in want of new resources and admit of them, but she will never receive them from those who content themselves with ratiocinating. I can imagine a music devoid of formal scheme, of cadences, of harmony, a music whose principles would be something quite new and unheard of, but no amount of deliberate brain-work will ever bring that music into being.

THE 'SIX'

In Il Pianoforte (May 15) the French composer Albert Roussel has a good word for each member of this young group:

Georges Auric is exceptionally gifted, sensitive, and humorous. Louis Durey has lofty ideals, and will achieve them when he succeeds in clarifying his style. Honegger's music is remarkable for unity of style, balance, and firmness. Of Milhaud one may expect much, provided he concentrates and remains true to himself. Poulenc's chief merits are youthful grace, charm, and simplicity. The same may be said of Germaine Tailleferre.

Among other youthful French composers, the writer mentions Roland Manuel, Henri Cluquet, Georges Migot, Le Guillard, Robert Casadesu, and Delage.

GABRIEL FAURÉ'S INDIVIDUALITY

Le Ménestrel is publishing the lectures on French musicians delivered on the occasion of the series of concerts devoted to their works at the Opéra. Some of those lectures are extremely uncritical, others, like Jean Chantavoine's on Saint-Saëns, full of sound views. None is more instructive than Charles Koechlin's on Fauré:

Fauré sets to French musicians a matchless example of sincerity and genuineness. Neither following fashion nor listening to the suggestions of would-be advisers, he proceeded untrammelled in his quest for beauty. He remained simple, combining impassioned imagination and lucidity of mind. When one listens to his music one always feels secure that an apex is reached, that here is perfection. In the beautiful proportions of his music, a great lesson is embodied—a lesson that has never been more needful than now, when the younger French school is so deeply thrilled by the innovations of Schönberg, Stravinsky, and Bartók. The main features of French art at its best are continuity and perspicuity.

MAX Reger

In the same issue, Ettore Desderi considers Reger's position:

In the times of Debussy, Stravinsky, and Schönberg, his art may be considered as an anachronism; yet he has given us much that is of value. The great tradition of Bach vivifies his music, in which he gives many a convincing proof of individuality. What has prejudiced many critics, and prevented them from properly focussing his work and evolution, is the apparent contrast in his music between traditionalism and modernism.

The writer thinks that none of Reger's works are more typical than his Violin Sonatas, the first of which is his Op. 1 (1898), the eighth and last his Op. 139 (1915).

In the Musikblätter der Anbruch (second April number) Paul Emerich devotes a few words of praise to Reger's pianoforte works, concluding as follows:

Since the days of Johann Sebastian Bach, few men have enriched the literature of the pianoforte and of the organ with a contribution so remarkable for its abundance, loftiness, and significance.

ARNOLD SCHÖNBERG

In Der Merker (June 1), Dr. D. J. Bach, after referring to the activities of the Verein für Musikalische Privataufführungen, founded by Schönberg, writes:

Ten years ago the 'Pierrot Lunaire' songs were misunderstood. Of Schönberg's works they are precisely that which shows the composer progressing from advanced impressionism to thorough expressionism. Schönberg is the most uncompromising exponent of absolute music we have had since Brahms. In his songs, even the earliest, we see words and music associated in a new unity, which is quite independent of the text per se. His music is quite free from poetic, picturesque, or literary undercurrents.

BEETHOVEN

From André Suarés (La Revue Musicale, June):

Beethoven is the father of all romantic musicians rather than of their music. With him the musician is no longer an artist quietly devoting a plain man's life to his art: he becomes a kind of oracle, a prophet, a demiurge who carries the world and knows the answer to its riddle. Following Beethoven's lead, musicians become as many Sibyls rhapsodising in the cave of woe. Neither Bach nor Mozart, nor any older master, had played that strange part, to which his very nature prompted Beethoven. He is essentially the warrior, the hero of music, the great man who uses music as a means. With him music ceases to be a relaxation, and becomes a religion.

In the Merker (May 15) Julius Bittner describes his musical experiences at a time when he was temporarily deaf in one ear:

I found the ninth Symphony far plainer sailing than more modern and better scored music, for I could chiefly hear the clear, high parts: violins, higher wood-wind, and soprani. The middle parts were muffled, and I could scarcely discern the bass. Beethoven's deafness led him to strain all parts towards their high notes, so that in practice one cannot have in that work too many 'celli and contrabasses, which sustain the bass practically alone. But to me, whereas more modern music with its greater range of deep-toned instruments sounded dull, the Ninth sounded clear and bright.

MANUEL DE FALLA

In the Revue Musicale (June), J. P. Alterman describes Manuel de Falla's tendencies as the direct, wonderful continuation of what had been done by Felipe Pedrell and by Albeniz. He bestows high praise on various works by that composer, especially on his dance-music, 'El amor brujo,' recently produced at Madrid, and a new work for three voices and small orchestra, 'El Retablo de Maese Pedro,' after 'Don Quijote.'

DÉODAT DE SÉVERAC

How keenly the music-lovers of France deplore the premature death of this composer is shown not only by the obituary notices, but by articles which appear in various periodicals. Gustave Samazeuilh in the Courrier Musical, Blanche Selva in the Monatliche Musikalische and the Revue Musicale, Achille Mestre in the last-named monthly, all have interesting things to say in praise of his work and personality.

A ONE-ARMED VIOLINIST

Le Ménestrel (June 3) hears from Italy that the violinist Trucchi, whose right fore-arm had been amputated, has made a successful reappearance on the concert-platform (see our Rome correspondent's notes, page 514).

A NEW ITALIAN MONTHLY

At Milan is published Musicasti d'Italia, a professional organ. Among the articles that appear in the first issue is one by Ettore Bontempelli on the artistic future of Italian musicians, and one on the economic future by Edgardo Corio.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

Obviously the most important happenings since last month have been the concerts of the late Russian music, which took place in the early days of June. The excuse for devoting to them what may seem a disproportionate amount of space is that they are likely to be of more lasting importance than the other concerts of the month.

The advocates of the extreme forms of the new music tell us that the matter has passed beyond the realms of controversy—that the victory is won. Some have gone so far as to assert that those who do not recognise 'Le Sacre du Printemps' as one of the half-dozen greatest musical works of all time, write themselves down as old fogeys. This method of proclaiming a victory already won before the battle has really been engaged is somewhat disconcerting, and I am far from being assured that this is the best way of winning solid success. One of the arguments used in favour of this assertion is the attitude of the audience when Mr. Eugène Goossens performed 'Le Sacre du Printemps' at Queen's Hall on June 7.

Speaking purely historically without any arrière-pensée as to the value of the music, this seems to me unduly optimistic. There was in the audience a very exact proportion of those who were converted before-hand; the composer was present, and it is only fair to assume that a good deal of the applause was intended for him personally, a still larger amount for Mr. Goossens' masterly achievement in conducting, and some for the players in the orchestra. Now those who are old enough to remember the kind of reception accorded the new works of Strauss, and who will make allowance for the fact that in those years English audiences were much less prone to applaud than they are now, must, I think, admit that the reception of 'Le Sacre du Printemps' was a good deal less enthusiastic than that given to 'Zarathustra' and 'Ein Heldenleben.' Yet it never occurred to any of the enthusiasts for Strauss to assert that the battle was won, and they never dreamed of claiming more than a good success in a preliminary skirmish. In spite of the dictum of the enthusiasts, therefore, we must assume that the controversy is still in being, and in carrying it on a few things should be remembered.

THE NEW CONTROVERSIALISTS

This, I think, is the first time, in recent controversies at any rate, that the innovators have openly boasted of making a new start, forgetting the stage which has stood the test of time, that the most original man is the most indebted man. It has generally been the Conservatives who have accused the Radicals of ignoring the foundations laid by their predecessors. Now in the three most significant uses of the last generations, those of Wagner, Strauss, and Debussy, the accusations of the Conservatives have been wrongly based on a misunderstanding of the true objects of the reformers, who have rightly claimed that they were striving for evolution and not revolution. The ultra-moderns, on the contrary, are making a boast of being revolutionary. The young Frenchman who said that the year in which 'Le Sacre du Printemps' was composed was the Year I. of music, and speaks of this as the year XI., was perhaps only posing, but still the pose is significant. The out-and-out admirers of 'Le Sacre du Printemps' are fond of quoting a saying to the effect that this work had the same effect on its generation as the B minor Mass and the Choral Symphony had upon their time. This is a double-edged weapon, for it is easy to retort that the effect was nil: the B minor Mass was neglected until it was rescued by Mendelssohn, and the Choral Symphony was regarded as an inaccessible mystery until the time when Wagner was responsible for revived interest in it a generation later than Beethoven's death.

This, I am aware, is what we used to call a debating society score, but at the same time arguments based on fact have a way of being more useful than those that are not.

The new Russian works we heard during the period in question were, besides 'Le Sacre du Printemps,' Prokofiev's 'Chout' and Stravinsky's Symphony for twenty-four wood-wind instruments, written in honour of the memory of Debussy. At Mr. Goossens' concert the Russian music was in contrast with some modern English music. There have also been British concerts in connection with the Congress of the British Music Society.

Here, too, it is necessary to pause to apologise for a moment to the Reformers. They object to the title of 'Modern,' or 'Ultra-Modern,' or 'Advanced'; they protest that they are 'the Musicians of to-day.' I am afraid it is not possible to use this as a workable assumption in criticism, and will take leave to go on calling them Moderns.

The most important of the modern works heard was of course 'Le Sacre du Printemps.' Here we are in a little difficulty, because the upholders of the 'Sacre' tell us that it is to be judged on its musical merits exclusively, and on the other hand that it is conditioned by the story of the ballet for which it was originally written. This form of mental gymnastics seems a little difficult to the uninitiated, especially as some of the brutalities of the music, and the strong, relentlessly reiterated rhythms, seem to have no reason apart from the story in question. The general principles underlying this modern music are fairly well known by now. The salient characteristics are what are called in the latest idiom the 'sonorities' and the rhythms, which are treated as separate qualities. Everything else is allowed to go by the board. It is not given to all to be able to judge music by such entirely new standards. Judged by ordinary standards of a person who is advanced enough to consider 'Petrouchka' a masterpiece, 'Le Sacre du Printemps' is undoubtedly a work of very great power, in which the composer shows a highly distinctive talent in the use of rhythms, but between saying so much and admitting its claim to be epoch-making, a wide gulf is fixed.

We are told that in this case we ought to consider Spring quite apart from any poetical or literary sentiment that it has. This seems very difficult to do, for away from its associations, what is Spring? and for that matter, apart from its associations, what is anything that can be a subject for music? We get back to the very driest of the abstract music of our great-grandfathers. It is also not easy to conceive how the musicians holding such theories can have a good word for Scriabin, who attempted to achieve a closer union between music and metaphysics than even Strauss, and yet the Moderns worship at his shrine.

THE BRITISH MUSIC

As already said, the performance was a great personal triumph for Mr. Goossens, who will now rank definitely as one of our best conductors. The same programme included Ireland's 'Forgotten Rite,' and it can be predicted with some safety that the 'Forgotten Rite' will be remembered when the 'Rite of Spring' has been forgotten. Lord Berners' 'Spanish Rhapsody' is pleasing, and Ravel's 'La Valse' improves on acquaintance. Anyone hearing it, without knowing the composer's programme, would guess that it was meant to be, as indeed it is, a sort of nightmare vision of the Valse.

The last of the very revolutionary works we heard was Stravinsky's Symphony for twenty-four wood-wind instruments in memory of Debussy, at M. Kussevitsky's last concert. It is very hard to see what relation it can possibly have to Debussy, and one can only say that the composer must have a very strange mentality who can write in his memory such a string of sounds which in the days before the new dispensation would have been called cacophonous. Some of the audience hissed, and the presence of the composer induced a counter-demonstration of approval. M. Stravinsky is said—I do not know with what truth—to have been disappointed because the hissing was not more strenuous. That the final twenty bars of the Symphony are impressive, I should be the last to deny; but then they are not unlike what the fossils of the day before yesterday might have written.

Mr. Arthur Bliss' Concerto for strings, percussion, tenor voice, and pianoforte is, like all his music, overflowing with verve, and thoroughly British in its breezy, open-air vivacity. Miss Myra Hess played the pianoforte part with all the requisite energy, and it had to be repeated. I see that in some quarters it is mentioned as almost a reproach that there are some passages of logical development in it; personally, it gave me more pleasure than any of the other very new works.

To sum up, it seems the very new music is being badly served by over-zealous adherents. My quarrel is rather with the methods of argumentation they choose to employ than with the music itself.

We are to hear 'Le Sacre du Printemps' again, so that there may be an opportunity for revising our judgment next month.

At the concert of the British Musical Society on June 14 there was a programme which placed a great strain on the listener, and it requires more space than can be given to the whole concert to describe each item adequately. One novelty was Vaughan Williams' 'Lark ascending,' a Romance for violin and orchestra, the solo in which was admirably played by Miss Marie Hall. The whole is a good example of that strain of meditative introspection in the depicting of which Dr. Vaughan Williams' strength chiefly lies. Not many people in the audience had heard Mr. Goossens' 'Eternal Rhythm,' though it was not actually a novelty, having been produced at a Promenade Concert last year. It is a work of considerable significance, and is the high-water mark of Mr. Goossens' genius up to the present. It would be called modern by all except those who limit that epithet to all music which goes beyond that of Stravinsky. It has strength and vision, and appeals to me at least as having more chance of enduring than the much-boomed newest compositions from Russia. The programme also contained Mr. Cyril Scott's Pianoforte Concerto, with the composer at the pianoforte. Personally I preferred the vigorous first movement and the Finale to the slow meditative movement, which is less original in idea, and in which Mr. Scott is, more than in the other two, a victim of his own formulæ. Finally came Holst's 'The Planets.' Taken all in all, this concert gave one a comfortable feeling that the present condition of modern creative music is extremely healthy.

The other concerts in connection with the Congress include a concert of chamber music by Hurlstone, Frank Bridge, Vaughan Williams, and John Ireland, and here, too, the result made one feel that there is nothing to worry about; while the concert of Old English music given by Mrs. Gordon Woodhouse, and that by Mr. John Coates, on June 15 and 17, respectively, showed that we had much music in the past of which we can still be proud.

It may be convenient for purposes of record to give the full programmes of the chief concerts which formed part of the Congress proceedings:

TUESDAY, JUNE 14, AT 8 P.M.

QUEEN'S HALL

ALL-BRITISH ORCHESTRAL CONCERT

The British Symphony Orchestra.

Conductors: Eugène Goossens and Adrian C. Boulton.

Overture to 'The Children' ... .. Josef Holbro
'The Lark Ascending' ... .. R. Vaughan Williams
Solo Violin: Marie Hall.

'The Eternal Rhythm' ... .. Eugène Goossens
Pianoforte Concerto ... .. Cyril Scott
The Composer at the Pianoforte.

'The Planets' ... .. Holst

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, AT 3 P.M.

ÆOLIAN HALL

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT

THE ENGLISH STRING QUARTET.

Phantasy in A minor ... .. W. Y. Hurlstone
First Cobbett Prize in Competition for 1905.
(Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello)

Quartet in G ... .. Frank Bridge
First Cobbett Prize in Competition for 1915.
(Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello)

Violin Sonata in D minor ... .. John Ireland
First Cobbett Prize in Competition for 1909.
Miss Marjorie Hayward and Mr. Harold Samuel.

Phantasy Quintet in D minor ... .. R. Vaughan Williams
Commissioned by Mr. W. W. Cobbett in 1914.

ORCHESTRAL PLEBISCITE CONCERT

QUEEN'S HALL, THURSDAY, JUNE 16, AT 8 P.M.

'The Sea-Reivers' ... .. Bantock
'Adventures in a Perambulator' ... .. J. Alden Carpenter
'Enigma' Variations ... .. Elgar
Dirge from 'Indian Suite' ... .. MacDowall
Three numbers from 'Iphigenia in Aulis' ... .. Damrosch
(a) Prologue—Sung by Miss Dilys Jones.
(b) 'Entrance of the Maidens of Chalcis'

Don Quixote ... .. Strauss

Solo Violoncello: Felix Salmond.

Conductors: Walter Damrosch and Hamilton Harty.

CONCERT OF OLD ENGLISH MUSIC

ÆOLIAN HALL, FRIDAY, JUNE 17, AT 3 P.M.

THE ENGLISH SINGERS

Flora Mann, Winifred Whelen, Lilian Berger, Steuart Wilson, Cuthbert Kelly.

Harpiscord: Mrs. Gordon Woodhouse

Viols: Rev. Dr. Fellows, H. G. Marshall.

Violas: A. J. Webb, A. T. Jones.

Violoncellos: H. T. Triggs, C. R. Kerwood.

Madrigal (5 parts), 'O Care' ... .. Thomas Weelks

Ballet (5 parts), 'On the Plains' ... .. Thomas Weelks

The English Singers.

Fantasia. From Psalms, Sonnets, and Songs (1611) ... .. Byrd

The String Sextet.

Galliarda ... .. John Bull (1563-1621)
Alman ... .. Thomas Morley (1551-1602)
The Irish Ho-Boane ... .. Anon. (c. 16th century)
The Scotch Brawl ... .. From the Strallock M.
Nobody's Gigue ... .. Richard Farnaby (c. 1600)

Mrs. Gordon Woodhouse.

Madrigal (5 parts), 'Dainty fine bird' ... .. Orlando Gibbons

Madrigal (3 parts), 'Come follow me' ... .. Thomas Bateson

Madrigal (4 parts), 'Fair Phyllis' ... .. John Farmer

Ballet (5 parts), 'Sing we at pleasure' ... .. Thomas Weelks

The English Singers.

'Sweet honey-sucking bees' (from Second Set of Madrigals, 1609; 'apt for both Voyals and Voyces') ... .. W. Byrd

Lachrymæ (Brit. Mus. Add. MS. 17786-91) ... .. Dowland

Galliard (from Fullsack's Auserlesene Paduanen und Galliard, 1607) ... .. Dowland

String Sextet.

The Pipers' Galliard ... .. John Bull

Alman ... .. William Tisdal (c. 1600)

Coranto ... .. Anon. (16th century)

Muscadin ... .. Anon. (16th century)

Sir John Graye's Galliard ... .. William Byrd (1538-1623)

Gigue—'Myselfe' ... .. John Bull

Mrs. Gordon Woodhouse.

(Continued on page 495.)

Fain would I change that note.

July 1, 1921.

UNACCOMPANIED PART-SONG.

Poem from Captain TOBIAS HUME'S
The First Part of Ains, &c., (1605).

Composed by JOHN IRELAND.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegretto con anima.

mf

FAIN. Fain would I change that note To which fond Love hath charm'd me, Long,

TO. Fain would I change . . . that note To which fond Love hath charm'd me,

SOR. Fain would I change that note to which fond Love hath

ASS. Fain would I change that note To which fond Love hath

Allegretto con anima. (♩ = 72-76.)

mf

OMP. or (ly.)

cres. long to sing by rote, . . . Fan - cy - ing that that harm'd me:

cres. Long, . . . to sing . . . by rote, Fan - cy - ing that that harm'd me:

cres. charm'd me, Long, Fan - cy - ing . . . that that harm'd me:

cres. charm'd me, Long to sing by rote, Fan - cy - ing that that harm'd me:

cres. 3

mp p

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

Yet when this thought . . . doth come, "Love is the per - fect

Yet when this thought doth come, "Love is the

Yet when this thought . . . doth come, "Love is the Yet when this thought doth come, "Love is sum of all de - light," . . . I have no oth - er choice, per - fect sum of all de - light," I have no oth - er per - fect sum . . . of all de - light," I have no

the per - fect sum of all de - light," I have no oth - er

Ei - ther for pen or voice, . . . To sing . . . or write. . .

choice, Ei - ther for pen or voice, To sing or write. . .

oth - er choice, Ei - ther for pen or voice, To sing . . . or write. . .

choice, Ei - ther for pen or voice, To sing or write. . .

mp cres.

O Love! they wrong thee much That say thy sweet is bit - ter, When thy rich fruit is

mp cres.

O Love! they wrong thee, That say thy sweet is bit - ter, When thy rich

mp cres.

O Love! they wrong thee much That say thy sweet is bit - ter, When thy

mp cres.

O Love! . . they wrong thee That say thy sweet is bit - ter, When thy

mp cres.

such As no - thing can be sweet - er. Fair house of joy . .

f p

fruit is such As no - thing can be sweet - er. Fair house of

f p

rich fruit is such As no - thing can be sweet - er. Fair house of

f p

rich fruit is such As no - thing can be sweet - er. Fair house of

f p

and bliss, Where tru - est plea - sure is, I do . . a . .

mf f

joy and bliss Where tru - est plea - sure is, I do a - dore . . . .

mf f

joy and bliss Where tru - est plea - sure is, I do a . .

mf f

joy . . . . Where tru - est plea - sure is, . . I do a . .

mf f

dolce.
p dore thee, I do a - dore thee: I know thee what thou art, . . . I dolce.

p

. . . thee, I do a - dore thee: I know thee what thou art, I

dolce.
p dore thee, I do a - dore . . . thee: I know thee what thou art, . . . I dolce.

p

dore thee, I do a - dore thee: I know thee what thou art, I

dim. poco rit. pp

serve . . . thee with my heart, And fall . . . be - fore thee. . . .

dim. poco rit. pp

serve thee with my heart, And fall be - fore thee. . . .

dim. poco rit. pp

serve thee with my heart, And fall . . . be - fore thee. . . .

dim. poco rit. pp

serve thee with my heart, And fall be - fore thee. . .

(Continued from page 490.)

RECITAL OF ENGLISH SONGS BY MR. JOHN COATES
ÆOLIAN HALL, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 8 p.m.

TUDOR GROUP

One growth ye holy' ... .. King Henry VIII.
Styme with good companye' ... .. King Henry VIII.
Estron wynde' ... .. Anon.; temp. King Henry VIII.
A bancke as I lay' ... .. Anon.; temp. King Henry VIII.
Tyltell pretty one' ... .. Anon.; temp. King Henry VI.

ELIZABETHAN GROUP I.

In a garden green' ... .. Anon.; temp. Elizabeth Leno custureme' After W. Byrd and Cambridge Lute Book;
... .. arr. by J. C.
me again' ... .. John Dowland; 1st Booke of Ayres, 1597 was a lover and his lass' T. Morley; 1st Booke of Ayres, 1600 love bound me with a kisse' R. Jones; 2nd Booke of Ayres, 1601

ELIZABETHAN GROUP II.

Once first I saw your face' ... .. Thomas Ford, 1607 me live with me and be my love' W. Corkine's 2nd Booke of Ayres, 1612 ere is a garden in her face' Thomas Campian;
... .. 4th Booke of Ayres, 1617
Flora slept' ... .. John Hilton, 1627 rol for the New Year' Anon. (tune, 'Greensleeves,' c. 1580; words, 1642)

STUART GROUP I.

me, lasses and lads' ... .. Anon.; temp. Charles II.
kiss I begged' ... .. John Gamble, 1657
ie Angler's Song' ... .. Henry Leazes, 1659 am a poor shepherd undone' ... .. Anon., 1665 mely swain, why sitt'st thou so?' ... .. John Playford, 1672

At the Pianoforte: Berkeley Mason.

It is now necessary to dismiss as briefly as possible the remaining concerts of the month.

The most interesting concerts given during the early days of June were the series of six pianoforte recitals by Mr. Harold Samuel at Wigmore Hall. It is really not necessary to say much about them, but a significant fact is that the audiences grew steadily, until at the last event many people were turned away. The whole series, I am told, was contrary to all expectations, a financial success—so much so, that Mr. Samuel is giving a seventh recital with a plébiscite programme on a day too late for inclusion in this month's issue. It is a very healthy sign that there are so many Bach lovers here, and that the mastery of a native pianist is so fully appreciated. Mr. Samuel has the secret of making Bach sound alive, yet strictly classical. There are many pianists who can do one or the other, but very few who can combine the two, and that is the secret of his success both with musicians and with the public.

At his last orchestral concert, on May 20, Mr. Edward Clark introduced Manuel de Falla's 'Lights in the Gardens of Spain,' for orchestra, and with the composer at the pianoforte. The composer, not, in the ordinary sense, a great pianist, but the sparseness and the sensitiveness of his rhythm are delightful. These pieces are most attractive reminders of Spanish atmosphere, scored with much arm, and they made a deep impression. The programme also contained Ravel's 'Valse Nobles et sentimentales,' which were very well played, and are always pleasant to hear. Mr. Goossens' 'Four Nocturns' are exceedingly clever sketches, in a pleasant—sometimes a little sardonic—vein of humour. Personally I preferred the first 'Gargoyle' and the last 'Marionette Show.'

At M. Kussevitsky's last orchestral concert was his most remarkable performance of Scriabin's 'Prometheus.' I have already pointed out the slight differences between M. Kussevitsky's interpretation of Scriabin and that with which we are more familiar. His climaxes were extraordinarily powerful, but the truth is dawning on us that greater familiarity does not increase our admiration for the work itself.

MANY SOLOISTS

Kreisler achieved the extraordinary feat of giving four concerts in a fortnight, all of which were more than sold out. He did not play anything new on either of the two last occasions of the series.

The return of Mr. Moiseiwitsch on Saturday, May 21, was very welcome. He has not allowed American influences to affect his style, which retains all its well-remembered characteristics. His performance of the Brahms-Handel Variations was in particular extremely artistic, and the three new pieces of Palmgren which he played are sure to become very popular. Two other artists who have returned to us from other quarters of the globe are Miss Amy Evans and Mr. Fraser Gange. They gave a highly successful recital at Queen's Hall on June 8, at which they both showed that they had increased in artistic stature.

Miss Ethel Frank gave her last concert before her return to America on June 9. She sang as usual with much charm, and her reappearance in the autumn will be welcome. Another vocal recital of unusual interest was that given by Miss Marcia van Dresser, who is a singer of the most conspicuous finish and taste. Other vocal concerts which deserve record are those of Mr. Ingo Simon on May 31; of Miss Mylchreest, a very promising contralto, on June 7; that of Miss Sonnenberg, a contralto of whom much should be heard, on June 9; and that of Miss Winifred Jenner, a Canadian mezzo-soprano of unusual merit.

PIANOFORTE AND VIOLONCELLO

In conclusion, a few words about pianists and violinists and other instrumentalists. Mr. Emile Freay gave a recital on May 5, and is an artistic player, and M. Spivakovsky, now an adult, also deserves mention. He has not been heard here since he was a prodigy. Miss Winifred Christie's unostentatious but charming talent is winning her many friends. M. Slivinsky is an artist of experience and authority. M. Brailovsky more than confirmed the impression he made when he was first here in the spring, and M. Pouishnov's recital at Queen's Hall on June 2 put the seal on his reputation. Of M. Rubinstein and M. Ossip Gabrilowitsch it is only necessary to say that their playing was worthy of their high reputation, and the same can be said of Miss Fanny Davies' Schumann recital on June 15.

Violin recitals have probably been more numerous this year than in any similar period in recent years. Undoubtedly, most important has been M. Toscha Seidel, a pupil of Leopold Auer, whose genuine artistry at his recital caused unbounded enthusiasm. There may be a chance of dealing with him in more detail next month. M. Losowsky is a young violinist of considerable accomplishments and high aims, and Miss Lena Kontorovitch played very brilliantly at her recital on May 26. M. Hubermann's artistry was well shown in his recital on May 28. The return of M. Boris Hambourg should be mentioned; he has become a mature artist of wide accomplishments. Record should also be made of the first appearance of the London Classical Quintet, consisting of Messrs. J. Kruse, R. Jeremy, P. Brunet, F. Ortscharkoff, and Miss Mathilde Verne. There will be an opportunity for discussing them next month.

NOTES FOR JULY

The first musical event of July is the performance of Purcell's 'Masque of Dioclesian' in Hyde Park on July 2, under the auspices of the League of Arts. The production of M. Stravinsky's 'Le Coq et le Renard' at the Princes Theatre takes place early this month, and M. Rosing's series of performances of 'Opéra Intime' at Æolian Hall continues during the early days of the month. At the time of writing the number of concerts announced for July is mercifully small.

Opera in London

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

MR. NICHOLAS GATTY'S 'PRINCE FERELON'

FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF 'THE BEGGAR'S OPERA'

If I except the répertoire performances of opera by the Carl Rosa Company at Hammersmith and Wimbledon, then the fact remains that British opera has had it all its own way this month. Two examples have been in the public eye and ear, and they both signify a great deal. In the first place Mr. Nicholas Gatty's operatic extravaganza has been brought into the light at the Old Vic., where on May 21 and 26 it was performed with great success. This is the first time that a new British opera has been given under the auspices of the Old Vic., and the matter is one for congratulation. The approval with which it was received by a large audience on a summer's evening testifies to the truth of the contention I have always made that it was only necessary to educate the public in opera to make it as appreciative of that form as of the ballad or jazz band. The Old Vic. public has been well coached in opera all these years. The course, ranging from 'The Bohemian Girl' to 'Tristan,' has had its good effect, and that effect has been to cultivate a decided appreciation of the form, and a power of analysis. This being so, and the Old Vic. patrons being well up in opera, they were fully able to realise the worth of Mr. Gatty's effort, and to appreciate its value. That value is considerable, for the work is a good light opera with music that is bright, appropriate, and never vulgar. Mr. Gatty enters into the mood of his story very freely, and is singularly happy in representing the ludicrous side of things and in making his musical jokes. The story, for which the composer is responsible, is quite simple and uninvolved, a tale of the Princess who too readily exercised the privilege of her sex in changing her mind in the matter of her suitors. The most favoured one realises the difficulty, and presents himself in various disguises. As musician, as a costumier, and as a dancer he appears in turn, only to be rejected. The Princess' fond parent is on the other hand captivated by each and every one of the individuals, but without affecting her decision. None in fact suits her, and it is only when the Prince appears as a penniless musician that she consents to be loved for herself and accepts him—to find that after all he is the Prince. The various guises adopted by the lover provide excellent opportunities for musical variety, and these Mr. Gatty meets in a singularly happy fashion. It may not be his real métier, nevertheless he contrives to distinguish himself in it, and I think the piece is well calculated to help to win approval for the representative work of more serious kind he is ready to give to the world when it wants it. The piece was very well put on and went splendidly. It was certainly very much more effective than when first seen at the Ellinger Schö two years ago. Mr. Clive Carey, who was responsible for the production, greatly distinguished himself by his versatile efforts as the Prince, Miss Winifred Lawson made a very charming Wilful Princess, Miss Cecilia Nono was the Maid of Honour, and Miss Sumner Austin highly amusing as the King. As those who participated did their work with spirit especially the Singers, the Mannequins, and the Dancers. The composer conducted, and the orchestra played his score uncommonly well. Personally I think that if a manager were to present the piece for a run in suitable environment he would, to say the least, get his money back.

FOLK OPERA

The other operatic event of the month has been the celebration of the first anniversary of the revival of 'The Beggar's Opera.' This 18th century classic has caught on decidedly with the British public. There are many reasons for its approval, and I have not the slightest doubt that the chief of these is that the music creates a responsive vibration in our natures. This is the music that is in our blood; this is the cadence we respond to; this is the type of melody our ears can grasp without effort. I had never heard the work since the first night of the revival last June, so I availed myself of Mr. Frederick Austin's invitation to 'my predicted anniversary' and now that the performance has acquired all the smoothness and finish of a year's experience, it was borne in upon me that this was the early Gilbert and Sullivan. The satire of the book, and the charm and grace of the melody, are all reflected again in the work of the Immortal Two of a century and a half later. The plain, unvarnished truth is that this is the true British style of music. It shows that we have an individuality of our own, although we try very hard to be something else when we write opera, but our real operatic style should be a thing of our own. And where it is true to type, as in 'The Beggar's Opera' and the Gilbert and Sullivan works its hold on the public ear is certain. The sooner our composers realise this fact the better it will be all the way round.

In the case of 'The Beggar's Opera' we have at the advantage of progress. Mr. Austin has brought very considerable resource to bear on his arrangement of the music, but has used it skilfully, providing accompaniments and symphonies to the numbers that are always in keeping without being pedantic, and always effective without being distracting. With one exception the company is the same as at the production. This gives us Miss Elsie French as the most delicious of Mrs. Peachums. I should not be surprised if the piece is still running at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, next year, and if it is 'ma I be there to see.'

From Punch:

From a notice of the Handel Festival:

In 'The Night is Departing' chorus a bass lead was missed, partly because one of the singers was, I noticed, so deaf that he could not see the conductor.—Daily Paper.

None so blind as those that won't hear.

Selected fragments from the operas Valaicca Rusticana, etc., will be given at the Gaiety Theatre in Yokohama to-night by local talent.—Japanese Paper.

In selecting the fragments somebody seems to have torn the title.

THE NEW CANADIAN COPYRIGHT ACT

The present British Copyright Act which was passed nearly ten years ago and which came into force ten years ago to-day, has been adopted for some time past by all the self-governing Dominions, except by Canada. That Dominion has always been a thorn in the flesh on all questions relating to copyright, as between the Mother country and the colonies, and to-day she remains true to her colours. The other Dominions have given her a good lead, instead of following suit, Canada has revoked—and revoked badly and deliberately. By means of her new Copyright Act which passed the Canadian House of Commons on May 25 ult., and which was adopted by the Senate on May 31 ult., she is on the point of destroying copyright in Canada regards all works, British and foreign, which have not been, or shall not have been, printed and published within Canadian territory; and nothing can avert the fate which threatens the life of all copyright property, which is not originally or ultimately of Canadian manufacture, from the day when the Canadian Governor in Council shall have proclaimed the Act as having come into force.

This ambidextrous Act, which gives with one hand and takes away with the other, to a large extent relies on, and adopts, the British Act and it even prints extenso in its Second Schedule, as being an integral part of itself, the Revised Berne Convention of 1908 and the Additional Protocol of March 20, 1914. Yet, some of its essential and most characteristic clauses, it destroys the very foundations upon which British and International Copyright measures have erected those towers of strength which have been designed to protect the work of a man's brain from attack and confiscation.

The Canadian Act, it is true, does not decline to acknowledge a Canadian Copyright in favour of those works which in their origin are British or are protected by the Revised Berne Convention. It takes a point of its cosmopolitan regard for all such works, but unfortunately it contains several sinister clauses which deprive the copyright it purports to bestow of everything which is involved in the real meaning of the word—i.e., the sole right to copy.

The emasculating sections are the 13th, 14th, 15th, and the 27th, and any other clauses there may be which depend upon or carry out the objectionable features of those sections.

The substance of them amounts to this. That any work originally published in Great Britain or in any foreign country which is a party to the Revised Berne Convention, or which is granted similar protection by a certificate of the Canadian Minister, whether the work is published as a book (which includes music and other things), or as a serial, may be printed in Canada at any time after publication, under a licence granted by the Minister under certain conditions, unless the owner prints or reprints his copyright work in Canada, and, having printed it there, keeps the Canadian market reasonably supplied with copies.

The licences are not to be granted for a longer period than five years, and not more than one licence can be in existence at one period, but further licences can be granted from time to time, unless the author himself has published one or more editions in Canada. The Minister, in granting his licence, reserves certain royalties which are paid to the Minister, and are 'by him paid out to the parties entitled thereto.' No copies of the original publication, whether British or foreign, may be imported into Canada during the period when any of these licences are running!

It has taken Canada nearly ten years to formulate this measure of confiscation. A more retrograde step has never disfigured any Copyright Act; and no more deliberate attack on the principles which govern Copyright Legislation National and International throughout nearly all the more enlightened countries of the world has ever been perpetrated. And yet Canada seems to be quite attached to the Revised Berne Convention! What Berne will think, and do, remains to be seen.

THE RUSSIAN BALLET

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

Of all the organizations that were in being before the war, none has retained its hold on the public more firmly than the Russian Ballet. On May 26, through the enterprise of Mr. Charles B. Cochran, the company began a season at the Princes Theatre and at once earned the

Photo by]

[Sydney J. Loeb

ERNEST
ANSERMET

SERGE DIAGHILEV

IGOR STRAVINSKY

SERGE
PROKOFIEV

thanks of the public. It is certainly entitled to all the support it can receive, for it is artistically well-founded. In its chief, Serge Diaghilev, is found a man with fine artistic standards who knows what he wants and how to get it. He is a man of distinction in his work, for, unlike so many organizers of entertainments, he appreciates the value of good music. Consequently music has a special place in his plans. He does not regard it as sufficiently represented if it supply the rhythm for the dances; it must have a character of its own and be adequately presented. Moreover he gives special prominence to this branch of the art by employing a first-class orchestra and by making a feature of musical interludes between the ballets. It has been rather a fight to win attention to this part of the programme, but he seems to have succeeded at last. The point is that there has been very ready appreciation of the undertaking, and that the Ballet has come into its own. For once that appreciation is well bestowed. The Russian Ballet is an artistically perfect organization. It is only necessary to watch the extraordinary technique of the dancers, to note the variety of their movements and mark the fact that no point is ever missed, to come to the conclusion that it is the most complete thing of its kind in existence. As to its direction there is a delightful versatility. Nothing comes amiss to M. Diaghilev. He can give us something that is all grace and charm like 'Carnaval' or he can indulge in an artistic jazz like 'Chout,' and all the time the level of attainment is high and the purpose ever clear and well expressed.

CHANGES IN THE COMPANY

This year finds certain changes in the company. A turn of the wheel has brought back the charming Mlle. Lopokova, who mysteriously disappeared during the Alhambra season of two years ago, and it has also turned clever M. Massine and others out of sight. But the new members are well up to their work, and the whole thing is as individual and as attractive as ever it was. M. Ansermet remains as conductor-in-chief, and seems well able to meet the many demands made upon his artistic sympathies. He has an excellent orchestra, comprising some of the best of the London players, which is saying a good deal. The size of the orchestra—well at the theatre necessitates some curious seating arrangements, and, as one result, the horns are elevated on platforms at one end of the orchestra and the trombones and tuba at the other. The effect is by no means bad, and will incidentally enable the orchestral student to realise the important part played in the score by the four horns, the charm of the instrument, and the skill of the players. At the same time, I cannot help asking why, when building theatres, architects do not look ahead a little and endeavour to realise that the place may be wanted for productions that demand a big orchestra, and dig deep in anticipation. It would be quite easy to cover over the space with a platform when only a small orchestra is required. Then we should be spared the present scattered arrangement, and should not be liable to mistake the artist at the glockenspiel and xylophone for a member of the audience indulging in a ballet of his own.

WELCOME TO FAVOURITES

A beginning was made with a typical programme that comprised 'Children's Tales,' (that fanciful illustration of Liadov's music), 'La Boutique Fantasque,' which will ever remain one of the best things M. Diaghilev has done, with 'Les Sylphides,' or Chopin visualised, to conclude. Mlle. Lopokova made her re-entry in 'La Boutique Fantasque,' and had an overwhelming reception. The part of the Can-Can Dancer suits her perfectly, for she invests it with all the gaiety and vitality it needs. M. Woizikovsky was the other dancer, and comported himself well in a part created by Massine. All that I could wish is that he would not imitate the make-up so closely. He can afford to stand on his own merits, as he very well shows in 'The Three-Cornered Hat.' Here, in the part originally played by Massine, he displayed great individuality of style and remarkable technique, making the character vastly more interesting than it was before. In this same name number Mlle. Dalbaicin, a new-comer, made her appearance as the Miller's Wife. She is a Spanish dancer whose graceful movements are all in keeping with the spirit of the piece. She has considerable personal charm in which her raven black hair and big expressive eyes play no small share. Señor de Falla, composer, was present, and took an enthusiastic

THE ANDALUSIAN DANCERS

During the first week M. Diaghilev's last achievement was brought on to the stage under the go-as-you-please title of 'Cuadro Flamenco.' This is a company of Andalusian dancers and singers. They come from the Sunny Land, and are the first troupe of authentic Spanish dancers to appear in England. They are something entirely new. The method of dancing, and the dances themselves, something we Londoners have never seen before the mass. They do not perform a ballet; they just give their dances on a special platform in the centre of the stage, dressed in Spanish costumes, specially designed by Picasso, who has contrived a wonderful prosenium. The business begins with a song by Minarita. It is a characteristic thing enough, but strange to Northern ears as probably a ballad concerning the singer's effort would be to a Spanish audience. The curious vocal curves and glides—all in a white, hoarse tone devoid of all colour—that the lady evolves do sound particularly beautiful, yet there is no question as to their being the genuine article. But it is olives that precede the banquet—and some people do not like olives. What follows is a demonstration of command of rhythm which leaves the negro merchant in the position of some one beating 'one' on a bar. The guitars give out the tonic and dominant in 3-4 and 2-4, the company utters weird yells, and then one of them provides an extraordinary variation upon the fundamental rhythm. It is executed with feet and body, and is a prolation in excellence. Marvellous twists and gyrations are executed, including the touching of the floor with both knees in turn and throwing the whole body prone. Then there is a solo number by Mlle. Dalbaicin, in which hands and body have more to do than feet—the Spanish Dancers we know best—some graceful posturing in a long slither by La Rubia de Jerez, followed by a grotesque dance of perfect originality given by a woman, La Gabrielle, who is a humorist of no common kind. Then there is a curious contribution by the ex-Toreador Matteo Sin Pies, who executes movements on his knees. I cannot but admire his courage in overcoming his disability, but there my admiration ends. Finally, the Jota Aragonesa is given another typical dance of extraordinary energy and rhythmic variety. Its steps are well worthy of notice by English dancers. The whole is an exposition of rhythm that opens up new fields, and provides London with a new sensation, that so far it has not failed to appreciate.

GENERAL RÉPERTOIRE

In addition to the pieces I have enumerated 'The Good-Humoured Ladies' has also been given, the delightful Scarlatti ballet that so well displays the company's attainments as mimists as well as dancers. It goes well, for the executors have acquired a roundness of style that is very appropriate, and have improved the representation generally. Then both 'Cleopatra' and 'Scheherazade'—reminders of the old days when the Ballet fi-burst upon us with its startling novelty—have been given, as well as the dances from 'Prince Igor' and Schumann's 'Papillons.' In these Mlle. Sokolova the stately, Mlles. Tchernicheva, De Villier, and Nemchinova, and M. Idzikovsky, and the veteran but ever young Cecchetti have given of their best.

THE ORCHESTRAL INTERLUDES

As I have already noted, the orchestral interludes have certainly come into their own this season, and have comprised much interesting matter presented in an uncommonly effective fashion. Among the works heard have been the Overture and March from Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Coq d'Or' and the Overture to his 'Ivan the Terrible,' Satie's 'Gymnopédies,' the Finale from Borodin's 'Mlada,' Eugène Goossens' 'Tam o' Shanter,' and M. Prokofiev's 'Symphonie Classique.'

THE NEW 'CHOUT'

Don't 'chout' would be the kindest advice concerning the new number added to the Ballet's achievements on June 9. It is an impressionistic business, for which M. Michael Larinov, the Futuristic painter, is responsible. Here we have the colour-and-sound jumble brought to a fine art. There is nowhere anything approaching form, and I can imagine the producer regretting that his exponents have that regular assortment of arms and legs that is accepted as the human shape. He does his best to disguise the fact in his costumes, which are some of the most nightmareish things I have seen. There is some sort of story—two, in fact—but I wonder that anything in the nature of a sequence was undertaken. The Master buffoon to entertain his brother buffoons slays his wife, but brings her to life with the magic of the lash. Whereupon the company proceed to do likewise, but not being in the know, the spouses fail to respond. On returning to the Master to conduct inquiries on the subject with the aid of a chopper, they fail to find him. He has disguised himself as his own cook. Then the story goes off at a tangent. The Rich Merchant seeking a wife among the offspring of the buffoons selects the Cook, with the result that he has to pay up and look pleasant while the buffoon and wife enjoy the proceeds. The whole thing is just a sound-and-colour 'rag' of which a little goes a long way. It may be that this is another of the things for which people have been waiting, and that satisfies their artistic longings. Or it may not. M. Prokofiev's 'music' is clever, but he cannot disregard line, and gives a decidedly melodious turn to some of his phrases. Others sound as if they were being played upside down or had been derived from a pianola roll reversed. The whole thing is best looked on as a joke, for which we can forgive M. Diaghilev, in view of the real charm of such things as 'The Good-Humoured Ladies,' 'La Boutique Fantasque,' 'Carnaval,' 'Papillons,' and 'The Three-Cornered Hat.' But as to its 'future' I may well say that it is passed. Personally, I should have preferred to have seen an illustration of Dukas' 'L'Apprenti Sorcier,' or a new ballet composed by an Englishman.

'PETROUCHKA'

Nothing better conveys the special methods of the Russian Ballet than the quaint piece 'Petrouchka.' It was added to the list at the end of the month. Here again we have the dolls who come to life, but not as in 'La Boutique Fantasque' to illustrate someone's music, but to be illustrated. M. Stravinsky's music to 'Petrouchka' justifies his existence more than anything else he has done, with the exception of 'L'Oiseau de Feu.' His illustration of the Ballerina, wooden of movement, hectic in complexion; of Petrouchka himself, an aristocratic person only distantly related to Punch; and the Blackamoor, haughty of mien, and, with his green coat and flaunting feather, decidedly a person of distinction, are strikingly ingenious conceptions. Their music fits them exactly. But M. Stravinsky is singularly happy in describing the rest of the scene—the bustling Russian Fair, the rival organs and dancers, the ever-present concertina, which wheezes out its major 9ths at every fair from China to Peru, and all the rest. Musically, the piece is convincing in every bar, and one can only regret that the composer has not stopped at this point. With the help of Mlle. Lopokova, M. Woizikovsky as Petrouchka, and M. Zvery as the Moor, the number astonished the audience. The composer appeared at the close. At the end of the month the allegorical 'The Midnight Sun' was added, and 'Le Sacre du Printemps,' with new choregraphy and increased process, was announced.

Choral Notes and News

BY W. McNAUGHT

CHORAL CONCERTS

In 1909 a great Handel-Mendelssohn Festival was held at the Crystal Palace. On June 4 this year there was a little one—to the extent of a long afternoon's programme with two thousand five hundred voices of the Handel Festival Choir singing under Sir Frederic Cowen's direction. The Handel was 'Round about the starry Throne,' and the Mendelssohn was the 'Hymn of Praise.' There was also 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' which had a huge effect with this choir—not a diffuse, unmanageable body, but a well-knit unity—and the orchestra of hundreds led by the L.S.O. It was in this 'solemn musick' that the quality and training of the choir, and the sum of experience contained in its ranks, were best shown. Passengers in a choir are the people who give the execution a woolly effect by their lack of initiative, and who often reduce the effects of expression by singing at a uniform mezzo-forte. Their presence is, as a rule, easily detected whenever choralists aggregate to four figures. The Handel Festival Choir seemed to be singularly free from this leavening. An attack was an attack by all, an effect of expression was done by all, and the tone had body as well as volume. The choir also joined Dame Clara Butt in German's 'Have you news of my boy Jack?' (the composer conducting) and in 'Land of Hope and Glory.' The other solo singers were Miss Rosina Buckman—a great success—Miss Laura Evans-Williams, Mr. Maurice d'Oisly, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford, and the organist was the choir's chorus-master, Mr. Walter W. Hedcock.

BEDFORD.—May 25 was a busy and important day for the Musical Society. 'The Dream of Gerontius' was rehearsed in the morning, and performed in the afternoon and in the evening. Dr. H. A. Harding conducted an interpretation that was distinguished for its expressiveness and fine tone. The choral music had been well studied, and with a professional orchestra to help there were no executive shortcomings. The solo parts were sung by Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. John Adams, and Captain Herbert Heyner. Mr. A. F. Parris was at the organ.

BENFIELDSIDE CHORAL SOCIETY.—This Society held its fourth concert at Olympia, Blackhill, under the conductorship of Dr. E. J. Sloane. The event was a great success both musically and financially. The choir sang compositions by Elgar, Wagner, Macfarren, Dudley Buck, R. P. Stewart, John E. West, R. G. Thompson, and a part-song, 'Resurgam,' by the conductor. The choir was assisted by Mr. John Dunn (violin), Mr. John Clinto (tenor), Miss May Worthington (soprano), Mr. Edwin B. Unwyn (bass-baritone), Mr. Herbert Leeming, and Mr. J. E. Palliser (accompanist).

HAMILTON, CANADA.—The Centenary Choir of Hamilton gave its annual concert on April 25, under the direction of Mr. W. H. Hewlett. The programme was excellent. It included Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet,' with Mr. Frank Oldfield as soloist, choruses by Moussorgsky and Rachmaninov, Mozart's 'Ave Verum' (strings and organ), and the first performance in Canada of two Psalms by Gustav Holst.

PAR AND DISTRICT CHORAL SOCIETY.—At St. Blazey Picturedrome, on April 26, before a large audience, the Par and District Choral Society (conductor, Mr. C. S. Edwards), assisted by a capable orchestra, brought its 1920-21 season to a close with a spirited performance of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' followed by a miscellaneous Part 2.

SOUTH LONDON.—At Goldsmiths' College, New Cross, on May 28, the South London Philharmonic Society gave a creditable performance of 'A Tale of Old Japan,' under the direction of Mr. William H. Kerridge. The programme also included Elgar's 'Fly, singing bird' and 'The snow' and Festa's 'Down in a flow'ry vale.'

Hythe Choral Society gave an admirable rendering of Stanford's 'The Revenge' on May 24, the programme also containing part-songs by Elgar and Bantock.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Good accompanist (young lady), also vocalist and beginner on violin, wishes to meet violinist-pianist for mutual practice. Kentish Town district. Practice-room at advertiser's home.—'CECILIA,' c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist (L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for practice of trios.—L., 57, Oakfield Road, Clapton, E. 5.

'Cellist wanted to complete chamber trio; must be accomplished. Large library of music, classics and moderns, the latter including pieces by Scriabin, Glinka, and Borodin. Practice, advancement and mutual enjoyment.—EDWARD W. ORGAN, 'Milverton,' Mayfield Road, Acocks Green, Birmingham.

Pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet violinist and/or 'cellist for regular practice. (Bradford, Yorkshire.) Classical music preferred, and would like to arrange with another pianist for pianoforte duets.—Write 'ENTHUSIAST,' c/o Musical Times.

Pianist-Violinist (lady) would like to meet with another pianist-violinist, near Liverpool, for mutual accompaniment.—'LOVER OF MUSIC,' c/o Musical Times.

Experienced lady cornet-player wishes to join good orchestra.—'RISOLUTO,' c/o Musical Times.

Vacancies for all instruments in new amateur orchestra. Must be experienced players for advanced music. Rehearsals every Friday, 7.30 p.m., at County School, Hildrop Road, Camden Road, N. 7.—T. G. WILLIAMS, at above address.

'Cellist and violinist (good players) for weekly string quartet and quintet practice. Birmingham. Interested in classical and modern chamber music.—'VIOLA,' c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman pianist wishes to meet with capable violinist with view to the mutual practice of advanced chamber music. Would collaborate in trio (p., v., and 'cello).—R. PUGH, 25, Abergile Road, Liverpool, E.

A new orchestra (amateur) beginning work in September invites applications for all instruments, ladies and gentlemen. Must be advanced performers in classical music. Rehearsals Wednesdays, 7.30 p.m., at the Training College, Breems Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, W.C. For particulars apply Musical Director.

Amateur 'cellist (male) would be glad to join trio or quartet for practice and enjoyment of good music. Clapham and Balham districts.—G. F. ASTON, 126, Taybridge Road, S.W. 11.

Church and Organ Music

BACH AND MARCEL DUPRÉ

M. Marcel Dupré, assistant-organist at Notre Dame, Paris, has this spring repeated his remarkable feat of performing at a series of recitals the entire organ works of J. S. Bach. The recitals this year took place at the Trocadéro (the Albert Hall of Paris) and our information is that the young organist both scored a great artistic success and actually came through the huge enterprise materially to the good, so strong is the cult of Bach in France nowadays. There were ten recitals, beginning on April 5, and the programmes were as follows:

Recital No. 1, ten Preludes and Fugues; No. 2, the 'Schübler' Chorale Preludes, miscellaneous pieces; No. 3, Pastorale, Chorale Variations; No. 4, Fugues, Fantasias; No. 5, 'The Little Organ Book'; No. 6, six Sonatas; No. 7, the Eighteen Chorale Preludes; No. 8, Seven Grand Preludes and Fugues; No. 9, the Catechism Preludes; No. 10, Passacaglia, five Toccatas and Fugues.

The critics praised without reserve. M. Laurence Ceillier (Monde Musical) speaks of the extraordinary art with which Dupré carried out this most awe-inspiring of programmes; his unheard-of easefulness in execution, his prodigious technique, his clearness of articulation both of hand and foot, with that minute, clean precision of which the average pianist has no idea.

Dupré's registration was altogether interesting, says this writer, and he mentions that the use of old Mixtures, in honour in Bach's day, was frequent, and likewise old, dusty Cromorns possessing a quality admirably suited to setting out a melody on a background of Bourdons.

Dupré made certain effects occasionally by transferring to the pedals part of the manual work:

the number of tone-colours simultaneously employed, or the distances between the superimposed parts not otherwise permitting, I suppose, of these combinations.

It was all, we are told, 'the ripe fruit of a great artist's thought,' and practical difficulties of execution were no stumbling-block to Dupré:

Thus, with uncommon presence of mind and cool head, on perceiving in the course of performance that a pedal G was out of action in the chorale, 'Whither shall I flee?' he first without a break transposed the part an octave, and then, dissatisfied with the effect, adopted the device of replacing each G with as near a note as possible, fitting each time into the harmony.

During one piece the wind pressure weakened towards the end, and M. Dupré repeated the whole, lest the hearers should go with a mistaken impression. Or, strange to say, the Trocadéro organ (which is a Cavallé-Col instrument) is not provided with an electrical blower, and in fact is, according to the Monde Musical, out of date in various ways:

It is a national disgrace that the French government should in no way keep up this fine instrument, which is full of dust and urgently needs overhauling. Magnificent qualities prevail in spite of the dilapidation, but the manuals are too high, the pedal-board is old-fashioned, and it must have an electric blower.

Mr. Joseph Bonnet, back home after a strenuous American tour of more than three hundred organ recitals, has given five historical recitals at St. Eustache, Paris, as follows: No. 1, Primitives; No. 2, Bach; No. 3, Handel and Mozart; No. 4, 19th century romantics; No. 5, Modern French school.

A GUILMANT MEMORIAL

Pupils and admirers of Alexandre Guilmant (1837-1911), the French organist, have set up a monument to his memory in the portico of the Trocadéro Hall, Paris. It takes the form of a tablet, with the head of the musician in a bronze medallion. At the unveiling speeches were made by MM. Widor and Vincent d'Indy. The latter related some eminences of the dead organist. At the end of an organ fugue of Bach, Guilmant was heard to exclaim, quivering with enthusiasm, 'I wish to hear no other music in Paradise, should God grant me entrance there!' He was bitterly contemptuous of the garnishings and trivesties of some of the modern German editions, and was the first to point out the faults of Peters' editions, at that time chiefly used by French musicians. During most of his career Guilmant was conservative, and was not at first won by Wagner. Then, when about fifty, he went to Bayreuth for 'Parsifal,' and:

... great was our astonishment to find him on his return in the grip of unusual sensations and filled with the most exuberant admiration for the masterpiece which had just been revealed to him.

M. d'Indy represented Guilmant as the soul of frankness and single-hearted simplicity, and a mind open to all that he considered pure and beautiful in his art. He did not stop growing, but, when an old man, applauded with all his heart Debussy's Pelléas. M. d'Indy wound up thus:

O musicians, my brothers, how much stronger and more powerfully armed for the march to progress would not our French art be if, without troubling over factitious theories, passing fashions, and little mutual admiration clubs, we were to follow the example of the lamented master; if we consented to march hand in hand, united in the same spirit of enthusiasm, towards the sole goal of a true artist's aim, towards the sane, pure manifestation of Eternal Beauty!

SOME NOTABLE ENGLISH ORGANS

By J. H. M. JAY

In the belief that a short account of a few of the more noteworthy organs—Church and otherwise—in this country may be of interest to readers of this journal, the writer has stated under particulars of some which have come under his notice, endeavouring to make his descriptions as free from technical language as possible.

To go back to the times when the Rev. Edward Husband was incumbent of St. Michael's Church, Folkestone: This genius—for such he undoubtedly was—with the aid of Henry Jones, of the well-known South Kensington firm of organ-builders (himself a Folkestone man), designed a most remarkable instrument; one without parallel in the kingdom, or, it may safely be said, on the Continent, and upon which he gave recitals with such good effect that he not only crammed the Church, and so made himself well-known to visitors to the seaside resort as well as to residents, but also swelled the funds of several admirable institutions and provided the money for the building of the church tower.

The instrument itself contained four manuals and nearly two thousand speaking pipes. Although the latter number does not seem large for an organ of the size which the number of manuals would seem to indicate, yet the discrepancy was accounted for by the fact that the 'solo organ' was a 'dummy' as far as pipes were concerned, working several orchestral effects instead—surely a unique feature in a church organ! In appearance, as viewed from the nave, very few pipes were visible, and those few were coloured green.

No one would have imagined that anything out of the ordinary was concealed within such an unpretentious case and commonplace front; but there was very much indeed out of the ordinary, as the following list will show:

Forty-four knobs (at least eight dummies, to show a stranger organist the orchestral effects the organ contained). The Pedal stops were divided, four being placed on the one side and one (Bourdon) on the other.

Bass-drum: Worked by the feet by means of a pedal.

Cymbals: Worked in the same way. (These two pedals were placed together so that both might be played simultaneously.)

Side-drum: Played by a heel-stud (electric).

Kettledrum: Played by foot, through a pedal like a lever swell-pedal; also by a stud at the back of the organ-stool (both electric).

Gong: By pedal (mechanical).

Tubular Bells: One octave. Played from fourth (Solo) manual.

Triangle: Played from the same through two keys.

Nightingale and Cuckoo: Played by two bird-calls placed in a groove at the sides of the Choir manual.

Hail: A most realistic effect. Produced by wind from the bellows making peas in a box rattle against the sides thereof.

This makes ten 'orchestral effects,' five of which could be played together if necessary, though such a proceeding would be difficult. Moreover, by an arrangement of stops the effect of the bagpipes could be so produced as to lead the hearer to believe that several players on these weird instruments were passing the Church. It is hardly necessary to add that the organ possessed a very effective Vox Humana.

One of the most remarkable features of a very remarkable piece of furniture was that it was not provided with 16-ft. flue-stops, though it had (on the Swell manual) a reed of that pitch! The reason of this was not very clear, especially as there were no sub-octave couplers, though Swell and Great octave couplers were in evidence. There was also a coupler connecting the fourth (or Solo) manual to the third. The Choir knobs were, curiously enough, placed over those of the Swell.

Besides all these mechanical and electrical contrivances, there were electric signals to the blower, to the clergy vestry, and to the choir vestry—the two latter with reply indicators. And it may be of interest to say that the kettle and bass-drums (the former slung sideways over the latter) were easily accessible by removing a portion of a cupboard on the pegs of which some of the choir surplices were hung. The bells were suspended close beside these two instruments, the side-drum and cymbals being placed on a level with the front pipes. All these instruments were overhauled and tuned periodically; the motive power, controlled electrically, was provided by eight batteries situated on a level with the aforesaid pipes.

Whether the organ is still extant is a matter of conjecture so far as the writer is concerned, he not having visited Folkestone for a considerable time. The Rev. Edward Husband composed some notable music for it, including a very realistic 'Storm.' And during the singing of the psalms and hymns in the Sunday services novel and startling effects would be produced from the recesses of the instrument, to the astonishment of those who did not know its powers.

Coming nearer the Metropolis, we find the grand Willis organ at the Alexandra Palace, Muswell Hill. This instrument is the second built for the pleasure resort by the same great artist, the first being burnt (with the Palace) just after its erection. It is said that the wood pipes were voiced by Willis himself, and that he declared that if he were to build another organ it would be to the same specification. In this connection, it is generally acknowledged by experts to be the finest of his works, and one of the best in the world, though by no means the largest.

Willis was fortunate in having in the Alexandra Palace—or, rather, its main hall, in which the organ stands—an ideal building acoustically. He was therefore enabled to formulate an almost ideal specification, free from those somewhat strange variations from the normal which are inevitable when plans for an instrument have to be drawn up to suit the peculiar shape of a building.

The Alexandra Palace instrument stands at the upper end of the concert (main) hall, above the orchestra. When it is understood that this hall can accommodate twelve thousand people, it will be seen that a powerful organ is required. And powerful it certainly is, though, strange to say, the pipes are of quite moderate scale. The balance of tone is perfect; the reeds are very fine, the Solo trumpet being on 25-in. wind, and speaking well into the hall between the front pipes. The flutes are of great beauty, as are also the soft reeds, especially the Solo orchestral clarinet.

Although not quite so large as its sister at the Royal Albert Hall, South Kensington, this organ is of the respectable size of 105 stops (89 speaking) and about 6,600 pipes, the largest of the latter—the Pedal Double Diapason 32-ft. metal—being placed in the front, and extending to 40-ft. in length.

Within the instrument there is plenty of room to move about, and passage-boards give access to every pipe for tuning. The swell-box stands at the back, almost on a level with the top of the highest pipes; curiously enough, it contains no string stops whatever—an idea said to be one of Willis' 'strong' points, in that he considered that the inclusion of certain stops in Swells would take the 'sharp edge' off their tone, and so spoil their effect. This is a point on which there may well be different views. Most persons would give an adverse opinion.

To come to the console, the knobs appear at first sight more numerous than the contents of the organ would warrant. And on looking closer we find that some of them (about eleven in all) are 'dummies.' This phenomenon is found in more than one large Willis instrument, and as it is probably not intended to provide for spare slides, the solution seems to be that the knobs are inserted to 'fill up' or counter-balance the number of knobs on either side, so as to make them, as far as possible, equal. All the same, it would be better if they had been omitted, as their presence is deceptive, and gives the instrument when viewed closely an unfinished appearance.

The stop movements are controlled by thirty-two pneumatic pistons (eight under each manual) for the manual knobs, and six composition pedals for the pedal stops—which, by the way, include four 32-ft. (two Double Diapasons, one of wood and one of metal, Sub-Bourdon, and Contra Bombard—the last-named one of the loudest registers in the instrument). The pistons working the Solo stops are arranged to draw special combinations on this manual. For instance, Claribel and Orchestral Clarinet; Claribel, Concert Flute, and Flute Octavante; Trumpet, &c. The two former are particularly lovely combinations.

Another peculiarity noticeable in this organ is the number of different actions employed. For the manuals, pneumatic lever is employed; for the pedals, tubular pneumatic; for the pistons, vacuum exhaust, which is also applied to the draw-stop movements; and for the composition pedals tracker (or 'mechanical'). The unusual arrangement of two couplers—'Pedale in Octaves No. 1' and 'Pedale in Octaves No. 2'—is also found. Taken as a whole, however there are not so many mechanical advantages as in the Albert Hall instrument.

The wind required to supply these different actions and the high-pressure stops is provided by a large installation placed in the vaults 45-ft. below. It consists of two steam engines of twelve and eight horse-power respectively driving (by means of three-throw crankshafts) six feeders each connected to two reservoirs, and weighted to some thing like five tons. In addition to this, the eight horse power (high-pressure bellows) engine works a vacuum bellows (placed within the organ). The organist is connected with the engine-room by electric telephone. The action wind-pressure is 30-in. The cost of the whole organ is estimated at about £6,000.

To speak of the organ at the Royal Albert Hall, South Kensington, seems rather like reviving ancient history, since most people have heard of it, and many doubtless seen it, close at hand. However, as it is still reckoned a landmark, a few words upon it may not be out of place here.

It was built in the year 1871, and contains 124 stops, of which about 108 are speaking stops—not counting the inevitable 'dummies.' The pipes are of large scale, and contain a considerable amount of tin (75 per cent.) in their composition; in fact, there are sixteen tons of this valuable metal incorporated in the work. The specification is somewhat unusual, noticeably in the lack of diapason work on the manuals; this is probably on account of the peculiar acoustic properties of the building.

The instrument is rather lavishly 'fitted up,' the pistons affecting the manual stops being edged with silver. Of these pistons there are thirty-two (eight per manual), besides four each side in the key-frames. There are also eighteen combination and coupler pedals—a large number. Six of these act on the whole instrument, so as instantaneously to vary its effect.

Its age can be seen from the fact that the manual keys (overhanging in modern instruments), from their position, require a considerable stretch in 'thumbing.' The Great to Pedal coupler, also, is effected by two pedals (one taking off and the other bringing on) instead of one doing the double duty, as is the practice to-day.

The tone is very fine, despite the lack of diapasons. The numerous reed-stops, the flutes and strings, singly and in combination, are what one would expect from a knowledge of Willis' voicing. The stops of the Choir organ, though all of metal, have that charm of tone which one associates with the best wood registers. A portion of this organ (the Choir) is voiced to represent the Echo organ in large instruments. The effect is enchanting.

Curiously enough, though larger than the Alexandra Palace specimen of Willis construction, the Albert Hall instrument requires less power to blow it. The wind is supplied from bellows placed outside the Hall (at the back, if the building can be said to have any such part), driven by two steam engines of eight and five horse-power respectively. There are, of course, many extra reservoirs installed (the Alexandra Palace organ contains about twenty-two such) for reducing or increasing the pressure to certain stops—which, in the case of heavy reeds, amounts to some 25-in.—but for all that the difference in the two instruments as regards blowing apparatus is noteworthy.

From the church and concert-hall to the variety platform is rather a long leap. But it is perhaps only fair to include in this short account of notable organs that built for a 'turn' of an artist—and an artist he really is—who, as might be expected, has to travel from hall to hall, conveying the instrument with him. The organ in question was specially built by Messrs. Norman & Beard. In more ways than one was it 'specially' built, for it has to be taken to pieces at the conclusion of each engagement—that is to say, about once a week—and re-erected at the next place of performance, tuned, and generally made ready for use, in one day.

Its appearance was deceptive, the effect being as if it were built into the stage. The gilt pipes came down on either side to the floor, leaving a considerable space in the centre for the smaller work to be heard to great advantage. The stops on this four-manual organ numbered fifty-five, and here were seven pistons to each manual—arranged two-three-two. The tone was very good.

In many respects it is interesting to compare the work of these builders with that of Messrs. Willis & Sons, the flute stops being often so similar in tone that one might be pardoned for imagining that they were the production of the same firm. This is notably the case in the instrument at All Souls' Church, Harlesden. Here we find a little gem of an organ, which, though not entitled to be ranked with these claiming special notice, is yet worth consideration on account of its almost ideal specification for an organ of its size (33 stops) and for the general effect of its ensemble. The flutes (Choir—Claribel Flute, 8-ft.; Flauto Traverso, 8-ft.; Great—Wald Flute, 8-ft.; Harmonic Flute, 4-ft.) are quite remarkably characteristic of Willis, the second on the left being a singularly beautiful stop. The same may be said of the string stops, the Choir Gamba being a delightful specimen of its kind. The writer is of opinion, however, that the trumpet reeds do not come up to the Willis standard. While admiring those of the Clarinet and Oboe class, yet the hearer is apt to be obsessed by the wonderful smoothness which the great master contrived in the production of tone from heavy-wind reeds.

Another firm of organ-builders whose work is uncommonly like that of the great artist is that of Messrs. Harrison & Harrison. As makers of large organs their name is known all over the country, a good deal of their work being reconstructions and enlargements. Notable examples are Carlisle, Ely, and Durham Cathedrals, the last-named a large four-manual, and notable for possessing a Horn on the Great, and for having the major portion of the Solo in a Swell box, including two trumpet reeds, Trombone and Tromba, the two Tubas (8-ft. and 4-ft.) being outside the box.

To the writer's mind (perhaps an old-fashioned view, as things go nowadays), a fault in many organs produced by this firm—a fault which, it is only fair to say, is not confined to these builders—is the borrowing of Pedal stops, not only from those on the manuals but also from each other. Thus, in their Willis rebuild at Carlisle Cathedral, we find a fairly good pedal (if all the registers were genuine) of seven stops (four reeds). But quite six of these are borrowed.

Borrowing is all very well when carried to only a small extent; indeed, it may be advisable for the provision of soft effects for accompaniment of equally quiet-toned manual stops. But surely there is no real need for such wholesale economy as is indicated in the above list; added to which there must be a loss of tonal power when the full pedal is employed, inasmuch as one pipe must do the work of two or more.

A very remarkable instrument, which some of the readers of this paper may recollect—and which, though made in Belgium, may be called 'English,' since it was employed in a church in this country—was that standing until comparatively recently in the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Berkeley Square, London. It was built by the firm of Annenssens, and stood on either side of the gallery over the main entrance, the console being situated midway between the two portions, so that the performer faced one and had his back to the other. Many peculiar features were to be found in it. The console itself was fitted with the ventill pedals so often found on Continental organs, and the three manuals were so disposed that the Choir (or Solo) was on top. The stopknobs were of china, and arranged over the manual keys. The Pedal contained no 32-ft. flue stops, but a reed (Tuba) of that length, with two sister registers of 16-ft. and 8-ft. respectively, the first and third presumably borrowed from the second. On the Great were to be found four reeds, bombardon, trumpet, clarion, and clarinet, the Great, strange though it seems, being the usual place on many reign-built organs for the last-named register. On the Swell were two piccolo stops, one of the ordinary 2-ft. pitch, the other of 1-ft., although the advantage of this arrangement is hard to discover. The Choir-Solo contained Tromba as a reed, and a Fifteenth.

The general effect of the organ was, however, undeniably good; and the same might be said of its softer effects, though how it would have sounded in the hands of an inexperienced performer may be imagined. It is now superseded by an instrument of the extension system—another idea which does not commend itself to the writer, however ingenious and economical it may be.

This extension system is used in the organ at All Saints', Margaret Street. Not having heard this instrument, the writer can give no opinion upon its tone; but he well recollects its predecessor—said to be by Hill—a forty-seven stop four-manual, with five Pedal registers, one of 32-ft. and four of 16-ft. As may well be guessed, the Pedal bass was heard more than any other portion; for in itself the instrument was by no means a powerful one, the Solo possessing only five stops, and its reeds being Clarinet and Vox Humana—hardly a deafening or even an imposing combination.

It has been said (and there is, probably, much truth in the statement) that the ideal organ would have to be built by some three or four firms, all well-known names. Thus, Willis would voice the reeds, Hill or Walker the diapasons, yet another builder the strings, &c. Be that as it may, the excellences of one firm often hide its weaknesses; and as long as the tout ensemble is good the majority of hearers will be satisfied, leaving criticism to experts.

CHURCH MUSIC SOCIETY LECTURES

'THE FUTURE OF CHURCH MUSIC'

A lecture was given at St. Martin-in-the-Fields, on Saturday, May 21, by Mr. C. H. Moody, C.B.E., organist of Ripon Cathedral. Mr. Moody, at the outset, said it was necessary to review the heritage of the past, and to consider especially the neglected music of the Elizabethan period, in order to arrive at a reasonable criticism of present-day Church music, as well as of that produced during the middle decades of the last century. Dealing at some length with the compositions of Redford, Tye, Robert Whyte, Byrd, Tallis, Bull, Orlando Gibbons, William Lawes, William Child, Henry Purcell, John Blow, Pelham Humfrey, Michael Wise, William Croft, and the two Wesleys, Mr. Moody said it was hard to realise how English Church music, with such an ancestry, could have descended to the banalities of Stainer, Barnby, and Dykes. It was even more difficult to understand the retention of such music in some of our Cathedrals and Churches. He did not suggest that the Victorian composers he had named were the worst offenders, but their style had been copied by weaker men, and services and anthems that were in almost every sense unworthy of performance had been widely adopted, to the exclusion of magnificent music that was all too rarely heard. He refuted the idea that the old Church music was tuneless, and quoted numerous examples in support of his contention. His sympathies in secular music were largely modern, but he differed from those who said that if Church music was to live it necessarily must proceed on parallel lines with secular development. A group of modern composers, Stanford, Alan Gray, Walford Davies, Charles Macpherson, Vaughan Williams, Martin Shaw, and Gustav Holst among them, had shown us that Church music could be modern and at the same time retain its religious tone. Few, however, had realised the special genius of the Anglican service, which cried aloud for a return to the profound musical feeling which animated the old Church composers. We saw cleverness on every hand, but it was only here and there—notably in Holst's recently published Two Psalms, and in Vaughan Williams' Five Mystical Songs—that the ecclesiastical spirit was allied with it. Our chief claim to distinction lay in the maintenance and cultivation of the priceless heritage of the past. A great and useful work might be done by efficient choirs in promoting recitals of the best anthems of all periods. He would welcome the abolition of all arrangements from foreign sources of Masses for the Choral Eucharist, and expressed his opinion that in this particular, some London churches were the chief offenders. He deprecated the selection of excerpts from the oratorios as anthems, but admitted that at certain seasons of the Church's year this was almost unavoidable. Speaking of the people's part in the Church service, Mr. Moody said the greatest need was a healthier type of hymn-tune. The Reformation robbed us of our plainsong melodies, and the later Victorian period gave us a surfeit of sickly tunes like those associated with 'For all the Saints,' and 'Fight the good fight.' Sometimes we found a noble hymn wedded to a vulgar tune. That was a shameful mésalliance. The ideal hymn-book had yet to be compiled, but the 'English Hymnal' came very near it, and a notable success had been achieved in converting some of our most beautiful folk-song tunes. Comparing Barnby's tune to 'For all the Saints' with that composed by Vaughan Williams, Mr. Moody said that, to the latter composer, the Saints were indeed soldiers, whose Captain was in very truth their 'Rock, their Fortress, and their Might.' Barnby mistook them for us mortals, who 'feebly struggle.' The secret of the hold these wretched tunes had upon clergy and laity might be summed up in one word—association, an element which was a fearful stumbling-block to musical progress. We clung, rather selfishly he thought, to things that brought pleasure to our early youth, and only now and again paused to ask how far they were worthy of our riper experience. If that were admitted, it must be admitted also that our children were entitled to generous consideration in the shaping of their tastes. They ought to be encouraged in cultivating ideals of which they might not be ashamed on reaching maturity. A revolt against invertebrate Church music was certain to come, and future generations might keep away from Church in preference to assisting in the perpetuation of music that, in addition to its unworthiness, was an insult to their intelligence. It was at least as easy to learn good tunes to-day as it was to learn bad ones a generation ago. If we could not learn good new ones, let us confine our choice to good old ones, of which there was a magnificent collection. Congregational rehearsals were taking place all over the country, and it should be possible to remove the reproach that our Church music, as witnessed by the majority of the hymns sung in the churches, is an insult to the angels. Congregational singing of the right kind would be a tremendous impetus to religious observance, but the flagrant rubbish too frequently heard was calculated to drive musical people to despair. It was not always the organist who was to blame, and he (the lecturer) had never in the whole of his professional career had the good fortune to choose the hymns. He regretted that at Ripon Cathedral many of the hymn-tunes were shockingly bad.

Returning to the subject of services and anthems, Mr. Moody said that, while the orchestra was desirable in oratorio performances, he was by no means sure that it was a desirable adjunct to the ordinary services of the Church. He had heard the Chorale Eucharist accompanied by a full orchestra, and had found it a disturbing element. Personally, he preferred the organ alone or with the addition perhaps of timpani. He would welcome also, where the choir was capable, a more frequent use of a cappella music. In addition to its inherent attractiveness, it gave to singers a degree of self-confidence that rarely was achieved in accompanied music. Choirmasters who were inexperienced in the older schools of polyphonic composition should remember that the bar-line had little to do with accent or emphasis. To lay stress on a note because it followed the bar-line would frequently mean the accentuation of unimportant words. In this connection he would be glad if gramophone records could be made of the best anthems. It was not possible for all choirs to hear these masterpieces sung by Cathedral choirs, and some Cathedral choirs might furnish examples of how not to sing them. But records made by a small choir of gifted singers and under expert direction would meet a real need, and would, he was sure, be generally welcomed.

Concluding, Mr. Moody said that while he would be sorry to see the Anglican chant abolished, he looked forward to the time when plainsong would find wider acceptance in the Churches. On antiquarian and devotional grounds there was much to be said for a revival, and he recommended the Briggs and Frere Psalter to any who contemplated the adoption of plainsong for the psalms.

'THE HYMN-TUNE IN ORGAN MUSIC'

The fourth and last lecture was given by Dr. H. G. Ley on May 28, and took the form of a recital with a few introductory and analytical remarks. Dr. Ley, speaking of the growing store of modern British organ music founded on our native hymn-tunes, made the excellent suggestion that the necessary relief in an organ recital programme should be sometimes provided by the singing by the audience of couple of hymns, followed by organ solos based on the tunes. He was of opinion that this type of organ piece was calculated to stimulate public interest in organ music generally, because it was based on familiar themes, and as a rule its construction could be followed with ease. Dr. Ley's programme was a truly comprehensive scheme—so comprehensive, in fact, that owing to the flight of time a couple of the longer items had to be omitted. It included works by Bairstow, W. H. Harris, Harold Dark, Harvey Grace, Vaughan Williams, Basil Harwood, Stanford and Parry. Dr. Ley played finely. We are glad to welcome recitalists from across the Channel, with their vivid qualities and their fresh views of familiar works, but it is well to remember that in Dr. Ley and a few others we have organists who need fear comparison with none.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY

The Special Service Choir is giving London a chance of hearing, under ideal conditions, some of the finest and least familiar of sacred choral works. On June 13 it sang Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater,' Byrd's 'If that a sinner's sighs,' Bach's 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure,' and four modern Motets—one by Basil Harwood (written specially for the choir), one by Balfour Gardiner, one by Brahms, and an impressive new work by the Abbey organist, 'The Supreme Sacrifice,' in memory of the Unknown Warrior. An excellent feature was the apposite use of some organ solos played by Mr. Nicholson—Bach's E flat Fugue, and his Prelude or 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure,' which led up to the Motet or the Chorale. The congregational side was not overlooked, the large gathering joining in three fine old hymns, including 'Disposer Supreme,' to 'Hanover,' which was preceded by Parry's Prelude on the tune.

On May 21* (too late for notice in our June issue) M. Marcel Dupré drew a great crowd to St. John's, Hammersmith. He played four works by Bach (the Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, and three Choral Preludes), his own Prelude and Fugue in B, Franck's Cantabile and 'Pièce Héroïque,' the Scherzo from Widor's fourth Symphony, and the Allegro and Finale from Vienne's first Symphony, ending the recital with a masterly improvisation on a couple of themes sent up by Mr. Stuart Archer—the opening phrase of the plainsong hymn-tune, 'Jesu, dulcis memoria,' and a toccata-like counter-subject. M. Dupré was at his best in the more brilliant portions of the programme, the Widor and Vienne items being wonderfully played. We were less pleased with his performance of the Bach Fantasia, which was tediously slow, and the Franck Cantabile, which was spoilt by an overdose of rubato and a want of balance between melody and accompaniment. His registration was not happy at times, and we heard less than we should of the foundation work of this fine Lewis-Willis organ. But he showed its promptness of speech to great advantage, and altogether gave us a stimulating ninety minutes.

H. G.

The music-book for the Liverpool Church Choir Association Festival in October next is now in hand—none too soon, by the way. It will contain six choral items, two by Sir Ivor Atkins, who, as guest-conductor, will direct the great choir of men and boys in his Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A and anthem, 'There is none that can resist Thy voice.' The anthems include, 'Save us, O Lord' (Bairstow), 'Let us now praise famous men' (Thorne), for men's voices only, Elgar's tuneful 'Ave Verum,' with Mendelssohn's 'O great is the depth,' which is well-chosen as a noble finale that will exercise the capacities as well as enlarge the outlook of church singers, who too often are kept in a narrow groove. Since 1913, when the previous Festival was held, with Sir Hubert Parry as guest-conductor, several notable names have perforce disappeared from the list of active supporters, but it is satisfactory to find an accession of strength in the newly-elected members of the committee—notably in Dr. J. F. Adams, the broad-minded scholar who wields such beneficent influence as vice-chancellor of Liverpool University.

W. A. R.

At the fifty-fourth Annual Festival of North Devon Musical Union, at Ilfracombe, on June 18, four hundred and forty chorists assembled, representing seventeen church choirs, chiefly from small villages. The surplined occasion numbered two hundred and sixty, the members coming from Barnstaple, St. Giles-in-the-Wood, Ambemartin, Lynton, Lynmouth, South Molton, Monkigh, Northam, Chulmleigh, Winkleigh, and Fremington. Some of these choirs were augmented by unsurplined singers, and unsurplined choirs came from Bratton Fleming, Lapford, Ilfracombe, and Idlesleigh. Mr. T. Roylands-Smith conducted, and Mr. A. W. S. Salter was at the organ. The service book was that designed for the Exeter Diocesan Musical Union, whose Festival will be held on July 19. The most successful part of the musical service was the anthem, Tchaikovsky's 'Hymn to the Trinity,' the broad finale for men's voices being very effective. M. B.

Two recitals at Jesus College Chapel, Cambridge, on June 12 and 14, presented some unusual features. At the first, three organists took part—Messrs. E. T. Allen, E. L. Burr, and G. H. Thorne. Mr. J. D. Procter played violin solos (Handel's Sonata in A and Brewer's 'Auf Wiedersehen'), and there was a quartet of vocal soloists. The organ music was by Bach, Byrde, Couperin, Humont, Handel, and Louis Vierne. At the second recital, Mr. Naylor played a programme well off the beaten track—Fantasia and Fugue by John Ernest Bach, Corelli's Sonata in C, a Prelude on Tone 1 by Cabezón (1510-66), Scarlatti's Allegro and Fugue in G minor, Passacailles by Albrande (1690) and Rebel (1703), and Wagner's 'Homage to the March.' The last-named must have sounded revolutionary after the old-world strains that preceded it.

On June 1, at St. Stephens-in-Brannell, church choirs from St. Austell, Fowey, Charlestown, Mevagissey, Gorran, Roche, St. Dennis, Par, St. Stephens, and Truro, formed a choir of over two hundred voices at the annual Choral Festival. The Canticles were sung to a setting by Wesley, and the anthem was 'O give thanks,' by E. A. Sydenham. Mr. Brennand Smith (St. Austell), conducted, and the singing was creditable in tone and accuracy, though more light and shade would have added to the effect. M. B.

In connection with the Bromley District Organists and Choirmasters' Association, a Hymn-Tune recital took place at Bromley Parish Church on May 21. A long list of tunes of various types, from plain-song to florid examples of the 19th century, was sung, interspersed with organ solos based on hymn melodies. The singing rang the changes on fauxbourdon, discant, boys and men, and unison—a good sample of the amount of variety obtainable by simple means. Mr. F. Fertel was organist and director.

A local branch of the London Society of Organists has now been formed at Battersea and Clapham, the first meeting being held on Wednesday, June 8, when an organ recital was given at St. Mark's, Battersea Rise, by Mr. Reginald E. Redman, followed by a reception in the Parish Hall. The officers of the branch are Messrs. J. T. Corbin (chairman), W. G. Leach, R. E. Redman, R. A. Stott, and the Rev. A. H. M. Eat. The hon. secretary is Mr. Charles H. Lindow, 84, Mortmore Road, S.W. 11, who will gladly forward any particulars.

The organ at St. Mary's-in-the-Wood Congregational Church, Morley, Yorks, has been rebuilt by Messrs. Abbott & Smith, of Leeds, and is now a three-manual with twenty-nine stops, and a good supply of accessories. The opening recital was given by Mr. H. Matthias Turton, of St. Aidan's, Leeds, whose programme included Stanford's Sonata in F, Debussy's Introduction and 'Passacaglia,' Debussy's 'Cortège,' two movements from Piatti's Sonata in G minor, and four pieces by Bonnet.

Mr. Geoffrey Shaw conducted a Hymn Festival at Bodmin Parish Church on May 24. Ten choirs attended under the organization of Lady Mary Trefusis, and among the tunes used were the Old 104th, 100th, 44th, and 25th, 'Wolvercote,' 'Rockingham,' 'Veni Creator,' 'Falkland,' 'Hyfrydol,' Darwall's 148th, 'University,' and 'Hanover,' and variety was secured by the use of fauxbourdon, discant, unison, and harmony. M. B.

Between sixty and seventy members of the London Society of Organists, with Mr. E. T. Cook (Southwark Cathedral), their president, visited Rochester on June 11. They attended evensong at the Cathedral, when the choir sang E. T. Cook's new service in G and Palestrina's Motet, 'Isti sunt viri sancti.' César Franck's 'Pièce Héroïque' is worthy of a finer organ than Rochester possesses, but it was admirably played by Mr. C. Hylton Stewart.

Dr. Ernest Bullock has commenced a summer season of weekly organ recitals at Exeter Cathedral with programmes representing all styles of good organ music.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary, Aldermanbury (three recitals)—Andantino, Franck; Triumph Song, C. W. Pearce; Rhapsody, Saint-Saëns; Offertoire in A, Léfebure-Wély.
St. Mary Abchurch (four recitals)—Minuet and Trio, Wolstenholme; Nuptial March, de la Tombelle; March in F, Goss Custard; Adagio and Fugue, Camidge; Finale, Faulkes; Commemoration March, John E. West.
Dr. George P. Allen, St. Peter's, Mansfield (two recitals)—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Fantasias on 'Abide with me' and 'Christians, awake,' Allen; Scherzo, Sandiford Turner; March in E flat, Léfebure-Wély.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Fantasia in G major, Bach; Romance and Pastorale, Wolstenholme; Finale, Bossi; Fantasia in A, Boëllmann.

Mr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church (two recitals)—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Fantasia on 'Darwall's 148th,' Darke; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Marche Religieuse, Chauvet; Fanfare, Lemmens.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Capriccio, Ireland; 'The Sea,' Arnold Smith; Rhapsody No. 2, Howells; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Toccata, Stanford.

Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church—Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Canzona from Symphony No. 4, Tchaikovsky; 'Air from County Derry,' arr. by Hamand; Carillon, Vierne.

Mr. Herbert Weatherly, St. Stephen's Walbrook—A Lemare programme: Concert Fantasia in F; Largo and Madrigal from 'Festival Suite'; Scherzo, Symphony No. 2; Finale, Symphony No. 1.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. Mary's, Haverfordwest—Fugue in B minor, Bach; Largo, 'New World' Symphony; Solemn Melody, Walford Davies; Scherzo, Guilmant.

Mr. Frederick Fertel, Bromley Parish Church—Fantasia, Bubeck; 'The Curfew,' Horsman; 'Alleluia,' Dubois.

Mr. R. Buchanan Morton, House of Hope Congregational Church, St. Paul, Minn.—Sonata No. 2, Rheinberger; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Improvisation-Caprice, Jongen; Ronde Française, Boëllmann; Impromptu in A minor, Coleridge-Taylor.

Mr. W. Adams, St. Paul's, Hammersmith—Sonata No. 2 (first movement), Rheinberger; Lied, Wolstenholme; Gavotte, Elgar; Scherzo, Mansfield.

Mr. Stanley E. Lucas, Trinity Presbyterian Church, Canonbury (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in B minor and Fugue in E flat, Bach; 'Finlandia'; Festive March, Smart; Storm Fantasia, Neukomm.

Mr. Ernest H. Smith, St. James', New Brighton—Variations on 'Moscow,' Smith; March in E flat, Léfebure-Wély; Chanson du Soir, Becker.

Mr. Henry Poole, St. John the Baptist, Burley—Concerto in B flat, Handel; Imperial March, Elgar; 'Fingal's Cave.'

Dr. H. G. Ley, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford (two recitals)—Overture to 'Orlando,' Handel; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Pastorale, Frank; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Overture to 'St. Cecilia's Day,' Handel; Sketch in A, Harwood; Prelude and Fugue in G major, Bach; Fugue in A flat minor, Brahms; Four Sketches, Schumann; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart.

Mr. W. G. Breach, St. John the Evangelist, Clapham Rise—Grand Chœur Symphonique, Mansfield; Prelude on 'Abridge,' Charlton Palmer; Fantasia on a Welsh Hymn Tune, Jenkins.

Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Concert Rondo, Hollins; March in A, Clausmann.

Miss Lillian M. Coombes, St. Lawrence Jewry—Toccata in C, Bach; Capriccio, Ireland; Fantasia on 'Darwall's 148th,' Darke. (Violin, Miss Annie Coombes; Sonata, Veracini.)

Mr. Paul Rochard, Kendal Parish Church (two recitals)—Capriccio, Fumagalli; Evening Song, Bairstow; Concert Piece, Hollins.

Mr. Leitch Owen, Edge Hill Parish Church—Fantasia in A minor, Lemmens; 'Cloche du Soir,' Chauvet; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach.

Mr. Herbert E. Knott, St. Anne's, Park Hill, Moseley—Recessional, Alan Gray; Barcarolle, Tchaikovsky; March in A, Grieg.

Dr. Thomas Keighley, St. Ann's, Manchester—Toccata in A and Intermezzo in D, Reger; Four Versets on 'Ave Maris Stella,' Dupré; Fugue in D, Bach.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; 'La Nuit,' Karg-Elert; Overture in C, Fricker; Choral and Fugue, Guilmant; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Frank; Carillon, Vierne; Fugue, Reubke.

Mr. Ambrose Porter, St. Matthias, Richmond (four recitals)—Fantasia in A minor, Lemmens; Postlude on the Old 25th Psalm Tune, Harwood; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; 'Epinikion,' Rootham; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Healey Willan; Pastorale, Pachelbel; Finale in B flat, Frank; Sonata No. 12, Rheinberger; Heroic Suite, Alec Rowley.

Mr. F. C. J. Swanton, St. Mary's, Nenagh—Overture to 'The Messiah'; Chorale Preludes by Bach, Stanford, and Parry; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Postlude, Swanton.

Mr. H. Vincent Batts, St. Mary Magdalen, St. Leonards-on-Sea—A Song of Triumph, John E. West; 'The Curfew,' Horsman; Adagio and Scherzo, Guilmant; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; 'Finlandia.'

Mr. G. D. Cunningham, St. Alban's, Holborn—Toccata and Fugue, Parry; Three Choral Preludes, Bach; Allegro Vivace (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Frank; Imperial March, Elgar; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Patrick A. Black, organist and choirmaster, Dumbarton Parish Church.

Mr. Sidney Louis Coveney, organist and choirmaster, St. Margaret's, Stoke.

Mr. A. Martin Hawkins, organist and choirmaster, St. Leonard's, Heston, Middlesex.

Mr. Frank V. Mataraly, organist and choirmaster, St. Mary's, Cuddington, Worcester Park.

Mr. W. A. Montgomery, organist and choirmaster, All Saints' Cathedral, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

A Bach Festival was held at Lehigh University on May 27 and 28 by the Bach Choir, of Bethlehem, U.S.A., under Dr. Wolle. The first day's programme included the cantata, 'The Sages of Sheba,' the Ascension Oratorio, the Motet, 'Come, Jesu, come,' the cantata, 'Praise thou, Jerusalem, the Lord,' and two instrumental Suites. The second day was devoted to the Mass in B minor, which has now been given fourteen times by Dr. Wolle and his Bach Choir since their first performance in America in 1900.

Letters to the Editor

MODERN MUSIC

SIR,—Surely the voice of Mr. C. à Becket Williams the same voice that has been heard throughout the age condemning contemporary music as insincere, ignoble, joyless, decadent, cynical, and superficial; the same voice that condemned Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner, and most of the great masters, in their own day. Are we not getting little weary of its doleful tones? We ought to know by now that all great composers—indeed, all great artists—are some extent innovators. Art would not keep alive if it were not; and it is therefore the duty of a critic to try and get into sympathy with contemporary artists and to inquire sincerely and without prejudice, what are their aims. I cannot believe that Mr. à Becket Williams has reached this.

Mr. à Becket Williams summarizes his statements thus: 'Modern music is from the head—not from the heart.' I venture to suggest that modern music is from the head and from the heart; just as ancient music was, and as good music must needs be, since musical composition depends on a proper blending of technique with inspiration.

It is to be understood that I am speaking, like Mr. à Becket Williams, 'in a general way.' Natural there are many failures in modern music, as there were in other periods; but these do not justify a general condemnation. My main contention is that too many critics are still using purely conventional standards at failing to judge contemporary music honestly on its own merits.—Yours, &c.,

ROBERT S. ELKIN.

8 & 10, Beak Street,
Regent Street, W. 1.
June 1, 1921.

SIR,—Mr. C. à Becket Williams' letter in your June issue reminds me of an interesting evening I spent recently with pianist of repute who played 'modern music' till I became almost dazed with its complexity and bizarriery.

I suggested, as a change, that we should have some Beethoven or Chopin. Imagine my astonishment at receiving a reply, as nearly as possible, in these words: 'Chopin I never play, he is so effeminate; Beethoven has no attraction for me, he is so obvious, and his subjects lack virility. His sonatas appeal to me only as exercises!' Said I, at once, 'If this is to be the result of a deep study of "modern music," 'twere better left alone.' I then asked: 'Presuming I were your pupil and wished to study to become a modern composer, what kind of harmony or counterpoint would you prescribe?' 'Heaven alone knows!' said my friend, 'Harmony and systems are useless, and I must admit I should not know how to proceed.' Surely this is chaos. I am by no means retrograde, and admire much that is modern, but I fully agree with your correspondent. Much very much, 'modern music' is 'fourth-rate, insignificant and ephemeral.' Indeed, I would go further: it is no music at all.—Yours, &c.,

R. J. PITCHER.

21, Boundary Road,
St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

SIR,—Has not Mr. Williams in his letter in the June number made a mistake when he uses the words 'modern music' for the subject of his somewhat sweeping criticism? Surely 'ultra-modern' or 'futurist' is what he means.

Practically every composer living, young or old, must be modern in the real sense of the word—that is, he naturally has different ideas, and is taking music a step further than the men who have gone before. Because we see a futuristic picture, do we immediately come to the conclusion that it is representative of all modern art.

To my thinking the matter cannot be put in a nutshell. There are men in every generation who write music from the heart as well as from the head.—Yours, &c.,

Selly Park,
Birmingham.

DORIS BROOKES.

June 4, 1921.

'THE MESSIAH'

IR.—May I correct a statement made in an account of the Jubilee of the Albert Hall (Musical Times, June 1)? Neither the late Prof. Prout nor Dr. Mann discovered the singing parts of 'The Messiah.' It was my good fortune to come across them myself about six months after my appointment at the Foundling. They were not found in a book behind the organ-loft, but in another one, each the girls' side of the children's gallery, the existence of which had up to that time been unknown.

I showed them first to my friend, Dr. Mann, and later to Mr. Prout, who, needless to say, were both delighted at my recovery. I enclose a note of the first performance of 'The Messiah' with the old parts, given at Finchley under the direction by the Woodside Park Musical Society during the season 1893-94.—Yours, &c., H. DAVAN WETTON.

Foundling Hospital, London, W.C.1.

June 19, 1921.

A long letter from Mr. Charles Tree on 'The correctness of the Voice' is held over.—ED., M.T.

Sharps and Flats

I make bold to assert that the later works of Stravinsky and for Bolshevism. . . . I am proud to say that I did not join in the clamorous applause . . . but maintained an icy silence. . . . We had Stravinsky's Symphony for wood instruments. . . . What senseless, hideous noises! . . . Why is the author dedicated it to Debussy? Why not dedicate it to Dr. Crippen? . . . This time I am proud to say I did not maintain an icy silence. . . . I hissed. . . . —Henry Threlfall, in a letter to Musical News and Herald.

I am convinced that . . . the music [of Stravinsky's Symphony for wind instruments], its substance and its treatment, are the logical conclusion of certain features most characteristic of Debussy. . . . —Leigh Henry.

Stravinsky's Symphony for wind instruments, written in memory of Debussy . . . was greeted with cheers, hisses, and laughter. I had no idea Stravinsky disliked Debussy so much as this. If my own memories of a friend were as unkind as Stravinsky's of Debussy seem to be, I would try to forget him. But perhaps it is not his heart, but only his head that is wrong. Something certainly seems to have gone wrong with him of late. His music used to be original: now it is aboriginal.—Ernest Newman.

Very few vocal artists know what work is.—Sir Henry Wood.

The singers of bygone days devoted years to study, but the present-day pupils want to do in three or four months what should take three or four years to accomplish.—Madame Albani.

I only wish indeed that the English would give up politics, for which they have no capacity whatever, and devote themselves to music, for which they are quite extraordinarily fitted.—Bernard Shaw.

Another flagrant instance of Beethoven depreciation, which seems to be so rampant among a certain class of present-day music critics, has lately come under my notice. Writing about Beethoven's seventh Symphony, . . . a critic remarks [etc.] . . . These critics will be running down the Beethoven Violin Concerto next!—Algernon Ashton.

Obituary

We regret to record the following death:

LEWELLYN REES, for seventeen years music supervisor of Toronto Public Schools. A native of Cardiff, he went to Canada as a young man, to take up a post as music teacher at Port Perry High School, coming back to England later for further musical studies. On his return to Canada, he held several appointments, but his principal work was as music supervisor. His death followed on a long illness, in his fifty-eighth year. Dr. Vogt considered that the Toronto school-children's singing equalled any he had heard in Europe. One of Mr. Rees' most popular achievements was the organization and direction of an annual Children's Festival on Easter Monday, at which over two thousand children sing to a vast audience.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A students' chamber concert was given at the Duke's Hall on Thursday afternoon, May 26, when the programme was both varied and interesting. Amongst the outstanding items may be mentioned a composition of considerable promise by Paul Beard—Theme and Variations for two violins (MS.) beautifully played by the composer and Mr. Jean Pougnet—the performance of Beethoven's Sonata in C sharp minor by Miss Betty Humby and that of Chopin's Ballad in G minor by Miss Rene Cook, and the singing of two songs of Sibelius by Miss Hilda Neale. The other items included movements from String Quartets by Dvorák and Elgar, the Variations from Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Trio, songs by Bizet, Dvorák, Tchaikovsky, and Roger Quilter, and a scene from Shakespeare's 'Julius Caesar.'

The R.A.M. Club held its meeting for the present term on Saturday evening, June 4, when a large gathering of professors, pupils, and friends filled the Duke's Hall. The guests were received by the president, Dr. Richards, and Mrs. Threlfall. There was an interesting programme of music which included a selection of unaccompanied sacred music by Russian composers, beautifully sung by the choir under Mr. Beauchamp, and Mr. Dale's Phantasy for viola and pianoforte, played by Miss Dorothy Chalmers and Miss Hilda Dederich. The second part of the programme comprised a most charming dance—'The Water Lily'—danced by Miss Gwendolyn Russell with accompaniment for strings, and a play in one Act, 'The Bathroom Door,' which was produced under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond. During the interval the president thanked all who had assisted to make the evening such an artistic and social success. In referring to Mrs. Threlfall's kindness in receiving the guests, he said the name of Threlfall would ever be remembered at the R.A.M., as the late Mr. Threlfall was both chairman of the Committee of Management and also of the Associated Board, and the organ which adorned their concert hall was given by Mrs. Threlfall in his memory.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of July, 1861:

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. John Francis Barnett, the nephew of the eminent composer, gave a vocal and instrumental concert on June 25. Mr. Barnett's performances consisted of Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor, and an elegant composition of his own; added to which, he played the pianoforte part in Mozart's Grand Symphony, known as the 'Jupiter' Symphony on account of its colossal proportions, and the prodigious combination of learning and imagination displayed in its structure.

THEOBALD'S ROAD.—A concert was given in the National Schoolroom on May 28, by the St. George-the-Martyr Choral Union. The principal singers were Miss Palmer and Mr. Wilbye Cooper. There were several other performers of more or less merit, and the choir sang various choruses, most of which were far too difficult for its powers. Mr. Hewitt played several noisy solos upon a harmonium, including the 'Hallelujah' chorus, clearly proving that you may have too much of a good thing. Mr. T. Spearing conducted.

TO BE SOLD.—A first-class Barrel Organ, containing double diapason, stopped ditto, open ditto, principal, and fifteenth, suitable for a small place of worship; and may at a small cost, be converted into a Finger Organ. It has one barrel, containing 13 tunes. The tunes are set full, rich, and powerful. Height, 10 feet. May be seen at the Ellowes Hall, Gornall, near Dudley; and to treat, apply to Mr. Richard Bourne, opposite St. Thomas' Church, Dudley.

Just published, a new BALLAD, which is already a great favourite. Post free for 18 stamps. Every one must like it. Address, Mr. Boxall, Northgate Villa, Winchester.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Concerts have been numerous. There have been two informal, three chamber, and one choral and orchestral. A valuable feature of these is the opportunity given to young composers to have their works performed before fellow-students, the severest of critics. That the standard of chamber concerts has been high may be attributed in part to the generosity of Mr. W. W. Cobbett, who has offered prizes to the value of £50 for the best performances at College concerts of British works. At an orchestral rehearsal, Manuel de Falla's 'Nights in the Gardens of Spain' and 'Three-Cornered Hat' were given with the composer at the pianoforte.

There were three hundred and fifteen entries for the free open scholarships, fourteen awards being made as follows: Scholarships tenable for three years; composition, C. E. Rubbra and E. W. Allam; pianoforte, M. E. Gilson and C. I. Sweetland; singing, M. A. Norton; organ, W. O. Minay; violin, A. M. Ford; violoncello, G. Wykeham-George; flute, B. McLay; bassoon, P. B. Draper and K. P. Grieve. Tenable for one year: singing, D. Dutson; violin, S. H. Mason; and Pauer Exhibition for Pianoforte, D. M. Ansell.

The Opera Theatre, modelled on Bayreuth, built as a memorial to Sir Hubert Parry, has been the scene of great activity, the first Act of 'Meistersinger,' the third of 'Figaro,' and the second of 'Hänsel and Gretel,' having been given as inaugural performances. The last-named, complete, the first Act of 'Madame Butterfly,' and the third Act of 'Carmen' are in rehearsal, and, amongst other things, are affording an opportunity for youthful conductors studying under Mr. Adrian C. Boulton to become proficient in their craft.

There have been two Patron's Fund Rehearsals this month, at which the New Queen's Hall Orchestra has been conducted by the composers and Mr. Adrian C. Boulton.

MILITARY BAND MUSIC

In November last Colonel Somerville, Commandant of the Royal Military School of Music, announced through the press a scheme whereby composers were invited to produce works for military band, with the promise that a selection of the best would be performed at Kneller Hall. The letter appeared in the Musical Times for December, 1920. The offer covered original compositions for military band, original orchestral works arranged for military band, and arrangements of classical works. As a provision for future performances of the picked works it was arranged that a library of the scores would be formed at Kneller Hall, and a list of its contents forwarded to military band presidents and directors of civil wind bands, who for a small fee would be able to have any piece for a specified time.

The response to this invitation seems to have been satisfactory and encouraging. The following works have been chosen for performance:

June 15	...	Overture, 'The Wreckers' *	...	Ethel Smyth
July 6	...	...	...	Scherzo ... H. A. Keyser
July 6	...	...	...	Dance Suite ... H. A. Keyser
August 3	...	...	...	'Processional' * ... C. B. Rootham
August 17	...	...	...	Hungarian Rhapsody ... R. Liffé
September 7	...	...	...	'Egyptian Scenes' ... C. Harris
September 21	...	...	...	'Humoreske' in B flat ... P. Harrison

* Originally written for orchestra.

The concerts begin at 3.30 p.m. At a special concert on September 29 all these works will be performed.

THE GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL

The Executive Committee of this Festival has decided that owing to difficulties of travel and general adverse conditions the Summer meetings shall be confined to a week's performances at the end of August. The programmes will be devoted to short musical and spoken plays, and British chamber music. The following are among the works to be performed for the first time: 'All Fools' day,' by Josephine Baretti, with music by Clive Carey; 'The Fairy,' by Laurence Housman, with music by Kathleen Davis; 'The Death of Columbine,' an experimental dance-play by John W. Bostock and Rutland Boughton. Inquiries should be addressed to the Director of the Festival School.

THE HEREFORD FESTIVAL

The programmes of the Hereford Festival (September 6, 7, 8, and 9) contain a fine blend of old and new. The former department it is good to see a Bach cantata ('Come, Redeemer'); in the latter Elgar occupies a worthy place. In addition to 'Gerontius,' the 'Apostles' will be heard. This great work made a deep impression when performed by the Alexandra Palace Choral Society recently. On all sides one hears the question, 'Why is it neglected?' It is to be hoped that its inclusion in the Hereford scheme will be one more step towards helping masterpieces to their rightful place. Elgar's Violoncello Concerto will be played by Miss Beatrice Harrison, who recently gave an exquisite performance of the Certeau under the composer's direction at Queen's Hall. Other modern works in the Hereford programmes are Vaughan Williams' Fantasia for strings (on a Theme of Tallis), Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' Walford Davies' 'Heaven's Gate,' Benjamin Dale's 'Before the Paling of the Stars,' Three Orchestral Pieces by Bainton and new works by W. H. Reed and A. Herbert Brewer. The good half of the programme consists of native works, modern. We wish Mr. Percy Hull every success in his first Festival.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

The spring musical season practically closed with the twenty-first annual orchestral and vocal concert, provided for the students of the Midland Institute School of Music. The event took place at the Town Hall on June 1, and the direction of the principal, Prof. Granville Bantock. The student-compositions were an orchestral prelude 'Gavroche,' by Christopher Edmunds, an orchestral poem, 'Out of the Mist,' by Lilian Elkington, three 'Gypsy pieces' for pianoforte, by Wilfred Southworth, and a Nocturne for pianoforte, 'The Rhythms of the Night clouds,' by Lawrence Powell. Undoubted merit and a certain attempt at modernity were reflected in these compositions, along with some instances of real invention. Bach's Concerto for flute, violin and clavier, in D ('Brandenburg,' No. 5), was effectively performed by Mr. J. H. Howell, Miss Marjorie Astbury and Mr. Lionel Field, and Brahms' rarely heard Concerto in A minor, Op. 102, for violin and violoncello, was played by Messrs. C. and F. Blye. The Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, by Delius, with which the concert ended, has been performed here on several occasions. Prof. Bantock conducted in his own careful and forceful manner. The solo pianist in the Concerto was Mr. J. W. Dunn. Vocal contributions were made by Miss Gladys Jones and Mr. Charles Hill.

Music during the summer months will be chiefly supplied by military bands, including our excellent Police Band, which Mr. Appleby Matthews has trained to great efficiency. The bands will play at our parks, but concerts at the Town Hall will not be resumed until the autumn season.

BOURNEMOUTH

From the closing down of the winter concert season at the end of April until its welcome resuscitation some five months later, is a period of comparative quietude in matters musical. After the many striking achievements of the past few months, it is only fair that Mr. Dan Godfrey and his band should be permitted a brief spell of rest. Few, any, instrumental bodies are so continuously engaged as the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra, and if the forward policy of the Corporation is to be maintained, it is absolutely necessary that the musicians do not become jaded. When, therefore, at the weekly symphony concert of the summer season programmes are presented of a less adventurous type than is customary at the winter series, we readily acquiesce in their more restricted scope. The mere fact that good music is not entirely out of our reach during the summer months is something to Bournemouth's favour.

the time allotted to preliminary preparation for the symphony concerts is limited, it would not be just to criticise the performances from the usual standpoint. The titles only are given of those works which have had of most interest during the past month, viz.: Beethoven's C minor and 'Pastoral' Symphonies, and Mendelssohn's 'Coriolanus'; Haydn's 'Oxford' Symphony; Brahms's fourth Symphony, and Goetz's Symphony in F. The soloists have included Mlle. Juliette Folville (the 'Perseus' Concerto); Mr. Samuel Kutcher (Max Bruch's minor Violin Concerto); Mr. Harold Colombati (Piano-Concerto by Schumann); and Mr. Bertram Lewis, an exceptionally gifted leader of the Orchestra (first movement from Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto). To conclude this month's report happily, it may be added that all who are interested in the welfare of Bournemouth are relieved to learn that a majority of the Councillors have voted for the maintenance of the Municipal Orchestra at its present strength. This of course means that the policy of financial progress is also to be sustained—which would have been impracticable had the short-sighted minority, who had endeavored to reduce the Orchestra by deducting two or three instrumentalists, been able to turn the scale. We congratulate Godfrey on his fight for efficiency and the Corporation its reaffirmation of confidence in the value of the orchestra.

BRISTOL

The most important event of the Bristol musical season has been delayed by prevalent industrial conditions till May 18, when two concerts by the London Symphony Orchestra, under Sir Henry Wood conducting, drew enthusiastic audiences to Colston Hall in the afternoon and evening. Tchaikovsky, Mozart, Dukas, Tchaikovsky, Bach, Weber, Elgar, El Smyth, César Franck, Wagner, Strauss, Rachmaninov, and others, Percy Grainger, and Mendelssohn were the composers whose works were drawn upon for the two programmes, and every item was performed with the skill and care of detail always the high ambition of the L.S.O. In several cases the playing was a revelation to Bristol audiences. M. Leff Pouishnoff, the young player who was destined to become a planet in the pianoforte firmament, showed the high intelligence of an artist in the Elgar and Rachmaninov Concertos, and his were the only ones Sir Henry would allow.

For next season Messrs. Duck, Son, & Pinker have a most ambitious scheme of five subscription concerts on foot already in their own name. Not only world-famous artists, but leading orchestras of the day are in the programmes of the series. These, with the six Bristol Choral Society fixtures, which of more than usual interest, will be an excellent basis for the coming musical season at Bristol. Meanwhile Bristol is doing musically.

The only other outstanding feature of the month was the visit of M. Marcel Dupré, the French virtuoso of the organ, and his recitals in the afternoon and evening of May 25 were well attended. All organ-lovers had been keenly anticipating his visit, and though his programmes were of the serious order, his great Colston Hall organ under his manipulation appeared to greater advantage than during any of the previous Municipal Concert recitals. The general opinion is that he was the greatest player who had been to Bristol.

Bristol University Students' Choir of about a hundred and twenty voices, under Mr. Arthur S. Warrell, gave a highly appreciated concert on May 28, at Colston Hall, in aid of the University funds, presenting a number of items of old and modern music very capably.

On May 31 a meeting was addressed at the Folk House, Clifton Green, by Mr. Rutland Boughton, of the Glastonbury Festival School, having for its object the formation of a similar school for Bristol. The chairman, Mr. Norton Matthews, said support had been promised by a number of musical persons at Bristol. It was decided to take the preliminary steps to achieve the object desired.

Bristol Madrigal Society held a well-attended special service at Bristol Cathedral on Thursday, June 2, when a series of pieces of sacred music by old-time English composers was sung by the choir, augmented by the Madrigal Society, with fine effect. Dr. Basil Harwood played organ solos.

Among recent organ recitals have been two by Mr. C. W. Stear, on April 13, at Colston Hall, to large and appreciative audiences, with the Bristol Gleemen assisting. Mr. Purcell J. Mansfield, organist of Paisley Abbey, gave a recital on April 28 at St. Mary Redcliff, playing three romantic works of his own. The most notable recitals were by Mr. Alfred Hollins, who again drew crowded houses to Colston Hall on May 4, assisted by the Bristol Ladies' Choir, and once more demonstrated his remarkable powers of interpretation and improvisation. It was practically a plébiscite programme, and a number of pieces selected by the audiences were included in it, viz., Weber's 'Oberon' Overture, Bach's Fugue in G minor, and 'Finlandia.' Long Ashton Parish Church organ—overhauled, enlarged, and renovated at much cost—was re-opened on May 5, the twenty-first anniversary of the appointment of Mr. G. W. Osgood as organist. Recitals were given by Mr. Vernon Blount, of All Saints', Llanelly.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

There has been little music-making indoors in Coventry and the neighbourhood during the past month. The Corporation concerts at Naul's Mill Park have, however, attracted enormous gatherings, which have followed with interest some attractive programmes provided by the Guards and other military bands. The suggestion has been put forward in the local press that instead of the Corporation always relying on outside assistance for its Sunday concerts, the various local musical organizations should be engaged from time to time. It is pointed out by the writer that while it is to be admitted that many fine points of orchestral and choral works are lost in the open air, yet Coventry being without a public hall that can contain audiences of the size attracted to Naul's Mill twice every Sunday, the only means by which the good work of local societies can be brought before the general public is at such assemblies as those of the summer Sundays in the park. The writer further goes on to demonstrate how great a social force in the life of the community is the increased development of facilities for the promotion of the best music, and he advocates a winter season of municipal concerts in the city.

At Leamington, under the guidance of Mr. Lionel Wiggins, the Choral Society is preparing an ambitious programme for next season. At the recent annual meeting a membership of a hundred and thirty was reported, a total double that recorded last season. An operatic society has also just been formed in the town. Whereas only three male-voice choirs entered the Leamington and County Musical Festival last year, eleven entries have been registered this year.

Kenilworth Choral Society, at its annual concert on Empire Day, included patriotic part-songs in its programmes and also produced Stanford's 'Revenge' and Dunhill's 'Tubal Cain' for the first time in the town. Mr. T. C. Hurley conducted, and Miss Vera Hathaway contributed violin solos.

DUBLIN

By a recent resolution of the Governors of the Royal Irish Academy of Music it was decided to establish Fellowships and Licentiatehips somewhat on the lines of the Royal Academy of Music (London). This wise decision will go far to give prestige to the diplomas issued by the Irish institution.

Dr. J. F. Larchet has been appointed Professor of Music at University College, Dublin, in succession to Dr. C. H. Kitson.

On May 18 a very successful concert was given by the University of Dublin Choral Society, under the capable conductorship of Dr. George Hewson, organist of St. Patrick's Cathedral. The chief items were Gade's 'Spring Message' and C. H. Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander,' in which Madame Borel and Mr. Wood sang their respective parts very satisfactorily. The orchestra played some items, especially Purcell's Suite, in capital style.

A interesting concert of chamber music was given at St. Ultan's on June 9, when Mr. Arthur Darby, Mr. Joseph Schofield, and Mrs. Duncan gave thorough satisfaction in a well-selected programme. Miss Mary Maguire contributed several vocal selections.

EDINBURGH

The past month has been mainly occupied with the Festival—of which an account can be read elsewhere—and an operatic venture foreshadowed last month.

Mr. Hedmont has placed Edinburgh, and possibly (time will tell) Scotland, under a debt of gratitude to him for his untiring efforts to produce opera with local talent, professional and amateur. As he said himself, at the close of the first performance, such productions provide the solution of the opera question in the provinces. We cannot too highly praise the performances of 'Il Trovatore,' 'Pagliacci,' and 'Cavalleria Rusticana.' There was no trace of amateurishness about any one of these, and the choruses were excellent, particularly the male choruses in 'Trovatore.' Several singers were discovered by the venture, and we should not be surprised if operatic companies looking for talent may pick up some of these new-comers at no distant date. Among the sopranos, Miss Summers proved a finished vocalist, though perhaps lacking in dramatic power. Miss Elspeth Naysmith-Young, in 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' was described by the Scotsman as 'a born actress,' and her singing was very effective. Two contraltos also worthy of mention are Miss Rhodda Graham and Miss Alice M'Lauchlan. The former should have found this sphere earlier, and seldom have we witnessed such enthusiasm after a performance. It was not a tribute to a local singer, but was evoked purely on account of her histrionic and vocal gifts. Among male singers Mr. Philip Malcolm (as Tonio in 'Pagliacci'), Mr. W. Tawse, and Mr. Brodie (in various tenor rôles) proved themselves to possess gifts far beyond the average for such work. None who heard the series doubts that Mr. Hedmont's wonderful experience and personality were responsible for the extraordinary success of the week's performances. Mr. de la Haye conducted the orchestra, composed of the usual theatre band plus some amateur instrumentalists. These latter rehearsed with the company throughout the season. The playing in 'Trovatore' was excellent, and Mr. de la Haye secured wonderful phrasing and detail in the singing. We have devoted considerable space to this event, because we believe that local operatic performances, equal to and better than those of professional touring companies, are possible under proper management. We congratulate Mr. George Campbell, the first president, on his enterprise.

LIVERPOOL

M. Marcel Dupré drew an immense audience to his recital at St. George's Hall on June 6. It was not expected that he would be able to exploit the inexhaustible resources of the famous organ after an hour or two's rehearsal, but all the same he was on the best of terms with its leading features, which he handled with ease and effect. And in one instance, the Intermezzo from Louis Vierne's Organ Symphony, he discovered some absolutely new orchestral combinations of softer tone-colour which startled even old stagers. His Bach playing in the D major and G minor Preludes and Fugues did not convince us of the superiority of the French manner as regards tempi, phrasing, and built-up climax. The Fugue subjects, especially on the pedals, often did not come out sufficiently into the open until near the end, when indeed there was nothing left unsaid. But nothing could have been more delightfully neat and accurate than his playing of the familiar masterpieces entirely from memory. Dupré was more effectively heard as an exponent of modern French organ music, and supreme mastery was shown in his improvisation on a theme set by the City Organist. In this direction Dupré notably specialises, and the harmonic freshness and ingenuity by which he ennobled a not too attractive theme was nothing short of marvellous in its mental concentration through stages of lyrical and contrapuntal development, which were completed in a steady fugal exposition and brilliant Coda that contained a playful reference to Bach's D major Fugue. It is hoped that Messrs. Rushworth, to whose enterprise we owe this memorable visit of M. Dupré, will be able to arrange another recital.

The annual meeting of the proprietors of the Philharmonic Society, on May 20, proved a harmonious function, a Colonel Wainwright, as chairman, was able to report the past season as one of financial as well as musical success. In speaking of the great musical interest of the past season (in which the visiting conductors included Pierné, Szulc, Ansermet, Sir Henry Wood, Landon Ronald, Goossens, Tøye, and Hamilton Harty), reference was made to the notable first performance conducted by Sir Henry Wood of Rachmaninov's 'The Bells,' which had been commended by visiting London critics. The suggestion was made that the work be repeated next season, but it is certain that choral forces do not view the proposal with favour. The proprietor took the opportunity for making an almost tearful appeal to the committee to perform more music of the old masters, which he described as legitimate art, a distinction from the questionable art of the modern school. It is, however, generally felt that the Philharmonic committee well deserved the vote of thanks that was accorded for its work during last season. In its choice of music the balance had been fairly held between examples of the old and modern schools.

The Liverpool centre of the British Music Society held its annual general meeting in the Rushworth Club-rooms on June 3, when the hon. secretary (Mr. John Brook) and the hon. treasurer (Mr. William Rushworth), presented reports showing the satisfactory progress of the Centre since its inauguration. Notable visitors had included Mr. De Godfrey, Dr. Arthur Somervell, Mr. John Ireland, and Mr. Rutland Boughton, and there had been a concert given by the London Philharmonic String Quartet, and one devoted to the music of local composers. Regular orchestral practices had been held during the winter, in addition to weekly gramophone recitals of rarely-heard works. Encouraging features were the growth of the Reference Library, and the large increase in membership, which now numbers three hundred and fifty. The chairman, Mr. E. A. Behrend, outlining probable visitations during next season, referred to Prof. Walford Davies and Mr. Eugène Goossens, and said that at a garden-party in July Mr. Gustav Holst would be present, and would address the members on his work at Morley College.

Mr. J. D. Jones, who lately resigned the post which he held for many years as hon. treasurer of the Welsh Choral Union, has received a spontaneous and unexpected token of regard in a presentation from the members of the famous choral body, with whose work and successes he has so long been associated.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

The sixty-fourth season of Hallé concerts will commence on November 3, and run, with a three weeks' Christmas and New Year interval, to March 30, 1922. The coming season will see a reversion to the old Thursday evening custom, but provision has been made for the Saturday public in the shape of four concerts of operatic recitals, one of which will consist of excerpts from 'Boris Godounov,' 'Prince Igor,' and 'A Life for the Czar.' The full syllabus is not yet available, but the visits of Siloti (December 8), Thibaud (March 9), and Michele Esposito (March 23), will be marked by Russian, French, and Italian programmes. The choral works embrace 'Omar Khayyâm' (December 1), 'The Messiah,' a Wagner evening, the B minor Mass (February 2), 'Phœbus and Pan,' along with 'The Golden Legend' (March 2), and 'The Apostles' (March 30). In addition to soloists announced in the June issue, engagements have been entered into with Misses Phyllis Lett, Desirée Ellinger, Caroline Hatchard, Dilly Jones, Kirkby Lunn, and Elsie Cochrane, and Messrs. Frank Mullings, Horace Stevens, Murray Lambert, Archie Camden, and Lenghi Cellini. The casts for 'The Apostles' and the Bach-Sullivan evening are not yet available.

Students' concerts at the two Colleges of Music and a few mid-day recitals have provided the sole musical sustenance in recent weeks, apart from the celebrations of the quincentenary of the ancient Collegiate Church, during the first week in June. At these celebrations the music each day was restricted to the period covered by the Church's life, viz., the 15th century from works of John Taverner, Robert Fayrfax (1470), and John Dunstable (1453); the 16th by Tallis, omas Causton, and Christopher Tye; the 17th by Orlando Gibbons and Purcell; the 18th by Samuel Wesley's 'Mekate Deo,' besides Boyce, Arnold, and Travers; the 19th century brought S. S. Wesley, Walmisley, and Stainer, and the present day was represented by Parry, Stanford, Holson, and John Ireland. The student of Church music was thus afforded a fair survey of a considerable field. drawback was the hours at which these services were held, which often made them inaccessible to music-lovers engaged in business. It is to be hoped that in the coming winter it may be possible to find occasion to repeat this fine sequence, making it a quinquenary festival of English Cathedral music. I am sure it would be widely appreciated.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

As was to be expected, the annual meeting of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society disclosed the fact that a very considerable financial loss was sustained during the past season. The number of competing musical events at Nottingham and the local industrial depression made this a foregone conclusion, but musically the Society had reason for congratulation, all the concerts—especially 'The Apostles'—being artistically successful. Amongst the works to be given during the next season are Herman's 'Merrie England,' Hubert Bath's 'Wedding of St. Maclean,' Parts 1 and 2 of 'The Creation,' the 'Lynn of Praise,' and Parry's 'Judith.' A delightful Matinée Musicale was given on June 8, in aid of the Leen-side Girls' Club. The concert was promoted and arranged by Madame Lahey, who contributed songs in French, English, and Russian. Mrs.ilda Perry was associated with Miss Emily Roseblade in the first and last movements of César Franck's Sonata for violin and pianoforte. Miss Rose Fyelman, assisted by Miss Alice Hogg at the pianoforte, gave her translation of Einstein's 'The Pilgrimage to Kervaal,' to which Mr. Bernard Bine had specially composed the incidental music. All the artists gave their services, and the Club funds benefited a substantial sum.

OXFORD

The first concert of this term took place on May 5, in the Town Hall, the artists being Madame Guilhermina Suggia (violin) and Herr Adolf Mann (pianoforte). The programme was well selected, and was certainly of ample scope, ranging from Bach to Scriabin. Madame Suggia possesses a very fine instrument, upon which she seemed able to do almost anything. We have not space for details, but her cantabile-playing was very beautiful. Herr Mann's solos were well-chosen and most acceptable, and his accompaniments to Madame Suggia in excellent taste. On May 15 Mr. Harold Samuel gave a thoroughly excellent Bach concert in the Assembly Room of the Town Hall. His selections from 'Das Wohltemperirte Klavier' and the French Suite were played in a masterly as well as most artistic manner. We shall indeed look forward to seeing Mr. Samuel here again with his prodigious memory, not in the Assembly Room, but in the Town Hall itself. On May 27 Miss Nora Delmarr, a young soprano with a powerful voice, made her first appearance before an Oxford audience. She sang songs in nearly every style, from Percy to Roger Quilter and Percival Garratt, and seemed most equally at home with them all. She had the good fortune to have Dr. Ernest Walker as her accompanist. On June 2, in the Town Hall, Mr. Benno Moiseiwitsch gave a capital pianoforte recital, which was thoroughly enjoyed. On Sunday afternoon, June 12, came the concert of the term in the Sheldonian, with choral works by Brahms, Holst, and Vaughan Williams, and Beethoven's 'Eroica,' as a programme. Brahms' 'Song of Destiny' came first, conducted by Sir Hugh Allen. This was indeed a delight to listen to, choir and orchestra vying with each other in high artistic interpretation. The next item, Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' was given only last year, and the impression of that performance was still fresh. This time the choir worked hard and well at the music, and as a whole, very successfully. In Vaughan Williams' 'To the Unknown Region' the vocal writing gave but little trouble. The 'Eroica' Symphony had not been heard here for some time, and its performance was awaited with keen interest. Mr. Maurice Besley conducted with great ability and intelligence, and was deservedly recalled amid great cheering.

PORTSMOUTH AND DISTRICT

Musical aspirations were amply realised at Portsmouth during the past season. The town has enjoyed a very wide range of high-class concerts, but except perhaps for the visit of Mr. J. A. Meale, of the Central Hall, Westminster, on April 11, there has been comparatively little in the way of organ music. The Town Hall organ is one of the finest in the south of England, and Mr. Meale, who was making his first appearance at Portsmouth, revealed to the full the many beautiful qualities of tone possessed by the instrument. The recital included Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor.

The North End Choral Society is only just completing its second season, but the singers' recent performance of 'Tom Jones' at the Town Hall would have done credit to many older organizations. There was no scenery, the Society relying on the artistic appeal of the music. Under the direction of Mr. Ernest C. Birch, choir and orchestra rose to the occasion splendidly.

The Quartet-Players, who are seeking to stimulate interest in chamber music locally, gave their second free concert at the Albert Hall on May 3. The members of the Quartet are Miss Edith Bunney (violin), Major R. Bullin, T.D. (viola), Mr. F. Cranmore (violin), and Mrs. G. B. Bullin (pianoforte). Vocal numbers were contributed by Mr. Arthur Kellet, solo tenor of St. Paul's Cathedral. A very wise choice had been exercised in the selection of the pieces, and the concert was a creditable achievement. The explanatory remarks of Major Bullin enabled the audience appreciatively to follow the music, and in view of the interest awakened it is possible that the influence of this class of music-making may be more widely extended next season.

Although the Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society sustained a financial loss of £151 14s. 2d. on last season's working, thus reducing its credit balance to £216 18s. 2d., this must not be taken to indicate a falling-off of public support. Probably the reverse is the case. At all the concerts last season the Town Hall was well filled by audiences that showed keen appreciation of the programmes presented. The Society has now an honorary membership of four hundred and fifty-six, of whom three hundred and thirty-eight subscribe for the season of five concerts, ninety-five to the choral concerts only, and twenty-three to the promenade concerts only. The Society is thus, as the thirty-fifth annual report states, 'well supported by the musical people of the borough and district, and is apparently fulfilling the local demand for the best music that can be produced.' The outlay in professional fees, and additional expenses due to the promenade concerts being given monthly instead of on three consecutive evenings, were causes of the loss on the past season.

Without the support of its honorary members the Society could neither maintain the present standard of the concerts nor the position it has reached in the musical life of the borough. In future the concerts are to be known as 'orchestral concerts,' and another five are to be arranged for the coming season, the works to be performed including Sir Charles Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet,' Vaughan Williams' 'Sea Symphony,' and 'Israel in Egypt.'

The Society is losing the services of Mr. T. Archard, who for upwards of thirty years has filled the position of joint hon. secretary. Although Mr. Archard's work was mainly connected with the chorus, he served the Society loyally and well over this long period, and his loss will be much felt by all who have been associated with him. Mr. Hugh Burry's illness precluded him from officiating as hon. conductor, but the Society was fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Arthur Bliss as deputy conductor during the season.

Two choral efforts in the immediate district call for more than passing mention. The Emsworth Musical Society's interpretation of 'Rebekah' was a very commendable performance, the work of choir and orchestra being very effective under the direction of Mr. Alfred Agate. The Fareham Choral and Orchestral Society gave 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' at its second concert of the season at the Connaught Drill Hall, Fareham. Mr. J. H. Jackson, of Southsea, who has conducted the Society since its recent formation, worked hard to bring choir and orchestra to a state of perfection, and although there are still many little faults to be remedied, the performance on the whole gave much delight. Mr. F. Major, of Winchester, sang the solo part.

Captain Eugene Spinney, at the unanimous request of the Fareham Music Circle, has consented to act as hon. conductor of the choir and orchestra of the Circle next season, with Mr. Percy Bennett as his understudy. Capt. Spinney was the founder of the Fareham Philharmonic Society, which up to the outbreak of the war was an eminently successful musical institution of the town. The Music Circle came into being only about twelve months ago, and is really a child of the old Philharmonic. It has a balance in hand of £16 on last season's working, and is going forward on more ambitious lines next season, the big work selected for performance being 'Judas Maccabæus.' Practices will start about the middle of September.

SHEFFIELD

Dr. R. R. Terry's lecture on Tudor music, arranged by the local branch of the British Music Society, and given on May 23 in the Firth Hall of the University, aroused much interest and was greatly enjoyed. Sir Henry Hadow, in a charming speech such as he seems able to make on almost any subject at a moment's notice, afforded the lecturer the happiest of introductions to his audience. Dr. Terry gave an interesting account of his work in preparing for modern ears the scores of fascinating creations of composers whose very names are unknown to musical people of to-day. He maintained that the Church music and the secular music of the Tudor period had a good deal in common, and was by no means so different in character as one recent writer, in particular, had made out. A Benedictus by William Typp, a Kyrie by Taverner (whose work was warmly commended by the lecturer), the Benedictus from the 'Missa sine Titulo' by Tallis, and a charming Motet, 'Sacerdotes Domini,' from vol. ii. of William Byrd's 'Gradualia,' were sung as illustrations by a small choir conducted by Mr. G. E. Linfoot, and were enthusiastically received. These examples undoubtedly exhibited clearly the growth of the art of musical expression during the period covered.

The Sheffield Education Committee's policy of providing opportunities for elementary school children to learn to listen intelligently to good music is being continued. The latest occasion was a concert of suitably-chosen vocal and instrumental items arranged by that expert concert-giver, Miss Lily Foxon. It was a pronounced success, and the two thousand children who attended greatly enjoyed the experience.

A series of chamber concerts has already been arranged by the University Musical Society for next winter. The Philharmonic, Catterall, and Sheffield String Quartets have been engaged, the Meredyl Pianoforte Quartet party will furnish a programme, and Miss Helen Guest will give a pianoforte recital. There is an idea of extending the activities of the Society next season, so as to include some orchestral music.

On account of their increasing cost, and the inadequate public support which has been given to them, it has been decided to suspend the Sheffield Promenade Concerts for a season.

A branch of the English Folk-Dance Society has just been formed at Sheffield.

SOUTH WALES

During Whitsun-week many singing festivals were held by the several religious denominations throughout the district. The following were among the most important.

A successful choral festival was held at Llantrissant Parish Church, at which fourteen choirs sang. The church was packed, and the singing throughout was of a high order. The conductor was Mr. T. Ellis Lewis, of Radyr.

The Welsh Baptists of the Pontypridd district held the annual singing festival at Tabernacle, with Mr. J. Gabriel of Argoed, as conductor; and the Welsh Baptists of the Treharris district held their annual festival at Brynhyfry Chapel, a special feature being the excellent singing of Gounod's 'By the waters of Babylon.' Mr. David Thomas conducted. The thirty-ninth annual singing festival promoted by the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists in the Pontypridd district was held at the Town Hall, the conductor being Mr. J. T. Rees, of Aberystwyth. In the Upper Rhondda district the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists held their annual festival at Gosen Chapel, Treorky, with a very large attendance.

As was to be expected in the 'Land of Song' during the present industrial unrest, very many 'free concerts' have been given in the different villages and towns with excellent results. Numerous concerts of a charitable nature have also been given, mostly in aid of the communal kitchen. The high standard of the singing has been greatly appreciated. Some of our best male-voice parties, choirs, and orchestras gave their services con amore at these concerts, and the events were of quite a high standard, the performers vying to make them successful. The following programme, given under the auspices of the Tredegar District Council, may be regarded as typical. On May 11, the celebrated Orpheus Male-Voice Choir under the conductorship of Mr. I. D. Evans, at the Drill Hall, sang, among other things, 'Crossing the Plain,' 'Tyrol,' 'Invictus,' and 'Destruction of Gaza,' to a packed hall, hundreds failing to gain admission. The Choir received a great ovation.

A civic welcome of the utmost cordiality was extended to the Glyndwr Male-Voice Party, on their return home from Mountain Ash, on May 26, after a tour of nineteen months through the United States and the Dominion of Canada. The singers had given five hundred and eighty-five concerts during their tour. On June 5 and June 12 they gave sacred concerts at the Sophia Gardens, Cardiff, in aid of the King Edward VII. Hospital, and they were also in evidence during the visit of H.R.H. The Prince of Wales to Cardiff (June 7-10).

The Splott Male-Voice Choir, Cardiff, has forwarded the Lord Mayor of Cardiff the sum of £30 as a donation to his Lordship's Distress Fund.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

By the middle of May our winter concert season has practically reached its conclusion. I have this time only made mention of the few straggling concerts which to outward appearance, especially regarding their receipts and attendance, did not succeed in disguising their belatedness. Of these must be mentioned a concert given on May 10 by the Christian Oratorio Society, which was conducted by M. Hubert Cuypers, acting as substitute for M. Schoonderbeek. The most notable feature was performance of Verdi's 'Manzoni' Requiem. It cannot be said that the singers' interpretation of this difficult work was altogether creditable or effective, even after making allowance for a few shortcomings occasioned by the choir not having had sufficient time to adjust itself to the deputizing conductor, whose reading seemed at times to differ from what the singers had got accustomed to in rehearsal. The solo quartet, comprising Mesdames M. Peltenburg and Suze Luger, and Messrs. Jos. Holthaus and Max Kloos, acquitted itself in a thoroughly meritorious way. The palm, however, went to the two lady singers. The Requiem, which in ordinary circumstances is nearly always performed alone here with us, was preceded by Overture to Vondel's 'Adam in Ballingschap,' by Hubert Cuypers, and Mahler's 'Kindertotenlieder.' The solo part in the latter work was ably sustained by M. Kloos. M. Cuypers, to whom we owe some remarkably good Church compositions, does not quite hold his own in the department of pure orchestral work, and this particular Overture not only falls short in dignity, but its general characteristics reflect a style which happily belongs to the past.

On May 20, the R.C. Oratorio Society came to the city with its annual spring concert. The mixed character of the programme, however, did not afford unlimited satisfaction. The following of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' Debussy's 'L'Enfant prodigue,' and this in turn by a position of M. Averkamp's, the director of the Utrecht servatoire, was not a happy idea, nor can we agree that such works should be treated on one and the same emotional plane. From a purely technical point of view the performances revealed careful striving after well-graded dynamic shadings, and clear enunciation of the words. The more Mesdames Peltenburg and Luger charmed the audience by their splendid and refined singing. The lower register of M. Holthaus' tenor did not prove to be equal to requirements in Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' and M. Jancker does not seem to be able to rid himself of a certain air of unsteadiness. M. Theo van den Byl and M. Averkamp proved themselves dexterous conductors. On May 29 a recently-formed body of picked singers, in the style of the Schola Cantorum, gave a concert in the Rotund Lutheran Church, conducted by M. Hubert Peters. Their musical discipline came out splendidly in Respighi's 'Missa Papæ Marcelli' and Sweelinck's 150th Psalm, Mozart's 'Ave verum' and Michael Haller's 'Enantibus' receiving equally fine treatment. The recitals were capably filled by the organist, M. Th. Ponten, who played Bach's Prelude in C major and Pachelbel's Canon in G minor.

The summer season of symphony concerts in the Concertgebouw will last until the end of July, the concerts being limited to two a week. For part of these concerts management has invited a number of guest-conductors, viz.: Messrs. Richard Heuckeroth, Cor Kuiler, Nico Hartz, and Willem Harmans, each of whom will conduct two concerts. The last three concerts will be directed by E. Nikisch.

The National Opera having happily survived its financial strain, wound up this year's season with the 'Ring.' It is to be hoped that existing arrangements may be favourable for the company to meet with a better financial success during the coming season. The musical activities at Scheveningen will shortly be resumed. As in the last two seasons Prof. Georg Schnéevoigt, of Stockholm, will take charge of the Hague Symphony Orchestra during the summer months. Scheveningen will of course also have its usual sprinkling of recitals and chamber music concerts. We hope to be able regularly to attend at least the more important of these concerts.

W. HARMANS.

BERLIN

English and French musical events are mainly concentrated in the capitals of the respective countries. Berlin, which has within six centuries undergone advancement from an obscure and squalid Wendish fishing village to the capital of Germany, has in spite of all endeavours not succeeded in taking the lead in matters musical. Works that owing to the support given to music by princes and principalities were mainly produced in comparatively small towns, find their way to Berlin months and years later. Darmstadt, which is among the quietest of European cities, and only at the time of its unique exhibitions crowded by a cosmopolitan hearing, has recently produced a new opera by Eugen Albert. Those who have followed this composer's career have observed that whatever may be thought of the foolish freak of his youth, d'Albert's work, both as pianist and composer, has ever borne the stamp of true artistic earnestness and an elevated idealism. He is still one of the greatest of living pianists, but he has forsaken the brilliant and exciting life of a virtuoso to reap accumulated success as a composer.

The production of the new opera 'Scirocco,' which was written eight years ago, had to be postponed owing to the war. The text was furnished by Leo Feld and Karl M. Vetzow, and the scene is laid in the foyer of a great variety theatre at Sidi-bel-Abes, in Algeria. The libretto is partially influenced by the cinema. The score, besides some trivialities, contains passages of great beauty that proclaim d'Albert a master of instrumentation and musical characterisation. The difficult part of the Rouquine, a kind of Carmen, was sung by Fräulein Junghausen, that of Dupont by Herr Jonsson, Herr Heuser acted as Petroff, and Fräulein Cleve as Natasche. Although the public (under the spell of the murder) at the end of Act 2 held back its applause, Acts 1 and 3 were enthusiastically acclaimed. Generalmusikdirektor Balling conducted.

Apropos Darmstadt, Beatty-Kingston's gossipy book 'Music and Manners' comes to mind. The author scathingly ridicules the dullness of the town, whose population he sets down at about three dozen and a half, and who 'exhibited a want of vital interest in anything and everything, including their own institutions, that was little short of phenomenal.' Coming from the brilliant gaieties of a London season, Darmstadt may appear to the foreigner an 'amazingly lugubrious town,' yet it teems with musical life and energy, and compares well with towns three times its size.

The orchestra of the Landestheater, under Michael Balling, has reached a high state of efficiency. Its sphere of work has widened, inasmuch as from time to time concert-tours are undertaken across the Rhine into the occupied province of Rhineland, to provide the inhabitants of Worms, Alzey, Bingen, Mayence, and Oppenheim, with high-class music. Needless to say, these concerts are much appreciated.

Much useful work is being accomplished by the Darmstadt Richard-Wagner-Verein that recently, with Frau Kwast-Hodaff at the pianoforte, celebrated the three-hundredth Vereinsabend. Darmstadt possesses three string quartet parties, with Konzertmeisters Drumm, Schnurrbusch, and Mehmel as leaders, a large mixed choir for the performance of oratorios, several male-voice societies, and many excellent pianists and violinists. Darmstadt a dull town? Nein!

F. ERCKMANN.

MILAN

Toscanini made his reappearance at the hall of the Conservatorium on May 2, conducting his original orchestra—the 'Toscanini Scala Orchestra,' as it was known in America—just back from the United States after a most successful tour which included Canada. In forty-one cities he gave fifty-nine concerts from December 13 to April 2, a heavy undertaking also for the members of the band, considering the enormous distances separating towns in America. Two days after landing at Naples from the United States he gave a concert at the San Carlo Theatre. Rome was the next stop on his way back to Milan. It seems a superfluity to say that he was accorded a hearty welcome, seeing that he is the most popular conductor in Italy. The programme consisted of Victor de Sabata's symphonic poem, 'Juventus' (it will be remembered that De Sabata is the exceptionally clever composer of 'Il Macigno'—The Boulder—performed at La Scala in 1917 for the first time, and duly chronicled in the Musical Times), Beethoven's first Symphony, the Overture from the 'Barbiere,' and the March from Berlioz's 'Damnation of Faust.'

The second concert was on May 23, when the programme comprised the second Symphony of Brahms (with which Toscanini obtained very considerable success on his American tour), the same composer's fourth Symphony, Strauss' 'Death and Transfiguration,' Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Wagner's 'Romance of Siegfried' and 'Due Canzoni Italiane' of Domenico Alaleona.

The third orchestral concert conducted by Toscanini for the Society of Symphonic Concerts took place on May 27 in the same hall. The programme included Rossini's Prelude to 'Il Signor Bruschino,' Mendelssohn's 'Notturmo e Scherzo' from 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' Strauss' 'Don Quixote,' Martucci's Notturmo and Novelette, and Beethoven's seventh Symphony.

The Camerata Italiana gave a concert in the hall of the Conservatorium on May 26. Three clever instrumentalists—Signori Martinotti (pianoforte), Foa (violin), and Pinfari (violoncello)—performed Fongatta's Trio in A minor, followed by a number of lyric items of Piazzetti, Castelnuovo-Tedesco, and Lualdi. Signorina Maria Tamaio, who was heard in these numbers, revealed some lack of stability in her vocal production. A Sonata in D, for pianoforte and violin, by the young composer De Vecchi, betrayed little imaginative insight; but the last item of a long programme—a symphonic poem of Monteverdi, 'Il Combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda,' composed in 1623, when he was maestro of the Chapel of St. Mark, Venice—riveted the attention of the audience. The orchestral setting had been transcribed by Toni, but in the transcribing a few important elements were overlooked, such as the tremoli which Monteverdi intentionally used to emphasise the words 'I due tori gelosi e d'ira ardenti' (Burning with rage and jealousy), &c., and the pizzicati illustrative of 'Cozzan con gli elmi insieme e con gli scudi' (They clash with their helmets and shields). Signorina Luia Sigalla and Signor Castellazzi did well in the vocal numbers.

Towards the middle of June there are to be some open-air performances of 'La Gioconda' and 'Il Figliuol Prodigo' of Ponchielli, at the Arena at Milan, which is a modern venue usually devoted to sport. The season is being organized and run by the Society Lirica Italiana Ars, to which is due the merit of staging open-air operatic performances last year at Verona in the old Roman amphitheatre called the Arena. The work of setting up the stage, which was planned by Engineer Albertini, Director of La Scala, and Engineer Greppi, is being carried out with alacrity. The principal artists taking part are Poli-Randaccio (who is shortly to sing the part of Aida in Verdi's opera in open-air performances at the Stadium, Rome), Voltolini, Dragoni, Montelauro, Giovannelli, and Pilotto. The orchestra will be conducted by maestro Pietro Fabbroni. E. HERBERT-CESARI.

ROME

THE AUGUSTEUM

With the visit of Mengelberg the actual concert season has happily terminated. It had assumed a special importance as being commemorative of Beethoven, and the cycle of Beethovenian performances was closed by Mengelberg, to whom had been entrusted the production of the first and ninth Symphonies. The first was given twice; the ninth was heard three times, and these performances, worthy of all praise as regards orchestral and vocal execution, proved a memorable event in Roman musical annals. It is not unknown that the ninth Symphony presents difficulties of no common degree, not alone in its orchestration, but also for its exacting vocal demands. It is no easy task to guide a great orchestra up to that momentous pause in the fourth tempo, in which the audience instinctively feels the impelling necessity for the intervention of the human voice. On the other hand, if the performance does not succeed in producing that impression, it has certainly failed to interpret the spirit of Beethoven. Now, to be frank, Mengelberg arrives at this result by a means which is greatly to be regretted, namely, by meticulous care for every harmonic and melodic detail of the orchestra. It must be said, however, that this is his way of interpreting Beethoven, and we noted it equally in his direction of the first and fifth Symphonies, which he gave at his first concert. The net result is that he treats his orchestra as though it were a students' class, every unit of which depended on the conductor's eye and finger—but naturally the 'great line' of the performance is irremediably lost. Once arrived at the choral part of the ninth Symphony, however, Mengelberg lets himself go, and the execution takes on an ensemble character which is all that can be desired. The meticulous care which I have mentioned is evident only in the master's interpretation of Beethoven. In his Wagnerian direction (the 'Meistersinger' Prelude, 'Tannhäuser' Overture, and the Funeral March in 'Götterdämmerung'), and in his interpretation of Strauss' 'Don Juan,' Mengelberg has shown himself to retain all that mastery of interpretation which has made him a world-celebrity. Most unhappy, on the other hand, has been the result of his production of Mahler's first Symphony, a work hitherto unknown to the Roman public. Lasting over an hour, and with a painful elaboration of futile motives, its production raised a storm of protest, and only out of respect for the distinguished conductor did the great audience that crowded the Augusteum suffer the work to proceed to a conclusion.

Victor Gui, the Roman, fresh from his triumphal tour in Spain, has also participated in the Beethovenian commemoration by his direction of the second Symphony. The performance left something to be desired on the part of the interpretation. Excellent, however, was Gui's reading of Mancinelli's 'Cleopatra' Overture. At the same concert the young maestro conducted his own poem, 'Giomata Festa,' which had a mixed reception, and did not reveal any notable merit.

On May 28, at the Sala Bach, a notable concert was given by the Roman pianist, Signorina Maria Von Eles, assisted by Signor Vincenzo Cantani, first violin of the Naples Quartet. Signorina Von Eles initiated her career at Rome before the war with an exceptionally successful concert at the Costanzi, and during recent years has won great praise abroad, especially in Switzerland. A pupil of Sgambati, she has also enjoyed the training of several great pianists, notably of Paderewski, from whom she has imbibed a special interpretation of Chopin. Possessed of rare technical ability, she is marked as one of the first lady pianists of Rome, and it will be interesting to see what judgment the London public passes on her during her projected tour of England. The concert season at the Sala Bach closed with a concert devoted to German music of the 17th and 18th centuries, directed by Dr. Hippolyte Galante, who has revealed himself as a conductor of no mean ability, particularly in the exceptionally successful Holy Week concerts to which I alluded in a previous letter. Assisted by the new Roman Quartet, Dr. Galante presented Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 5, in D major; the Pavana at Gagliarda of Farina, the Paduana of Scheidt, and Philip Emanuel Bach's Symphony in D.

A good deal of interest has been raised at Rome by a concert given by Signor Luigi Trucchi, a young violinist who, born in 1895 at Spezia, studied at Paris, and had already begun his career when he was called to the arm. At the battle of the Piave he lost his right arm, which was amputated at the elbow. It would have seemed that his career as a violinist was terminated; but with marvellous courage and faith, the young soldier set himself to ponder on a possible remedy, and invented an artificial arm which terminates in a screw-section in which the bow is fixed. With this arrangement, and surmounting stupendous difficulties, Trucchi has achieved almost a miracle and has taken his place as a concert soloist! In an interview, I asked him whether he thought that any other artist in his position would try the same invention, and his reply was touching: 'I do not think so,' he said, 'I could tell you the difficulties I found, you would scarcely believe me. From morning to night I had to work, and found myself in worse position than a beginner, because the wrist work I had to learn to do with the shoulder.' His patience and courage, however, have been crowned with success, and last year he was honoured by a command to play at court, on the occasion of the visit of the Shah of Persia. On May 23 he gave a concert at the Quirinal Theatre. The programme is subjoined, and is sufficient proof of the ability which he has acquired with his unique invention: Raff's Cavatina, Cambini's Sonata in F major, Corelli's Badinerie, Bazzini's Elegy, Mozart's Concerto in G major, and Vivaldi's third Sonata, and De Bériot's G major Concerto.

After the great success of 'Piccolo Marat,' Mascagni's opera has been the object of great festivities at Rome. In order to celebrate the thirty-first anniversary of 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' a special fête was organized at the Costa, at which, besides the new opera, Mascagni directed 'Hymn to the Sun' from 'Iris,' and the Intermezzo of 'Cavalleria,' and Senator Bergamini, the director of the Giornale d'Italia, made a congratulatory speech. Later on a public lunch was offered in the composer's honour, at which the chief artists and publicists of the city assisted.

LEONARD PEYTON

The Training School for Music Teachers (73, High Street, Marylebone, W.1), announces a course in Music Appreciation and Pianoforte Teaching, at Bexhill, from July 30 to August 20.

PARIS

OPERA versus CINEMA

he oft-recurring financial trouble at the Opéra has again piped up, and the management is seriously thinking of big cinema performances on certain days. These, however, would not be of the ordinary kind. Charlie Chaplin films (so popular throughout France) will not be allowed to cross the sanctified portals of the 'National Academy of Music and Dance.' The films must, it is understood, be artistic, as well as instructive, and accompanied by appropriate music, even including singing. The Director and the Minister of Fine Arts are considering the matter, and wondering if money really can be made out of expensive venture. At present, despite the Government subsidy of 800,000 francs a year, and full houses, the Opera is run at a loss. Meanwhile, one half of Paris is agitated at the idea of the Opéra being degraded to the level of a 'picture-house,' while the other half is frankly amused. And the facetious papers are indulging in jests at the expense of the much-tried management.

Money, then, being scarce, the nearest approach to a novelty has been 'Thaïs,' with Mlle. Fanny Heldy and M. Grand in the two principal parts, and a revival of Berlioz's 'Les Troyens.' The last-named, which failed when first produced at Paris, is not immensely interesting, though it mainly forms part of our musical education. 'Thaïs,' however, is always welcome, and the Athanaël of M. Rouard is a fine impersonation, both vocally and dramatically. Few tones have so resonant and round a voice, and fewer still possess to the same extent the art of colouring. As to the singing of Mlle. Heldy, it compares favourably with the impersonations of others who essay the rôle. And their number is legion—probably every lyric soprano in France has sung the part.

MESSAGER'S 'LA PETITE FONCTIONNAIRE'

Messager, who is best remembered in London as the chief musical director, and as one of the conductors at the Festival Garden, has again come into prominence—with a new opéra musicale, 'Le Petite Fonctionnaire,' designed to continue the languishing line of opérette, once a famous French product. Unfortunately, Messager is neither an enchanter nor a Planquette, nor yet a Lecocq. The music which was shown in 'Véronique' (of pleasant memory) apparently has exhausted the composer's ability to write spontaneous and sympathetic music. Still, 'Le Petite Fonctionnaire,' though not a second 'Véronique,' has several qualities to recommend it. The music is not without a certain charm. Some of the phrases are elegantly melodious. We can admire the reserve that dominates the instrumentation; and the air, 'C'était un rêve,' is engagingly sentimental, but this effort to restore opérette to the position which it occupied at Paris for so many years is not likely to ensure an enduring success. That tiresome 'East Lynne' of French lyric stage, 'Les Cloches de Corneville,' probably outlast Messager's latest work.

'La Petite Fonctionnaire,' the book of which is by Alfred Assolant and Xavier Roux, owes a good deal to its interpreters. Mlle. Edmée Favart uses her little voice with considerable skill, and acts most admirably; and Defreyne, an excellent artist, sings with taste and always with the right expression. The conductor (M. Letombe) and the well-chosen orchestra did excellently.

OTHER THEATRES

The chief event at the Opéra-Comique has been the appearance of the Japanese singer, Mlle. Tamaki Miura, in the rôle of 'Madame Butterfly,' upon the occasion of a benefit performance. Knowledge of French not being amongst her accomplishments, she sang in Italian. Her voice is hard, but under her good control; and the singer looked and acted the part in what one imagines to be the true Cio-cio-San manner. His respect her impersonation is preferable to that of the stage Western Butterfly, who cannot be induced to make her nose à la Japonaise. 'Lorenzaccio' and 'Gismonda' have been revived, but in other respects the scheme of things remains unaltered, 'Mireille,' which is très Gounod, being sung as often as any other opera. 'La Rôtisserie de la rue Pédanque' also has made a success, Lévadé's music having much to recommend it to those whose affections are set upon the new school. M. Jean Périer recently appeared in this work, the limits of his vocal resources in no way interfering with his reception by an enthusiastic audience.

At the Gaieté-Lyrique the season of Russian Ballet has introduced Prokofiev's 'Chout,' the music of which is rhythmic, without being particularly musical, and generally flamboyant, though full of originality—of the wrong kind. Prokofiev is young; consequently the coming years may calm his exuberance and develop in him a greater sense of the fitness of things. At present his ideas, judging from 'Chout,' are a trifle too chaotic for the average listener.

CONCERTS ASSORTED

Despite the season being practically over, a great many concerts have taken place, several being well worth sitting out in the heat. Particularly attractive, for example, was the singing of Mlle. Rosa Castelli, who uses an extensive voice in accordance with bel canto traditions, a rare thing in these vocally degenerate days. She was associated with Mlle. Antoinette Barillon, whose virtuosity in Liszt's 'Thirteenth Rhapsody' is remarkable—even in an age of super-competent Liszt players. Mention, too, may be made of the concert given by the D.O.F. Trio (Madame Jeanne Fromont and MMs. Louis Delune and Paul Oberdörffer), the programme of which included M. Delune's 'Fantasie en trio, sur un motif de vieille chanson française.' It is a particularly effective composition, showing the soundest musicianship, and was extremely well received, while the spirit of the vieille chanson française is most faithfully preserved. M. Jacques Thibaud has made a very welcome reappearance, the impeccability of his playing creating its customary effect.

M. Maurice Renaud has been elected president of the Union Professionnelle des Maîtres du Chant Français, Madame Rose Caron being the vice-president, while Mlle. Grandjean and M. Albers are amongst the delegates—truly a distinguished company. Miss Mary Garden is not of the delegates, but having just been awarded the Legion of Honour for 'services rendered to French music in the United States,' she doubtless feels compensated.

M. Jacques Hébertot, the ever enterprising director of the Théâtre des Champs Élysées, announces three concerts for the purpose of introducing to Paris the 'bruiteurs futuristes,' an Italian invention of Luigi Russolo, who has composed special music for these instruments. It is claimed for them that they are not 'des instruments bizarres et cacophoniques. Les Bruiteurs futuristes sont des instruments de musique absolument nouveaux qui donnent, avec des timbres nouveaux (dont plusieurs très doux), toute la gamme musicale.'

GEORGE CECIL.

VIENNA

The most interesting item during May was the new study of Mozart's 'Don Juan,' produced at the Opera on May 20, under the direction of Dr. Strauss. For this work wooden wings with doors were used, the scenes being changed merely by altering the backcloth. As in the Vienna production of 'Così fan tutte,' the pianoforte recitative was played by the conductor. The cast at the first performance comprised Alfred Jerger (of the National Theatre, Munich), in the title-rôle, Fräulein Mihacsek as Donna Elvira, Herr Marthoff as the Governor, Frau Wildbrunn (of the Berlin Opera) as Donna Anna, Herr Piccaver as Don Ottavio, Herr Mayr as Leporello, and Frau Schumann as Zerlina. The production had a tremendous reception.

On May 28 Shakespeare's 'The Tempest' was produced as a Pastoral in the gardens of the Belvedere Palace, with new music by Felix Weingartner. This music, melodious but nothing more, does not compare with Mr. Bliss' music for the recent London production of the play.

Three performances of 'Parsifal' were given at the Opera on May 26, 28, and 29. On each occasion the title-rôle was sustained by Herr Oestvig, Kundry being represented by Frau Kruger at the first performance, and on May 28 and 29 by Frau Wildbrunn, of Berlin, who is undoubtedly the greatest Kundry of to-day. Alfred Jerger sang Amfortas at the first and third performances, and Gurnemann at the second. Gurnemann was also represented by Herr Mayr on May 26 and by Herr Manowarda on May 29.

The orchestra at all three performances was under the direction of Director Schalk.

The coming Festival at Salzburg presents special interest owing to the fact that the Vienna Opera is assisting. Dr. Strauss has just completed a new opera which will have its first performance on this occasion, all the parts being sustained by members of the Vienna company, under the direction of the composer.

Ballets have been absent from the Opera programmes since the return of the Ballet from Spain, a deprivation that is due to the non-arrival of scenery, dresses, &c., but a performance of 'Die Puppenfee' was given on June 3, this being the first ballet we have had since the production of 'Scheherazade' in February.

STANLEY WINNEY.

Miscellaneous

THE ENGLISH FOLK-DANCE SOCIETY

The English Folk-Dance Society will hold a week's Festival of Folk-Song and Dance at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, commencing on July 4. There will be eight performances—six at 8 and two at 2.30. Four entirely different programmes will be presented. In addition to the songs and dances, there will be choral arrangements of Folk-airs sung by the Oriana Madrigal Society and the Northern Singers (vocal quartet). The folk-songs will be sung by Miss Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies and Mr. Clive Carey, the latter singing also Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad' song-cycle. The dance accompaniments—over seventy airs—will be played by a small orchestra. Altogether, a delightful bill of fare, and a unique opportunity for getting to know something of our rich heritage of national song and dance. Inquiries should be addressed to Mr. Bertram Gavin, 7, Sicilian House, Sicilian Avenue, Southampton Row, W.C.1. The Society will also hold a Summer Vacation School of Folk-Song and Dance at Cheltenham from July 30 to August 20.

The Amphion Society of Seattle gave a miscellaneous choral concert on May 11, under the direction of Mr. Claude Madden. The programme included Sullivan's 'The Beleaguered,' Horatio Parker's 'Spirit of beauty,' Robertson's arrangement of the 'Loch Leven love lament,' other light choral pieces, and vocal solos by Miss May Dearborn Schwab.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

AUSTIN, ERNEST.—"Shepherd's Love Song." Song. In E flat for high voice. 2s.

— "Sweet Night." Song. In G, for low voice. In D, for high voice. 1s. 6d. each.

BIBBY, E. H.—"Lead, kindly Light." Hymn-Anthem. 3d.

CATTY, C. S.—"The love of long ago." Song. 2s.

FOSTER, MYLES B.—"Our God shall come." Advent Anthem. (No. 1090, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—"Orpheus with his lute." Arranged as a four-part Song. (No. 1393, Novello's Part-song Book.) 4d.

HANNAM, W. S.—Two Settings of the Nunc Dimittis. 4d.

IRELAND, JOHN.—"Fain would I change that note." Four-part Song. (No. 941, The Musical Times.) 2d.

MATTA, A. L.—Kyrie in D. 1d.

— Kyrie and Gloria. 1d.

NEWTON, ERNEST.—"Romany Life." Suite of easy pieces for Pianoforte. 3s.

NORTH, J. W. ALLEN.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D. 4d.

PALK, D.—"Earthly friends will change and falter." Christmas Carol. 3d.

RAWLINSON, H.—"Aubade." Arranged for Pianoforte solo. 2s. 3d.

— "Serenade." Arranged for Pianoforte solo. 2s. 3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 349), contains the following music in both notations: "The River." Two-Part Song by JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS. "Bedsummer." Unison Song by TEMPLE P. M. BEVAN. 2d. SCHOOL SONGS, Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notation, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A 1

No. 1300. "Spring Bells." Unison Song. R. BERNARD ELLIOTT. 4d.

No. 1301. "Song of the Sea King." Unison Song. P. E. FLETCHER. 4d.

No. 1302. "King Bruce and the Spider." Unison Song. P. E. FLETCHER. 4d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2356. "See, see what a wonderful smile." Four-part Song for S.S.A.A. COLIN TAYLOR. 2d.

No. 2357. "In the warm, blue weather." Four-part Song for S.S.A.A. COLIN TAYLOR. 2d.

No. 2358. "Sleep, little baby." Four-part Song for S.S.A.A. COLIN TAYLOR. 2d.

WARNEFORD, H. L.—"To the work!" Hymn and Tune. Lilford, No. 4. 1d.

WILLIAMS, J. G.—"Despair." Song. In F sharp minor, for low voice. In A minor, for high voice. 1s. 6d. each.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

DOUGLAS, E.—Service in Plain-Song for the B. Lodge F. and A.M. 10 cents (4d.).

LAWRENCE, F. L.—"Joyous March." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

LEFEBRE, C.—"Sleep." Three-part Chorus for Treble Voices. 15 cents (6d.).

CONTENTS.

Haydn Keeton, 1847-1921 (with portrait)	4
The Dramatic Works of Vincent d'Indy. 'Fervaa' (continued)	4
By M.-D. Calvocoressi	4
Some Italian Composers of To-day: VI. Alfredo Casella.	4
By Guido M. Gatti	4
The Organ Works of Bach: X. The Eighteen Choral Preludes.	4
By Harvey Grace (continued)	4
The Gramophone—Present and Future. By Ulric Daubeny	4
A Master Violinist	4
Municipal Concerts in London. By George Lane	4
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	4
Facts in Science in Art. By Herbert Antcliffe	4
Songs and Song Translators	4
'The Art of Patti': Mr. Herman Klein's tribute	4
The British Music Society's Congress	4
The Musicians' Company and the Royal Albert Hall Jubilee	4
A College Concert. By Eric Blom	4
Some Musical Text-Books	4
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	4
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	4
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett	4
The New Canadian Copyright Act	4
The Russian Ballet. By Frances E. Barrett (illustrated)	4
Choral Notes and News. By W. McNaught	4
Chamber Music for Amateurs	4
Church and Organ Music	4
Bach and Marcel Dupré	4
A Guilmant Memorial	4
Some notable English Organs. By J. H. M. Jay	4
Church Music Society Lectures	4
Letters to the Editor	4
Sharps and Flats	4
Obituary	4
Royal Academy of Music	4
Sixty Years Ago	4
Royal College of Music	4
Military Band Music	4
The Glastonbury Festival	4
The Hereford Festival	4
Music in the Provinces	4
Musical Notes from Abroad	4

Music:

'Fain would I change that note.' Unaccompanied Part-Song. By JOHN IRELAND...

THREE EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number.
1. Portrait of Haydn Keeton.
2. 'Thus saith the Lord God.' Harvest Anthem. By George Martin.
3. Competition Festival Record.

HARVEST OR FESTIVAL ANTHEM.

Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem"

BY

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG.

PRIZE ANTHEM NORTH OF ENGLAND MUSICAL TOURNAMENT, 1919.)

Price - - - Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOTTINGHAM

Musical Competition Festival.

28th and 29th OCTOBER, 1921.

Adjudicators:

PROF. GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., Mus.D.

E. MARKHAM LEE, M.A., Mus.D.

GEOFFREY SHAW, Mus. B.

MADAME EDITH HANDS, A.R.A.M.

CECIL J. SHARP, B.A. (Folk-Dancing).

Syllabus may be obtained from the Hon. Sec.,
WILFRED ROBINSON, University College, Nottingham.
Price 6d., post free.FOR SALE.—Chamber ORGAN. Two-Manuals, Pedal, 12 Stops. (Flight & Robson; enlarged Walker & Sons.)
Table for Church seating 200. Now on loan London Church.
Used last year at £400, with hydraulic engine, &c. What offer?
Mr. Marriott, South Malling Vicarage, Lewes.ROADWOOD BOUDOIR GRAND, splendid condition, tone, touch, and case. 95 guineas, or reasonable offer. Seen at Brondesbury. Write, Croager, Flint Cottage, Amersham Common, Bucks.PIANOFORTE AGENCY.—Good Agency wanted for first-class firm. Address, Mr. A. E. Peel, Teacher of Music, St. Giles Villas, 56, Flamborough Road, Bridlington.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines ... ..	0	3	0
Three Lines ... ..	0	3	4
For every additional Line ... ..	0	0	10
One inch (displayed) ... ..	0	10	0
Half a Column ... ..	2	0	0
A Column ... ..	4	0	0
A Page ... ..	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &amp;c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions,
Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, at least later than

TUESDAY, JULY 19 (FIRST POST).

A WORLD-WIDE SUCCESS.

CORONACH

(A HIGHLAND LAMENT)

BY

EDGAR BARRATT.

	Price Net.	s.	d.
CORONACH—Piano Solo ... ..	2	0
CORONACH—Organ ... ..	2	0
(Arr. by Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.)
CORONACH—Full Orchestra ... ..	2	0
(Including Piano Conductor.)
CORONACH—Arranged for Piano, two Violins, 'Cello, Bass ad lib.	2	6

"Pianists who love to hear their instruments sing will welcome this delightfully impressive song-without-words, not alone for its inviting subject-matter but for its unconventional harmonic dress and rich chordal colouring."—Musical Opinion.

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ROMANY LIFE

A SUITE OF EASY PIECES

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE

BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

Price, Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SERENADE

AND

AUBADE

FOR

SMALL ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

HAROLD RAWLINSON.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO.

Price, Two Shillings and Threepence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings: Paper boards, Five Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100;

String Parts, price 13s. 6d.; Full Score, MS.; Wind Parts, 21s. 5d.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

HENRY KNIGHT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 10d.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Two Shillings: Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

GEORGE GARRETT.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns. Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH

FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI
AND CHORUS.

THE WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

THE MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Four Shillings: Paper boards, Six Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Choruses only, 2s. Book of Words, 6s. 6d. per 100

Full Score and Orchestral parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 10d.; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Four Shillings.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns.

Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

C. M. VON WEBER.

Price Two Shillings.

Full Score, 21s.; String Parts, 12s.; Wind Parts, 9s. 8d.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 9s. 9d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS, Etc.

TWELVE HYMNS FOR HARVEST

Selected from THE HYMNARY.

Price Three-Halfpence.

LET ALL OUR BRETHREN JOIN IN ONE

HARVEST HYMN BY J. BARNBY.

Price Three-Halfpence.

Words only, 3s. per 100.

SOWING AND REAPING

HARVEST CAROL BY J. MAUDE CRAMENT.

Price Twopence. Words only, 1s. 4d. per 100.

THE JOY OF HARVEST

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

Words only, 3s. per 100.

A HARVEST HYMN OF PRAISE

By J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

Words only, 3s. per 100.

THE SOWER WENT FORTH SOWING

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. BARNBY.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

MAKE MELODY WITHIN YOUR HEARTS

HARVEST CAROL BY F. A. J. HERVEY.

Price Twopence.

O LORD OF HEAVEN, AND EARTH, AND SEA

By J. BARNBY.

On Card, Price Three-Halfpence.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

By WALTER B. GILBERT AND J. BARNBY.

Price Three-Halfpence each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD

COMPOSED BY
A. M. GOODHART.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

COMPOSED BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.
Price Fourpence.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE

COMPOSED BY
JOHN E. WEST.
Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN

COMPOSED BY
HERBERT W. WAREING.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

FEAR NOT, O LAND

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD ELGAR.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

LORD OF THE HARVEST

COMPOSED BY
R. REDHEAD,
Edited by ALFRED REDHEAD.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES

COMPOSED BY
H. A. CHAMBERS.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD

COMPOSED BY
GEORGE C. MARTIN.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER

COMPOSED BY
E. W. NAYLOR.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

AND GOD SAID

COMPOSED BY
CUTHBERT HARRIS.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE

COMPOSED BY
THOMAS ADAMS.
Price Fourpence.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY

COMPOSED BY
OLIVER KING.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE

COMPOSED BY
E. C. BAIRSTOW.
Price Fourpence.

THE ETERNAL GOD IS THY REFUGE

COMPOSED BY
JOHN E. WEST.
Price Fourpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD
(From the 100th Psalm.)

COMPOSED BY
EBENEZER PROUT.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE

COMPOSED BY
CUTHBERT HARRIS.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THOU, O GOD, ART PRAISED IN SION

COMPOSED BY
CUTHBERT HARRIS.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

AND THE EARTH WAS REAPED

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD S. CRASTON.
Price Sixpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY
HUGH BLAIR.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED HOLLINS.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS

COMPOSED BY
THOMAS ADAMS.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS

COMPOSED BY
W. G. ALCOCK.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THE VINEYARD OF THE LORD

COMPOSED BY
HERBERT W. WAREING.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O BE JOYFUL IN GOD
(FROM "SEEDTIME AND HARVEST")

COMPOSED BY
JOHN E. WEST.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

COMPOSED BY
ARTHUR W. MARCHANT.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

COMPOSED BY
BRUCE STEANE.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD

COMPOSED BY
MYLES B. FOSTER.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY
W. WOLSTENHOLME.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THE JOY OF THE LORD IS YOUR STRENGTH

COMPOSED BY
HUGH BLAIR.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD

COMPOSED BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED R GAUL.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE

COMPOSED BY
JOHN E. WEST.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O HOW GREAT IS THY GOODNESS
(FROM "THE RAINBOW OF PEACE")

COMPOSED BY
THOMAS ADAMS.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

MUSIC FOR HARVEST

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS IN E—CHANT SERVICE ... ..	4d.
BENEDICTE IN E ... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE IN E ... ..	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN E ... ..	4d.
CANTATE DEUS IN E ... ..	4d.
COMMUNION SERVICE IN E ... ..	1s.

ANTHEMS.

BLESSED BE THOU—FOUR VOICES ... ..	4d.
" " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
THINE, O LORD—SHORT ANTHEM ... ..	2d.
O CLAP YOUR HANDS ... ..	4d.
" " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
I WAS GLAD—FESTIVAL ANTHEM ... ..	4d.
HARVEST OR FESTIVAL HYMN, with words— "SING TO THE LORD" ... ..	1d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise that tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c. &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest ... ..	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth ... ..	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES

SERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—

Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Jubilate ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... ..	1s. 4d.	10d.
--------------------------------------	---------	------

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison) ... ..	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s.	—
---------------------------------------	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use) ... ..	2s	1s. 4d.
---	----	---------

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

- "THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD."
 "SUN OF MY SOUL."
 "THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
 "DIVINE LOVE."
 "THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."
 "LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
 "THE NAZARENE."
 "THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
 "JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES).

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NEW MUSIC

BY REGINALD SILVER

"WHILE THE EARTH REMAINETH"

(OP. 3).

HARVEST ANTHEM

FOR SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORGAN.

Price Fourpence.

(SIMPLE, EFFECTIVE, AND STRONG).

MESSRS. J. C. GUEST &amp; Co., HIGH STREET, EXETER.

JUST THE THING FOR ORGAN RECITALS.

SACRED SONG

FOR TENOR OR SOPRANO.

"O STRENGTH AND STAY"

(OP. 4).

(Founded on Dykes' Tune.)

With Choir (ad lib.) and Organ or Pianoforte Obbligato.

Price Two Shillings net.

(Can be used as an Anthem.)

NOVELLO &amp; Co., LTD.,

Specimen copies of Harvest Anthem, post free, from The Compose 2, Belmont Terrace, Beer, Devon.

JUST PUBLISHED.

PIANO CONCERTO

IN D MINOR

By ARTHUR HINTON.

Piano Score (with 2nd Piano), 12s. 6d. net.

Orchestra Score, £2 10s. net.

Parts complete, £3 net.

BY THE SAME COMPOSER

SUMMER PILGRIMAGE IN THE
WHITE MOUNTAINS.

SIX PIECES FOR PIANO, 5s. NET.

Also separately: Romance, "By the Ammonousuc"
 Reverie, "A Sunset Hill"; Idyll, "Among the Hills" Country Dance, "At the Husking"; Scherzo, "Fireflies"
 "The Passing of Summer."

J. FISCHER &amp; BRO., 3, New Street, Birmingham

LONDON: J. &amp; W. CHESTER, LTD.,

11, Great Marlborough Street, W. I.

MINOR MELODIES

Lyrics and Songs for Musical Setting

BY

J. M. STUART-YOUNG.

ready about May, 1921, through Messrs. T. & A. CONSTABLE, at the University Press, Edinburgh, at 10s 6d. net per copy, to the general public, first edition of 2,000 copies. 250 pp., Crown 8vo.

VOTE.—Composers may secure single copies on sending one or more of their published songs, as proof of their bona fides, and 6d. (to cover cost of packing and postage) to

THE MISSES HARVEY, TYPISTS,

45, ST. ALBAN'S ROAD, SEVEN KINGS, ESSEX.

"MINOR MELODIES" will be followed a few months later by a second volume of Lyrics, this time with more tropical settings. Mr. Stuart-Young is permanently resident in West Africa under the title of "THE SEDUCTIVE COAST." Composers who acquire "Minor Melodies," and who wish to hold an early reserve on the rights now being written, should ask the Misses HARVEY to note down their wish for the new volume. It will be supplied to composers the same terms (cost of postage and packing only).

BLACKBURN'S EDITION OF

ORATORIOS

Edited by ARTHUR PEARSON.

HYMN OF PRAISE.

ST. PAUL.

CREATION.

JUDAS.

ELIJAH.

WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

Price 1s 6d. each, 25% discount allowed to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

To introduce, a sample will be sent for 1s., or the six assorted as above for 5s., post free to officials, stating position held, when sending.

Ask for samples of our SACRED CANTATAS. A large selection to choose from.

JOHN BLACKBURN LTD., MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

VALSE LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND THREEPENCE.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRAS

	s. d.
String Parts ... ..	2 8
Wind Parts ... ..	5 4
Harp (or Pianoforte) ... ..	1 6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WILLIAM BAINES'

FOUR SKETCHES FOR PIANO.

1. THE CHIMES.
2. ONLY A FEW WOODEN SOLDIERS.
3. DREAMING.
4. LITTLE IMPS.

Price, 2s. net each.

Played by FREDERIC DAWSON, Esq.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

THE "DISCUS"

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly one thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

MADE BY

WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS.

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

17, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Four Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

ARNOLD KRUG SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Four Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price Two Shillings each.

MAX MAYER BAGATELLES

Price Five Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON WOODLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE THREE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

SCHUMANN PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 2s. ; Part II., Price 3s.

SCHUMANN THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

E. A. SYDENHAM SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price Two Shillings each.

FRANCESCO BERGER FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE. A SELECTED LIST.

SONATAS AND SUITES.

EDWARD ELGAR

SONATA

Price Twelve Shillings.

ERNEST FARRAR

CELTIC SUITE

Price Six Shillings.

C. HUBERT H. PARRY

TWO SUITES

No. 1, in D. No. 2, in F.

Price Seven Shillings each.

ARTHUR HINTON

SUITE

Price Ten Shillings.

A. C. MACKENZIE

PIBROCH SUITE

Price Twelve Shillings.

A. DUTEUIL D'OZANNE

SUITE PITTORESQUE

Price Twelve Shillings.

SHORT PIECES.

JOHN IRELAND

BAGATELLE

Price Three Shillings.

JOSEF HOLBROOKE

SOUVENIR DE PRINTEMPS

Price Three Shillings.

H. WALFORD DAVIES

SOLEMN MELODY

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

A. C. MACKENZIE

BENEDICTUS

From Six Pieces, Op. 37.

Price Three Shillings.

J. B. McEWEN

SIX HIGHLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings each.

HAMISH MacCUNN

ROMANCE IN G

Price Three Shillings.

H. WALDO WARNER

SCHERZO

Price Three Shillings.

JOHN E. WEST

IN THE SPRING

Price Three Shillings.

ALBERTO RANDEGGER, JUN.

SOUVENIR

Price Three Shillings.

A. DUTEUIL D'OZANNE

AIR À DANSER

Price Three Shillings.

EDWARD ELGAR

SERENADE

From the Wand of Youth Suite, No. 1.

Price Three Shillings.

EDWARD ELGAR

CHANSON DE MATIN

Price Three Shillings.

EDWARD ELGAR

CHANSON DE NUIT

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

EDWARD ELGAR

PASTOURELLE

Price Three Shillings.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

SELECTED EDITION.

SONGS AND BALLADS.

(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

Price ... .. Eighteen Shillings each.

PREFACE.

THIS Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, chanteys, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purposes of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises—counting variants, and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series in which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM

THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON.

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOLK-SONGS

OF

ENGLISH ORIGIN

COLLECTED IN

THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

BY

CECIL J. SHARP

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

FIRST SERIES.

Price Seven Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ENGLISH LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

EACH SET, PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS NET.

FIRST SET.

- |                                 |                          |                                   |                    |
|---------------------------------|--------------------------|-----------------------------------|--------------------|
| *My true love hath my heart ... | Sir Philip Sidney | 3. Where shall the lover rest ... | Scott       |
| Good-night ...                  | Shelley           | 4. Willow, Willow, Willow ...     | Shakespeare |

SECOND SET.

- |                                      |                    |                                     |                    |
|--------------------------------------|--------------------|-------------------------------------|--------------------|
| O Mistress Mine ...                  | Shakespeare | 3. No longer mourn for me ...       | Shakespeare |
| Take, O take those lips away ...     | Shakespeare | 4. Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... | Shakespeare |
| 5. When icicles hang by the wall ... | Shakespeare |                                     |                    |

THIRD SET.

- |                                       |                 |                               |                       |
|---------------------------------------|-----------------|-------------------------------|-----------------------|
| *To Lucasta, on going to the wars ... | Lovelace | 4. *Why so pale and wan ...   | Suckling       |
| If thou would'st ease thine heart ... | Beddoes  | 5. Through the ivory gate ... | Julian Sturgis |
| *To Althea, from prison ...           | Lovelace | 6. Of all the torments ...    | William Walsh  |

FOURTH SET.

- |                                     |                               |  |              |
|-------------------------------------|-------------------------------|--|--------------|
| *Thine eyes still shined for me ... | Emerson                | 4. Weep you no more ...                    | Anon. |
| *When lovers meet again ...         | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. There be none of beauty's daughters ... | Byron |
| *When we two parted ...             | Byron                  | 6. Bright star ...                         | Keats |

FIFTH SET.

- |                            |                       |                                   |                                |
|----------------------------|-----------------------|-----------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| *A stray nymph of Dian ... | Julian Sturgis | 4. Lay a garland on my hearse ... | Beaumont &amp; Fletcher |
| *Proud Maisie ...          | Scott          | 5. Love and laughter... ...       | Arthur Butler           |
| *Crabbed age and youth ... | Shakespeare    | 6. A girl to her glass ...        | Julian Sturgis          |
| 7. A Lullaby ...           | E. O. Jones    |                                   |                                |

SIXTH SET.

- |                                    |                    |                                      |                         |
|------------------------------------|--------------------|--------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| *When comes my Gwen ...            | E. O. Jones | 4. *A lover's garland ...            | Alfred P. Graves |
| *And yet I love her till I die ... | Anon.       | 5. At the hour the long day ends ... | Alfred P. Graves |
| *Love is a bable ...               | Anon.       | 6. Under the greenwood tree ...      | Shakespeare      |

SEVENTH SET.

- |                                       |                       |  |                       |
|---------------------------------------|-----------------------|--|-----------------------|
| On a time the amorous Silvy ...       | Anon.          | 4. O never say that I was false of heart ... | Shakespeare    |
| Follow a shadow ...                   | Ben Jonson     | 5. Julia ...                                 | Herrick        |
| Ye little birds that sit and sing ... | Thomas Heywood | 6. Sleep ...                                 | Julian Sturgis |

EIGHTH SET.

- |                         |                               |                         |                        |
|-------------------------|-------------------------------|-------------------------|------------------------|
| Whence ...              | Julian Sturgis         | 4. Dirge in woods ...   | George Meredith |
| Nightfall in winter ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. Looking backward ... | Julian Sturgis  |
| Marian ...              | George Meredith        | 6. Grapes ...           | Julian Sturgis  |

NINTH SET.

- |                                 |                          |                        |                          |
|---------------------------------|--------------------------|------------------------|--------------------------|
| Three aspects ...               | Mary E. Coleridge | 4. Whether I live ...  | Mary E. Coleridge |
| A fairy town (St. Andrew's) ... | Mary E. Coleridge | 5. Armida's garden ... | Mary E. Coleridge |
| The witches' wood ...           | Mary E. Coleridge | 6. The maiden ...      | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 7. There ...                    | Mary E. Coleridge |                        |                          |

TENTH SET.

- |                                     |                           |                                   |                               |
|-------------------------------------|---------------------------|-----------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| My heart is like a singing bird ... | Christina Rossetti | 4. The child and the twilight ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell |
| Gone were but the winter cold ...   | Allan Cunningham   | 5. From a city window ...         | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell |
| A moment of farewell ...            | Julian Sturgis     | 6. One silent night of late ...   | Herrick                |

ELEVENTH SET.

- |                                 |                               |   |                               |
|---------------------------------|-------------------------------|---|-------------------------------|
| One golden thread ...           | Julia Chatterton       | 5. The faithful lover ...                 | Alfred Percival Graves |
| The spirit of the Spring ...    | Alfred Percival Graves | 6. If I might ride on puissant wing... .. | Julian Sturgis         |
| What part of dread eternity ... | Author unknown         | 7. Why art thou slow ...                  | Manning                |
| The blackbird ...               | Alfred Percival Graves | 8. She is my love beyond all thought ...  | Alfred P. Graves       |

TWELFTH SET.

- |                                  |                         |                                   |                  |
|----------------------------------|-------------------------|-----------------------------------|------------------|
| 1. When the dew is falling ...   | Julia Chatterton | 4. When the sun's great orb... .. | H. Warner |
| 2. To Blossoms ...               | Herrick          | 5. Dream pedlary ...              | Beddoes   |
| 3. Rosaline ...                  | Lodge            | 6. O World, O Life, O Time ...    | Shelley   |
| 7. The sound of hidden music ... | Julia Chatterton |                                   |                  |

* Published separately, price 1s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE BARLESS PSALTER

POINTED FOR USE WITH ANGLICAN CHANTS

AN EASY BOOK FOR CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID,

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS,

THE ATHANASIAN CREED,

TOGETHER WITH

Short Notes on the Text and a full Explanatory Preface

EDITED BY

WALTER MARSHALL, M.A.,

AND

SEYMOUR PILE, M.A., F.R.C.O.

Imperial 32mo, Price Two Shillings net.

Demy 8vo, Large Type, Price Five Shillings net.

The Barless Psalter Chants: Price, Paper, Two Shillings net; Cloth, Three Shillings net.

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHORALE PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

BY
C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

FIRST SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 1.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Dundee."
2. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Rockingham."
3. CHORALE PRELUDE on S. S. Wesley's "Hampton."
4. CHORALE PRELUDE on the "Old 104th."
5. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Melcombe."
6. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Christe Redemptor omnium."
7. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Ann's."

SECOND SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 45.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Croft's 136th."
2. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Martyrdom."
3. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Thomas."
4. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Mary."
5. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Eventide."
6. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Cross."
7. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Hanover."

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH SET

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
60.	THREE CHORALE PRELUDES ... .. Harold E. Darke	3 0
61.	SOLEMN PRELUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1 6
62.	INTERMEZZO ... .. Hugh Blair	2 3
63.	CAPRICCIETTO ... .. Hugh Blair	2 3
64.	POSTLUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1 6
65.	POSTLUDE (with Violins ad lib. ) ... .. A. C. Mackenzie	1 6
66.	FANTASIA ON THE TUNE "TWIRGWYN" ... .. T. J. Morgan	2 3
67.	MINUET ... .. Alfred Hollins	2 3
68.	EPITHALAMUM ... .. Alfred Hollins	2 3
69.	THREE SHORT PIECES ... .. S. Coleridge-Taylor	2 3
70.	TOCCATA ... .. A. P. F. Boily	2 3
71.	A SOUVENIR ... .. H. Douglas	2 3
72.	LAMENT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
73.	ELEGIAC PRELUDE ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
74.	CRADLE SONG ... .. R. G. Hailing	1 6
75.	CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN" ... .. J. E. Wallace	3 0
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1 6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
80.	DÉSÉSPOIR ... .. Ch. Quef	1 6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH. CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No. 5.
1. Interlude .. .. .	Th. Dubois	J. Stuart Archer
2. Chanson de Matin .. .. .	Edward Elgar	W. Faulkes
3. Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata" .. .. .	W. Faulkes	Harvey Grace
4. There is a green hill far away .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	H. M. Higgs
5. Marche Triomphale .. .. .	Alexandre Guilmant	Alfred Hollins
6. Ave Maria .. .. .	A. Henselt	John N. Ireland
7. Grand Chœur No. 2 .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	John N. Ireland
8. Andantino in D flat .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	Edwin H. Lemare
9. Chanson Triste .. .. .	P. Tschaiakowsky	J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I .. .. .	R. Wagner	B. Luard-Selby
11. Romanza .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	John E. West
12. Allegretto in E flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	W. Wolstenholme
No. 2.	No. 6.
1. Chanson de Nuit .. .. .	Edward Elgar	Thomas F. Dunhill
2. Alla Marcia .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	William Faulkes
3. Minuetto .. .. .	Alexandre Guilmant	H. M. Higgs
4. Lied .. .. .	H. Hofmann	Alfred Hollins
5. Barcarolle .. .. .	H. Hofmann	Edwin H. Lemare
6. Spring Song .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	J. Lemmens
7. The Curfew .. .. .	Edward J. Horsman	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
8. Pastoral in E .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	C. Hubert H. Parry
9. Ave Maria d'Arcadelt .. .. .	Franz Liszt	J. Stainer
10. Cantique d'Amour .. .. .	Theo. Wendt	Tschaiakowsky
11. The Seraph's Strain .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	H. Sandiford Turner
12. Le Carillon .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	John E. West
No. 3.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).
1. Scherzo in A flat .. .. .	Edward C. Bairstow	1. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) .. .. . Beethoven
2. Melody .. .. .	S. Coleridge-Taylor	2. Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) .. .. . Brahms
3. Serenade .. .. .	H. Hofmann	3. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) .. .. . Chopin
4. Bridal March .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	4. Funeral March .. .. . William Faulkes
5. Berceuse .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	5. Funeral March ("Saul") .. .. . Handel
6. Melodie in E .. .. .	S. Rachmaninoff	6. I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") .. .. . Mendelssohn
7. Aubade .. .. .	A. Strelezki	7. Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") .. .. . Mendelssohn
8. Nocturne in C sharp minor .. .. .	P. Tschaiakowsky	8. O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") .. .. . Schubert
9. Procession to the Minster ("Lohengrin") .. .. .	R. Wagner	9. Marche Solennelle .. .. . Tschaiakowsky
10. Passacaglia .. .. .	John E. West	10. Marche Funèbre .. .. . Tschaiakowsky
11. Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody .. .. .	Healey Willan	11. Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" .. .. . John E. West
12. Allegretto in A flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme
No. 4.	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1. Arietta .. .. .	S. Coleridge-Taylor	1. Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo" .. .. . J. S. Bach
2. Souvenir de Printemps .. .. .	Joseph Holbrooke	2. Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") .. .. . J. S. Bach
3. Andante in D .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	3. Quem Vidistis, Pastores .. .. . W. T. Best
4. Pavane in A .. .. .	Bernard Johnson	4. Venite in Bethlehem .. .. . W. T. Best
5. Harmonies du Soir .. .. .	Sigfrid Karg-Elert	5. December—Christmas Morn .. .. . Frederic H. Cowen
6. Grand Cortège .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	6. Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols .. .. . William Faulkes
7. Allegro alla Marcia .. .. .	A. L. Peace	7. For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") .. .. . Handel
8. Vision .. .. .	J. Rheinberger	8. Pastoral .. .. . Theodore Kullak
9. Chant sans Paroles .. .. .	P. Tschaiakowsky	9. Chorus of Shepherds .. .. . J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger") .. .. .	R. Wagner	10. Christmas Pastoral .. .. . Gustav Merkel
11. Allegro Pomposo .. .. .	John E. West	11. A Christmas Pastoral .. .. . B. Luard-Selby
12. Canzona .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	12. Fantasia on Two Christmas Carols .. .. . John E. West
		("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.")

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE TWO SHILLING EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.	Book IV.
1. Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. "Elevation"—Andante e Legato .. .. . Thomas Adams
2. Andante .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Religioso .. .. . Myles B. Foster
3. Largamente .. .. .	George J. Bennett	3. "Simplicity"—Andante .. .. . Barry M. Gilholy
4. Andante Religioso .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	4. Largamente .. .. . R. G. Hailing
5. Andantino .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	5. "Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso .. .. . Charles H. Lloyd
6. Adagio Cantabile .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Andantino .. .. . Arthur W. Marchant
7. Larghetto .. .. .	Charles J. May	7. Con Moto Moderato .. .. . William Sewell
8. Andante con Moto .. .. .	John E. West	8. Andante Amabile .. .. . William Sewell
9. Andantino quasi Allegretto .. .. .	John E. West	9. Andante .. .. . Clement M. Spurling
10. Andante .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Sostenuto .. .. . F. Cunningham Woods
Book II.	Book V.
1. Andante con Moto .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. "Invocation"—Andante Grazioso .. .. . Thomas Adams
2. Con Moto .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante con Moto .. .. . Percy E. Fletcher
3. Moderato .. .. .	H. A. Chambers	3. Poco Adagio .. .. . Myles B. Foster
4. Marziale, poco Lento .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	4. Andante Espressivo .. .. . Ignace Gibsons
5. Moderato .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	5. Adagio .. .. . Alfred Hollins
6. Andantino .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Poco Lento .. .. . Charles H. Lloyd
7. Adagio .. .. .	Charles J. May	7. Andante Dolente .. .. . Arthur W. Marchant
8. "Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto .. .. .	John E. West	8. Andantino con Terezza .. .. . William Sewell
9. Andante Serioso .. .. .	John E. West	9. Andante con Moto .. .. . Clement M. Spurling
10. Adagio .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Adagio Molto .. .. . F. Cunningham Woods
Book III.	Book VI.
1. Moderato e Legato .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. Dolente .. .. . Edmund T. Chipp
2. Moderato .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Sostenuto .. .. . Myles B. Foster
3. Andante con Moto .. .. .	George J. Bennett	3. Andantino .. .. . R. G. Hailing
4. Andante .. .. .	H. A. Chambers	4. Con Moto .. .. . Alfred Hollins
5. Grazioso molto Espressivo .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	5. "Communion"—Cantabile .. .. . J. Lemmens
6. "Song without Words"—Con Moto .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Andante Religioso .. .. . Arthur W. Marchant
7. Andante .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	7. Lento .. .. . Charles J. May
8. Andante Dolente .. .. .	John E. West	8. Larghetto .. .. . Albert Robins
9. Andante Pastorale .. .. .	John E. West	9. Adagio e Mesto .. .. . William Sewell
10. Adagio .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Affettuoso .. .. . William Sewell

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON

WITH PREFACE BY

SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

The Times, September 16, 1920.—"Useful advice, clearly stated and conveniently arranged, on the subject of preparing musical MS. for the press. There is a delightful preface by Sir Edward Elgar, which makes one wonder more than ever what subject there is of which he has not penetrated below the surface."

Daily Telegraph, October 30, 1920.—"A preface by Sir Edward Elgar gives additional weight to a recent publication of Novello . . . entitled 'System in Musical Notation,' by H. Elliot Button. Chapter by chapter the author gives unflinching commonsense reasons for a suggested revision of our notation. Mr. Elliot Button has systematised the whole thing in an admirable text-book, the value of which can only be fully realised by a study of the illustrations. Here you will find familiar passages taken from Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann, and others, so set out that they are infinitely easier to read. . . . But not the least of the improvements is in the direction of rhythmical clearness, a phenomenon apparently due to the simple device of adopting the crotchet as the pulse unit."

Musical News, September 25, 1920.—"The little book should be read by all who write music, for we lack definite rules in this matter, and anything that serves to draw composer, printer, and reader together and establish one custom or use in presenting musical publications to the public is to be commended."

The Queen, October 9, 1920.—"The book is well-conceived and planned, and the author sweeps away preconceived ideas due to long usage wherever they obscure the issue from the performer's point of view. The chapter headings do not give much indication of the immense amount of information so succinctly packed into their pages. Sir Edward Elgar has confessed his indebtedness to the author (in the preface). Mr. Button deserves every praise for his valuable contribution to a much neglected subject."

Sunday Mercury, Birmingham, September 19, 1920.—"The book deals expertly with the art of musical notation, so brilliantly and so usefully illuminated by Mr. Button, who has proved himself not only a finished expert, but also a public benefactor, showing as he does how scores, apparently intricate and obscure, can be made comparatively easy to read, and therefore more understandingly played. Originals are given side by side with the author's suggestion, and in all cases with illumination, and in some cases with results that may fairly be called amazing. The price of this quite remarkable book makes it worth while for the amateur to place it in his collection; to the professional player and to the composer it will be invaluable."

Western Morning News, September 17, 1920.—"If all writers would adopt Mr. Button's system the reader would be spared much confusion."

The Choir, April, 1921.—"All composers, in fact, all who have to write or copy music, will find much valuable advice and many useful hints in Mr. H. Elliot Button's 'Musical Notation.' . . . The proper uses of rests, slurs, marks of expression, are all dealt with, Mr. Button's main idea being to bring about a uniform system of musical notation. . . . The examples he gives fully bear out the writer's theories, which are consummated in a series of musical examples wherein the contrast between the old and the new demonstrates to the full the excellence of Mr. Button's carefully-reasoned theories."

Music Student, November, 1920. — "Every teacher who has struggled with our often haphazard 'system' of musical notation, and every writer of music who has endeavoured to make his piano-part-writing at once intelligible and playable, will welcome Mr. Elliot Button's new booklet on 'Musical Notation' . . . Composers will surely call blessed the name of every composer who reads, marks, learns and puts into practice the rules in this book."

PRICE - - - THREE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JEAN SIBELIUS
TWELVE SELECTED PIANO PIECES

(Chester Series, Nos. 94-95).

VOL. I.

1. THE SOLITARY FIR TREE.
2. THE BIRCH TREE.
3. NOVELETTE.
4. THE IRIS.
5. THE CAMPANULA.
6. DANCE.

VOL. II.

1. THE ASPEN.
2. SONNET.
3. THE SNAPDRAGON.
4. THE TWINFLOWER OF THE NORTH.
5. CAPRICCIETTO.
6. HARLEQUINADE.

Price, 3s. net cash each Volume.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.,
11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

This Supplement is part also of the July issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 156.

LYTHAM—June 9, 10, 11.

1920 saw an attempt to revive interest in this meeting, but not until January of this year did it prove possible to re-commence operations. Held at the Pier Pavilion and Floral Hall, this Festival depends more than most on fine weather. So inadequate is the accommodation for marshalling numerous choirs that a wet night would spell disaster, owing to absence of shelter. For twenty years the executive has had luck, and this year was no exception, but it poured the next day! The vocal solo classes drew on music of wide range and varied emotional feeling, but it cannot be said that, compared with 1914 standards, the quality of this year's candidates affords any satisfaction. A bunch of contraltos was a possible exception. Technique of the present generation of amateur singers in these parts has not yet reached the point where it will unconsciously obey the dictates of the brain; and worse still, in many cases the necessity for assimilating the poet's mood did not appear to have dawned on them—which only proves the need for a revival everywhere of these competitive festival aids to a higher standard in this branch of work. Dr. Bairstow, Mr. Julius Harrison, and Mr. Hamilton Harris, in turn, urged on the competitors the need for something more than had been revealed in these solos. Here, as elsewhere in this part of Lancashire, the festival spirit has lost much of its grip on the school life of the neighbourhood. The school-class had most interesting music, not too severe in style; but no day-school sent a solitary entry. A choir of children from one of the Sunday schools in the locality appeared alone; four Sunday-school choirs showed great variation in age, but here again festival experience will make them more efficient in adult church choir work later in life. Young as they were, the comparative instinct was clearly discernible, and some had pretty shrewd comments to make on the varied interpretations of the works.

The final day's choral singing brought music that was thoroughly delightful—Elgar's 'Praise to the Holiest,' Harrison's 'The green woods laugh,' Quilter's 'To Daffodils,' Dowland's 'Come again, sweet love,' Edwards's 'In going to my lonely bed,' Cornelius's 'Hero's rest,' and 'O Death, thou art the tranquil night,' Brahms's Alto Rhapsody, and glees by Webbe, Horsley, Walmisley, &c. There was also a work which not many years ago was pronounced impossible to sing correctly—Bantock's 'Leprehaun,' but the winning mixed-voice choir not merely reeled it off correctly as to its baffling notation, but was so much at ease that all the essential elf-like witchery of the thing bubbled out as naturally and as freshly as could be: the fun of it was in the singers' faces and in their voices.

'O Death, thou art the tranquil night' was one of the epoch-marking bits of music. Sung for the first time in England in 1905, much modern music in the choral song line springs straight from it. After hearing this song at Morecambe in 1905, Mr. Frederic Corder wrote that vivid article in this journal in which he spoke of 'the crowning glory of the North Country—her mixed-voice choirs'—just is Elgar a little earlier had written of the Brahms singing 'somewhere farther North.' The inspiration of such writing is Cornelius gives us in this work is far from exhausted—it should be sung more frequently. Choirs can never tire of it, but if they want a little bit of fun, then let choirmasters turn them loose on 'The Leprehaun.'

The male-voice singing was chiefly notable for the appearance of the Manchester Orpheus Glee Society under Mr. Sidney Smith. It was a more numerous body of singers than most of the other competitors, and showed that virtue had not gone out of it despite its long hibernation. Blackpool singers in nearly every class on this final day were much to the fore, and notwithstanding a partial eclipse at Morecambe recently, the art of Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society, under Mr. Herbert Whittaker, shone out with its old-time brilliance. On several occasions the work of the official accompanist, Mr. A. V. Jackson, earned warm praise from both the judges and the public.

The chief results were as follows:

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

- 1st. Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society.
- 2nd. Blackpool Orpheus.
- 3rd. Blackpool Lyric.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Alto-lead).

- 1st. Morecambe.
- 2nd. Barrowford.
- 3rd. Goodshaw.

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

- 1st. Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society.
- 2nd. Blackpool Orpheus.
- 3rd. Accrington.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Tenor-lead).

- 1st. Manchester Orpheus.
- 2nd. Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society.
- 3rd. Blackpool Orpheus.

BRISTOL EISTEDDFOD.

This event, now in its nineteenth year, was held at the Colston Hall on June 6, 7, 9, and 11. There were nearly a thousand entries, the record of last year being beaten by about a hundred. The Festival was very strong on the vocal solo side, with three hundred female soloists, forty-five baritones, and sixteen tenors. Choral entries were few. A new class for mimes was started last year, and looks like being a successful addition to the regular scheme. Folk-dances and singing-games kept Mr. Cecil Sharp busy for a long day. Of the vocal soloists the greatest promise was shown in the novice classes. Among the seventy-four young contraltos were some fine voices in the making—sometimes in the marring, unfortunately. The 'wobble' was a constant trial, and the judges grew weary of uttering complaints and admonitions on this score. As usual, too great a distance separated the best singers from the worst. It was obvious that most of the latter were where they were simply because of easily avoidable wrong methods, either picked up or acquired from voice strainers. It is lamentable to reflect on the number of promising organs that deteriorate into what Dr. Brewer called 'the cinema voice.' However, such competitions as these are a very practical way of demonstrating the difference between right and wrong methods. The contests—preliminary as well as final—attracted large audiences, and it was a significant and encouraging fact that, practically without exception, the most applauded competitors were those who went to work the right way. If there is a more direct method of educating young singers and the public than this, we have not yet heard of it. Such experiences are the best answer to those who would limit competitive festivals to choral events. The judges were Dr. Herbert Brewer, Mr. Granville Humphries, Mr. Harvey Grace, Mr. Herbert Dawson, and Mr. Cecil Sharp.

EDINBURGH.

The second Edinburgh Festival was held from May 21 to 28, 1921. It was an unequalled success, and the entries and enthusiasm exceeded the splendid first effort of last year. The adjudicators were Mr. Ernest Newman, Mr. Gustav Holst, and Mr. Hugh S. Robertson. The two former, although well-known to musicians here, were not known in this capacity, and their criticisms were looked forward to with the keenest interest. Mr. Newman's judgments were a liberal education, and Mr. Holst, who was inclined to be more philosophical, struck a very high note of idealism.

The instrumental classes were undoubtedly the feature this year, particularly the string trios and quartets and the pianoforte solos and duets. On the vocal side the altos were most promising, while sopranos and tenors were of a high average.

The real thrill of the Festival was the combination of the seven male-voice choirs on the closing night. In Elgar's 'Feasting I watch' the audience had the experience—quite new to Edinburgh—of hearing three hundred male-voices well balanced as regards parts and sensitive to the poetic ideas of the conductor, Mr. Robertson. The following were the awards in the challenge classes for adult choirs:

CHURCH CHOIRS.

- 1st. Augustine Church Choir, Edinburgh (Mr. James B. Lyall).
- 2nd. St. Andrew's U.F. Church, Edinburgh (Mr. Marcus Dods).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

- 1st. Greenock (Mr. A. J. Gourlay).
- 2nd. { Singer Musical Association (Mr. Thomas H. Allwood).
Clydebank Male-Voice Choir (Mr. James D. Fleming).

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

- 1st. St. George Ladies' Choir, Glasgow (Mr. William Wilson).
- 2nd. St. Andrew's Choir, Edinburgh (Mr. Marcus Dods).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

- 1st. St. George Musical Association, Glasgow (Mr. William Wilson).
- 2nd. Mr. James Moodie's Choir, Dunfermline (Mr. James Moodie).

CORNWALL—May 25-27.

This Festival, under the guidance of Lady Mary Trefusis as hon. secretary, continues to raise the musical standard in various parts of Cornwall. This year—the twelfth year of the competitions—Camborne was the place of meeting. The best feature of the Festival was the support given by school choirs. Vocal solos were introduced as a new feature in deference to the opinion, expressed by conductors, that a raising of individual standard would help to improve collective singing. The adjudicator was Mr. Geoffrey Shaw.

SCHOOL CHOIRS.

A rigid insistence on sight-singing did not deter entrants. Two special classes for sight-singing drew seven entries and six entries. The winners were Probus School (in the easier test) and Camborne Roskear.

For the awarding of banners the marks for prepared singing and sight-singing were added. In three classes for Primary Schools, which drew thirteen entries, the first places went to Probus School, Fradgan (Newlyn) School, and Camborne Roskear Girls' School. Among the Secondary Schools, Penzance County School was the best in sight-reading, and gave the best interpretation of the two test-pieces—Wood's 'Mater ora filium' and George Dyson's 'A Fairy Madrigal.'

ADULT CHOIRS.

The shields in the chief classes were won by Camborne Women's Choir, Falmouth Male-Voice Choir, and Falmouth Philharmonic Voluntary Choir. The mixed-voice tests were Wilbye's 'Flora gave me fairest flowers' and Parry's 'Better music ne'er was known.' The male-voice choirs sang Bantock's arrangement of 'Down among the dear men' and Elgar's 'It's oh! to be a wild wind.' Camborne Holman No. 1 Choir gave the best interpretation, but lost position in the sight-test.

VOCAL SOLOS.

The prize-winners were Miss Isabel Rider (soprano), Miss Dorothy Howard (mezzo-soprano), Miss K. Sara (contralto), Mr. Eley (tenor), Mr. G. Hodge (baritone), and Mr. L. P. Cowell (bass). The test songs were well chosen.

Each day ended with a concert by prize-winners and massed choirs conducted by Mr. Shaw.

WORCESTERSHIRE.

The success of these competitions, held at Kidderminster on May 11 and 12, was endangered by transport difficulties but a satisfactory number of choirs arrived, and the interest of the competitions was high. The two-part singing by schools was good in quantity and quality, the best choir being those from Tenbury Church of England School (Mr. T. Long) and Kidderminster New Meeting Girls' School. In a more advanced class of juniors some remarkable singing was given by Worcester Secondary School for Girls (Miss Tyers), who were awarded full marks for one piece and ninety-eight for the other. In a competition for Plain-Chant singing, Malvern Girls' Friendly Society (Miss Alder) was first. Bewdley and Wribbenhall Choral Society (first) and Hagley Choral Society (second) were the only mixed-voice competitors in the open class. Both are conducted by Mr. H. Oakes. Among the village choirs the first prizes were won by Himbleton Choral Society (Rev. R. H. Craze), Croome Choral Society (Rev. H. Bennett) and Stoke Works Male Choir (Miss Male). The Festival ended with a combined performance of Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' under Sir Ivor Atkins. Dr. Bairstow adjudicated.

MANCHESTER ORPHEUS GLEE SOCIETY.

The members of this famous male-voice choir celebrated the 'silver wedding' of the Society by presenting the conductor, Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt, with a life-size portrait of himself. The president, Mr. Walter Butterworth, in making the presentation, observed that during the past twenty-five years Mr. Nesbitt had done a good deal for the musical life of Manchester, and his influence had even reached far beyond the city. His musical career as Cathedral chorister, as organist, as a member of the Hallé choir, as director of music at the Greek Church for over twenty years, and as conductor of this Society for twenty-five years, had made his whole life, so to say instinct with music. During the first fifteen years of its existence the choir, which has always adhered to the alto lead, won no less than fifty-six first prizes, thrice at the National Eisteddfod, and also at the Welsh International Festival at Cardiff, when M. Laurent de Rillé adjudicated. It also carried off premier honours at several of the great Northern Festivals, including Blackpool, Morecambe, and the first and only Male-Voice Belle Vue Contest, held in 1903. In addition to competitive work the choir has been heard at Queen's Hall, London, and has made more than one Continental trip, having sung at Paris, Cologne, Frankfurt, and other German towns.

In 1911 the Society decided to withdraw temporarily from the Competitive Festival movement—a lapse that was extended by the outbreak of the War. But now it has resolved to enter the arena once again, and with this object in view to build up a larger choir, strengthened by new and younger members. Although Mr. Nesbitt will still retain his position as conductor in general, the conductorship for competitive work will devolve on Mr. G. Sidney Smith, a member of the Society, who has been a successful trainer of juvenile choirs.

In the challenge shield choral classes of the Morecambe Festival Sir Ivor Atkins did not adjudicate alone, as was stated in our last issue, but was associated with Mr. W. Barclay Squire.

Thus saith the Lord God

COMPOSED BY

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

53. A charge to keep I have ... King 3d.
 54. A crown of grace for man Brahms 4d.
 78. A few more years shall roll H. Blair 3d.
 9. A prayer for peace ... Crotch 3d.
 01. A solemn prayer ... A. H. Brewer 2d.
 3. A song of joy ... John E. West 3d.
 17. Abide with me ... Ivor Atkins 3d.
 24. Ditto ... R. Dunstan 3d.
 05. Adepte Fideles ... H. Hofmann 4d.
 27. Ad go unto one place ... Wesley 3d.
 47. All nations whom B. Luard-Selby 4d.
 13. All they that trust ... Hiller 8d.
 033. All Thy works ... T. Adams 3d.
 75. Ditto ... J. Barnby 4d.
 03. Ditto ... G. H. Ely 4d.
 30. Ditto ... E. H. Thorne 3d.
 19. All ye who seek ... H. M. Higgs 3d.
 9. All ye who weep ... Gounod 3d.
 92. Alleluia! now is Christ T. Adams 3d.
 29. Alleluia! the Lord liveth C. Harris 3d.
 48. Almighty Father ... B. Steane 3d.
 37. Almighty God, give us ... Wesley 3d.
 69. And all the people saw J. Stainer 6d.
 6. And God shall wipe Greenish 3d.
 25. And in that day F. R. Rickman 3d.
 29. And it was the third hour Elvey 4d.
 58. And Jacob was left alone J. Stainer 6d.
 55. And Jesus entered H. W. Davies 4d.
 32. And suddenly there came H. J. Wood 3d.
 75. And the Lord said T. W. Stephenson 3d.
 57. And the wall of the city Oliver King 3d.
 28. And there shall be signs Naylor 4d.
 2. And when the day ... C. W. Smith 3d.
 51. Angel Spirits P. Tchaikovsky 2d.
 12. Angel voices, ever singing E. V. Hall 3d.
 17. Angels from the realms Cowen 3d.
 51. Ditto ... P. E. Fletcher 3d.
 51. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 27. Arise, shine ... T. Adams 3d.
 3. Ditto ... G. F. Cobb 4d.
 28. Art thou weary ... C. H. Lloyd 6d.
 48. As Christ was raised Wareing 3d.
 11. As I live, saith the Lord E. T. Chipp 3d.
 31. As it began to dawn Ch. Vincent 3d.
 38. As Moses lifted up F. Gostelow 3d.
 3. As the earth bringeth A. H. Brewer 4d.
 24. As the hart pants (S. S. T. B.) Gounod 3d.
 17. Ascribe unto the Lord Travers 3d.
 39. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley 4d.
 56. At the Lamb's High E. V. Hall 3d.
 56. At the Sepulchre H. W. Wareing 4d.
 27. Author of Life Divine Button 2d.
 20. Awake, awake ... John E. West 3d.
 20. Awake, awake, put on Greenish 3d.
 56. Ditto ... J. Stainer 6d.
 56. Ditto ... Stephenson 4d.
 19. Ditto ... M. Wise 4d.
 15. Awake! O Zion ... C. Forrester 3d.
 29. Awake, thou that sleepest Stainer 6d.
 29. Awake up, my glory M. Wise 3d.
 14. Be glad and rejoice M. B. Foster 3d.
 78. Ditto ... B. Steane 3d.
 12. Be glad, O ye righteous H. Smart 3d.
 39. Be glad then, ye ... A. Hollins 3d.
 13. Be merciful ... H. Purcell 3d.
 57. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 3d.
 27. Be peace on earth ... Crotch 3d.
 27. Be Thou exalted ... C. Bayley 3d.
 3. Be ye all of one mind A. E. Godfrey 3d.
 71. Be ye therefore ... A. S. Baker 3d.
 10. Before the heavens H. W. Parker 3d.
 11. Behold, all the earth G. F. Huntley 3d.
 28. Behold, God is great E. W. Naylor 4d.
 35. Behold, God is my John E. West 3d.
 56. Ditto ... F. C. Woods 3d.
 33. Behold, how good J. Battisbill 3d.
 19. Ditto (Male) Caldicott 3d.
 9. Ditto (S. A. T. B.) Caldicott 3d.
 39. Ditto ... Hamilton Clarke 4d.
 39. Behold, I bring you J. Barnby 3d.
 28. Ditto ... J. Maude Crament 4d.
 6. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 0. Behold, I come quickly Ivor Atkins 3d.
 3. Behold, I have given you C. Harris 3d.
 554. Behold, I send ... J. V. Roberts 4d.
 587. Behold My servant J. F. Bridge 3d.
 65. Behold now, praise J. B. Calkin 3d.
 631. Ditto ... F. Iliffe 3d.
 912. Ditto ... John E. West 3d.
 315. Behold, O God ... F. W. Hird 4d.
 524. Behold, the days come Woodward 4d.
 1045. Behold the Heaven A. R. Gaul 3d.
 652. Behold the Name ... Percy Pitt 4d.
 502. Behold, two blind men J. Stainer 3d.
 938. Bethlehem ... Ch. Gounod 1d.
 378. Bless the Lord ... M. Kingston 4d.
 796. Bless the Lord, O my soul Hailing 3d.
 855. Bless the Lord thy God Roberts 3d.
 450. Bless thou the Lord C. Bayley 4d.
 374. Ditto ... Oliver King 3d.
 693. Blessed are the dead B. L. Selby 2d.
 667. Blessed are the pure A. D. Arnott 3d.
 390. Blessed are they ... A. W. Batson 3d.
 616. Ditto ... H. Blair 3d.
 77. Ditto ... W. H. Monk 3d.
 112. Ditto ... Arthur Page 3d.
 15. Blessed be the God S. S. Wesley 2d.
 756. Blessed be the Lord J. Barnby 3d.
 570. Ditto ... J. F. Bridge 6d.
 895. Ditto ... O. Gibbons 2d.
 876. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 183. Ditto ... Heap 6d.
 770. Ditto ... Markham Lee 3d.
 331. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 4d.
 1006. Blessed be the Name Macfarren 3d.
 724. Blessed be Thou E. C. Baird 3d.
 838. Ditto ... J. Kent 4d.
 400. Blessed City ... A. C. Fisher 4d.
 284. Blessed is He F. E. Gladstone 2d.
 262. Ditto ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
 292. Ditto ... A. C. Mackenzie 4d.
 206. Blessed is the man Clarke-Whitfield 3d.
 64. Ditto ... John Goss 4d.
 769. Ditto ... H. W. Wareing 3d.
 1004. Blessed is the soul (S. B.) Macfarren 3d.
 286. Blessed Jesu (Stabat Mater) Dvorak 6d.
 943. Blessed Lord ... S. S. Wesley 2d.
 5. Blessing, glory, wisdom B. Tours 3d.
 950. Ditto ... A. H. Brewer 3d.
 652. Blow up the trumpet F. Iliffe 3d.
 97. Blow ye the trumpet Henry Leslie 3d.
 961. Born to-day ... J. P. Sweetling 3d.
 118. Bow Thine ear ... W. Bird 3d.
 939. Bread of Heaven ... E. German 3d.
 1024. Break forth into joy W. G. Alcock 3d.
 774. Ditto ... H. E. Button 3d.
 415. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 3d.
 798. Ditto ... H. A. Matthews 3d.
 92. Ditto ... R. Prentice 6d.
 491. Ditto ... B. Steane 3d.
 323. Brightest and best ... E. V. Hall 4d.
 340. Bring unto the Lord Gladstone 3d.
 98. Brother, thou art gone J. Goss 4d.
 279. By Babylon's wave Gounod 2d.
 197. By the rivers of Babylon L. Samson 4d.
 121. By the waters of Babylon Boyce 4d.
 644. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 3d.
 511. Ditto ... H. Clarke 3d.
 853. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 3d.
 742. By Thy glorious death A. Dvorak 3d.
 116. Call to remembrance J. Battisbill 6d.
 952. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 3d.
 680. Calm on the list'ning ear Parker 3d.
 841. Cast me not away C. Lee Williams 2d.
 975. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
 497. Christ both died ... E. W. Naylor 3d.
 454. Christ is risen ... G. B. J. Aitken 3d.
 368. Ditto ... J. M. Crament 3d.
 666. Ditto ... W. Jordan 4d.
 533. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 3d.
 814. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 3d.
 307. Christ our Passover E. V. Hall 3d.
 783. Christ the Lord is risen again 3d.
 370. Christ the Lord is risen to-day 3d.
 488. Christians, awake ... J. Barnby 3d.
 648. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 3d.
 983. Christmas Day G. von Holst 3d.
 445. Cleanse me, Lord G. F. Wrigley 3d.
 989. Come and let us ... A. Hollins 3d.
 52. Come, and let us return J. Goss 3d.
 95. Ditto ... W. Jackson 3d.
 805. Come hither, ye faithful Hofmann 4d.
 283. Come, Holy Ghost ... G. Elvey 4d.
 201. Ditto ... J. L. Hatton 4d.
 829. Ditto ... Palestrina 2d.
 717. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 2d.
 881. Come, let us join our E. V. Hall 3d.
 293. Come, my soul ... G. C. Martin 4d.
 314. Come now, and let us H. W. Wareing 4d.
 1. Come unto Him ... Gounod 2d.
 946. Ditto ... H. Leslie 3d.
 256. Come unto Me H. R. Coudrey 3d.
 635. Ditto ... G. J. Elvey 3d.
 103. Ditto (Bach) J. Stainer 3d.
 922. Come with high and holy ... Blair 3d.
 1005. Come ye, and let us Macfarren 3d.
 748. Come, ye children and J. Booth 3d.
 924. Ditto ... H. J. King 3d.
 334. Come, ye faithful ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 921. Come, ye faithful, raise the strain 3d.
 1019. Come, ye Saints ... H. E. Button 3d.
 951. Come, ye sin-defiled J. Stainer 3d.
 931. Come, ye thankful ... B. Steane 3d.
 914. Comes at times ... Woodward 3d.
 1008. Ditto ... H. Oakeley 2d.
 994. Coronation Offertorium Elgar 2d.
 622. Create in me a clean heart P. J. Fry 3d.
 688. Crown Him the B. Luard-Selby 3d.
 356. Daughters of Jerusalem H. J. King 3d.
 449. Dawns the day ... R. H. Legge 3d.
 213. Day of Anger (Requiem) Mozart 6d.
 682. Day of wrath ... J. Stainer 2d.
 252. Death and life ... Walter Parratt 3d.
 968. Death is swallowed up in Hollins 3d.
 849. Deliver us, O Lord Gibbons 3d.
 90. Distracted with care ... Haydn 4d.
 887. Do not I fill heaven ... H. Blair 3d.
 737. Doth not wisdom cry D. S. Smith 3d.
 703. Drop down, ye heavens Stainer 4d.
 277. Enter not into judgment Clarke 2d.
 362. Eternal source ... F. Brandeis 2d.
 1008. Evening and Morning Oakeley 2d.
 854. Exalt ye the Lord H. Elliot Button 3d.
 764. Except the Lord build Edwards 3d.
 771. Ditto ... Eaton Paning 4d.
 628. Ditto ... H. Gadsby 4d.
 470. Eye hath not seen (S. A.) Foster 3d.
 584. Ditto (S. A. T. B.) M. B. Foster 3d.
 625. Far be sorrow ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 672. Far from the world H. W. Parker 3d.
 329. Far from their home Woodward 3d.
 364. Father, hear the prayer F. Brandeis 3d.
 763. Father, now Thy grace W. Coenen 3d.
 46. Father of Heaven Walmisley 3d.
 384. Father of Life ... S. J. Gilbert 3d.
 768. Father of mercies ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 1065. Ditto ... S. P. Waddington 3d.
 671. Ditto ... John E. West 3d.
 1050. Fear not, O land ... E. Elgar 3d.
 28. Ditto ... John Goss 3d.
 916. Ditto ... W. Jordan 3d.
 872. Fear Thou not, for I am J. Booth 1d.
 446. Flee from evil ... W. J. Clarke 3d.
 553. For a small moment J. Stainer 3d.
 254. For ever blessed ... Mendelssohn 3d.
 198. For the mountains L. Samson 3d.
 901. For this mortal ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
 728. Forsake me not ... J. Goss 4d.
 273. From the deep I called ... Spohr 6d.
 227. Give ear, O Lord T. M. Pattison 3d.
 433. Give ear, O Shepherd A. Whiting 3d.
 88. Give ear, O ye heavens Armes 3d.
 956. Ditto ... W. G. Alcock 3d.
 604. Give thanks, O Israel Ouseley 4d.
 741. Give the King thy W. G. Alcock 6d.
 990. Ditto ... A. H. Brewer 3d.
 309. Give the Lord ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
 383. Give unto the Lord H. W. Parker 3d.
 933. Glorious and powerful God Gibbons 3d.
 1039. Glorious in Heaven Vittoria 3d.
 2. Glory be to God ... S. S. Wesley 2d.
 779. Glory to God in the E. M. Lee 3d.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD

HARVEST ANTHEM

COMPOSED BY

Genesis viii. 22.

Psalms civ. 24; lxx. 13.

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Slowly. ♩ = 60.

TENORS. f Thus saith the

BASSES. f Thus saith the ORGAN. f Gt. Ped.

Lord God : . . While the earth re - main - eth, seed - time,

Lord God : . . While the earth re - main - eth, seed - time, seed - time and har - vest, fz cold, fz cold and seed - time and har - vest, cres cold, cen cold and do.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD.

mf
heat, . . . sum - - mer, sum - - mer and win - - ter,
mf
heat, . . . sum - - mer, sum - - mer and win - - ter,
Sw. mf
Gt. Man.
f Slow. > ff
day, . . . day . . . and night shall nev - - er cease. . .
f Slow. > ff
day, . . . day . . . and night shall nev - - er cease. . .
f cres. cres. ff
Ped.

Faster.  $\text{♩} = 80.$
Gt. f legato. cres. ed accel.

SOPRANO. Allegro.  $\text{♩} = 100.$  f
ALTO. f
TENOR. f
BASS. f
O Lord, how man - i - fold, how
Allegro.  $\text{♩} = 100.$

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD.

Lord, how man - i - fold, . . . O Lord, . . . how man - i - man - i - fold are Thy works, . . . O Lord, how man - i -
 - fold are Thy works, O Lord, how man - i - fold . . .
 man - i - fold are Thy works, O Lord, how man - i - fold . . .

- fold . . . are . . . Thy works : in wis - dom hast Thou made them all, in
 - fold are Thy works, are . . . Thy works : in wis - dom hast Thou are . . . Thy works, how man - i - fold are Thy works : in are Thy works, how man - i - fold are Thy works : in wis - dom hast Thou made them all ; the earth is full of Thy made them all, in wis - dom hast Thou made them all ; the earth . . is . . full of Thy wis-dom hast Thou made them all ; the earth . . is full, is . . full of Thy wis - dom hast Thou made . . them all ; the earth . . is . . full of Thy

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD.

THINE SHALL THE LORD GOD.

cres. rich es, the earth is full of Thy rich

cres. rich es, the earth . . . is . . full of Thy rich - -

cres. rich - - - es, the earth . . is . . full of Thy rich - -

cres. rich - - - es, . . . the earth is full of Thy rich - -

cres. rich - - - es, . . . the earth is full of Thy rich - - es, the earth is full of Thy rich - - es.

es, the earth . . is . . full of Thy rich - - es.

es, the earth . . is . . full of Thy rich - - es. O es, the earth is full of Thy rich - - es. O Lord, how

O Lord, how manifold are Thy works, . . . are . . . Thy O Lord, how manifold are Thy works, . . . are . . . Thy Lord, how manifold are Thy works, how manifold are . . . Thy man - i - fold, how manifold are Thy works, Thy

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD.

dim. Slower. p

works, . . in wis - dom hast Thou made . . . them all. . .

dim. Slower. p

works, . . in wis - dom hast Thou made . . . them all. . .

dim. Slower. p

works, . . in wis - dom hast Thou made . . . them all. . .

dim. Slower. p

works, . . in wis - dom hast Thou made . . . them all. . .

Andante pastorale.  $\text{♩} = 92.$  legato. p

The folds . . shall be

Andante pastorale.  $\text{♩} = 92.$  simile. p Sw. with soft Reeds.

full of sheep, and the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, The folds . . shall be

legato. p

The folds . . shall be

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD:

full of sheep, and the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, full of sheep, and the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, the val-leys shall stand so
The val-leys shall stand so they shout for joy, they al - so sing, they shout . . . for thick with corn, they shout for joy, they al - so sing, they shout . . . for thick with corn, they shout for joy, they al - so sing, they shout . . . for
They shout for joy, they al - so sing, they shout . . . for joy, they al - so sing, the folds . . . shall be joy, they al - so sing, the folds . . . shall be joy, they al - so sing, the folds . . . shall be joy, they al - so sing, the folds . . . shall be
dim. Sw. p

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD.

full of sheep, and the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, the full of sheep, and the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, the full of sheep, and the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, the full of sheep, the

Solo.

L.H.

Gt. mf

val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, they

val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, they val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, they val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, the val-leys shall stand so thick with corn, they shout for joy, they al - so sing, they shout . . . for joy, they shout for shout for joy, they al - so sing, they shout . . . for joy. they shout for joy, they al - so sing, they shout, they shout for joy, they shout for shout for joy, they al - so sing, they shout . . . for joy, they shout for legato.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD.

A little faster.

"NUN DANKET."

cen do. ff

joy, they al so sing, . . . they al - so sing. Now

cen do. ff

shout for joy, they al - so sing, . . . they al - so sing. Now

cen do. ff

joy, they al - so, al - so sing, . . . they al - so sing. Now

cen do. ff

joy, they al - so, al - so sing, . . . they al - so sing. Now

Full Swell open. A little faster.

Gt. to Ped.

thank we all our God, . . . With heart, and thank we all our God, . . . With heart, and thank we all our God, . . . With heart, and thank we all our God, . . . With heart, and hands, and voi - ces, . . . Who won - drous

hands, and voi - ces, . . . Who won - drous

hands, and voi - ces, . . . Who won - drous

hands, and voi - ces, . . . Who won - drous

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD.

things hath done, . . . . . In Whom His world re - joice - - -

things hath done, . . . . . In Whom His world re - joice - - -

things hath done, . . . . . In Whom His world re - joice - - -

things hath done, . . . . . In Whom His world re - joice - - -

The first system of the musical score features four vocal staves (three treble and one bass) and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are 'things hath done, . . . . . In Whom His world re - joice - - -'. The piano part consists of a flowing eighth-note melody in the right hand and a supporting bass line in the left hand.

- es, . . . . . Who from our mo - ther's arms . . . . . Hath

- es, . . . . . Who from our mo - ther's arms . . . . . Hath

- es, . . . . . Who from our mo - ther's arms . . . . . Hath

- es, . . . . . Who from our mo - ther's arms . . . . . Hath

The second system continues the musical score with the same four vocal staves and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are '- es, . . . . . Who from our mo - ther's arms . . . . . Hath'. The piano accompaniment maintains its rhythmic pattern.

bless'd us on our way . . . . . With count - less gifts of bless'd us on our way . . . . . With count - less gifts of bless'd us on our way . . . . . With count - less gifts of bless'd us on our way . . . . . With count - less gifts of

The third system concludes the musical score with the same four vocal staves and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are 'bless'd us on our way . . . . . With count - less gifts of'. The piano accompaniment ends with a final chord.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD.

Allargando.

love, . . . . And still is ours to - day. . . . .

love, . . . . And still is ours to - day. . . . .

love, . . . . And still is ours to - day. . . . .

love, . . . . And still is ours to - day. . . . .

Allargando.

love, . . . . And still is ours to - day. . . . .

love, . . . . And still is ours to - day. . . . .

love, . . . . And still is ours to - day. . . . .

love, . . . . And still is ours to - day. . . . .

Slow.

A - - - men, A - - - men. . .

Slow.

A - - - men, A - - - men. . .

Slow.

A - - - men, A - - - men. . .

Slow.

A - - - men, A - - - men. . .

Slow.

A - - - men, A - - - men. . .

NOVELLO'S

OCTAVO EDITION OF ANTHEMS.

341.	God be merciful ... A. H. Mann	4d.	412.	Honour the Lord...	J. Stainer	4d.	519.	I will open rivers	E. Pettman	3d.
49	Ditto ... S. S. Wesley	3d.	129.	Hosanna (in C) ...	O. Gibbons	3d.	371.	I will set His dominion	H. W. Parker	4d.
236.	God be merciful unto us	C. F. Lloyd	1015.	Ditto (in E flat)	O. Gibbons	3d.	130.	I will sing a new song	J. Armes	3d.
105.	God came from Teman	Steggall	4d.	43.	Ditto ... G. A. Macfarren	3d.	608.	I will sing of the mercies	J. Booth	3d.
967.	God is a Spirit ... W. S. Bennett	12d.	657.	Hosanna to the Lord	W. Jordan	4d.	134.	I will sing of Thy power	Greene	4d.
128.	God is gone up ...	Croft	4d.	646.	Ditto ... Luard-Selby	3d.	192.	I will sing unto the Lord	Wareing	3d.
892.	Ditto ... O. Gibbons	3d.	1021.	Hosanna we sing	John E. West	3d.	6.	I will wash my hands	Hopkins	3d.
864.	Ditto ... Walter B. Gilbert	2d.	260.	How beautiful are the feet	Handel	3d.	710.	If any man hath not	H. W. Davies	4d.
605.	God is my salvation	C. F. Bowes	3d.	691.	How blest are they	Tschaikowsky	4d.	819.	If Christ be not raised	Macpherson	3d.
102.	God is our hope ... A. H. Brewer	3d.	321.	How excellent is Thy ...	Cowen	6d.	979.	If the Lord had not	E. C. Bairstow	3d.
131.	Ditto ...	Greene	6d.	615.	How great is the loving	West	3d.	825.	If the Lord Himself	W. Child	3d.
332.	God is our refuge	A. A. Foote	6d.	373.	How long wilt Thou	Oliver King	2d.	758.	Ditto ...	Walmisley	6d.
101.	Ditto ...	H. Hiles	6d.	867.	Ditto ...	Jeremiah Clarke	3d.	53.	If we believe that Jesus died	Goss	12d.
75	God said, Behold	G. Macfarren	3d.	647.	How lovely are ...	C. Salaman	3d.	544.	If ye love Me ...	B. Steane	2d.
969.	God so loved the world	H. Moore	3d.	104.	Ditto ...	J. Spohr	8d.	453.	Ditto ...	H. W. Wareing	3d.
1012.	Ditto ...	E. G. Monk	4d.	988.	Ditto ...	J. Brahms	5d.	732.	Ditto ...	H. J. Wood	3d.
473.	Ditto ...	J. V. Roberts	3d.	766.	I am Alpha ...	Ch. Gounod	3d.	789.	If ye then be risen	Ivor Atkins	4d.
342.	God, that madest earth	A. C. Fisher	2d.	539.	Ditto ...	J. V. Roberts	3d.	469.	Ditto ... (s.a.)	M. B. Foster	3d.
1056.	God the All-fatherly	A. Hollins	3d.	623.	I am He that liveth	T. Adams	4d.	58.	Ditto ...	Naylor	3d.
344.	God, Who at sundry times	J. H. Mee	4d.	664.	I am the Resurrection	C. Croft	3d.	91.	In Christ dwelleth	John Goss	3d.
715.	God's peace is peace eternal	Grieg	4d.	662.	Ditto ...	R. Rogers	4d.	613.	In divers tongues	Palestrina	2d.
1070.	Grant us Thy peace	G. Bullivant	3d.	263.	I am well pleased	J. Rheinberger	3d.	619.	In every place incense	John E. West	3d.
550.	Grant, we beseech Thee	M. Elvey	2d.	120.	I behold, and lo ...	Blow	6d.	655.	In heavenly love ...	H. Parker	3d.
388.	Ditto ...	Roberts	3d.	280.	Ditto ...	Elvey	6d.	403.	In my Father's house	Crament	3d.
517.	Great and marvellous	J. F. Bridge	4d.	496.	I came not to call...	C. Vincent	3d.	777.	Ditto ...	H. Elliot Butten	3d.
187.	Ditto ...	Monk	3d.	207.	I cried unto the Lord	Heap	4d.	102.	In sweet consent	E. H. Thorne	3d.
848.	Ditto ...	T. Tomkins	3d.	537.	I declare to you	Cruikshank	3d.	802.	In that day (Christmas)	Bridge	3d.
223.	Great is Jehovah (Male)	Schubert	4d.	168.	I desired wisdom	J. Stainer	6d.	278.	Ditto ...	G. Elvey	4d.
987.	Ditto ...	Schubert	4d.	230.	I did call upon the Lord	Pattison	4d.	720.	In the beginning	C. Macpherson	3d.
602.	Great is our Lord	M. B. Foster	4d.	515.	I do not ask, O Lord	Roberts	3d.	582.	Ditto ...	F. Tozer	3d.
136.	Great is the Lord	Hayes	4d.	117.	I have set God ...	Blake	6d.	800.	In the day shalt ...	H. W. Wareing	3d.
708.	Ditto ...	A. W. Marchant	3d.	429.	Ditto ...	Hamilton Clarke	4d.	338.	In the fear of the Lord	J. V. Roberts	3d.
237.	Ditto ...	F. Ouseley	6d.	130.	Ditto ...	J. Goldwin	3d.	980.	In the hour of my	... Davies	3d.
481.	Ditto ...	B. Steane	6d.	122.	I have surely built	Boyce	4d.	659.	In the Lord ...	C. Macpherson	4d.
813.	Ditto ...	E. A. Sydenham	3d.	219.	Ditto ...	T. T. Trinnell	4d.	282.	Ditto ...	R. Stewart	4d.
220.	Grieve not the Holy Spirit	Stainer	3d.	590.	I heard a great voice	G. F. Cobb	3d.	385.	In Thee, O Lord...	S. C. Taylor	3d.
609.	Guide me, O Thou	H. Blair	3d.	396.	I heard a voice ...	John Goss	2d.	33.	Ditto ...	... B. Tours	3d.
427.	Hail! gladdening Light	J. T. Field	2d.	903.	I looked, and behold	H. Willan	3d.	148.	Ditto ...	J. Weldon	3d.
545.	Ditto ...	Martin	4d.	1029.	I love to hear ...	M. B. Foster	3d.	725.	Is it not wheat-harvest	T. Adams	3d.
326.	Hail, thou that art	A. Carnall	4d.	1022.	I saw the Lord ...	C. Harris	3d.	467.	Is it nothing (s.a.)	M. B. Foster	3d.
563.	Hail to the Christ	J. Barnby	3d.	171.	Ditto ...	J. Stainer	6d.	571.	Ditto (4 voices)	M. B. Foster	3d.
945.	Hail, true Body ...	H. Willan	2d.	114.	I was glad ...	T. Attwood	4d.	91.	It came even to pass	Ouseley	4d.
499.	Hallelujah, Christ is risen	Stearne	3d.	993.	Ditto ...	A. H. Brewer	3d.	180.	It is a good thing	J. Barnby	6d.
382.	Hallelujah! the Light	Oliver King	3d.	32.	Ditto ...	G. Elvey	3d.	231.	Ditto ...	T. M. Pattison	4d.
173.	Happy is the man	E. P. Prout	8d.	79.	Ditto ...	C. E. Horsley	6d.	215.	It shall come to pass	Garrett	6d.
681.	Hark, the glad sound	M. B. Foster	3d.	743.	Ditto ...	C. H. H. Parry	4d.	908.	Jesu, Lord of life and glory	Elgar	3d.
909.	Ditto ...	A. R. Gaul	3d.	379.	Ditto ...	T. T. Trinnell	4d.	397.	Jesu, lover of my soul (Male)	F. H. H. H.	3d.
487.	Ditto ...	E. V. Hall	3d.	119.	I was in the spirit	Blow	6d.	907.	Jesu, meek and lowly	Elgar	3d.
345.	Hark, the herald angels	E. V. Hall	3d.	205.	I will always give thanks	Clarke	3d.	1031.	Jesu, our Lord ...	Ch. Gounod	3d.
444.	Hark! what news	Oliver King	3d.	1064.	I will cause the shower	Naylor	3d.	654.	Jesu, Thou joy ...	E. H. Davies	3d.
404.	Harvest Hymn ...	F. Tozer	3d.	874.	I will cry unto God	H. J. King	3d.	844.	Jesu, Thou sweetness	H. J. King	3d.
820.	Haste Thee, O God	John Shepherd	3d.	73.	Ditto ...	Steggall	3d.	904.	Jesu, word of God incarnate	Elgar	3d.
784.	Have mercy upon me	J. Barnby	4d.	502.	I will extol Thee ...	C. M. Hudson	3d.	455.	Jesu Christ is risen	Oliver King	3d.
535.	Ditto ...	J. Goss	4d.	1068.	Ditto ...	John E. West	3d.	788.	Jesu Christ is risen to-day	Gaul	3d.
1013.	Ditto ...	E. Minshall	3d.	29.	I will give thanks	J. Barnby	4d.	4971.	Jesu Christ! no longer now	Foster	3d.
377.	Ditto ...	Kellow J. Pye	3d.	156.	Ditto ...	E. J. Hopkins	6d.	618.	Jesu of Nazareth	G. Byrd	4d.
401.	Ditto ...	J. Shaw	3d.	568.	Ditto ...	... Mozart	3d.	548.	Joy in harvest ...	B. Steane	3d.
794.	He sendeth the springs	Wareing	4d.	915.	I will give unto him	H. Blair	3d.	7.	Judge me, O God	Mendelssohn	3d.
701.	He shall swallow up	Greenish	3d.	674.	I will give you rain	H. W. Wareing	4d.	677.	Just Judge of Heaven	Garrett	3d.
707.	He that dwelleth ...	J. Booth	4d.	225.	I will go unto ...	Gauntlett	3d.	614.	Justorum animæ	Byrd	3d.
837.	He that shall endure	Mendelssohn	2d.	591.	I will go unto the altar	C. Harris	3d.	719.	King all glorious	J. Barnby	6d.
898.	He that spared not His	Gladstone	3d.	437.	I will greatly rejoice	Cruikshank	4d.	997.	Ditto (4 voices)	J. Barnby	4d.
900.	He will swallow up death	Wesley	12d.	1037.	Ditto ...	E. C. Bairstow	3d.	581.	Kings shall be thy	G. C. Martin	2d.
389.	Hear me when I call (Male)	Distin	2d.	495.	I will lay me down	A. C. Edwards	3d.	894.	Kings shall see and arise	Bridge	6d.
339.	Hear my prayer	Mendelssohn	4d.	195.	Ditto ...	H. Gadsby	2d.	425.	Lead, kindly Light	R. Dunstan	3d.
1001.	Ditto ...	H. Purcell	2d.	209.	Ditto ...	H. Hiles	3d.	528.	Ditto ...	C. L. Naylor	4d.
146.	Ditto ...	C. Stroud	4d.	958.	I will lift up mine eyes	J. V. Roberts	3d.	589.	Ditto ...	D. Pughe-Evans	3d.
442.	Hear my words	C. H. H. Parry	8d.	739.	Ditto ...	D. S. Smith	3d.	1067.	Ditto ...	B. Smith	3d.
310.	Hear, O God ...	A. Friedländer	6d.	1058.	I will love Thee ...	J. Clark	3d.	37.	Ditto ...	J. Stainer	4d.
138.	Hear, O heavens	P. Humphreys	3d.	394.	Ditto ...	Oliver King	3d.	706.	Let all the world ...	W. Jordan	4d.
94.	Hear, O Lord ...	John Goss	2d.	760.	Ditto ...	Kingston	3d.	132.	Let God arise ...	Greene	6d.
139.	Ditto ...	C. King	2d.	27.	I will magnify Thee	W. H. Bell	3d.	375.	Ditto ...	T. T. Trinnell	4d.
162.	Ditto ...	F. Ouseley	2d.	27.	Ditto ...	J. B. Calkin	3d.	857.	Let my complaint	Arthur Batten	2d.
821.	Hear, O My people	J. Holbrooke	3d.	633.	Ditto ...	John Goss	3d.	346.	Ditto (Male)	Thorne	3d.
203.	Hear, O Thou Shepherd	Clarke	4d.	405.	Ditto ...	F. H. H. H.	3d.	309.	Let not thine hand	J. Stainer	3d.
522.	Ditto ...	T. A. Walmisley	4d.	780.	Ditto ...	Oliver King	4d.	807.	Let not your heart	Eaton Fanning	3d.
776.	Hear the voice and prayer	Tallis	3d.	1010.	Ditto ...	E. M. Lee	3d.	438.	Ditto ...	M. B. Foster	3d.
773.	Hearken unto Me	W. H. Bell	3d.	929.	Ditto ...	A. W. Lloyd	3d.	795.	Let the heavens be glad	M. H. H. H.	4d.
376.	Hide not Thy face	Kellow J. Pye	2d.	886.	Ditto ...	A. W. Marchant	3d.	226.	Let the peace of God	J. Stainer	4d.
366.	Ho! every one ...	J. M. Crament	4d.	153.	Ditto ...	Palestrina	3d.	365.	Let the righteous ...	R. F. Lloyd	3d.
246.	Ditto ...	G. C. Martin	4d.	154.	I will mention ...	J. Shaw	6d.	328.	Let the words of my	A. D. C. Cully	3d.
330.	Holy Ghost, to earth	Dvorák	4d.	790.	I will not leave you	A. Sullivan	3d.	494.	Let Thy merciful ears	W. B. Bell	2d.
111.	Holy, holy, holy ...	Crotch	3d.	575.	Ditto ...	B. Steane	2d.	1066.	Let us now fear	A. W. Goodhart	3d.
842.	Holy, Lord God ...	T. Bateson	4d.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 942.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

AUGUST 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

(Season 1921—1922.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, ALTRALOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have good voices of good quality, and should be prepared to pass examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W. 7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

100 GATE, MARLYBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

The Academy is still quite full. Students wishing to join in November are advised to have their names added to the waiting list as early as possible.

CHRISTMAS TERM begins Monday, September 19th.

TRANCE EXAMINATION on or about September 15th.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

Scholarships in the following subjects will be competed for in November: Pianoforte, Violin, Violoncello, Organ, Singing, and Composition. Last day for entry, August 29.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

100 CONSOBT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams: "Musical Times, South Kensington, London."
Telephone: "1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

Students who wish to enter the College in the Christmas Term, 1921, are asked to send in their forms as soon as possible.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 15 years of age. Entrance and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND, established by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart., for the encouragement of composers and executive artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

MUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

ESTABLISHED AND MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

Principal: LANDON RONALD.

Private Lessons in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Singing, and Orchestra.

Spectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

Trains: Euphonium Fleet, London.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 19th, 1921.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., October-November, March-April, and June-July. Entries for the October-November Examinations close Wednesday, October 12th, 1921.

Written papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or "School") can be obtained on application. Price 1s. per annual set, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B (for 1921 or for 1922), Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.

Telegrams: "Assocla, London."

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. J. S. Bach. (Novello & Co., Book 10, p. 214; Augener & Co., p. 382; Peters, Vol. I.)

Choral Prelude on "Darwell's 148th," No. 2 of Three Choral Preludes. H. E. Darke. (Novello & Co.)

Prelude and Angel's Farewell (Gerontius). E. Elgar. Arranged by A. H. Brewer (this arrangement only). (Novello & Co.)

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the January, 1922, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for July, 1921.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Books of Examination Papers may be obtained by members only. Vol. I., 1881-96, price 6s.; Vol. II., 1897-1906, price 8s. 3d. (including postage).

The College is closed during August.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE TECHNIQUER

AN APPARATUS FOR DEVELOPING THE HANDS OF ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Copy of a valuable testimonial received from

H. A. HARDING, Esq., Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.
Hon. Sec. The Royal College of Organists.
June, 1921.

"The Techniquer" is undoubtedly a very valuable apparatus. I am able to state that when intelligently used, it increases the flexibility and suppleness of the fingers and wrists.

I cordially recommend it to pianists and organists.

"H. A. HARDING."

Send for full particulars and testimonials.

"Hand Development," 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.
B. Cooper, Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. I.

THE IDEAL METHOD

OF

MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, Mus. Bac.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC. GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. I.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-eight Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Voice Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom DECEMBER. Last day of entry, November 8.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretaries. Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A.M.L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L.Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System) covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly most interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Full Particulars, address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.
"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancet" in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.
"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.
"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.
"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTES.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

MANCHESTER SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION

Will Composers accustomed to writing HYMN TUNES suitable for Sunday School Anniversaries, &c., please send specimens of unpublished music with suitable words. State terms for purchase, &c., to Ewin Pickstone, "Sunny Bank," Radcliffe, Lancs. Early possible. Kindly enclose addressed envelopes for return of Manuscripts not accepted.

POSTAL TRAINING IN MUSIC.

COMPLETE AND INDIVIDUAL PREPARATION FOR L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc., AND ALL DIPLOMAS OF T.C.L. AND R.C.O.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES IN THESE EXAMINATIONS.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

- (1) L.R.A.M. Paper Work for September. Revision Lessons.
- (2) Durham Mus. Bac. Revision Lessons for "First" and "Final."

These lessons are designed to give a grip of all vital points essential to success.

PRACTICAL WORK.

Dr. SPRANKLING will give Consultation Lessons in Practical Work (by arrangement) in London, Newport, Bath, and Bristol during the fortnight preceding the Examinations.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Tutor in Music to U.C.C., Cambridge; Examiner in Music to College of Preceptors, London.

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone:
Bristol 3083.

WALLASEY WAR MEMORIAL,
Extension of Victoria Central Hospital.

WALLASEY MUSICAL FESTIVAL

WILL BE HELD IN THE

TOWER, NEW BRIGHTON,

On Tuesday & Wednesday, 11th & 12th October, 1921.

COMPETITIONS FOR CHOIRS—

Mixed-Voices, Male-Voices, Church and Chapel, Ladies', Children's (Elementary Schools and Open).

QUARTETS—Mixed-Voices and Male-Voices.

SOLOS—

Soprano or Mezzo, Contralto, Tenor, Bass or Baritone.
Girls, and Boys, under 16.

PIANOFORTE PLAYING—Boys or Girls, under 16.

VIOLIN PLAYING—Boys or Girls, under 18.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT—Strictly Amateur.

ELOCUTION—Boys or Girls, under 18.

Valuable Silver Trophies and Cash Prizes.

ADJUDICATORS:

WILLIAM WOODING STARMER, Esq., F.R.A.M., Tunbridge Wells.
ARADOG ROBERTS, Esq., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.), F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., F.R.A.M., Adjudicator of Royal National Eisteddfod of Wales, 1912, 1916, 1918, 1919, 1921.

For Elocution: WILSON NICHOLSON, Esq., St. Helens.

Syllabus (post free), 6d., from the Hon. Secretary,

CHAS. E. COWLEY,
44, Canterbury Road, Wallasey, Cheshire.

TO MUSIC PUBLISHERS.

Will any Firm undertake the publication of a Set of Six Songs to Lyrical Poems by Goethe? By a new composer. Address, "H.H.S.," Lancaster Road, S.W.19.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 18th to 22nd, 1921.

WINTER GARDENS.

SOLO, DUET, QUARTET, CHORAL, ORCHESTRAL, AND SCHOOL CHOIR COMPETITIONS.

SYLLABUS NOW READY.

Post free, 6d. (three 2d. stamps), from

G. W. STANSFIELD,

Empress Buildings, 91, Church Street, Blackpool.

MR. CHARLES TREE

is now booking for next season his LECTURE-RECITALS
HOW TO SING with ease FOR FORTY YEARS or more.

Already booked: London (3), Glasgow, Newcastle, Worthing, Tadmorden, Dunstable, Warrington, Margate, Coventry, Ilford,
Stirling, and many dates pencilled.

Mr. TREE has been invited to give twenty lectures in and around
New York.

This American inquiry shows the interest that is arising in the matter of Ease in Singing and the Long Life of the Voice.

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree
(5s. 2d. post free.) (If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W.5.

L.R.A.M.

Coaching by Specialists for the Practical Examination (all subjects), and also in the Harmony, Form, and Art of Teaching Papers.
Special Class for Aural Tests. Apply, Registrar,

METROPOLITAN ACADEMY OF MUSIC,
72-74, High Street, Marylebone, W.1.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: -

ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.).

MATRIC.

Successes	-	-	60
July, 1921	-	-	5

"I am pleased to say that I was successful at Durham last week.

"The result is especially gratifying in view of the fact that I had ONLY FOUR MONTHS in which to work through the Matric. Course.

"I wish to thank you for preparing me so well: my work was always corrected excellently and in a broad-minded way, and the Course of Lessons itself was designed in a way to give one a FIRM GRIP OF THE VITAL POINTS necessary for success."

A.R.C.O.	-	Jan., 1921	-	Entries	3
				Successes	2
A.R.C.M.	-	Apr., 1921	-	Entries	2
				Successes	2

MUS. BAC.

Tuition until Successful

£20

Guarantee Courses. All Exams. Easy Instalments.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

ROYAL CARL ROSA SCHOOL OF OPERA

Directors: Mrs. CARL ROSA and ALFRED VAN NOORDEN, Esq.
Principal: ARTHUR FAGGE.

COMPLETE COURSE OF TRAINING

IN GRAND OPERA

AND ALL BRANCHES OF MUSICAL ART
DANCING, ENSEMBLE, CORRECT ARTICULATION,
DRAMATIC WORK, FENCING, LANGUAGES, ETC.

By Experienced Artists and Professors, at

17, PUTNEY HILL, S.W.15.

For Prospectus, Inclusive Fees, and full particulars, apply,

The SECRETARY, The Royal Carl Rosa School of Opera.
Telephone: Putney 573. 17, Putney Hill, S.W.15

MR. JACQUES E. HOPKINS

GRAND PRIZE WINNER OF SINGING OF THE PARIS CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Figaro.—"An interpretation profoundly musical."

Commedia.—"Sang with a charm, a musical quality, an assuredness."

La Liberté.—"Who phrases with a taste and an exquisite delicacy."

Excelsior.—"Voice and art that places him well above his comrades."

Paris Journal.—"An artist of remarkable style."

La Petit Journal.—"Showed remarkable qualities."

La Cuisse.—"A sure taste and a musical quality undisputable."

Le Monde Musical.—"The artist the most complete—a charm listen to his beautiful phrasing."

Le Monde Illustré.—"Showed perfect taste—style very pure and noble."

La Ménéstrel.—"The most interesting—the most gifted."

Feuilleton du Journal des Débats.—"Conducts his voice with quality of style and tone remarkable."

Lessons given in

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND INTERPRETATION.

Write terms and audition

160, Wymering Mansions, Maida Vale, W.5.

EXCELLENT CONNECTION

(SINGING AND PIANOFORTE),

FOR SALE,

In beautiful Seaside Town, North-West of England.
Very splendid opportunities for energetic and well-qualified man.

Parish Church Appointment, £100 per annum.

Total income, £1,100 to £1,200.

Inquiries should be sent to "Stephens," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.
160, Wardour Street, London, W.1., before August 15th, 1921.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Couple

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool.

9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-foot eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in the touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME

MEMORY

—MISS LILIAS MACKINNO undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

LITHOGRAPHING AND DUPLICATING.

Send MS. and stamp for estimate, Ibbotson & Co., 25, York Street Wakefield.

TO BE SOLD, the old-established BUSINESS of a PIANOFORTE DEALER and TUNER, together with a Shop and Dwelling-house, Nos. 47 and 48, High Street, Banbury, with vacant possession. Apply to W. E. Wood, 21, Marlborough Road, Banbury.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

ALBERT DOWNING

(CANADIAN TENOR).

Soloist: Toronto Oratorio Society, "Elijah," 1920.
Toronto Masonic Chorus, 1921.
Winnipeg Choral Society, "Elijah" and "Hiawatha," 1921.
Will arrive in England October, and will be available for engagements Oratorio, Concerts, Recitals, &c.
For open dates, address, The Milgrom Concert Direction, Regent Street, W.; or c/o Redpath Lyceum Association, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, U.S.A.

MILLARD THOMPSON

(L.T.C.L.)

Principal Tenor, St. George's, Southwark.
32, Selwyn Avenue, Highams Park, E.4.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

Baritone. Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.

For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W.1.

(CAPTAIN)

LEWIS STANTON

(BASS).

ORATORIOS, ETC.

The Cloisters, Windsor Castle. Telegrams: Stanton, Cloisters, Windsor.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).

Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E.5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7253.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

IVES LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.
Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC,
Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Busoni Method.

Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER

Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,

A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.

COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—
Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch,"
and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."
Over 500 Successes at Exams.

Recitative and its Rendering, 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.
The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear,
along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, M.: Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

LAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),
"The Faith House," 22, Buckingham St., Charing Cross, W.C.2.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., A.Mus. L.C.M. (1921), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-seven. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations, Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,
L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge,"
"Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, and Essay Course with Models. 44 Successes in One Year.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 171 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 45 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) "The Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), gives
Lessons, by post, in Harmony and other Theoretical Subjects,
and prepares for Examinations. Terms very moderate. 18, Chanters
Road, Bideford.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 390 Successes, 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Over 100 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920),
specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., will resume her
Private Lessons in Singing in September. Studio, 32,
Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence) Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes,
L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, to, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private
Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and
R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

DR. TAYLOR gives LESSONS by correspondence in all Musical Subjects, Elementary or Advanced. Diploma and Degree work. Manuscripts revised. Accompaniments written, &c., &c. Terms moderate. Portland Place, Lancaster.

L. R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the JANUARY F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations will shortly commence. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work.

Now in these Lessons a series of clear and definite rules and principles is given, enforced and illustrated by musical examples, which go to the very root of the matter.

Every pupil is instructed how to write Musical Counterpoint. Numerous examples are given which clearly show that it is quite possible to produce good music (from a harmonic and melodic point of view), even under the many restrictions and limitations imposed by the laws of Counterpoint.

Special attention given to the new F.R.C.O. test—Modern Counterpoint.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
 "TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

MUS. B., working for Mus. D., wishes to correspond with equally advanced student—lady or gentleman—with a view to exchanging work for MUTUAL CORRECTION. No fees. Kitson principles. Address, "Advanced Student," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED a SOLO BOY for Choir School in the country. Board, lodging, and education free. Evelyn Countess of Craven, Ashdown Park, Shrivensham.

MINOR CANON.—VACANCY for a VICAR-CHORAL at York Minster. Graduate. Priest. Thorough musician. Applications, with references, to the Chapter Clerk, Minster Gates, York.

STOKE NEWINGTON PARISH CHURCH.—TENOR WANTED. £20. Apply, by letter, Norman Collie, 37, Queen Elizabeth's Walk, N.16.

WANTED, the Name and Address of a School or College where a boy 12½ years old, possessing a pronounced gift of music, could obtain a thorough training in music (principally pianoforte playing), and, at the same time, receive a good general education. Please send particulars as to fees, &c., to "F.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

ACCOMPANIST DESIRES ENGAGEMENTS, Concerts, Practices, or Choral Society. "M. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for George Street Congregational Church, Croydon. Write, stating age, experience, and salary required to "S.," 2, Ashburton Road, Croydon.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST WANTED. Three-manual organ, electric blowing. Exceptional opportunity for study of plainchant accompaniment. Also all voices wanted. West London. Godfrey Scrats' 18, Ballina Street, S.E.23.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST for inner S. London Church. Plain services. Three-manual electric organ. Write "Organist," 42, Dawnay Road, S.W.18.

ORGANIST (London Church), can DEPUTISE, London or Country, from 18th August-September. "Organist," c/o 23, Stobart Mansions, Camberwell, S.E.5.

WANTED, use of ORGAN for two or three hours weekly, in Highgate or Holloway districts. Write terms, &c., to "S. W.," 476, Hornsey Road, N.19.

FOR SALE.—Small Pipe ORGAN, by Gray & Davison. Four Stops, Pedals. Full particulars on application to Rev. A. A. Kerridge, The Vicarage, Scarrington, Aslockton, Notts.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGAN FOR SALE.—Two-Manuals, 21 Speaking Stops, and usual Couplers. Tenders invited. The instrument can be inspected and heard. Apply, The Churchwardens, Wem, Salop.

APIANO PEDAL-BOARD ATTACHMENT by Norman & Beard, Patent Pneumatic Action, in excellent condition. Valued at £10. For particulars, H. Abbott, 23, Cast Street, Thetford.

FOR SALE.—Norman & Beard Pneumatic Pedal Attachment for Piano. C. of O. Scale, CCC to G, radiating an concave. New, and stool. Price £19, including case and carriage "B. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

FOR SALE.—Study Books and Classical Music suitable for students preparing for the Trinity College Examinations. All in good condition. What offers? Apply, W. Potter Thurnham School, near Lancaster.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy Song "THE SILENT LAND" (Oakley). Compass: A to D. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male Quartet, by Arthur Mangelsdorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarshaw, 497 Coventry Road, Birmingham.

ROMANY LIFE

A SUITE OF EASY PIECES

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE

BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

Price, Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SERENADE

AND

AUBADE

FOR

SMALL ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

HAROLD RAWLINSON.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO.

Price, Two Shillings and Threepence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

WILDERNESS WAY

THREE SONGS OF CHILDHOOD

THE WORDS BY

DOROTHY BEVAN PARRY

THE MUSIC BY

HERBERT E. CRIMP.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A. E. MILGROM'S

CONCERT DIRECTION

RECITALS CONCERTS

ORATORIOS,

Arranged and managed under the personal direction of

A. E. MILGROM

Over 400 Vocalists and Instrumentalists on books.

MR. MILGROM CAN ARRANGE

The Entire Programme for Week-Ends

. AT ANY

COUNTRY PLACE OR SEASIDE RESORT.

For terms, please write

A. E. MILGROM'S CONCERT AGENCY,

324, Regent Street, W.1 (near Queen's Hall).

Phone: MAYFAIR 4123.

VALSE LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND THREEPENCE.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRAS

	s.	d.
String Parts ... ..	2	8
Wind Parts ... ..	5	4
Harp (or Pianoforte) ... ..	1	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WILLIAM BAINES'

FOUR SKETCHES FOR PIANO.

1. THE CHIMES.
2. ONLY A FEW WOODEN SOLDIERS.
3. DREAMING.
4. LITTLE IMPS.

Price, 2s. net each.

Played by FREDERIC DAWSON, Esq.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

FIRST NUMBER NOW READY.

"THE ORGAN"

A QUARTERLY REVIEW FOR ITS MAKERS, ITS PLAYERS, AND ITS LOVERS.

Price Two Shillings (post free 2s. 3d.). Annual Subscription, Nine Shillings (post free).

TO BE ISSUED IN JULY, OCTOBER, JANUARY, APRIL.

CONTENTS: No. 1.

FRONTISPIECE: MAN PLAYING THE ORGAN After an Engraving by Israel van Meckenen (1450-1500)	AN INTERESTING SURVIVAL: St. Katharine Coleman Andrew Freeman (1 plate)
THE ORGANS AND ORGANISTS OF ST. MARTIN-IN-THE-FIELDS Andrew Freeman (3 plates)	THE ORGAN IN SEVILLE CATHEDRAL Ernest E. Adcock
POSITION OF THE CHURCH ORGAN Ernest E. Adcock	SPECIFICATIONS: Harrow School Chapel Westminster Cathedral Crystal Palace
ORGANS IN CINEMAS Malcolm Hallows	ECHOES FROM THE PAST: Organ Claviers—E. J. Hopkins Early Organs in Ely Cathedral—W. E. Dickson Organ Arrangements—W. T. Best
COUPERIN'S ORGAN A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc.

The type used will be fairly large and easily readable, the size of page 10-in. by 7½-in., and the margin and pagination so arranged that the separate issues can be bound to make a comfortable volume with title and index.

Published at the Office of "MUSICAL OPINION," 13, Chichester Rents, W.C.2.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

September 19th.—MICHAELMAS TERM begins.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

GRANVILLE BANTOCK

FIVE NEW SONGS

WORDS ADAPTED FROM THE CHINESE BY

E. POWYS MATHERS.

THE EMPEROR. G minor (C to E flat) and A minor.

THE RED LOTUS. A minor, B minor (C to F sharp), and D minor.

IN THE PALACE. E flat, F (C to F sharp), and G.

THE PEACH FLOWER. G minor (D flat to E) and A minor.

THE GARDEN OF BAMBOOS. G minor, A minor (D to E), and C minor.

Price 2s. net each.

"The words have a life and charm that is genuinely fresh as well as exotic. Prof. Bantock, with his subtle harmonies and rhythms, has re-delivered the poems in music that is a delight to render or receive."
—The Bookman.

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

And of all Musicsellers.

BROADWOOD
PIANOSBOSWORTH'S BRIGHT AND BREEZY
BOOKLETS.

This is not the publishers' title for the series of booklets on music subjects, a selection from which has just come to hand, but ours. We choose it for two reasons, firstly because of its sonorous alliterative "artful aid"—it looks well at the head of a magazine article and gives a certain degree of distinction to, and awakens a passing sense of interest in, an index, which is always a dreary thing to read; and secondly because the pamphlets are indeed both bright and breezy. Their essential purpose is educational, and if ever a Royal Road to knowledge was created, it certainly has been incorporated within the structure of these little books. One reads them as one might read a newspaper article or a novel, so clear is their diction and so interestingly is the matter served up and arranged, and one at the end is astounded at the vast amount of information one has assimilated in the process.

The first two are dedicated to pianists, the next two to singers, and the fifth—there are five in all—to all (musicians or others) whom it may concern. Mr. E. Douglas Taylor has written the pianist's treatises respectively entitled The Secret of Musical Expression and The Secret of Successful Practice. And we are let into these secrets, and have become quite mysterious about it before we realise—indeed we ever do so—that they never were secrets at all. But that is where the genius of the author emerges. He tells us a secret—only pretending of course—and we are so delighted at having been let into his confidence that we never forget it again. Mr. Cecil Lawrence also makes a secret of necessity in one of his volumes, The Secret of Acquiring a Beautiful Voice and becoming a Successful Singer. But perhaps it is a real secret in this case, for as every teacher of singing knows, there is only one genuine method of voice-training: his own How to Sing a Song is the title of his other book. This volume deals chiefly with the great problem of interpretation, and it should have a very extensive sale, as most of the present works of the kind are somewhat large and expensive. Musical Sound, by Edward Watson, is a well arranged and clearly expressed Introduction to the Study of Acoustics. It has been specially written for the use of Candidates for the Higher Musical Examinations: R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., Trinity College, and so on, and it is really a masterly exposition of the subject, which in so small a compass is indeed remarkable in more senses than one. The volumes are tastefully got up, and are published at the small price of 1s. 3d. each.

SIGMA.

From The Scottish Musical Magazine.

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS RAPID TUTOR,' GRAHAM P. MOORE'S 'FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVICK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 95.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BEETHOVEN'S
PIANOFORTE SONATAS

HINTS ON THEIR RENDERING, FORM, ETC.,

WITH APPENDICES ON

DEFINITION OF SONATA, MUSIC FORMS, ORNAMENTS,
PIANOFORTE PEDALS, AND HOW TO DISCOVER KEYS

BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

AUGUST 1 1921

EARLY ENGLISH CHAMBER MUSIC

BY RUTLAND BOUGHTON

I.

During the economic chaos of the years in front of us, it seems as though the most feasible branch of serious musical art will prove to be chamber music. In times of financial difficulty the arts are the first of the charities to suffer. During such periods large undertakings of opera and symphony may have a more or less intermittent life, especially if they can be organized upon a co-operative basis; but even then they will be something of a gamble. However, music and art of some sort people must have, even in the most materialistic or decrepit civilization. Circuses may come a long way after bread in the public need, but they do come, and before most material luxuries. The future then seems to rest with those forms of art which are least dependent on 'patronage,' or on the goodwill of people who feel it is up to them to give of their superfluity an occasional coin to art. Chamber music fulfils this requirement twice over; it is not only less costly when we demand it in perfection from professional performers, but it is a form of music particularly suitable for amateurs to make among themselves; and that, to my way of thinking, is most important of all. If the fine arts are to survive at all as elements of culture during the period of revolution upon which we are just entering, they must be, they will be, cultivated away from the wayward passions of public life, and free from the chances of speculative commercial effort. Not that the more turbulent moods of the greater world will fail to find their own music—a music which will be great and noble, or vulgar and mean according to the spirit informing the general passions of men and women—but that music will never be enjoyed in any real sense of the word during this generation, though it may from time to time flash out to popularity or damnation.

Now, believing that music is the most impersonal and spiritual activity possible to human beings, and that the fruits of the finest art of the last three centuries may have to be saved and developed by musicians and music-lovers much as the classical drama of Japan was saved by the actors of the Jōh during the difficult transition from the rule of the Samurai to that of a constitutional monarchy, it seems important for us to consider the material already in existence, its developing tendencies and possibilities, and some proper means of preserving it in continuous life and growth. Because for the time being we are likely to be deprived of the interest and joy of art-works involving much expense in production, there seems to be the greater reason for fostering the growth of the smaller and more practicable forms. We need not discuss songs and music for the keyed instruments; they are safe in any case. Nor need we waste time in talking about the string music of the great German composers; that also is secure for generations to come. But there is a whole tract of lesser-known concerted chamber music of British origin, ignorance of which is likely to baulk our own native developments. Even as we are only just beginning to realise the folly of our past efforts to develop a great native choral art from the works of Bach and Handel rather than the Elizabethan madrigalists and Purcell, so we shall shortly be aware that the English string music of the 17th and 18th centuries is much more comprehensible, idiomatic, and suggestive for development by modern British composers than the master-works of Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms.

The vocal as well as the concerted instrumental music of the Elizabethans belongs, of course, to the category of chamber music. Madrigals were 'apt for voyces and vials,' and the string Fantazias of Byrd were practically Madrigals without Words. Now the fact that our string quartets play these pieces so seldom is not because they are ineffective (for in performance they have a sweetness and subtlety unlike anything else in the realm of chamber music), but because they are very difficult; they are ridiculously simple in the degree of technique needed to play the notes, but the necessary ensemble is so unlike ordinary quartet-playing, and the resultant beauty so different from the beauty generally recognised as chamberly musical, that our first aural impression is of primitiveness and even monotony. But that is really in the false attitude of the listener. Remember how varying is taste in the matter of human form and feature. We do not know how lovely certain types of humanity are until some Leonardo or Rossetti has worshipped them and accustomed us to their strangeness, and to the fact that our own limited capacity for appreciation has shut us in from the joy of a greater world than we have realised. And so until we have heard Elizabethan string music played often, quietly, with nuance at once assured, free, and tender, we shall remain deaf to its murmurous honey-song. But it is there, in an understanding of what those early English composers were at, that our proper joy in and study of chamber music should begin.

There are not only the few pieces by Byrd, Dowland, and others, originally written for strings; not only the mass of madrigals intended indifferently for voices or families of viols; there is also a whole range of music which, though transcribed for keyed instruments, is polyphonic in idiom and therefore much more satisfactory in a combination of instruments than when heard through the anti-polyphonic medium of organ or pianoforte. Many things originally written for virginals or harpsichord can be transcribed for the modern string quartet or small string band with an enormous increase in beauty, and in that sense of rightness and conviction which we call 'effect.' Arrangements have a bad name because the arranger is only too often desirous of offering an improved (i.e., altered and modernised) version of the original; the result of such arrangements, of course, proves only that the arranger lived at a later date and had not the honesty and musicianship, or the imagination, necessary to let the greater man speak for himself. But there is not much scope for that sort of arranger in the transference, say, of a virginal piece by Byrd to a quartet of strings. The transcriber has only to follow the threads of theme and allot them to one or other of his modern instruments, the only absolutely necessary violation of the original being the occasional substitution of a different octave or a change-over of parts to solve a problem of compass. The exquisite purist who prefers to keep such music dead on his shelves rather than hear it otherwise than as originally written, should be reminded that without some help from the arranger we should simply have to do without that greater part of avowed Early English chamber music which involves the building upon a figured bass. The sonatas for strings and harpsichord by Purcell and others, and those splendid though comparatively unknown early 18th century Sonatas for violin and bass, are incomplete until the musicianship of some arranger (at leisure or during the actual performance) has followed the instructions of the composer and filled in the right harmony with whatever of apt imitation and modest decoration he is capable. That is no field for an arranger in search of personal glory, but for a cultured and imaginative musician, happy to surrender his soul that he may enlarge it in sympathy and understanding of a greater man's experience and record. We have such a man, and he has done a mass of splendid work which we will refer to later.

II.

First let us deal with the music of Purcell, who wrote twenty-two sonatas for two violins, figured bass, and optional gamba or 'cello part, one violin sonata, and a very large quantity of music for string quartet, which, because it is ostensibly incidental music for the theatre, has never been properly recognised for what it really is—chamber music of the most perfect kind.

Of the sonatas only the Golden Sonata is played with any frequency. It had the ill-luck to get a nick-name, and being by that means easily remembered, it is put on at all those dreadful affairs where people grub into the music of the past because they love dust. And because it is mostly played by such people and seldom by fine artists, we are made aware chiefly of the dust that is disturbed by the floundering of the poor fiddlers who make sounds corresponding to those made by our first reading of Chaucer. Under such guidance we can be but vaguely aware of the golden quality of its art—a quality in which it by no means outshines other of the master's Sonatas. Three others, though not the most attractive, are easily obtainable in Messrs. Augener's edition; but the remainder only in the complete subscription edition of the Purcell Society published by Messrs. Novello—and even then you must copy your own parts. But they are worth it. Why these works are not in the regular repertoire of chamber music players is amazing and discreditable to us. Perhaps it is because, owing to the absence of viola part, they do not fit in with the general work of such organizations: they suit neither the tripartite group nor the complete string quartet. But the very fact that no viola is necessary, added to the fact that their technical requirements are comparatively modest, should make many amateur organizations jump at them; and there are many violaless string bands which at present have to confine themselves to arrant rubbish for lack of published music for such combinations. These Sonatas should bulk very largely in the studies of schools and amateur musicians. However, to encourage such people and reassure them that these works of Purcell are worthy their attention it is up to our best string quartets to master their idiom and include them in first-rate programmes. The pianoforte elaboration of the figured basses made for the Purcell Society by Sir Charles Stanford and Mr. Fuller-Maitland will serve the general purpose. But with the precedent of Bach's clavier arrangements of the Vivaldi Violin Concertos, I do not think we need fear to rearrange certain of the Sonatas for our own special personal needs. The 'cello parts are for the most part duplications of the figured bass: so I have arranged some of these Sonatas for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, giving the 'cello most of the second violin part (sometimes an octave lower sometimes to pitch), and leaving the pianist's left hand to sustain the bass; sometimes, on the other hand, giving the 'cello the real bass and carrying on the second violin part and the suggestions of the figured bass on the pianoforte. I do not affirm that this is the best thing to do. I merely say that it is effective, and we should be wise so to enjoy the Purcell Sonatas than allow our friends to remain in complete ignorance of them or get the impression that they have merely a historical interest and deserve only to be relegated to scratch performances as illustrations to lectures.

The difficulties in the way of a good ensemble are fewer in the Purcell Sonatas than in the string music of the Elizabethan period. Restoration music is nearer in idiom and conception to what is now generally accepted as chamber music. But the line of descent is unbroken, and it is as easy to follow the development of musical thought from Byrd to Purcell as the parallel development building from Early English Gothic to the latter-day domestic architecture of the Cotswolds. Even though Palladian influences were at work in the music of Purcell's day, the native madrigal conception was never entirely abjured. Though its folk-music core has disappeared, its phrase-form continues in Purcell's Sonatas; also its free rhythmic regarding the suggestions of the bar-line; its joy in the clash of the false relation, and even in those resonances arising in polyphony which can find no theoretic justification from a harmonic standpoint. I have suggested that a close parallel existed in musical and architectural activities from Tudor to Jacobean times. Analogous suggestions will be found in the passage of the drama. The warmth, power, and depth of Shakespeare gradually waned to the cold, rather cruel, and superficial brilliancy of Wycherley. And we are just beginning to realise that though Purcell was in some ways (chiefly those of external pictorial and dramatic capacity) the greatest of the English composers, in other ways, and those not the least important, he was inferior to Byrd and even to Farnaby. Because music can always live free of the vulgarity of material things the descent from Byrd to Purcell was not so obviously a collapse of the finer spirit of man as was the drop from 'Hamlet' to 'The Country Wife,' but it was equally heartless and self-satisfied. While the music of the madrigalians was born in the joy of a spiritual adventure, and suggests more than it says, the music of Purcell is an almost perfect expression of that condition of mind which is content to enjoy those things of which it is certain. From Byrd and Morley issue all manner of suggestions for the development of their art as a most important branch of human activity; but we should be wise to rest grateful in Purcell's music with what it can give of perfect balance and honesty of workmanship—a good deal to be thankful for in these days of musical imbalance and dishonesty. Purcell had at least taken the trouble to discipline his parts to a fine euphony; and such euphony is above all necessary to the tenuous atmosphere of chamber music. The musical fogs raised by the combined insensitiveness, carelessness, and wastefulness of many modern composers are less unendurable in large masses of orchestral and choral sound than in art for which only a few musicians meet. In chamber music, slovenliness and weakness are not to be tolerated; and if these chamber works of Purcell's do not reach the heights of art where a divine message informs noble workmanship, neither do they fall to the depths where a devilish message is revealed in the confusion occasioned by laziness. Purcell's Sonatas remain throughout upstanding examples of beautiful decorative musical art, and so far they are the finest productions of deliberate and developed English chamber music.

Purcell's incidental dramatic music was almost invariably scored for string quartet, but of course was not originally intended for performance in the chamber. There, however, it will find its permanent home. Sir Henry Wood, Mr. Albert Coates, and others have dished up some of these pieces for large string orchestra, and have proved them much to the liking of the audiences. But there is a much wider scope for them. Without counting the many instrumental pieces in the Operas and Masks, and apart from a few odds and ends, there are eleven so-called Overtures and Suites of pieces composed for string quartet as entr'actes for plays now dead. There is no reason why the musical numbers should be shelved with the plays, for not only were the examples referred to composed without reference to dramatic situation; they contain some of the very best music written by the master, standing in relation to his avowed and larger chamber sonatas much as Dryden's satires stand to his longer works. There is a verve and a snap in some of these short Airs and Hornpipes of Purcell, such as would arouse many a respectable chamber concert audience from its sleep, and if published in convenient form would prove a godsend to many young quartet parties who in their early days are perforce nourished on a monotonous diet of Haydn.

Purcell's only remaining contribution to instrumental chamber music is a Violin Sonata. This is the forerunner of the fine series of violin sonatas of the first half of the 18th century.

(To be continued.)

'JEAN-CHRISTOPHE' AND THE MUSICAL NOVEL

By W. WRIGHT ROBERTS

In articles printed in this journal last October and December we dealt with the two chief musical aspects of Romain Rolland's masterpiece. These were, firstly, the revolt of the hero against German sentimentality; secondly, his attitude towards the modern French musical renaissance. We embark now on a wider inquiry, as much literary as musical. Starting from a hypothesis which few would venture to dispute—that 'Jean-Christophe' is the first great musical novel—let us think over the conditions and possibilities of this genre.

The scope of M. Rolland's work is so enormous that in limited space we cannot frame and discuss any definition that would cover it. Still less do we propose to lay down general laws for the musical novel. But we can enunciate a few obvious principles, and illustrate them from 'Jean-Christophe.' Then we can trace them, faintly foreshadowed, in a few novels of the past, and indicate some of their possibilities for the future.

As a preliminary, let us set down in a few words the essence of the great novel-cycle.

It is the life-history of a musical genius, conceived on a scale that can only be called the heroic. John Christopher Kraft, son of a drunken virtuoso, struggles through a childhood of want and drudgery in a little Rhineland town. Once through the storms of adolescence and conscious of his powers, he flings the challenge of the live musician, the champion of sincerity and strength, in the teeth of the pedantries and sentimentalities of the musical world around him. Beaten in this first fight—by his own intolerance as much as by the Philistines of Rhineland—he enters at Paris on a vaster enterprise which ends only with his life. He has now to understand a whole new musical tendency, often repugnant to his German nature.

Stage by stage his sympathies widen until he can appreciate what is best in the new French school, and even show it a better way. Now, too, by a natural reaction, he understands his native classics better than before. His early music, naive and turgid with those very German faults he denounced in others, grows in true strength and restraint, in bold invention and in broad humanity, till in the end it symbolises the ideal union of French and German musical art. Meanwhile the raw, intolerant youth has become a man of boundless human sympathy. He has been tried by the inevitable losses of the years, shaken by moral falls of which the last and fiercest well-nigh shatters him; but the idealism, artistic and social, of his last years is unappalled even by the near prospect of European upheaval.

Of the vast changing background against which the hero stands out—Rhinelander society of the end of last century; social, artistic Paris from then to the eve of the war—of Swiss, Italian, and French provincial episodes, it is hopeless in small space to give any idea. As a whole, however, and in spite of serious faults, the work lives: it convinces us. In aim, as in accomplishment, it is unique; for never before in fiction has literary genius been wedded to so deep a love and so wide a knowledge of music.

Making no attempt, then, to go beyond its range, we see that our genre is normally an affair of two elements: musical protagonist and musical background. These two may vary and react on each other endlessly; in extreme cases one or the other may be frankly non-musical. A composer of genius standing out, like Christopher in his youth, against a background of indifference or conservatism—such a situation has still many possibilities for the novelist of to-day. The converse might be hardly less interesting—an unmusical hero, with compensating qualities, thrown into a society which is intensely musical. But at either extreme, and over the wide territory between them, certain conditions obtain.

Knowledge of music, first of all, must go hand in hand with literary skill. One technical 'howler,' and, so far as the musical reader is concerned, whole pages may go straight into the limbo of unreality. Even worse is the misuse of that figurative-æsthetic sort of vocabulary which writers on music have to employ. We can forgive the author a wrong Opus number; what, though, if he applies some jarring, impossible epithet to a work we know? At once we are suspicious. He is a literary man with no real grasp of musical æsthetics, or he is a musician too poor in literary expression to find the right word. Or he is something of both. In any case, our confidence in him is shaken.

About Rolland we can seldom harbour such doubts. That vivid style, with its fiery eloquence; those torrential periods, the rapier thrusts of the short sentences: all this may sometimes be clumsy, sometimes merely violent; but, as a rule, it surely expresses what it sets out to express. The narrative has many divagations; the action goes on indefinitely after the old 'picaresque' fashion, only modified, and that roughly, by the tenfold sectional division. But all is held together by the superbly-imagined figure of the hero. And we know the author's musical erudition. We may strongly disagree with some of his views (above all, with his anti-Brahms mania), but we acknowledge his right to hold them. As a rule, he may just tell us what he pleases about his hero and about music.

We do not say, of course, that Rolland has always overcome the inherent weakness of this genre. That weakness is one which must be taken for granted, like the drawbacks of the Greek chorus or the necessary conventions of opera. It is just this: So long as a novelist keeps clear of 'howlers'—historical, technical, or æsthetic—we have to accept what he chooses to tell us about any music, written or performed, in the course of his work. If he tells us of a second 'Nibelungen' tetralogy composed by his hero, how are we to refute him? We must at least try to believe it, he can hardly append a facsimile score.

But the novelist has another method of convincing us—a sure one, if he can but master it. He can perhaps make us believe that his hero was the sort of man who would do such things. He must definitely banish the delusion that an artist's life can be separated from his art. We are asked to believe a great deal about Christopher; and frankly, we cannot believe it all. The main thesis, however, we can believe—that he saw the strength and weakness of the German musical classics, took in what was profitable of the modern French school, and embodied in his art the best that was in both. For such, we are convinced, were Christopher's qualities, as shown all through the work: such his natural genius, his sincerity of purpose, his zeal for inquiry, his moral driving power.

We have no space to illustrate Rolland's grasp of general character and motive; but we may now show how firmly he treads in the peculiar domain of the musical novelist—artist psychology. How infallibly, for instance, would the superficial writer have made Christopher an infant prodigy, a young Mozart or Schubert redivivus! Rolland knew better. The boy is exploited as such, against his will, by his waste of a father. But there is no nonsense about youthful works of genius. 'After a moment of illusion, as he wrote, he saw that what he had written was worthless.' That, surely, is the sounder psychology. Christopher's mind, like Beethoven's, was of the order that ripens slowly.

Here we see the composer at work in his first glow of conscious power: arrogant, intolerant, staking all on sheer intuition, scornful of construction and intellect:

He was permeated with his musical imagination. Sometimes it took shape in an isolated phrase complete in itself; more often it would appear as a nebula enveloping a whole work—torn asunder here and there by dazzling phrases which stood out from the darkness with the clarity of sculpture. . . . Christopher . . . forced himself to believe that he did no more than transcribe what was within himself, while he was compelled more or less to transform it so as to make it intelligible. More than that: sometimes he would absolutely forge a meaning for it.

Surely there has never been before, in fiction, such an attempt to give an inkling of what goes on in the shadowland of musical creation.

Masterly, too, is the portrayal of the composer in his last stage, when he has won through his storms and trials, when his art has shed the last remnants of self-parade or sententiousness, and the artist and prophet within him are reconciled. In the serene image after another, Rolland tries to picture this music to us:

No longer did it show the storms of spring which gathered, burst, and disappeared in the old days; but, instead, the white clouds of summer, mountains of snow and gold, great birds of light slowly soaring and filling the sky. Creation. Ripening crops in the calm August sunlight.

Such descriptions not only make us wish that by some miracle we could hear the music of this phantom composer: they almost give us the illusion that we could recognise it. So complete are these moments is the author's triumph over the cardinal weakness of the genre.

Bearing in mind these few main desiderata, supremely illustrated in 'Jean-Christophe'—skill in literary presentment, wide musical knowledge, grasp of character, and especially of artist psychology—can we recall any foreshadowings of the musical novel? On the great scale, and by great writers, there are few indeed.

M. Rolland's countrymen have shown in their fiction a spasmodic interest in musical matters. Diderot, who struck out so many new paths, drew a brilliant type of the ultra-Bohemian musician in his 'Neveu de Rameau,' touching on many musical questions of his day. This work, however, is discussion rather than fiction. George Sand understood artists—musicians as well as any; she might have been thought fitted, both by experience and temperament, to write the first good musical novel. 'Lucrezia Floriani,' with its hero drawn from Chopin; 'Consuelo,' with its singer-heroine and its romantic sketch of the young Haydn; these and others might have been much in stronger hands. But unreality, melodrama, and chaotic construction are always coming in to spoil them.

There is no musical tradition in English fiction. Our great novelists have seldom cared for the art. Fanny Burney, daughter of the historian of music, might have been expected to give a lead. She did not, though Captain Mirvan at the opera (in 'Evelina'), perplexed and disgusted at a hero singing when he feels sad, may still creep uninvited into the mind of an opera-goer to-day. Better than any instance in Dickens is Thackeray's little satiric sketch (in the 'Book of Snobs') of the governess, Miss Wirt, playing her 'stunning' variations on 'Sich a Gettin' Upstairs.' Even so late a writer as Hardy cares for music only as an occasional bit of local background; the delicious instance of 'Under the Greenwood Tree' will occur to all. Meredith, who always writes of the art with sympathy and intelligence, came within hail of M. Rolland in parts of 'Sandra Belloni' and 'Vittoria.' The musical interest in these works is of course subsidiary, but the famous opera scene in the Scala remains a splendid poetic symbol of the whole Risorgimento.

Tolstoi took a Beethoven sonata for the title of a novel. We need waste no words over his æsthetic limitations. Rolland, however, is on his social side a fervent Tolstolian; and the technique of 'Jean-Christophe' bears the stamp of the master, especially in the more realistic episodes. More than that, in his ninth section, 'The Burning Bush,' the author treats the very point which Tolstoi so absurdly illustrated by dragging in the 'Kreutzer' Sonata—the malign effect music may have on a nature already inclining towards moral guilt. But with Tolstoi, artist and moralist are sadly at war; with Rolland, in this tremendous episode, the one rather enforces the other. Only by those in whom the two are reconciled can the moral aspect of music be adequately treated.

It would seem that to-day, when music fills an ever wider place in general culture, the English novelist might more often realise the fascination of the study of musical character, and the wide range of human life which could well be covered by the terms 'musical background' or 'musical atmosphere.' He would have few models outside 'Jean-Christophe,' but the failures of many predecessors should instruct him. In particular, the moral aspect of music needs wary treatment. The incredible things a reader is asked to believe by superficial writers—about the effects of a song, for instance! What patent attempts to cover up weak psychology, what pretexts for sermonising and sentimentality! That 'best seller' of a dozen years ago (with the song in D flat) remains a sufficiently terrible example.

Dangerous, too, is the historical variety, the kind exemplified in Marion Crawford's 'Stradella.' Faint and conventional in psychology, this work has deft construction and apt musical detail. But in such books the hero tends to disappear in the setting; for Stradella's life, as told by tradition, has enough thrills in it to interest a clever plot-weaver, altogether apart from music. It is easy to imagine a Beethoven smothered in trivial historical detail, while the things that matter are his mind and his art.

The most profitable field for the musical novel is surely the obvious one of modern musical society, broadly understood. At one extreme of inconsequent lightness, a writer with the wit and the knowledge might yet do wonders with the theme of E. F. Benson's 'Queen Lucia.' He would of course bring music more definitely into the atmosphere of his story; and he could mightily entertain us by pricking bubbles of pseudo-musical culture. Or if so inclined, the adventurer could wander in dangerous fields of 'association'—opened up occasionally in 'Jean-Christophe'—where a musical phrase, or perhaps a work, symbolises a mood, a character, or a situation in the story. Or remembering that most poignant early incident, the death of Sabine, he might explore musical telepathy.

Lastly, he may be no more capable than is Rolland of keeping 'purpose' out of his story. Purpose—or call it an ideal—need not spoil a work of art; all depends on its treatment. It would be difficult to imagine an ideal more lofty than the unanimité of which Romain Rolland has for many years been a prophet. It means the solidarity—emotional, artistic, spiritual—of all mankind. It knows nothing of social or racial barriers; wars and rumours of wars are antique childishness in its sight, and all the greatest works of art are in harmony with its spirit.

THE DRAMATIC WORKS OF VINCENT D'INDY

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

(Continued from July number, page 468)

'L'ÉTRANGER'—(Continued)

The respective importance of the elements so quaintly blended in 'L'Étranger'—viz., realism and symbolism, to which must be added, if we agree with Romain Rolland in considering the part played by the emerald as not merely symbolic and decorative, the supernatural—is determined by the music. The realistic scenes, especially those in which the coastguard appears, are mere episodes; and although the dramatist has deemed them necessary to his purpose, it is doubtful whether they add to the beauty of the work. From the musical point of view they certainly are the least interesting: even their value as elements of contrast can be questioned. And the revival of the work at Paris has shown that, brief as those scenes are, they can be partly suppressed without affecting the balance and logic of progress.

Although a motive, striking enough in colour and rhythm to be very noticeable, accompanies all references to the emerald, and plays a prominent part throughout the score; although, when Vita casts the gem into the sea and the first storm-waves arise, a mysterious green colouring illuminates the waters, I think we are justified in denying that the emerald should be considered as an active agent. The wonderful storm-music that follows Vita's impassioned appeal to the sea, the darkness, the green refulgence, the strange far-away voices calling, tell their own tale. The storm is no fortuitous event occurring either because it is wanted to bring the action to a close or because the emerald has been cast into the sea. The whole scene embodies the climax of the drama played within the souls of Vita and the Stranger;

it is the poet-musician's interpretation of the drama in terms of purely emotional lyricism. As directly as in the final scene in 'Fervaal,' d'Indy delivers his own message—as Schumann puts it 'der Dichter spricht.' He has elected to deliver it not by means of a conflict in the music (as, for instance, he will do in a passage of 'Saint-Christophe' which will be mentioned later), but within the simple and grandiose scheme of the storm in which the orchestra and the duplicated enigma of the green light and distant voices co-operate.

The preponderance of the symbolic factor is accentuated by the fact that all the essential elements in the score centre round the Strange and Vita—the Stranger's mission, his love for Vita, the conflict in their souls.

From the outset to the final bars, the motive derived from the antiphon 'Ubi Caritas et Amor, Deus ibi est' stands prominent.

In proportion as we study d'Indy's late works, dramatic or instrumental, we meet with an increasing number of motives either borrowed or derived from Church music: some merely quoted, some very thoroughly worked out. In 'Jour d'Été dans la Montagne,' for instance, he uses the 'Assumpta est' from the Vesper service for Assumption Day. In 'La Légende de Saint-Christophe' close investigation would probably reveal the existence of a very considerable number of actual Church-tunes; and the atmosphere of the music constantly suggests their presence.

Needless to say, the fact that a tune may suggest certain words is of no artistic value whatsoever, although it may be useful as a dramatic device—a very crude device. That a tune suggested by certain words may have an often has a specific expressive value, of which the composer may avail himself, is of course quite another matter. To use a simple illustration, in the way, the definite expressive quality of its tune that renders 'La Marseillaise' fit to be used for the expression of patriotic and bellicose emotion in a musical work. Conversely, the tune of another anthem whose words might be equally stirring might, for lack of expressive value, be totally unfit for similar utilization. The same principle applies to motives which, appearing in a work in conjunction with certain words or facts, are subsequently used as leading motives. Indeed, the more we study music the more we realize how greatly certain composers and theorists have overrated, consciously or not, the part played in that art by association pure and simple.

Therefore I do not intend, when referring to 'La Légende de Saint-Christophe,' to enumerate the themes which are or might be derived from this or that antiphon, psalm, or response. As regards the theme which plays so great a part in 'L'Étranger,' there can be no question as to its expressive fitness. From the moment when it appears in the brief prelude, twice propounded in tones of quiet, but sovereign authority, its meaning and function are established. Even should it il to notice its appearance at the moment when ita says, 'Thy words are like the very precepts which are read to us in church'; or again, when the Stranger alludes to his mission of love and assistance to all mankind, the theme is unmistakably eloquent:

t is from its first notes that the motive referring to the Emerald is derived by rhythmic variation:

To enumerate and to label the themes that appear in 'Fervaa' is a task which the constitution of the score renders justifiable so far as practices of that kind are justifiable at all, but from which in any case no valid artistic conclusions can accrue. To attempt to draw up a similar catalogue of the leading motives in 'L'Etranger' would have the one minor advantage of illustrating a point which is obvious enough in itself: that those motives, few in number, are never actually associated with any particular fact or character (except the 'Emerald' motive above, whose function is chiefly to emphasise the symbol), but stand for something more elemental, more general in purport. As a natural consequence, they can be considered as forming two main groups, one comprising motives of exalted, spiritual character, the other comprising those that are used in conjunction with the idea of adversity, of distress. Most typical of the latter is the following:

which is related to the fishermen's poverty, to their blind hatred of the Stranger, to the terror inspired by the sea.

A closer study of the themes will reveal between those that may be put together in one group a number of affinities, some distant, some close; some resulting merely from analogy in colour, others from rhythmic or melodic relationship which may be as remote as that between the Emerald motive and the 'Ubi Caritas,' or arise from more or less strict imitation.

Generally speaking, no work of d'Indy affords better illustrations of what the composer describes as ... amplificative variation; variation in which the presence of the theme is revealed by the general tonal tenour and by the reappearance, in a constant order of succession, of certain melodic or harmonic landmarks. It is a kind of musical interpretation or comment, rather than a display of melodic or contrapuntal ornaments.'

For instance, when the Stranger tells Vita the history of his life and struggles, the 'Ubi Caritas' becomes:

The changes in the rhythm, the repeated notes, the rise and fall of the melodic line, transform the authoritative statement into a motive whose narrative, legendary character, is unquestionable.

The method of treatment, and the fact that most themes are distinctly melodic in character, account for the remarkable continuity in the music. 'L'Etranger,' from the musical point of view, might almost be a long symphony, rich in contrasts, yet free from discrepancies. The music is in perfect keeping with the simplicity of the plot: it contains nothing baffling, nothing that calls for particular investigation, except from the purely technical point of view.

In this respect, the score is worthy of careful study. It is wonderful to see how artistically d'Indy derives novel effects from the simplest of traditional means; how in his music all that is, technically speaking, ornamentation, is never other than the natural outcome of the very substance. There may appear to be more signs of imaginative boldness in 'Fervaa'; yet, even from the point of view of technique serving the purpose of imagination, 'L'Etranger' marks a further stage of d'Indy's career, a stage of simplification and organization, a transition between 'Fervaa' and the religious scenes in 'Saint-Christophe.'

From the point of view of expression, the music stands as high in both works. There is less of sensual beauty in 'L'Etranger,' but certainly more concentration. The same simplicity and restraint that make the love-scenes in 'Fervaa,' and specially the character of Guilhen, so touching, are noticeable in the beautiful music that refers to Vita. Nothing florid, nothing redundant, taints the utterances of the Stranger. And the only picturesque scene in the work—the storm—is in all respects strikingly simple and broad. We may prefer the luxuriant imagery of 'Fervaa,' but certainly not regret its absence from a work where it would have been out of keeping; and admire the more austere beauty of 'L'Etranger' without inclining to underrate the versicolour splendours of 'Fervaa.'

'LA LÉGENDE DE SAINT-CHRISTOPHE'

Of d'Indy's dramatic works, 'La Légende de Saint-Christophe' is the one to the writing of which he has devoted the longest time. The score bears the dates 1908-15, but long before 1908 he had begun to plan it. It was produced at the Paris Grand-Opéra in June, 1920, and there is as yet nothing to show whether it will soon meet with the recognition it deserves or, sharing the fate of 'Fervaal' and 'L'Etranger,' remain unknown to the greater part of the public.

The legendary history of the saint, borrowed from the 'Legenda Aurea,' is treated very freely, and enriched with a considerable number of details. With truly mediæval disregard for historic accuracy, d'Indy introduces in the text and setting anachronisms which would be most bewildering did we fail to realise that they are mere picturesque touches, playing but an illustrative part, and subordinate to the main purpose of the work.

The story runs as follows: Auférus, a giant, proud of his great strength, swears upon his heathen altar to serve the most powerful of masters and him alone. Sages tell him that no power is greater than love's. So he goes to Babylon, and enters the service of the Queen of Pleasure. There he remains, in an atmosphere of festivities and carnal delights, loved by the Queen, but a passive tool in her hands, until the Gold King appears, scattering wealth around him and entralling all whom he meets. The Queen is frightened, and asks Auférus to protect her. But his retort is that gold being a more powerful master than love, his oath compels him to follow the Gold King. And him he serves with the same passivity until the Prince of Evil reveals his mastery over the Gold King. Transferring his services to that new lord, Auférus soon hears of the King of Heaven, against Whom his activities are directed. When he is ordered to destroy a cathedral from which the sounds of the Hymn to the Cross are arising, he feels reluctant; and, having asked the Prince of Evil to lead the way, he sees him quail and hears him confess that the King of Heaven is more powerful.

Wishing to transfer his allegiance to the King of Heaven, Auférus seeks for Him in vain. The historian (who appears with a chorus in the foreground to introduce the subject of each Act and to supply the necessary links between the scenes) narrates how he journeyed to the ends of the earth in quest of the King of Heaven, vainly questioning kings, conquerors, and the Pope of Rome; how the Pope foretold that Auférus would find the King of Heaven 'when white roses cover the branches of the pines,' and how after seven years Auférus returned to his native home.

The succession of events thus narrated supplies the programme of a very beautiful descriptive symphony which forms the first part of the Act, and is followed by a scene in which Auférus meets an old hermit who instructs him in the principles of Christianity, makes him confess his sins, and advises him to redeem them by taking his abode near a dangerous ford and assisting, in the name of Christ, those who wish to cross it. Auférus obeys. During a stormy night we see him refuse his assistance to those who are led by lust, greed, or hatred. But he accedes to the request of a little child, and starts carrying him across the seething waters. Despite his great strength, he totters under the burden. 'Child,' he says, 'thy weight seems to be the weight of the whole world.' And suddenly the storm ceases, white roses blossom on every tree; the Child reveals Himself to be Christ, baptizes His carrier Christopher, and orders him to go forth and preach His gospel.

Christopher, after having converted many men to Christianity, is arrested and cast into prison. The Prince of Evil threatens to carry away the Gold King's soul unless he receives Christopher's instead. Therefore the Gold King sends the Queen of Pleasure, now his slave, to tempt Christopher in his prison the night before his execution. But Christopher converts the Queen, and gives her the name of Nicea. He cannot baptize her, because there is no water in his dungeon. But on the following morning, when he is beheaded, his blood besprinkles her forehead, and her voice joins in the chorus of voices from Heaven that proclaims the glory of God.

(To be continued.)

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

By HARVEY GRACE

(Concluded from July number, page 477)

The modern player of Bach's string or clavichord music has a straightforward task compared with that of the organist. The pianist may feel that the tone of his instrument is not quite what he would choose for the ideal performance of certain Suites, but as the clavichord is obsolete, he has only to go ahead and regard the works as pianoforte music. String tone now is pretty much what it always was, so the fiddler can play his Bach without worrying as to whether the result is like that obtained by the composer. But the modern organist has at his easy disposal a wealth and variety of tone that make the organ of to-day and that of Bach's time different instruments.

At first sight it would appear that the power, variety, and facilities for rapid registration of the modern organ would make it a fine medium for Bach, but as a matter of fact these developments count for less than we might expect. The most powerful stops can rarely be used with good effect in complex polyphonic passages, and rapid registration is of little advantage because so much of the music makes its effect by continuity. Frequent changes of colour or power more often than not merely break the flow. Even the climaxes are to a considerable extent in the music itself, and need little in the way of additional tone. Indeed, where they result from an increased closeness of texture they may easily be spoilt by mere power. Rather will they be helped by a very gradual change of pace, though whether this should be a quickening or a slackening must be decided by the character or mood of the music.

Schweitzer roundly condemns the modern organ as a medium for Bach:

'Our registers are all voiced too loudly or too softly. If we pull out the whole of the diapasons and the mixtures, or add the reeds, we get a force of tone that in the end becomes positively unbearable. The lighter manuals are weak in comparison with the Great organ; they usually lack the necessary mixtures. Our pedals are coarse and clumsy and also poor in mixtures, as well as in 4-ft. stops. The trouble comes principally from the change in the disposition of the organs, the relations between diapasons and mixtures having been altered, wholly to the detriment of the latter; but also from the unnaturally strong bellows of the modern organ. In our passion for strength we have forgotten beauty and richness of tone, which depend upon the harmonious blending of ideally voiced stops.

Few of us will go the whole way with Schweitzer. Many—perhaps most—modern organs are too powerful for the needs of the buildings in which they are placed. But they contain stops more beautiful than any Bach ever heard, and, so far as mechanics can aid interpretation, they are likely to lead to better Bach playing than any organ Silbermann put together. But the bigger the resources at our disposal the more necessary it is for us to remind ourselves of the connection between Bach's organ music and the instrument on which he played it.

The composer of to-day writes music for other people to perform, which is perhaps one reason why a good deal of its effect never leaves the printed page. As hardly any of Bach's organ music was published in his lifetime, its performance was confined to himself and a handful of his pupils and friends. We know that his instinct for effect was almost uncanny, and so we have the most practical of reasons for being sure that the character of his organ music was largely determined by the strong and weak points of the instruments of his day. Thus he wrote practically all his organ music in a continuous style, giving few opportunities for changes of stop, and (in the fugues) scarcely a chance of soloing a part, for the good reason that such things could not be done. In his time the full organ of his time was a mild affair compared with that of ours. He could safely write a long piece of four-part polyphony in triquavers, because he knew that even with all the stops drawn the result would be clear. His pedal department was independent, bright, and ringing—his Leipzig organ had a pedal of sixteen stops, against three manuals of twelve, twelve, and sixteen respectively, and of these sixteen stops five were of 8-ft., two of 4-ft., one of 2-ft., one of 1-ft., and four were Mixtures. Of the thirty-six manual stops only two were of 16-ft. A study of the specifications of Bach's organs at Arnstadt, Weimar, and Leipzig is calculated to make us serve our more heavily-winded stops (especially triquavers) for closes and occasional climaxes, or for chordal passages. Probably Bach's organs were on the shrill side, but they were well adapted for playing polyphonic music. We may revel at times in our wealth of tone, but we must not do so at the expense of the clearness on which Bach counted when writing.

Suggestions for the registration of individual works have been made in the preceding chapters, but it may be convenient to summarise them into general principles.

A moment's reflection will show us that, as a rule, the stricter the form the less scope there is for varied registration. For this reason the fugues, above all, call for discretion in the players of to-day. Modern music, especially that for orchestra, is so full of variety and colour, that the organist is naturally inclined to show that he, too, can be kaleidoscopic. This is all to the good, so long as he remembers that a shifting colour scheme is not generally necessary to musical salvation. A string quartet, a pianoforte solo, and an a cappella chorus—here are three mediums that can do no more than give shadings of one-tone colour, but which none the less have in their repertory a fair share of the great things in music. And organists who fear that the finest of Bach's organ fugues are tolerable to the lay ear only when served up with elaborate registration, forget that most of these same fugues have long been popular in pianoforte transcriptions—a form which not only limits them to one colour, but also robs them of the splendid sonority and sostenuto of their original medium.

Elaborate registration of these works is not merely unnecessary. It is opposed to the spirit of a form whose chief characteristics are continuity and consistency, and whose beauty lies largely in its texture. Any registration that breaks up the flow of the music is bad.

Almost as much out of place is the obtrusion of the subject by means of a solo stop. It can rarely be managed without some modification of the polyphony, or without a hitch—sometimes both. Moreover, it is out of place, because for the time being it changes what should be a polyphonic tissue into a melody and accompaniment. If indulged in throughout a fugue, it turns the work into an ostinato. It may be argued that in an orchestral fugue the subject would, as a rule, be made to stand out by means of the instrumentation. But this would usually be managed by a quietening of the other parts, or by a slight addition to the tone, through the bringing on of a group of wood-wind, or even a single instrument; the character of the movement would be scarcely affected. On the very few occasions when soloing an entry is advisable, the device should be used only for a middle voice, and the result should not be so aggressive as to kill the other parts. A fugue is a discussion between friends, not a contest in talking one another down. There is less objection to the use of a powerful pedal stop when the subject occurs in the bass, because it can be managed without a break, is of splendid effect, and (from its position) is likely to detract little from the remaining parts. Even so, however, a powerful pedal reed is best reserved for the final bass entry of the subject, and in any case is more suitable for slow subjects than for quick.

As was said above, there can be no doubt that many of the best of Bach's organ fugues owe their splendid unity and continuity to the fact that stop-changing during the progress of a movement was practically impossible. Bach undoubtedly remained on the Great in movements in which the pedal is used fairly constantly, and we shall do well to follow his example. Thus the Alla Breve, the Canzona, the fugues in A major and C major (III., 72), the 'short' B minor and G minor fugues, and a few other examples seem best suited to one manual throughout, as they have no clearly defined middle section. They are all of moderate length, and derive a special kind of unity from the closeness with which they stick to the subject. On the other hand, the long works in A minor, B minor, C minor, E minor, D minor (Doric), and F major are in three well-defined sections: (1) a strong opening movement with pedals, (2) an intermezzo for manual only, and (3) a final portion corresponding to the first. The middle section is invariably light in texture, the writing being usually in three parts. There seems to be no doubt that Bach played such passages on a second manual, resting the pedals partly for the sake of contrast, but probably even more because the couplers had to be worked by hand. (That Bach did not object to a continuous pedal part on the score of monotony is shown by the Toccata in F, the Prelude to the 'Wedge,' the Grave of the Fantasia in G, and some of the long Chorale Preludes.) There is room for difference of opinion as to the exact points at which we should make such manual changes. Any plan that does not break the flow or do violence to the phrasing is good. Frequently it will be effective to let one hand precede the other by a measure or two.

It is evident that the middle section cannot make its full effect unless the preceding portion is played with a good body of tone. This shows the unsoundness of beginning such fugues with delicate stops. As Schweitzer says, 'It is painful to hear themes that should enter proudly, like those of the A minor or G minor fugues, given out softly on a third manual in a way that quite obscures their real character.' Still worse is the idea of some German editors (Reger among others) that fugues should begin pp—even ppp—and gradually work up to a fortissimo ending. The plan may be effective in the case of a fugue written specially with a view to a long, gradual crescendo, as is the case with some examples by Reger himself. Applied, however, to most of Bach's fugues, it fails because it gives us a growth of tonal intensity at points where the music itself demands a reduction. The only long fugue that seems to ask for a steady crescendo treatment is the five-voice work in C major, but even here the dignified character of the music suffers from delicate registration. It should begin at least mf. The more one considers this question, the more one sees that any registration scheme that obscures the simple architectural construction of the fugues is bad, however effective it may be in itself. A few years ago there was a reaction from the traditional, stodgy German way of playing fugues ff throughout, and players and editors went to the other extreme, aided by the stop-changing facilities of the modern organ. We are now beginning to see that, as a rule, a fugue suffers less from under-registration than from over-registration.

Two fugues that are perhaps best with quiet registration throughout are the A major and the D minor (the 'fiddle' fugue).

The Chorale Preludes give many opportunities for the effective use of solo stops. We need not be afraid of an occasional bizarre effect in registering the more picturesque movements. Bach, we know from Forkel, was very daring in this respect:

'His registration frequently astonished organists and organ-builders, who ridiculed it at first, but were obliged in the end to admit its admirable results, and to confess that the organ gained in richness and sonority. Bach's peculiar registration was based on an intimate knowledge of organ-building, and of the properties of each individual stop. Very early in his career he made a point of giving to each part of the organ the utterance best suited to its qualities, and this led him to seek unusual combinations of stops which otherwise would not have occurred to him.*'

His registration of the Prelude on 'Ein Fest Burg' has already been alluded to. It is a pity so few other indications of the kind have been preserved. We know enough, however, to convince us that though we must be simple in dealing with the Fugues, we may profitably experiment with the Chorale Preludes. To many players are satisfied with solo stops and accompaniments of tame and conventional character,—partly, no doubt, because they have heard so much about the necessity for playing Bach with dignity and restraint. But many of the Chorale Preludes are anything but restrained in emotion, and some are frankly lighthearted—even skittish. Not Beethoven himself was more 'unbuttoned' than is Bach in some of his organ works. Even the Lutheran Catechism could not prevent cheerfulness from breaking in. As we have seen, his Clavierübung prelude on 'These are the Holy Ten Commandments' is a gay little scherzo-fugue. He wrote such trifles with his wig off, and we should play them accordingly. Probably most of us who have played the short and picturesque Preludes for a good many years have hit on all kinds of delightful registration schemes. Few of them would look well on paper and hardly any would be effective transferred to another organ and building. But surely that the whole art of registration, resulting in something so racy and characteristic that it cannot be translated.

* Forkel's 'John Sebastian Bach.' Tr. Sanford Terry.

We may, then, apply all the modern ideas in registration to a good many of the Chorale Preludes, with this reservation: that in the case of trios or solo stop combinations we very rarely change it en route. Preludes of this type come into line with the Trio-Sonatas as a kind of chamber music, in which variety is obtained by the skilful employment of a few constituents, rather than by the addition of new ones from time to time.

The Toccatas, Preludes and other non-fugal movements give us scope for plenty of variety, though we must be on our guard against restless change merely for its own sake. Just as we have to consider the construction of a fugue before deciding on its registration, so we must have an eye to the character and mood of the freer movements. Thus, the Toccata in F is sometimes made the victim of all kinds of tricky combinations, merely because the movement is long and changes are easily made. But the music is so tremendously vigorous that it is ill-suited by delicate treatment. Schweitzer truly says it is most effective 'when played simply with various nuances of the one forte.' Speaking of the canon with which the Toccata opens, he adds, 'It is to be hoped that some day the practice will cease of employing the cylinder Swell . . . instead of starting with a good forte and leaving the crescendo to the dramatic unfolding of the canon.' This fault is not common in England because the cylinder Swell is rarely found, but the remark is worth quoting because it reminds us of what was pointed out above—that the growth of intensity in the music itself will often make the desired cumulative effect with little or no addition of tone.

The antiphony of two manuals is an effect that may be used freely. It is important, however, to distinguish between the cases where Bach evidently requires an Echo (as in the 'Jig' fugue, and in certain of the Partitas), and those in which two well-contrasted forte manuals are called for. We have his own indications of the latter effect in the Dorian Toccata.

Now that Mixtures are again in favour, and are more delicately voiced, we might well follow the examples of French and German players and make use of them at other times than when playing full organ. In a lecture on 'The Modern Organ: its Attractions and Dangers,' delivered at Huddersfield in 1914, Dr. Alan Gray said:

'As for Mixtures, I have for many years had an instinctive feeling that Bach calls for them, and that a fugue subject given out on 8-ft. and 4-ft. diapasons is so very dull that it is advisable to couple the Swell Mixture to the Great at the start of a fugue. I am therefore pleased to find that my ideas are confirmed by such an authority as Schweitzer, who recommends this course.'

It seems to be supported, too, by Bach's use of the Mixture in this way in the Prelude on 'Ein' Feste Burg.' But there are mixtures and mixtures, and those that can be used in combination with fairly quiet flue work are not yet common.

The registration suggested in the Widor-Schweitzer edition of Bach is far more noisy and complex than one would expect after reading Schweitzer's remarks on the subject in chap. xiv. of his book, though it must be added that the schemes are calculated for what the editors call 'an ideal organ' for the purpose, i.e., a kind of replica of the instrument of Bach's day. Fugues are usually started with foundation stops, reeds, and mixtures. (The foundation stops are supposed to include the fifth and twelfth.) There are numerous changes of stops, tone being built up and reduced stop by stop. Soloing of the subject is freely indulged in, sometimes by means of the pedals taking-over a manual part through the coupler. A typical case occurs in the F major Fugue, where the alto entry beginning in bar 128 (six bars before the pedal brings on the second subject) is soloed, the pedal playing the tenor. As the pedal stops would not be used at such points, some quick changes are necessitated by such 'faking.' But it must be remembered that the editors frankly state that their suggestions 'can be carried out, in general, only with the aid of an assistant for drawing or retiring the stops at the proper place.' As something is happening every half-dozen bars or so, the experience would be a worrying one for all concerned.

The directions for the registering of a single work sometimes fill two or three wide columns, and a perusal of any one of them is sufficient to make us wearily decide on a simple scheme.

In considering the phrasing of Bach's organ music we cannot ignore the influence of the string idiom, especially in the Trio-Sonatas and other works obviously written under the influence of Italian chamber music. The dead-level legato that was once regarded as the first and last requirement in organ-playing has now gone, but not before it had been the cause of Bach's acquiring the reputation for dulness and dryness that he is only just losing.

Too many players, however, still keep their fingers glued to the keyboard in playing Bach. They seem reluctant to release repeated notes, with the result that some spirited subjects reach the ear in a stagnant form. It is hardly possible to overdo the detachment of repeated notes in such subjects as:

especially in resonant buildings. It should be observed, however, that the last note of such a series should be as a rule tied to its successor, otherwise the phrasing is wrong, thus:

not:

The phrasing of bravura passages is usually indicated by Bach's division of the hands, shown by the grouping. We may be tempted to play such passages, or large portions of them, with one hand, but it is a safe rule to stick to the original grouping. Fugue subjects should be phrased uniformly throughout the movement. Complex sub-divisions of the subject into motives, suggested by some modern German editors, are usually impracticable save in the simplest passages, so there is good practical reason for not being over-subtle.

In buildings of considerable resonance, pedal passages will gain from a liberal use of mezzo-staccato. The effect to the hearer will be a legato, whereas a legato at the console too often becomes a muddle in the nave. When the pedal part consists of a series of detached notes it is best played with a pizzicato effect, or even quasi-timpani, if we have a pedal stop of the right prompt-speaking and definite character. An ordinary passage may by this simple means be made arresting. Repeated octave leaps should be detached, otherwise they are apt to reach the ear as a tame bass. The Trio-Sonatas abound with effects of this kind—passages that suggest the bass of a string band rather than that of the organ. Here are a couple of bars from the Sonata in C, showing both repeated and detached notes:

The greater part of the bass of this long movement consists of detached and octave leaping quavers, and we must aim at giving it the life and point it would receive at the hands of good string players.

The very fact of Bach's organ-music being so continuous in its flow makes punctuation of supreme importance. Marches and dance tunes carry their phrasing in their rhythm, but these long streams of intertwined melody, played moreover on an instrument devoid of accent, are very much at the mercy of the performer. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that wrong phraseology is better than none—indeed, there are so many possible and effective treatments that a bad grouping can hardly be found, save by a hopelessly stupid player. For example, there is only one entirely wrong way of delivering the subject of the Great G minor Fugue—an unbroken legato. But there are more right ways than can be quoted.

'The more we play Bach's works,' says Schweitzer 'the slower we take the tempi.' The statement does not apply to English organists. The French and German pace for Bach is slower than ours—especially the German. National character comes out even in so small a thing. The French insist on clarity, the Germans must have time to do every i and cross every t, and the English, in music as in everything else, prefer ideas served up in the rough or taken for granted rather than logically unfolded. We have earned a reputation for 'muddling through' in politics, business, sport and art because of our good-tempered pooh-poohing of detail. But after all we do muddle through, and in this matter of pace in playing Bach we are surely right in the main. The speed of music, like the life it reflects, has quickened a good deal since Bach's day. What was brilliant then is staid now. If Bach intended a piece to sound fiery and brilliant—as he certainly did in many cases—our business is to make it so. The only limit we need consider in the bravura works is that enjoined by the necessity for maintaining clarity in the polyphonic passages. In a general way the pace settles itself. If it is effective it is good. This is the only practical and common-sense test, because conditions vary so much that the pace that is right for one church may be wrong for another. No performer has so little use for the metronome as the organist, and none has more need of gumption.

Perhaps there is one exception to the demand for clearness. In most cadenza-like passages it is probable that Bach's intention is harmonic rather than melodic. A good deal of modern figuration depends for its effect not so much upon our hearing every note, as upon the harmonic basis being clearly defined, which is possible only when the pace is quick. We must not spoil Bach's cadenzas by sacrificing the fabric to the note. People who are fond of saying they cannot see the trees for the wood must be reminded that in art, musical no less than pictorial, it is sometimes the wood as a whole that we want to see, even if it be only in a roughish kind of way. Meticulous attention to detail sometimes ends in our not seeing the wood for the trees. These bravura passages are nothing if not fiery. We do not want to hear them as we hear a delicate bit of embellishment of Chopin. They are not strings of pearls, but dashing episodes, put in either by way of contrast to the preceding polyphony, or to give the player a chance of display. Sometimes they have considerable emotional significance, generally of the fiercely impatient kind. We must look at each in relation to its context, and interpret it accordingly. Such passages should rarely be played in strict time. They are best started with some deliberation, gathering impetus as they approach their climax—or climaxes, for sometimes there are secondary ones which must be led up to and fallen away from. When, as is usual, there is a climax at the end only, there should be an acceleration up to the last note. The close of some of se cadenzas can be made very dramatic. For a general principle as to the registration of such passages we may go to the orchestra. How are they treated? Usually for wood-wind and full strings we use the double-bass. This gives pace withoutuddle, and if we apply it to the organ we have powerful reeds and heavy stops in reserve for massive chords that usually follow. But here in almost every detail in the performance of Bach's organ works, the player must decide in accordance with his instrument and building. A wish carrying out of the suggestions in text-books may end in a mere travesty of Bach. On the other hand, if we diligently experiment, sometimes coming to a friend at the console, we may throw books overboard; our playing can hardly fail to be as full of life and interest as the music itself.

Bach's organ-music is but a modest part of his enormous output. Of the forty-six volumes issued by the Bach-Gesellschaft only two and portions of others are devoted to works for the organ. That he has somehow come to be regarded as the special pride and patron of the organist. Rightly or wrongly, we feel that we are akin to John Sebastian in a way that no pianist or violinist can ever be. We dare not claim that he wrote better for our instrument than for any other. On the contrary, the organ fugues, both in quantity and quality, are if anything slightly below those for the lute and harpsichord, partly because the standard of the organ fugues as a whole suffers from the largish proportion of immature work. If the chorale preludes had not been almost entirely neglected until recent years, we might have felt that we above all know Bach because in this part of his organ-music he expressed himself with an intimacy for which a parallel is found more easily in literature than in music.

Perhaps the explanation lies in the fact that, in this country at all events, his revival was largely brought about by Wesley, Jacob, and other organists. As a result, despite the present and growing popularity of the choral works, concertos, suites, and the 'Forty-eight,' we still think of Bach as an organ composer who made occasional and brilliantly successful dashes into other fields of creative work. We are wrong, of course, and we know we are wrong, but the feeling persists, and we need be in no hurry to cure ourselves. The world is round because of such illogical affections.

But much is due from disciples who are specially favoured, or who merely imagine themselves to be. Is our playing of Bach's organ music on a level with that of the clavier works in concert-halls, studios, or even in the good average musical household? Are we helping our pupils and audiences to see Bach whole—the poet and stylist of the chorale preludes, and the polished chamber musician of the trio-sonatas, as well as the writer of energetic toccatas, preludes, and fugues? Or do we limit ourselves to a handful of brilliant and popular works, as an investment yielding a handsome and quick return in technique and reputation?

So much of Bach's organ music is now transcribed for orchestra, pianoforte duet, and pianoforte solo, that it is safe from oblivion without the aid of the organist. These transcriptions, however, increase his responsibilities in another way. The music may be effective in its new guise, but it depends as a whole so much upon the great scale and sustaining powers of the organ that it can never be heard at its best through any other medium. More than ever before the public ought to be able to count on hearing the finest of it played to perfection on the instrument for which it was written. With brilliant performances of the transcriptions in their ears people will expect much of the organist, and his casual and not too clean delivery of a well-worn fugue will no longer serve.

The history of music is a record, at once melancholy and cheering, of the futility of appraising composers till they have been not merely dead but neglected for at least a generation. Survival is a test, but a good stretch of it may be due to tradition and convention. Revival is a much more severe ordeal, especially when the works have to be painfully collected and collated, and given to the public in dribbles during a half century, as was the case with Bach's. Never was there so astonishing a revival. Obscure in his life, though acclaimed by the limited circle to whom his gifts were known, Bach was so forgotten by the next generation that it seemed almost as if he and his music had never been. Yet to-day there is no composer whose future is more assured.

And this future lies in no narrow range. No composer is indispensable in so many fields as Bach. He provides a solid part of the repertory of violinist, violoncellist, flautist, pianist, chorale, organist, orchestra, and church choir. He is one of the few creators who have worked with equal success in the monumental and the miniature. Who but he has so often and so successfully touched the extreme limits of mood and size? Many composers might have written the little dances in the suites; a few might have produced the Passions and the B minor Mass. Bach did both, and so easily as to make the feat appear a matter of course.

Varied as were Bach's activities, he no doubt had his favourite sphere. Bearing in mind the obstacles he met with in the performance of his more difficult concerted works, choral and instrumental, we may be sure that he was happiest when, as performer and composer combined, he depended upon himself alone. The organ, with its ample resources, must have given him a sense of power and freedom he found nowhere else. Forkel tells us he would improvise organ music for two hours at a time—a long string of movements on a single theme. In the organ-loft, then, he won his greatest personal triumphs and expressed his deepest feelings, and we may well believe that, given his choice, it is there, above all, he would have his memory kept green.

THE END.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

Warned by Editor that space is valuable this month, must reduce language to bare bones, à la Alfred Jingle. Such meagre doings appropriate—brings Musical Times into line with modern composers' method of elimination of unessential. (Blessed words—like Mesopotamia—but observe with pain that despite paring down modern composer takes long while deliver goods—should carry elimination further—be ruthless—why stop at unessential?)

More alarms in critical circles during past month—Stravinsky again storm-centre. Leave fighting to advance guard of disputants—one says bubble burst—other equally sure no bubble—epoch-making music. Truth most likely between two. Heard 'Sacre du Printemps' as symphony twice—thrills at times—nary a thrill at good many others—unequal work, very. But thrills unusually potent—made me wish hear work again and again—especially if second part drastically cut. Had no doubt, though, that performance as ballet would strengthen weak spots. Expected Russians provide right choreography—brutal and elemental—know their powers that way. But subject beat them. Primitive methods of hailing Spring far from idyllic—quite reverse—disgraceful goings on—but all in good faith—no harm meant—simple folk—ages dark—very. Fit subject for folk-lore societies, but as for stage representation—Tush! Still one might skirt round border-line picturesquely. But early Russians, as represented by late ones at Princes, dull dogs. When in Spring their fancy lightly turned to thoughts of pairing off, no gusto—no 'once-aboard-the-lugger' style—lots of tame calisthenics—kind of thing Lieutenant Muller would have us do a-mornings—knees bend—rise on toes—reach right arm round left shoulder and count vertebræ—if you can—repeat with left arm—again if you can—fatiguing even for lissom Russians—boring for audience—very. Amorous flights hardly more entertaining. Each sad young man selects no less tristful damsel—hauls her on shoulder (regretfully, as if would have preferred sister)—carries her across stage—gently dumps her down—begins fresh batch of Mullerisms. Assembled damsels (now on verge of tears) fall to round games of simple and depressing character. Sokolova, who should do nothing but flit and float, so far wasted—stationary—Patience on monument—holding jaw (literally)—deep in thought—or tense with toothache. In last few minutes of ballet woke up—released jaw—brought house down with frenzied solo dance—saved ballet from utter failure—like top note at end of poor song—fetches 'em—but poor song all the same. Ditto ballet. Tumultuous applause from one section of audience—rich and eloquent silence from another—hisses from yet another. Ayes apparently had it—but ballet given only three times, then withdrawn—so noes right after all. Personally sorry show poor—had hoped and expected conversion—prepared join in convulsive transports of Henry Leigh, who improvised ballet on his own in stalls—stout work with arms and hands—costly cane (apparently knobbed with gold of Ophir) projecting at dangerous angle—stout gentleman leaving in hurry nearly impaled himself—fortunately dress shirt superstarched—unexpected breastplate—ferrule glanced off—all well—lucky escape—very.

Had no intention of discussing ballets in particular. Began with idea of trying to say how ballet in general strikes plain man such as writer. First, observe ballet audiences (anyway those a Princes) most uncritical mob. Hysterical applause—bouquets—laurel wreaths—no matter whether good or bad work on stage. Believe if disguised myself as Woizikovsky (though figure perhaps obstacle) and capered uncouthly while orchestra tuned up would receive ovation. Advanced members of audience would say choreography of right kind free from hint of grace or rhythm, and music happily devoid of emotion and poetic or literary suggestion—polyphony of rhythm and tonal values juxtaposed all over the shop. Less advanced spectators would beat hands together—cry 'bravo!'—lest they should appear behind times—better be dead than out of date at Princes. Same uncritical attitude makes them swallow a silly affectations and conventions of ballet. Plain man much overrated—plain man finds choreography often mere distraction when music is good. As for miming, absence of spoken word involves exaggerated facial expression as in 'movies'. Moreover, too little real dancing. Plain man wants more things like the miller's dance in 'Three Cornered Hat.' Thinks, too, that toe dancing is overdone. Admits its difficulty—tried himself one morning waiting for bath—humiliating failure—should have begun when many years younger and slimmer—not yet a slimmer, of course, but inches—or feet. Anyway difficulty does not justify these Russians overdoing it—effect that of short stilts—stilt-walkers—ugly—word 'stilted' just fits case. Plain man wonders, too, why stage must be always so dusty—dancers with exquisite shoes—sometimes no less exquisite bare feet—sight for sore eyes if they show soles—black with grime—why? Stage should be like deck of ship—one can eat dinner off it—yet one never does, somehow. If dust necessary for grip use pink dust—match feet and look well on shoes. No doubt plain man Philistine and all behind times—plain man always is. Not a bit ashamed of it.

Still, spent some enjoyable hours at ballet. Wish were more as good as 'Petrouchka.' Odd when think of it—most poignant and human ballet is concerned chiefly with puppets, while some others humans no more convincing than animated lay figures. Conducting of Anserm ne of chief sources of pleasure—few things more picturesque than silhouette against lighted stage. eloquent hands—captivating beard when seen in profile—not mere hairy extra but real feature—something to swear by, like Beard of Prophet—active and eloquent, too—could have sworn ansermet produced fine sforzando with it one night. Silhouette less kind to late-comers stalls. Surprising number of profiles unable survive ordeal—too much nose (children of Shem)—not enough chin (decadent youth)—too much chin—several too many in fact (overfed boorjwaw)—heads wrong shape—forehead in unusual place—somehow got round behind—skull like plateau with small concavity (bath for canary)—or high and dome-like (excellent for perch after bath).

Suddenly remember space is short, so must hold over further ballet notes till the Russians come again. But must return thanks for valuable health tip. Writer getting on in years—worried about equator—steadily increasing despite hot weather and Spartan diet. Week ago started doing daily extracts from 'Sacre du Printemps'—twenty minutes on rising—unaccompanied of course—marked improvement already. By the time can call it 'Sacre de l'Automne' hope to be once more agile stripling of dear dead days beyond recall.

Angry correspondent sends page advertisement culled from contemporary—asks my opinion—gives his own in no uncertain way—hardly printable in old-established family journal such as this. Page boosting 'Some New Gems of Melody by the famous composer Mr. Frederick Drummond'—alluded to later in page as Drummond tout court—like other famous composers, Wagner—Elgar, quite right, treat 'em all alike. Whole page so rich in humour that correspondent shouldn't be angry—ought to see funny side—good in everything, even in fulsome boosting, if you can find it. Wish had room quote almost every sentence—string of pearls—flowers of speech. Here are specimen blossoms:

He has a faire for touching the hearts of the music-loving public. Whether it be in the big emotional song with the highly dramatic Finale or in the delicate ballad that must needs be sung on soft dulcet tones, he is equally at home. . . . Many of his numbers are among the world's biggest triumphs, and his song-cycles sell with a power akin to magic. His songs have such a universal appeal that his fame is world-wide.

Maybe—yet I never heard his name before. My loss, of course, but there you are. However:

A Drummond melody is so hauntingly conceived that it lives in the memory: and, thanks to the care with which he chooses his lyrics, his works are gems which never lose their power to please. The secret of Drummond's success lies not only in a rare gift for melody. He is a keen classical student, and his works bear the impress of his superb musical training. He studied at the Royal Academy under that distinguished tutor, Mr. . . . There is consequently a depth in Drummond's compositions which give (sic) them a permanent popularity.

Wonder what Mr. . . . thinks of the extract from Drummond's 'Then will I sing to you,' printed beside this paragraph. Slushy platitude—no sign of the superb musical training, though of course cannot blame distinguished tutor for that.

The advertisement writer now becomes dithyrambic, although dealing with hard business matter:

This famous composer is now about to enter upon a new and wider sphere of success. Messrs. . . .

Yes; I think a few dots. Don't mind giving famous composer free ad., but must draw line at publishers:

Messrs. . . . , whose business acumen is second to none among first-class publishers

(though they say it as shouldn't) have, at enormous cost, entered into a contract with Drummond, whereby his imaginative and creative genius can flourish under the best possible circumstances. All Drummond's works for the future will be published by this enterprising firm, and the composer is free to produce just what his inspiration dictates. He will not be fettered by commissions to write this or that style of song or song-cycles. Whenever the composer is specially inspired by a set of lyrics, he will write them up in his own inimitable way, and send the score to the publishers, who will hand the masterpiece on to an eager public.

All the same, should advise famous composer to stick to style of 'Then will I sing to you.' Enterprising firm didn't enter into that enormously costly contract as mere hobby. If they are to get money back he must send them kind of score eager public like. Mustn't wait till 'specially inspired,' or will mess up show by writing music that bears impress of superb musical training, and that would never do. Meanwhile, good news for eager public (aren't you getting excited?):

Frederick Drummond's pen has already been busy. Three beautiful songs . . . Two are big songs which will delight the great emotional artiste (sic) who desires to thrill his audience. The other is one of those melodious encore balladettes which, sung according to the composer's inspired instructions, impels one to utter the most coveted commendation 'Isn't it divine?'

There is much, much more in the same strain, including photograph of famous composer engaged in pleasant and profitable task of writing-up special inspiration in own inimitable way—too much engrossed to look pleasantly at camera like you and me—quite right—catch divine afflatus while on wing—worth two in bush—dot it down—send score publisher—waiting to hand on to feverishly impatient public.

Why do I pull leg? No personal feeling in the matter—both composer and publisher unknown to me. But detest humbug—feel it must be pilloried. If no one else do unpleasant job, will take it on—do my best. 'How "humbug"?' you ask. Thus: Nobody objects to slush being advertised so long as it doesn't pretend to be something else. But Drummond and publishers trying to run with hare and hunt with hounds. Can't have it both ways. Judging by sample, Drummond simply very ordinary shop ballad compiler (such things compiled rather than composed). Has chosen easy and profitable path—England free country (nominally at all events), so no one blames him. But having signed good fat contract to give least musical section of public what it wants, must not expect rest of us to be impressed with his 'keenness for classical study.' Willing believe Drummond can write good original music—though no signs of it so far come my way. If he can, and deliberately chooses turn out sentimental tosh, must not complain if classed with rest of tosh merchants. Meanwhile, regret no recognised Order of Biscuit at disposal. If were, should award it—First Class—to writer of advertisement. Something should go to composer of balladettes as well—should toss him Biscuitette.

Restaurant music long since a noisy bore—now become positive obstacle to busy man's taking nourishment. Hungry and hurried last night—unusual experience—the former, that is—tottered fainting into ever-open door of popular restaurant—sank into seat—huge place—got up regardless—dreamt-I-dwelt-in-marble-halls kind of thing. Secured attention of neat-handed Phyllis—gave modest order befitting humble journalist. Crash from orchestra at far end of hall about a furlong away—burly baritone burst into ballad—761 diners ceased stoking—same number of forks suspended between plate and mouth, each bearing due portion of victuals—baritone going strong—alien—throat of brass—forehead of ditto—lungs of leather—glad there is a furlong between us. Meanwhile pangs of hunger developing rapidly—that sinking feeling—beckon neat-handed Phyllis. 'Is food coming?' Phyllis very sorry and all that—cannot fetch food till song over—instructions—much as place is worth. Venture to explain—came for food, not for concert. Have no use for concert just now, but immediate and pressing use for food. Point of view evidently new to Phyllis—nonplussed—calls superior officer; another alien, 'Ver' sorry! No can do; streekt orders—silence while ze museek; she not long now—near feenish.' In support of plea, indicated 'suspended forks (only 760 now, one impatient client silently wolfing under cover of evening paper). Nothing for it but to wait. When song ended at long last forks got busy again, and Phyllis procured food. Managed to bolt it—then bolted myself just as Leather-lungs got on hind legs for another song. Shall avoid restaurant in future. Don't like this application of old saw, 'No song, no supper.' Good deal to be said for its inversion, though. Dreamt last night was at West-End concert-hall—consulted programme and waited for first song. Attendant approached respectfully—Sorry to keep me waiting, but rule of management, 'No supper, no song.' Tit-bit to-night, 'Côtelette Ernest, with sauce Diaghilev.' Would I kindly wait for song till I have eaten? Would I? Would I not? Cutlet delicious—just decided, after all, much to be said in favour of encores, when woke up.

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XIX.—RICHARD DAVY

One of the most attractive items in the programme of the Holy Week music at Westminster Cathedral, in 1921, was the performance of the four-part Passion for Palm Sunday, by Richard Davy, probably the earliest example of Passion Music by an English composer. Dr. R. R. Terry describes it as 'smooth, easy, and flowing; it displays a very high standard of contrapuntal technique; but, above all, it is expressive, virile, and dramatic.' This most interesting composition is found in an early 16th century MS. belonging to Eton College; though, alas! through vandalism, only forty-three perfect compositions remain out of the ninety-eight which appear in the Index. Of these forty-three Richard Davy contributed six, namely, 'O Domine celi terreque creator' (five parts), 'In honore summe matris' (five parts), 'Salve Jesu Mater vere' (five parts), 'Stabat Mater' (five parts), 'Virgo templum' (five parts), and 'Salve Regina' (five parts). The 'Pryke-Song' books belonging to King's College, Cambridge, in 1529, contain an 'Autem' by Davy, and there are other compositions by him in the Harleian MS., 1709, St. John's College, and the Cambridge University Library, as well as three three-part songs with English words in the famous Fayrfax MS. in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 5465). Two of his English carols are very interesting, namely, 'Ah! blessed Jhesu!' and 'Ah, my hart, remember.'*

Yet, though we have such admirable specimens of Davy's sacred and secular works, Dr. Terry says that 'as a composer he is entirely unknown to-day,' and that regarding his biography very little is known save that 'he flourished in the late 15th and early 16th centuries.' Up to the present, the only details of Davy's life are in the very brief sketch of him contributed to the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (1904)—and these details are one solitary paragraph of less than four lines—by Mr. J. F. R. Stainer. It is as well to give the text in order to show how meagre is the information that has been hitherto unearthed regarding such a distinguished composer: 'Richard Davy or Davys, a composer of some repute, was choirmaster, organist, and informator choristarum at Magdalen College, Oxford, from 1490 to 1492.'

After patient research I have not been able thoroughly to unravel the mystery that seems to enshroud the life story of Richard Davy, yet I have succeeded in piecing together a few new facts that may serve as a basis for a future musical historian. First of all, as he was about sixteen when he entered Magdalen College, Oxford, we are safe in dating his birth about the year 1467, and, as has been seen, he was appointed Organist and Master of the Choristers of his College in 1490—remaining in office for two years. Possibly he remained at Oxford for some time longer (probably for the sake of his divinity studies), and became a priest in 1497, at which date Richard Parker was appointed organist.

The fact of Davy being a priest in 1497 disposes of the suggestion made to me a few years ago by a clerk in the Public Record Office, that possibly he was to be identified with Richard Davy, who was granted an annuity of 6*d.* a day on February 15, 1501. This suggestion cannot stand, because the latter namesake was 'a yeoman of the crown, and King's servant,' as is evident from the printed 'Calendar of Patent Rolls' of Henry VII. (1494-1509).

Richard Davy was chaplain to Sir William Boleyn in 1501, in which year was born Anne Boleyn (grand-daughter of Sir William), destined to be the unfortunate wife of Henry VIII. His name appears in deeds of the years 1505 and 1506; and in the latter year, on May 15, he was a party to a licence of alienation of the Manor of Stiffkey, in Norfolk, to the use of Sir Thomas Boleyn. Another deed mentions him as one of the feoffees in a grant of the Manors of Filby, Possewyk, West Lexham, and Carbrooke (May 15, 1506), to the use of Thomas Boleyn, son and heir of William Boleyn, Knight, deceased.* Apparently the priest-composer was continued in the service of Sir Thomas Boleyn from 1506 to 1516, the principal family residence being Lickling, in Norfolk.

* For much kind help in locating Davy's MSS. I am indebted to Mr. H. B. Collins, Mus. B.

Apropos of Sir Thomas Boleyn, whose father had married one of the co-heiresses of the Earl of Ormonde, an Irish tradition has it that Anne Boleyn was born at the Castle of Carrick-on-Suir, in 1501, or early in 1502. Certainly, the popular idea that Anne's birth took place in 1507 cannot be sustained, for she was a Dame-in-Waiting to the French Queen, Claude, in 1519—a position that could scarcely be held by a girl of twelve! Thomas, 7th Earl of Ormonde, died on August 8, 1515, leaving his immense English estates, containing seventy-two manors, to his two daughters, the elder of whom (Anne) was married to St. Leger and the younger (Margaret) to Sir Piers Butler. On the following December 12, the Lord Deputy of Ireland wrote to Cardinal Wolsey in regard to Sir Thomas Boleyn's claim to a portion of the Irish estates, which was contested by Sir Piers Butler, who claimed to be 8th Earl of Ormonde. After much litigation, on October 6, 1520, a proposal for marriage was made between Sir Piers Butler and Mary Boleyn, Anne's elder sister, and an Irish Act of Parliament was passed declaring Sir Piers as lawful heir to Sir James, 6th Earl. Subsequently, Sir Thomas Boleyn was created Viscount Rochford and Earl of Wiltshire, Ormonde, and Carrick; and Sir Piers Butler was created Earl of Ossory.† Henry VIII., in order to settle the family feud, as Prof. Pollard writes, 'arranged for a marriage between Anne Boleyn and Sir Piers Butler,' in 1522; and further, 'in order to propitiate the Ormonde family the King appointed Sir Piers as Lord Deputy of Ireland, on March 6, 1522. Had Butler's marriage to Anne Boleyn come off in 1522, how different might have been the history of England!'

Meantime, Richard Davy was chaplain to Sir Thomas Boleyn from 1506 to 1515, and, as nothing further can be gleaned of him, it is natural to suppose that he died in the latter year. Certainly all his creative musical work that has come down ranges between the dates 1490 and 1513, and the real surprise is that his compositions are anything but crude.† Considering his period, his work, as Dr. Terry writes, 'is in every way individual and original.' One feature of the Passion Music is worthy of note, for while the generality of composers give a musical setting of the Turba, or 'speeches and cries of the mob,' Davy, in addition, writes choral music exclusively for the dialogue between Pilate and his wife. In other words, the convention of the 15th and 16th century was to have the Passion Music sung among three ecclesiastics, one being the first reason (a bass), singing the part of Christ, the second, or Chronista or Evangelista (a tenor), the narrative of the Evangelist, and the third, or Synagoga Turba (an alto), the exclamations of the Apostles, the crowd, and others. In Davy's score, a magnificent effect is produced by the glorious setting of the words: 'Vere filius Dei erat iste' ('Truly this was the Son of God'), assigned to the Centurion and the watchers at the Crucifixion. In opposition to the conventional method adopted by other composers, who treat these words 'in awe-stricken accents,' Davy 'makes it ring out as a triumphant confession of faith.' Although the first three Turba choruses are missing in the Eton MS., and though the treble and tenor parts are also missing from the four choruses which follow, Dr. Terry has with rare skill supplied the missing choruses of the former from other portions of Davy's own music, which fit the words to perfection, and he has written new treble and tenor parts for choruses 2 to 5 in the same contrapuntal style of the composer and the period, quite a triumph of restoration.

So successful was the performance of Davy's Passion Music at Westminster Cathedral on Palm Sunday that it will probably become a permanent feature of the liturgical services on that day in future, just as Byrd's magnificent Passion Music is associated with the solemnities of Good Friday.

It may be well to add that the appearance of Davy's 'Autem' in the Cambridge 'Prick-Song' Books of 1529 is no proof whatever that he was then alive. As stated above, he probably died in 1515 or 1516.

THE MANUSCRIPT LIBRETTO OF 'FAUST'

BY CAMILLE SAINT-SAËNS, DE L'INSTITUT

(Authorised Translation by Fred Rothwell)

When and on what occasion did Gounod make me a present of this manuscript? I am unable to say definitely, though doubtless it was very shortly after the appearance of his famous work. Interesting by reason of the information it supplies on the genesis of 'Faust,' it is also valuable on account of the numerous musical annotations written on the margin, thus giving us the first spontaneous thoughts of the composer. I feel that these annotations are deserving of being more widely known.

Before undertaking this work, let us glance at the various ways in which French artists have dealt with that episode of Goethe's poem which in the public mind represents him as a whole, just as the episode of Francesca da Rimini sums up the whole of Dante's 'Divine Comedy,' though it is merely a tiny fragment thereof.

In Goethe's poem the name of the young amoureuse is Gretchen—i.e., Margot. She is simply the maid-servant of Dame Martha, in whose garden takes place the conversation between the four dramatis personæ. The first time I saw Goethe's 'Faust' played in a German theatre I was quite astonished to behold, appearing unexpectedly on the stage during the kermesse, a slightly-built brunette who replied to Faust's compliments in scandalised accents: 'Je ne suis pas une demoiselle, je ne suis pas belle. . . . ' and then rapidly hid away in the crowd. She was anything but the ideal fair-complexioned creature with whom Ary Scheffer has familiarised us (coming out of church with angelic mien, while Faust looks on enraptured), or the fanciful creation which Gounod's music has popularised.

* Calendar of Patent Rolls, 1494-1509, p. 484.

† Sir Piers was forced to surrender the title of Earl of Ormonde to Sir Thomas Boleyn, Viscount Rochford, in 1527. This title Boleyn retained till his death in 1537, when it reverted to the Butler family.

Previously we had had the 'Damnation of Faust' by Berlioz, where Marguerite, 'while binding her hair,' sings the 'Chanson du Roi de Thulé,' which the author calls a Gothic song, and which begins with that augmented 4th interval abhorred of ancient music, followed by ultra-modern chromatic successions. Distorted and unlovely though it be, this song none the less possesses the special quality of character in the highest degree. From what source then did it draw its inspiration? From the sketches of 'Faust' made by Delacroix, a series of ultra-romantic lithographs in which the person of Gretchen is strangely transformed? It is said that Goethe, when he saw them, affirmed that they completely expressed his own thought. The old, old comedy of great men flattering one another in order to create admirers! The sketches of Delacroix are in the first rank of artistic production, but they do not represent Goethe's 'Faust.'

The Marguerite and the Faust of Gounod differ so strikingly from their models that in Germany the famous opera is given the name of 'Margarethe.'

The Marguerite of Berlioz differs even more from the German Gretchen than does that of Gounod. She does not sit at her spinning-wheel, nor is she accompanied by Dame Martha. Here we have an ideal creature, appearing in a dream, if not in a vision, and Faust orders Mephisto to find her for him. There is nothing of this in Goethe's poem; we now have the French Marguerite, whom our public will accept in no other guise.

When I was a child there took place at Paris a thing delightful to behold: the military retreat, an ingenious combination of trumpets and drums that has long been discontinued. I can still recall the shades of night beginning to invade the Jardin du Luxembourg, the shooting stars—then an unexplained phenomenon—falling across the sky, and the drums and trumpets making a complete tour of the immense vault of heaven and ravishing my youthful senses as the strains alternately approached and died away in the distance. Berlioz heard and rightly appreciated this retreat; and, replacing the drums with timbales, blending the plaintive wail of the abandoned Marguerite with the distant songs of the students, he made this the background of a twilight scene, quite charming and striking in its originality, while essentially French in its character.

We are but too well acquainted with the present form of the retreat: not only is there no balanced combination of drums and trumpets, but the refrain itself, quite different from the old one, is executed 'to order,' without either rhythm or time, and in the most anti-musical fashion imaginable. And we are said to have made progress in music because the public has become accustomed to being bored, and rapturously applauds things it is utterly incapable of understanding!

Berlioz insisted on pointing out how different his 'Faust' was from the original. 'I have written,' he said, 'the "Damnation de Faust";' in Goethe's poem Faust is saved. Many parts of this opera are his own creation, notably the famous 'Course à l'abîme.' Many others are adapted from the Weimar poet, including the 'Chanson du Rat,' which he might well have omitted, for the whole of its value disappears in imitation; the refrain, built up on an untranslatable play upon words, here becomes a platitude:

Aussi triste, aussi misérable
Que s'il eut eu l'amour au corps!

But, after all, platitudes are frequent enough in the text of the 'Damnation of Faust,' and great the contrast between the wealth of the music and the poverty of the poem. How has it come about that the literary Berlioz, the fervent admirer of Victor Hugo, consented to bless this ill-matched union? Why did the critics, so strict against Scribe and other librettists, show such utter indifference before this anomaly? The gold and diamond embroidered mantle flung over this poverty hides it from view; let us not remove the veil!

On opening the precious libretto of 'Faust,' many are the surprises that await us. In the first place we are struck with the changes made in the work during rehearsal. No doubt some of these alterations the authors would have made of their own accord, but in this particular case we see the influence of the celebrated conductor Carvalho, a nervous man, perpetually changing humour and restless imagination. When he took up an opera, though one that had long been famous and was of world-wide renown, it must bear the impress of his individuality. I quote only one instance: it was he who conceived the strange idea, in the second Act of 'Orphée,' substituting for Eurydice an 'Ombre heureuse,' which no one had ever dreamt, and which still persists as an outrage on commonsense, in Gluck's masterpiece. As may be imagined, it was far worse when a new drama was brought to him. He had but one thing in his mind—to add his own ideas on to those of the author. The place and time of the action were continually changing; unexpected episodes arose in the excited brain; morceaux slowly worked out in the silence of the study had to disappear and make room for hurried improvisations. But all this came to an end when Massenet brought him the score of 'Manon,' containing the imprint Ne varietur. At last he found his master.

'Faust' was originally written in the opéra comique form, with dialogue. A delightful form, dating back to the most remote times; one to which the public has never been hostile, though it would tend to disappear had it not been retained in the operetta. 'Faust' was performed in this dress until the time when its introduction at the Opéra compelled the abandonment of the spoken word. Many musical treats owe their existence to this event, which gave the work the form it definitely assumed.

Jules Barbier and Michel Carré, interested in the subject, heartily gave themselves up to their task. Their first project was far too long; numerous suppressions or 'cuts' proved inevitable. Any who are curious to know what fragments were omitted will find most of them in the handsome brochure by Albert Soubies and Henri de Curzon entitled 'Documents inédits sur le Faust de Gounod.'

In the very first scene, Gounod appreciably abridged the monologue of Faust, where we find a great difference between the French copy and the German original. In the latter, the sound of the Easter bells and the singing of the choir cause the murderous cup to fall from Faust's hands; in the French libretto, he is arrested in his purpose by the fresh ringing voices of the young peasant girls and the rugged chants of the ploughmen as they praise the charms of nature. In the final apotheosis the religious choruses are suppressed.

After this scene, Wagner and Siebel, the master two pupils, come to converse with him, as in the original. There are here the words of tratto; I do not know if it was ever written. In the French score, the purpose of the coming of these characters was to inform the public of Siebel's love for Marguerite, to prepare the way for the appearance of the heroine. The preparation! This was at that time a dogma, as were the three unities in bygone times. When the Opéra obstinately refused to produce 'Samson et Dalila' I requested an influential person to give me his support. He replied that my work was not playable, because the character of Dalila was not prepared.

However it be, Wagner and Siebel disappeared from the first Act, then known as the Prologue. They reappeared only in the following Act, Wagner recited a few bars of the 'Chanson du Rat,' fortunately interrupted by Mephistopheles, and Siebel to become the youth who is chastely in love, as we know, with Marguerite.

It is with Mephistopheles that the musical annotations begin, written in pencil on the margin. The first are of no great interest, and differ but little from the finally accepted text. Here the principle of the preparation served the authors well.

In Goethe's poem Mephistopheles causes a number of women to appear before Faust, and when later on he accosts Gretchen, it is by chance: the old savant who had hitherto lived alone with his musty old volumes and his retorts, when transformed into a young man, falls in love with the first pretty girl he meets.

Here we have the ravishing vision of Marguerite the spinning-wheel, to the accompaniment of heavenly music, awakening love in the heart of Faust and deciding him to affix his signature to the villainish pact.

And now we come to the joyous gaiety and excitement of the kermesse. May I be permitted to state at this point, and in parenthesis, how greatly I deplore the fact that at Paris, as everywhere else, is morceau is distorted and misrepresented by too rapid a tempo. The deliciously charming 'Chœur des Vieillards' becomes a gross caricature, and the semble is nothing but an inharmonious and disconcerting hullabaloo.

Then followed a farewell scene between Valentin and Marguerite, the occasion of a long duet which Gounod set to music. This scene was a mistake, and ought to have been dispensed with; it disregarded the effect of the appearance of Marguerite on the occasion of her first meeting with Faust. But it is a delight to hear Madame Carvalho in the rôle of Marguerite, with that incomparable voice and wonderful delivery of hers. The final ensemble of the duet:

seemed to reverberate in the orchestra when, previous to the 'Air des Bijoux,' Marguerite says anxiously 'Me voilà toute seule!'

It must not be imagined that the song of the 'eau d'Or' was a spontaneous production, like an invective springing fully armed from the head of a giant. The Calf, in the first instance, was a Beetle which had proved very successful. As this original ending did not please—I do not know why—the authors considered several others, of which not a trace remains, before deciding upon the one with which we are acquainted.

To proceed to the following Act. With the 'Air des Bijoux' we enter upon interesting musical annotations that began in this way:

And later on we find:

Fortunately these octave leaps and unnecessary modulations have disappeared.

Nor has there remained any trace of these changes on resuming the motive:

Lastly we find the hint of a Coda:

which was left unfinished.

Now we enter into the drama . . . and also into the tragi-comedy of endless changes and modifications introduced not only at the rehearsals but even at the public performances, year after year. As each theatrical season came round and the work was taken up afresh, the indefatigable conductor brought forward new ideas, and the authors, not having the courage to oppose him, adopted his views. There were cuttings here, and additions there, along with a general upsetting of the order of the scenes.

Originally the third Act began at a cross-road: 'On the right, the church; on the left, Marguerite's house. Near the threshold a stone bench in front of which stands a spinning-wheel. In the centre, a fountain.'

Young maidens entered singing, carrying pitchers on their shoulders as they made their way towards the fountain. This took up an entire scene, with choruses carrying on a dialogue and a coryphée named Lise, who was to sing three couplets. Three were evidently too many, for Gounod retained only the third, as follows:

The final bars are missing; it is the termination of the air resumed by the chorus which alone has been retained, the cross-road having disappeared to give place to Marguerite's chamber. We can do no more than form suppositions regarding the harmonies which were to accompany this dainty couplet.

The maidens having departed, Marguerite sat down at her spinning-wheel and sang the air: 'Il ne revient pas! . . . ' which, after frequent curtainments and restorations, has finally disappeared. All the same, this is one of the finest pages of the entire score. The fact was that prince donne regarded it as fatiguing and not sufficiently effective!

Afterwards came Siebel, as at present, to console the poor abandoned girl. The annotations point to music different from that with which we are acquainted, and which would seem to be preferable:

Marguerite entered the church; then there came up Valentin and a few soldiers singing 'Déposons les armes' and the scene continued with long couplets by Valentin, responded to by the chorus.

These couplets were written, as evidenced by the words, fait-Sib., noted down by the author, but no trace whatsoever remains of them. They have been replaced by the popular chorus: 'Gloire immortelle de nos aïeux' taken from the unfinished score of 'Ivan le Terrible.'

Valentin entered the house and Siebel the church which, by a mechanical artifice that the huge stage of the Théâtre-historique rendered possible, filled up the entire available space and showed the interior of the building. It was as accompaniment of this impressive scenic effect that Gounod wrote the orchestral prelude which precedes that of the organ, a characteristic touch carrying us away from the emotions of the theatre and bringing us under those of the sanctuary by means so simple that it is impossible to admire them too much.

Berlioz, when dealing with the first performance of 'Faust,' made legitimate sport of a Mephistopheles retiring before the pommels of swords raised in the form of a cross, and yet showing no fear of a genuine cross by entering the church as he would a mill. In the 'Faust' of Goethe, it is not Mephistopheles who torments Marguerite, it is an evil spirit. But at the Opéra, what was to be done? Could a first-rate singer be curtailed to so short, and yet so important, a scene? In one of the numerous avatars of the play there had been discovered a subterfuge: Marguerite did not enter the church; just as she was crossing the threshold, she was stopped by Mephistopheles suddenly issuing from behind a pillar. This version did not last long; the scene went back to the church, which it ought never to have left, and the public gave no sign of noticing the anomaly that had shocked Berlioz. This scene, however, sometimes preceding and at other times following the death of Valentin, went through many oscillations before settling once for all in its true place.

The chorus 'Quand du Seigneur le jour luira' is written in the libretto in C minor and bears the annotation: 'Transpose to F minor.' The words that follow admit of other music, which has not been preserved:

accompanied by the same annotation, 'in F minor,' which here is incomprehensible.

The 'Nuit de Walpurgis' gave occasion for many different attempts. I remember one rehearsal in which a band of figurants, cheaply costumed as witches and riding their brooms, leapt about like madmen showing their heavy shoes and raising clouds of dust. There must also have been a chorus of real witches, singing and dancing round a cauldron filled with some blazing liquid. We read in Gounod's handwriting: 'Grande ritournelle pour la chaudière.' Ritornello, cauldron, and witches have disappeared, though afterwards, when the work was taken up again, witches and cauldron reappeared at the end of the Act. The words alone are given in the libretto; here is the music:

On another occasion Faust, in the presence of 'jeunes et courtisanes,' sang a drinking-song which is disappeared without leaving behind any regrets. In the original version, however, just as, following the insinuation of Mephistopheles, he was taking up his goblet, the phantom of Marguerite appeared before him, and Mephistopheles thus accosted him:

When 'Faust' was transferred to the stage of the Opéra, everything pointed to the necessity for introducing a ballet, a thing impossible at the Théâtre Lyrique. Would it be believed that Gounod suggested that I should write the music of one? At that time his religious ideas, he said, forbade him undertaking such a task. The manner in which I accepted his offer was a disguised refusal. He understood, wrote the ballet himself, and never had occasion to repent doing so.

The first evening, while the beautiful Marquet in Grecian costume was evoking visions of Phidias and Sappho, motionless women on each side of the stage bore perfume-burning censers whence issued streams of greyish-white smoke which was wafted towards the spectators. The latter were eagerly sniffing the delightful odour when a frightful smell, resembling that emitted by blue lights, spread all over the theatre. . . .

The Prison Act began originally with Marguerite's mad woman, in a scene which has disappeared, but has also the greater part of a long duet between herself and Faust. No prima donna could have endured the fatigue of such an Act, following immediately upon the others. Gounod told me that he greatly regretted the mad scene, of which unfortunately he did not allow me to hear a note. No other trace of this remains than the indication of a 'sharp minor' in the composer's handwriting, calculated to awaken a sense of keen regret, for there is not a single morceau in the whole work written in this key, with the exception of the prelude of the Act, originally intended as the preparation for this scene. Only this fragment of the great duet remains:

Later on, in the following passage:

Faust—Oui, mon cœur se souvient! mais suis-moi!
 L'heure presse! . . .
Marguerite—Pourquoi détournes-tu les yeux?
 Embrassez-moi, Seigneur! ou bien je vous embrasse!

We find this modification, written by Gounod:

Faust—Oui, mon cœur est à toi! mais suis-moi!
 L'heure presse! . . .
Marguerite—Non, reste encore! et que ton bras
 Comme autrefois au mien s'enlace!
Faust—Oh ciel! Elle ne m'entend pas!

The work of Gounod's has achieved a glorious destiny, though the path of fame was not an easy one to follow. In contradistinction to certain works gradually launched on a successful career through judicious advertising, 'Faust' was subjected, from its first appearance, to a degree of hostility which has never been relaxed. This fine production—at first not sufficiently Italian, then not sufficiently German, now regarded as too simple because it does not respond to that craze for exaggerated complication which is the bane of the new style of music, attaching prime importance to the human voice which it has become the fashion to disparage—has always had on its side the masses who do not trouble about theories, love to understand what they hear, and, when they see singers on the stage, naturally consider that they are there for the purpose of singing. The above-mentioned brochure of Soubies and Curzon establishes the fact that, in spite of a malevolent press, 'Faust' has almost invariably attracted the crowds; inadequate receipts have been so infrequent that it is unnecessary to take them into consideration.

When 'Faust' crossed Paris to find a new home at the Opéra, it was an event of importance. Everybody predicted a catastrophe. Some feared, others hoped that the music of Gounod, with its quiet and unobtrusive orchestra, would pale into insignificance by the side of the famous works which formed the basis of the repertory. The 'Garden' Act, more particularly, would be literally annihilated on that immense stage. This Act of tender and delightful love-making just missed being omitted—at one time it was considered doubtful whether it should be altogether suppressed. The fear was expressed that it would not be effective!

Giving the lie to these evil predictions, it was found that the clear, simple, and yet delightfully coloured orchestral music of Gounod acquired its full value and importance in the large salle, bringing with it a charm it had not hitherto known. How comes it that this lesson has not even yet been understood? Why does one persist in resorting to sheer noise and parasitical complications which quite drown the human voice instead of sustaining and supporting it?

The reason is that there are two kinds of simplicity. There is that of the simple-minded, of which it is unnecessary to speak, and there is another simplicity, which attains to the highest consummation of art. But this latter it is not given to everyone to reach.

The 'Subject Index to Periodicals'—music section, price 2s. 6d.—issued by the Library Association at Stapley House, 33, Bloomsbury Square, should be on the shelves of anyone who likes to read or has to write about music. It indexes about 3,500 articles on musical topics that have appeared in about ninety periodicals in the years 1917-19.

Music in the Foreign Press

EGON WELLESZ

The Frankfort Neue Blätter für Kunst und Literatur (May 15) provides information on Dr. Egon Wellesz, and on his lyric play, 'Prinzessin Girnara,' which was recently produced both at Frankfort and at Hanover, and is giving rise to much discussion. Alfred Sandt briefly surveys the composer's output:

Dr. Wellesz is a pupil of Schönberg. His early works show in a measure Debussy's influence. His pianoforte pieces (Op. 9), his Idylls (Op. 21), inspired by poems by Stephan Georg, his songs (Op. 22) are described as full of interest. The writer also praises the String Quartets, of which the fourth is a striking instance of Wellesz's terseness, its five movements consisting of four hundred and thirty-two bars in all.

In the same writer's opinion, 'Prinzessin Girnara' shows to the full Dr. Wellesz's power of melodic expression:

No ornaments, but lines remarkable for their purity and vigour, which lead to glowing climaxes. The themes are broad, and, through their very vocal character, lend themselves to the expression of exalted solemnity; their plastic possibilities are exploited to the uttermost, with telling effect.

In the Zeitschrift für Musik (second June issue), L. Wüthmann, after acknowledging the composer's earnestness of purpose, and praising parts of the work, complains of the 'unbearable cacophony' of certain passages.

NEW DEPARTURES IN SCORING

The Nouvelle Revue Musicale (June) gives the following description—borrowed from the daily Comedia—of the score of Darius Milhaud's new Ballet, 'L'Homme et son Désir':

Twelve solo instruments, comprising neither horn, nor bassoon, nor trombone; a vocal quartet in the band-pit, and eighteen percussion instruments, eked out by tooters and whips.

BUSONI

The June issue of Il Pianoforte is devoted to Busoni, and comes as a very useful complement to the Busoni number of the Musikblätter der Anbruch (January, 1921).

Dr. Leichtenritt considers the part played by Bach's works in Busoni's development as a composer. Alfredo Casella, after offering some interesting remarks upon Busoni's greatness as a pianist, writes:

'It has often been alleged that the interpreter should remain a mere servant of the creative artist. I do not quite agree; yet I believe that the ideal interpreter should be altogether impersonal. But when I hear Busoni, that colossal artist, who deals with the works of the loftiest geniuses not humbly, as a priest performing a rite, but with the pride of a conqueror, I almost feel my conviction falter. The truth, however, is that Busoni is a magnificent exception: he is a creator rather than an interpreter.'

E. J. Dent's article on Busoni's 'Doctor Faust' is translated from the Athenæum. Attilio Brugnoli writes on 'Cerebrality and Paradox in Busoni's art.' He considers that if Busoni is accused of being too 'cerebral' in his interpretations, it is because he keeps perfect command over his nerves. His sensitiveness is profound and far-reaching. What is paradoxical is that he should be so restless in his quest for improvement. Four times he has made fresh start in the practice of his instrument. And after writing many works in pure classical style, he came to the conclusion that the idiom which so many composers of genius had used was nearing exhaustion, and advocated the use of interval smaller than the semitone, and other innovations.

"RUSSIAN MUSIC OF TO-DAY"

The Revue Musicale for July is entirely devoted to contemporary Russian music. Boris de Schloezer's article on Scriabin covers ground which is better known in this country than in France, where Scriabin's works have never roused much interest. A few paragraphs by Lazare Saminsky on Gniessi and on Miaskovsky make us thirst to know more about these composers—especially the former, who is described as:

... possessing the fervid mind of an Eastern priest, and combining modern refinement in thought with a fine archaism in expression.

Henri Forterre's article on musical conditions in Soviet Russia teems with interesting information. The writer lived three years under the Bolshevik régime, conducting both at Petrograd and at Moscow. His statements of facts and the statistics which he gives are equally depressing. He lays stress upon the nefarious results of the substitution of State organization for private initiative, to which music in Russia owed so much of its former progress.

Important articles are devoted to Stravinsky by E. Ansermet and to Prokofiev by B. de Schloezer.

STRAVINSKY

Ansermet's contribution is interesting for its clear statement of the æsthetic principles from which, according to him, Stravinsky's works proceed, and for the workmanlike way in which he endeavours to illustrate every point he makes.

He considers that Stravinsky is guided, first and last, by 'a profound sense of life and inexhaustible musical imagination.' His art he describes as thoroughly objective:

We may see in his music mere notes, or perceive its message to our mind. That music works like so many metaphors, and calls for active reactions on the hearer's part. Stravinsky never resorts to self-confession nor to actual description, whether matter-of-fact or romantic. He disengages the essentials of every object or topic, and translates those essentials into purely musical forms. The spirit that guides him is that of the mediæval artisan, who was chiefly concerned with practical considerations of fitness, not that of the modern artist intent on achieving ideal beauty. His works may not represent an ideal of structure: but they are written to be heard. People think he is in quest of picturesque effects when he is merely pitting volumes, weights, and densities against each other. It is essentially in his style that his individuality reveals itself; a style which derives from the interdependence and mutual reactions of the various elements rather than from the quality of those elements considered singly.

The writer illustrates this assertion by adducing many musical examples, and discussing them lengthily. His conclusion is:

The further Stravinsky proceeds, the more he feels impelled to seek the hall-mark of his works in purity and frankness; yet he differentiates them even more sharply from their subject, but only the better to effect the reunion of the two in our minds.

PROKOFIEV

oris de Schloezer considers that the chief synchrony of Prokofiev's music is :

... its character of energy, the will-power expressed in it. No violence, no explosion of passion, but a uniform, almost mechanical, tenseness; no shades, chiaroscuro, but sharp, definite lines. His latest tendency is to give greater preponderance to melody, to eliminate ornaments and harmonic complications. His scoring makes, not for mellowness, but for clear-cut contrasts. He ignores tender emotions, and psychology plays no part in his work.

Prokofiev, born in 1891, is a pupil of Liadof for harmony and fugue, Witthol for form, Rimsky-Sakov and Tcherepnin for instrumentation; later studied composition with Serghei Tanéïev and pianoforte-playing with Essipova. In 1914 he was awarded the Rubinstein Prize for pianist-composers. He has written, besides 'Chout,' three operas, one of which is to be produced next season at the Metropolitan Theatre, New York; three tone-poems; 'Sinfonietta' and a 'Symphonie Classique'; three concertos, five Sonatas, a 'Humorous Scherzo' for bassoons, and various other works. In the same year Emile Vuillermoz declares that 'Chout' is an important landmark in the evolution of musical art, work instinct with vitality, cheerful, youthful, which simultaneously fulfils some of our innermost and most cherished hopes.

In Il Pianoforte (June) Darius Milhaud, writing in Paris, declares that 'Chout' lacks construction, inner logic, both of which he finds in the composer's 'Scythian' Suite. In his opinion, Prokofiev's melodic ideas are never convincing.

FAURÉ'S SECOND QUINTET

In the Revue Musicale (July) Alfred Cortôt praises the lofty inspiration, the perfect architecture, the richness and simplicity of the French master's latest work, which was played at the Société Nationale.

THE MODERN PIANOFORTE CONCERTO

After reviewing the innovations introduced in that particular form of musical work since the days of Liszt and Brahms, Paul Emerich (Musikblätter der Jugend, June) notes that :

We have as yet no instance of a radically modern Pianoforte Concerto: neither Schönberg nor Schreker, nor the French nor British innovators, have touched that form. Perhaps the difficulty of the task of differentiating the colour-range of the pianoforte from that of the orchestra acts as a deterrent.

DESECRATIONS.

In the Courrier Musical (June) Vuillemin protests against the adjunction of dancing to music which dancers have written for no such purpose :

Bach, Beethoven, Wagner failed to foresee Duncanism. Either the dance which we now see in the music of the Suite in D, or the Funeral March from the 'Eroica,' and of Isolde's Death, has no connection with the music—in which case it is odious—or it truly expresses (a point on which I have my doubts) Bach's faith, Beethoven's pathos, Wagner's lyricism—in which case it indecently exhibits, in the glare of the stage, what composers of genius had elected to entrust to the voice of music unassisted.

A COLLABORATOR OF LISZT

In the Signale für die Musikalische Welt (June 22) Georg Richard Cruse describes the musical activities of August Conradi (1821-73), who is chiefly known as a composer of light music, but who during the 'forties wrote no less than five symphonies.

Liszt, we are told, probably met Conradi in 1842, and soon afterwards took him as assistant. Conradi is responsible for the scoring of Liszt's 'Tasso,' of his 'Goethe Festmarsch,' and of ten minor works, most of them unpublished. The writer believes that he has also scored 'Ce qu'on entend sur la montagne.'

TABLOID CRITICISM

On May 28, 29, two Wagner Festivals were given at the Paris Concerts-Pasdeloup. Darius Milhaud's notice (Courrier Musical, June 15) consists of three words in bold capitals, 'Down with Wagner.'

In his notice of a previous concert, the same writer expressed the hope that :

... next year we shall hear less of Beethoven and of Wagner, more of Mendelssohn, Schönberg, Bartók, Prokofiev, and Erik Satie.

A PARADISE FOR CRITICS

After remarking that writers in musical journals are able to devote more thoughtful consideration to their verdicts than those who write in haste for daily papers, Edwin Janetschek (Zeitschrift für Musik, second June number) continues :

Our concert- and theatre-goers eagerly await the notices in their favourite daily, so as to readjust their opinion and determine what their attitude towards works and artists is to be.

A LITTLE KNOWN WRITER ON MUSIC

The May issue of La Critica Musicale contains picturesque effusions on the mysticism of music, on Beethoven, Wagner, and Debussy, by Giuseppe Vannicola (1877-1915), a violinist and writer, who in the former capacity was Balestrieri's model for his appalling 'Beethoven.'

BACH AS HE WAS KNOWN

In Le Ménestrel (June 3) Ch. M. Widor outlines the history of the organ class at the Paris Conservatoire :

Fifty years ago Bach was practically unknown there. I can remember how moved the kind, gentle Ambroise Thomas (the Director until 1896) was after hearing one of the Chorales played at an examination. 'What wonderful music!' he exclaimed, 'How can it be that we know nothing of it! Where does it come from?'

PUCCINI

In the Frankfurter Zeitung (quoted in the Revue Musicale, July) Paul Bekker describes Puccini's works, as the exemplification in operatic form of musical comedy methods :

Rodolphe, the insipid Pinkerton, Cavaradossi, are mere musical-comedy tenors with the additional gilding of the lyric stage. Mimi and Madame Butterfly hail straight from 'Mignon.' Musette is a musical comedy type par excellence. The structure is that of musical comedy: a succession of small pictures, without the slightest organic connection. You could transfer any song or duet from one work to another: for everywhere the music repeats the same trivialities.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS AND DANCES

FESTIVAL AT THE KING'S THEATRE, HAMMERSMITH

For me, and, I suppose, for many others, who are indebted to the English Folk-Dance Society for first sight of its intriguing figures, the words 'country dances' will always call up memories of a chain of youths and maidens—young England incarnate—flung with inimitable grace, after the manner of a Wedgwood frieze, across the dead black background of a stage. Purists might claim that they would have appeared truer to type, and to the simile, had the background been the ethereal blue of summer skies, but these joyful and anonymous young persons, clad in a kind of homely uniform—the girls wearing butcher-blue high-waisted frocks, with a slight girdle of carmine, white stockings, and black shoes with carmine bows, the men in soft white flannels, set off with gaily coloured braces and rosettes—in treading out their ordered intricacies on a green druggel, imparted such a convincing illusion to the sword that one might almost smell the sweet fragrance of bruised grass. Mr. Cecil J. Sharp's essay in propaganda work for London suffered nothing from confinement within walls.

Many have recognised that he has performed a great service to all Englishmen who value their birthright, and particularly to musicians, in devoting his life to the rescue from threatened oblivion of many traditional tunes and measures, of which no record existed on paper. But few can have had any conception that the subjects of his labours were such gems of beauty until they heard and saw them at the Festival held at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, from July 4 to 9. His objects were in the fullest sense philanthropic, the motive solely a desire that people at large should share in the jolly and vital things he had found.

I use the word 'vital' advisedly, because after attending the performances I felt that it best described their leading characteristic. These relics of an England still 'merrie' contain the essence of recreation and entertainment—indigenous melody, spontaneous, yet concerted movement, opportunities for mimicry, and, best of all, for 'dressing up.' Your shy English folk rarely give such proof of nationality as when the donning of mummers' dress affords excuses for throwing overboard the stifling mannerisms of convention. It flashed across me that the unique success achieved by Gilbert and Sullivan was explained by the approximation of their products to the ideal national recipe of folk-dance and song.

London fell under the spell of the Russian ballet. Instinctively we were drawn to pay tribute to an art-form of essential significance, albeit rooted in a nationality widely different from our own. It rang true, even to us foreign spectators. The art of the English Folk-dancers rings as true, but its significance is bound up with our very origins. For two pins we would join in its half-remembered ritual. Rather jolly it would be to take a hand in 'Goddesses.' Here are figures no whit less graceful, after their own kind, and far more spontaneous than those the Russians fitted to 'Papillons' with such consummate artistry. And take the sword-dance, 'Earsdon (Rapper),' with its doggerel song 'calling on' the six dancers who as 'Philistians' finally blind Samson with their crossed swords. Its simple pantomime is as eloquent and primitive as anything in the ballet version of 'Kikimora,' the cat-ridden witch, which we had thought perhaps inimitable.

But since, in the four changes of programme, the were embraced over five-and-thirty country dance a score and more of Morris dances, and half-a-dozen Morris jigs, criticism must remain general rather than exhaustive. The point I would make is that they was not one but had its individual charm. The very names of some—'Gathering Peascods,' 'Jenny Pluc Pears,' 'The Oaken Leaves,'—are sufficiently indicative of their origin at half-forgotten seasonal festivals where the recurring yearly miracles of birth, fruition and death all along the countryside stood as prototypes of those other eternal mysteries of human mating, which on ultimate analysis will be found to lie at the root of all the arts of expression. The ingenuity and variety of the 'evolutions,' to borrow a naval term are as captivating as their apparent simplicity.

That their success as a spectacle depended on the expertness of the dancers was revealed when a company of children, among a group of singing games, performed one or two of the same dances. To cast the slightest aspersion on these fair mummers, whose artless enjoyment in their task exercised its customary irresistible fascination, would be the height of boorishness and is very far from my intention, but it was seen that the symmetry of the figure demanded nicety to a matter of inches in the position of individual performers.

The presentation of the Ampleforth Sword-Dance Play marked perhaps the culmination of interest. I must be left for those who have had the opportunity for studying folk-lore to discuss in detail the symbolism and significance of folk-plays. Doubtless they are parables of life and love. To the lay witness, the admirable fooling and inconsequent jest of this one made an immediate appeal by reason of appearing ineradicably English. Antagonism between King and elderly clown, rivals for the hand of woman, is typified by the fumbling of the Clown with his lines. 'Say it again and say it right!' says the King, with a terrifying scowl and flourish of his drawn sword. Anon Clown 'calls on' six smocked and gaitered sword-dancers, and while they thread a seemingly interminable maze, there is lovers' play and rivalry in the background. Suddenly, at the crossing of swords, Stranger steps from among the audience, the 'cross' of swords is placed about his head, and, at their drawing, he falls dead. The dancers flee in panic, only to be again 'called on' and severally to deny having killed him. Dead he remains, however, and, at the instance of King, all kneel to chant a requiem. Since it is Clown (who, by the way, recognises Stranger as his son—'I got him this morning before I got my breakfast') that recites the verses, it need cause no surprise that they have not the remotest reference to the matter in hand. The next protagonist to appear is Doctor. An outlandish figure of fun, with straw hat, great drooping moustache, and spectacles, he comes lolloping in mounted on the shoulders of another mummer, bearing a horse's head crudely cut out of cardboard. His fee for reviving the dead man, he states, is '£19 19s. 11½d., a peck of ginger, and a bag of oats for the horse.' He produces a box of gigantic pills. Neither pills nor passes affect the body at all, but the symbolic work with Clown's sword affords him an opportunity for cunningly stabbing King in the leg. Many yards of bandage having been wound with consummate ineptitude about the injured member, attention returns to the corpse. Clown announces that he will resurrect him. Ribald jeers

(Continued on page 566.)

ANTHEM FOR FESTIVAL OR GENERAL USE.

From "The Glory of the Lord."

Psalms civ. 33, 34.

Composed by Sir JOHN GOSS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante.  $\text{♩} = 84$ .

ORGAN. mp Sw. both hands.

Man.

TENORS. mp

I will sing un-to the Lord as long as I

BASSES. mp

I will sing un-to the Lord as long as I

Gt.

Gt. Diaps.

mp Ped. 16 ft. Sw. coupled.

SOPRANOS. mp

I will

ALTOS. mp

I will sing praise to my God while I have my be-ing. I will live; I will sing praise . . . while I have my be-ing.

live; I will sing praise to my God while I have my be-ing.

Sw.

Man.

sing un - to the Lord as long as I live; f I will sing praise to my sing un - to the Lord as long as I live; f I will sing praise to my
 I will sing praise
 I will sing praise to my
Ch. (or Sw.) f Gt.
Ped. p Gt. to Ped.
mp God while I have my be - ing. My me - di - ta - tion of mp God while I have . . my be - ing. My me - di - ta - tion of mp . . while I have my be - ing. My me - di - ta - tion of Him, of mp God while I have my be - ing. My me - di - ta - tion of Him, of mp Diaps.
 Him shall be sweet, my me - di - ta - tion of Him, of Him shall be Him shall be sweet, my me - di - ta - tion of Him . . . shall be Him shall be sweet, my me - di - ta - tion of Him shall be sweet, shall be Him shall be sweet, my me - di - ta - tion of Him shall be sweet; I will be glad, I will be glad, I will be glad in the Lord, I will be sweet; I will be glad, I will be glad, I will be glad in the Lord, I will be sweet; I will be glad, I will be glad, I will be glad in the Lord, I will be sweet; I will be glad, I will be glad, I will be glad in the Lord, I will be glad, I will be glad, I will be glad in the Lord.

 glad, I will be glad, will be glad, be glad in the Lord.
 glad, I will be glad, will be glad, be glad in the Lord.
 glad, I will be glad, will be glad in the Lord.
mf
Sw. both hands.
Man.
mp
 I will sing un-to the Lord as
mp
 I will sing un-to the Lord as
Solo or Ch. Flutes. dim. Gt. Diaps. mp
Ped. 16 ft. Sw. coupled.

mp
 I will sing praise while I have my
mp
 I will sing praise to my God while I have my long as I live; I will sing praise while I have my Sw.
 long as I live; I will sing praise to my God while I have my
Sw.
 be - ing. I will sing praise un - to my God, sing praise to my
f
 be - ing. I will sing praise, will sing, . . . I will sing praise . . . to my
f
 be - ing. I will sing praise, will sing, . . . I will sing praise . . . to my
f
 be - ing. I will sing praise to . . my . . God, will sing praise un - to my
f Gt.
Gt. to Ped.
 God, I will sing praise to my God while I have my be - - ing.
 God, I will sing praise while I have my be - - ing.
mp
 God, I will sing praise to my God while I have my be - - ing. My me - di -
mp
 God, I will sing praise to my God while I have my be - - ing. My me - di - mp Diaps.

mp A little slower.

My me-di - ta - tion of Him shall be sweet, my me-di - ta - tion of

mp

My me-di - ta - tion shall be sweet, my me-di - ta - tion of

- ta - tion of Him, of Him shall be sweet, my me-di -

- ta - tion of Him, of Him shall be sweet, shall be sweet, . . .

A little slower.

dim. Still slower. pp

Him, of Him shall be sweet, my me-di -

dim. pp

Him, of Him shall be sweet, my me-di -

dim. pp

- ta - tion of Him shall be sweet, my me-di -

dim. pp

of Him my me-di - ta - tion shall be sweet, my me-di -

Still slower.

dim.

- ta - tion shall be sweet.

- ta - tion shall be sweet.

- ta - tion shall be sweet.

- ta - tion shall be sweet.

pp Sw. 2 Triaps.

Gt. to Ped. in.

(Continued from page 560.)

from Doctor. Nevertheless, Clown, with portentous solemnity, draws the point of his sword from tip to toe down Stranger's middle—and up he leaps, rejuvenated. There is an obvious way of celebrating this happy event. Music sounds, accordingly, and dancing becomes general.

Little has been said of the purely musical aspect of the Festival. This showed throughout the fidelity which enhances the value of Mr. Sharp's work, and the rustic tone-colour was cleverly maintained in his scoring for the small orchestra he conducted. Variety of a purely musical nature was imparted to the programme by the singing of madrigals and folk-songs and the famous round 'Summer is icumen in' by the Oriana Madrigal Society, under the conductorship of Mr. C. Kennedy Scott; of folk-songs harmonized for vocal quartet by the Northern Singers; and of similar material given as solos by Miss Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies and Mr. Clive Carey.

The English Folk-Dance Society holds its next Vacation School at Cheltenham, from July 30 to August 20.

HUBERT FITCHEW.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

It is desirable to begin with a few last words on the controversy of the day before the battle is joined again in the autumn.

But will there be a battle? According to the chief combatants, it will not be joined; in fact, there is no war. On the one hand, we have the Stravinskyites declaring that the fight is won; and, on the other hand, Mr. Ernest Newman telling us that the new Russian music is dead, and its supporters are only a stage army of two. Both assertions are exaggerated and premature—which are faults easily forgiven in the heat of controversy; but the impartial historian trying to describe the events of 1921 would be sorely puzzled.

I have been making honest attempts lately to find out what is the opinion of the large body of the public not belonging to either party, on whom, after all, the ultimate fate of any new music—as, indeed, of anything new in any branch of life—depends. I cannot find that they are really keenly interested. To refer once more to the experiences of the past, they seem to consider the new music to be a thing of far less importance than was the new music of Strauss. Certainly so far as I can gather, both from professors of composition and from young students of music, the new Russian ideas have not impressed themselves on students to nearly the same extent as did those of Strauss some fifteen years ago, when one well-known professor found himself forced to suggest to his students that they should burn all their Strauss scores and begin again. Professors seem serenely indifferent now. It may be foolish of them; but to the best of my information and belief it is the fact.

The enthusiasm of audiences, as I have remarked before, really counts very little one way or the other. Incidentally, I notice that Mr. Edwin Evans seems rather hurt at being called 'a Propagandist.' It seems to me, in its strict meaning, that it is rather an honourable title, and one to be proud of. It means one who strikes shrewd blows in defence of the faith that is in him, which is surely better than being merely a chronicler of musical doings. Some person, of course, used the title in a derogatory sense with a spiteful implication of illicit profits—a suggestion which, in this case, carries its own refutation with it. One hardly likes to suspect fellow journalists, I am, we hope, honestly remunerated for honest work of making the suggestion in this sense. The amenities usually come from those who are themselves aggressively prosperous, and to whom it is but a gracious appanage to a stately life, and insinuations deserve no notice. At the same time they are sufficiently common to deserve mention in this case.

It is not necessary to say more than a few words about Mr. Goossens' second concert, at which 'Sacre du Printemps' and 'The Eternal Rhythm' were repeated, and the Wood-wind Symphony in memory of Debussy, was conspicuous by its absence. I came away with a higher opinion of Mr. Goossens' work, and a lower estimate of the Russian composition, along with a fear in my heart lest Mr. Goossens should fall from favour in the eyes of the inner circle of the New Believers, for there were distinct traces of that abhorred thing, emotion, in his rendering. Let him be warned by the fate of M. Kussevitch, whom they have rent because of the 'expression' in which he 'marred' the Wood-wind Symphony.

Since the last number there have been very few concerts deserving of special mention. Taken in order, the singers first. Miss Tilly Koenen gave a concert on June 22, and sang with much artistic insight a group of old Italian songs and in a group of Dutch folk-songs. Her sense of humour and dramatic feeling were very welcome. On June 23 Miss Anne Thursfield gave another of her very artistic recitals; and, after a successful tour in America, Miss Dorothy Moulton made her reappearance on July 4. The chief feature of the concert was the sympathetic singing of a new group of songs by Arnold Bax, accompanied by the composer. A good impression was made at the Albert Hall on the following day by Madame Namara, a Californian singer and member of the Chicago Opera Company. On June 28 the Oriana Madrigal Society gave a summer concert, which was as pleasant as the concerts always are. The audience specially liked King Henry VIII's song in praise of his 'true and only love,' which surely should be numbered with the last things we would have expected from him. New part-songs by Delius and Gerhart Williams were very enjoyable. Mr. John Coates' two recitals of Old English songs at Cheltenham Town Hall were among the most enjoyable during the season. On July 2 Dame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford gave a farewell concert before their tour of the world, which had all the usual features of these events. On the previous Saturday there was some good singing by a choir of eighteen hundred Girl Guides under the direction of Mrs. Margaret Meredith, whose cantata specially written for the Girl Guides, proved very effective. Lady Maud Warrender and Signor Miguel de Fontecha, a tenor, of Madrid (who made a successful first appearance here), were among the soloists.

To come to the instrumentalists. Mr. Walter Morse Rummel has given two pianoforte recitals. Since he was last here his style has become very much more restrained. He played poetically, and made great effect in several Wagner transcriptions. Among other pianists, Mlle. Marie Louise Ausser made a good impression by her vigour and firm sense. Miss Una Truman made a very favourable impression, and Signor Ticerati proved himself to be an artistic pianist.

Miss Daisy Kennedy and Mr. Moiseiwitsch gave a recital on June 25, and their ensemble was admirable; the Macedonian Sketches of Mr. J. R. Heath were good to hear. The last concert of the Chamber Music Players, on July 4, should be put on record. Their playing left no room for adverse criticism, and their programme, consisting of works by Jongen, Chausson, and Holmboe, was unconventional. M. Toscha Seidel gave a second violin recital, and confirmed the impression that he is a real artist of high rank, who could no doubt have been made more of had he not come so late in the season. Though he did not create a sensation, he made the kind of impression on the most critical part of the public which is an augur for solid and enduring success.

THE LEAGUE OF ARTS

On July 2 we had the second of the afternoon performances in Hyde Park under the auspices of the League of Arts. It is very good to see that the audiences are steadily growing, but still they ought to be larger, and the League of Arts ought to be helped to give performances on a larger scale. What, above all, is wanted is a covered place for the orchestra; and reserved seats for the audience would not be a disadvantage. But whereas four hundred thousand pounds can be taken as gate money at a prize-fight, that sum has to be divided by more than ten thousand when it comes to a question of the needs of music.

On July 2 Purcell's 'Mask of Dioclesian' was given under Mr. Holst with exactly the same forces as the Whit Monday performance at St. Paul's. A full description of which appeared in the Musical Times. The dragon again proved a great favourite, and had more room for his gambols and trifling evolutions in the park than he had in the school garden. Purcell's music obviously impressed the popular part of the audience quite as much as the cultured few.

On July 9 we had 'Brer Rabbit.' The late Mrs. Percy Dearmer's version of Joel Chandler Harris's animal story lends itself well to such a performance, and Martin Shaw's music is excellent. The contrast between the two main elements of which the music is made up—the languorous plantation melodies and the brisk old English dances—is effected by the composer with rare skill. The performance was exceptionally good. The most notable feature was the singing by Mr. George Turner of the songs allotted to Mr. Kildee. Miss Turner was the very embodiment of high-spirited mischief-making as Brer Rabbit, and very good work was done by Mr. Richard Edwards as Brer Bear and Mr. Gordon Hamilton as Mr. Fox, and the dances arranged by Mrs. Martin Shaw for the children were extremely effective. They were more pleasant because the children themselves—some came from St. Peter's School, Eaton Square—so obviously enjoyed them. The capable ladies' orchestra was conducted by Miss Rosabel Watson, as was said before, a few more instruments would have been very valuable. The choir was augmented by the Kensington Branch of the League of Arts.

It remains to be added that the performance of 'Dioclesian' on July 2 was supplemented by a series of dances of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries by Miss Maude Douie and her Roseland dancers, which made a very brave show.

The League of Arts announces an important scheme for the autumn, viz., a series of chamber concerts to be given at the Guildhouse, Eccleston Street, on Saturdays from the beginning of October, under the direction of Mr. Martin Shaw. There will be a few reserved seats at 5s. and the other seats will be 2s. 6d. and 1s., all not inclusive of tax. The hall holds about twelve hundred people. The events are to be called 'Five quarter concerts,' because they will last about one and a quarter hours. The League's ideals are expressed in the announcement as follows: 'They will be "Everyman's" concerts, not only for the musical specialist or the artistic high-brow, but for everybody who is human and civilized. The League will regard any concert as having failed unless the ordinary people, who think they are unmusical, go away delighted.'

The League's effort to bring music and the other arts within the reach of everybody cannot be too widely known or too warmly encouraged, and the special value of the open-air performances is that the performers themselves are largely drawn from musical people, not from the musical profession.

NOTES FOR AUGUST

The first musical event in August is the National Eisteddfod, which takes place at Carnarvon on Monday, August 1, and continues for the rest of the week.

The Promenade Concerts begin in London on Saturday, August 13. At the time of writing the list of novelties to be performed is not available, but the list of soloists published is sufficient to prove that the concerts will not fall below the standard to which we have been accustomed.

The only musical festival so far announced for the autumn is that at Hereford, and takes place during the week September 6-10.

PATRON'S FUND

The last of the season's public rehearsals under this scheme took place on June 30. Five works were played, of which the greatest impression was made by Holst's Ballet from the Opera 'A Perfect Fool.' This should certainly find its way into the concert repertoire. Hugh Bradford's 'Fox-trot for Twenty-six Players,' which was rehearsed at a previous concert on June 16, was repeated. Its irresponsible gaiety combined with good taste makes it very good to listen to. Edric Cundell's 'Suite for a Comedy' is a work which shows that the composer has something to say.

Since November last there have been seven concerts, at which twenty-six works by twenty-six composers were rehearsed. It is unsafe to prophesy, but three of these, Holst's Ballet above mentioned, Bliss' Two Studies, and the Fox-trot of Hugh Bradford, seem likely to be heard again, and the lesser-known composers who made the best impression were Messrs. W. McNaught, L. A. Collingwood, and Paul Kerby.

For convenience of reference we append a complete list of the works performed:

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1920
Overture to Cantata	'The Gilly of Christ'	...	E. Norman Hay
Song	'Midnight'	...	G. H. Sullivan
	Mr. Topliss Green.
Symphonic Fantasia	...	...	York Bowen
Third Movement from Suite	'Ex Nihilo'	...	W. McNaught

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1920

Excerpts from 'Macbeth,' for Mezzo-Soprano, Baritone, and Orchestra ... L. A. Collingwood
 Miss Helena Hughes,
 Mr. George Parker.
 Three Pieces for Miniature Orchestra... Franklin Sparks
 Tone-Poem... 'Lights Out' ... Julian Clifford

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1921

Two Movements from a Dance Suite ... Leslie Heward
 Suite in 'Sussex'... (1) Over the Downs. (2) By the Arun (Idyll).
 (3) A Sussex Fair (Merrymaking) Harold Rawlinson
 Two Studies ... Arthur Bliss

TUESDAY, MARCH 8, 1921

Overture. ... 'Sea Chanties' ... Alfred Pratt
 Ballet with words ... 'A Bunch of Wild Flowers' ... Stanley Wilson
 'A Little Domestic Suite,' for small orchestra. (1)
 Dawn Shadows. (2) Sorrow. (3) Cradle Song.
 (4) Children's Party ... Rupert Erlebach
 A North Folk Rhapsody ... M. van Someren-Godferjy

THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1921

Orchestral Poem... 'The Dream Harlequin' ... Frederick Laurence Four Poems, for Voice and Orchestra (from the French of Verlaine). (1) Fantastic in appearance.
 (2) A slumber vast and black. (3) Pastorale—A fragment. (4) Let's dance the jig ... Cecil F. G. Coles (the late) Romance and Scherzo, from Suite for Strings ... Susan Spain-Dunk
 Symphonic Fantasia ... 'The Lovers' Quarrel' ... Paul Kerby

THURSDAY, JUNE 16

War Elegy ... Ivor Gurney
 Novellette for Orchestra ... R. O. Morris
 Symphony (last movement)... Thomas F. Dunhill
 Fox-Trot for twenty-six Players ... Hugh Bradford
 Chinese Suite. 'The Golden Valley.' (1) Moonlight on the Pagodas of Lliang. (2) In the Porcelain Pavilion. (3) Summer on the Terraces of Kou-Sou. (4) Lanterns ... Eric Fogg

THURSDAY, JUNE 30

Suite for a Comedy ... Edric Cundell
 Three Pieces for Small Orchestra. (1) Gipsy Children. (2) Forest Sleep. (3) Lament on the death of a child ... Douglas Clarke
 Ballet from Opera, 'The Perfect Fool' ... Gustav Holst
 Symphonic Scherzo, 'A Night by Dalegarth Bridge'
S. H. Braithwaite

THE RUSSIAN BALLET

M. Diaghilev's season at the Princes Theatre was announced to close on July 30, the original period having been extended owing to the success of the Ballet. It remains only to record briefly the four ballets revived or added to the repertoire since our last notice. On June 27 'Le Sacre du Printemps' received its first performance in the new version of Massine. There is no need to discuss it in detail. The verdict of all but the rabid Stravinskyites was unfavourable, and that it was right was proved by the fact that the work was performed only three times.

Much more to the general taste was 'Pulcinella,' produced on July 4. Stravinsky's réchauffé of Pergolesi is a delightfully impudent affair, though the humour wears thin at the close—'thick' would perhaps be a better word, for at this point the scoring loses its earlier wit and becomes buffoonish; the trombone portamento, so overworked in variety shows, is out of place here.

Stravinsky's 'Fire-bird' was produced on July 11, and delighted a crowded house. On July 14, a trifle of Tchaikovsky's was given, a pas de deux called 'The Enchanted Princess.' Story there was none. M. Idzikovsky and Madame Lopokova came on and danced delightfully, sometimes alone, sometimes together, and brought the house down.

The orchestral interludes have been a mixed bag, but all have been listened to, which is much to have to record in connection with music in a theatre. The long list includes works by Stravinsky, Prokofiev, Goossens, Berners, Bliss, Bax, Quilter, Rave, Chabrier, besides overtures and extracts from Russian operas. We have had, too, some examples of 'the Six'—pieces by Satie, and a suite by Poulenc. The latter was perhaps the most futile effort so far imported from a country noted for its wit. It was not merely silly itself, but the cause of silliness in others, a portion of the audience trying to guffaw it down.

Photo by

[S. J. Loeb.]

LYDIA LOPOKOVA

A further addition to the interludes has been song by M. Smirnoff. On the occasion of my hearing him he sang poorly, but, having the two-fold advantage of being a Russian and a tenor, he was wildly applauded.

H. G.

CO-OPERATIVE OPERA

A NEW EXPERIMENT

Phoenix-like from the ashes of the Thomas Beecham Opera Company, Ltd., there has risen a new undertaking. It is to be run by nobody in particular and by everybody in general, for it is to be worked on the co-operative basis. It has been understood for some time past that a scheme on these lines was to be carried out at the Surrey Theatre but this is apparently a different thing, and takes its rise among the former members at one time or other of the Beecham Company. It is a co-operation not merely of the singers, but also of the orchestra players and the stage hands. Everyone concerned will be, in fact, a co-operator. The aims and objects were first expounded at a meeting held at Covent Garden at the beginning of July, and were after ards set out at length in a letter to the Press by Mr. Robert Radford. He began by maintaining that:

The circumstances which caused the break-up of the company were entirely beyond the control of the representative body of musicians concerned. These are unanimous in their determination to help forward the cause of English opera and to place it on a solid foundation. The conductors, artists, musical staff, and chorus of the company allied with the Beecham Symphony Orchestra have therefore decided to form themselves into the British National Opera Company (Limited), and to run the organization on co-operative lines.

For this purpose a board of directors has been formed, a ballot giving it the following constitution: Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Norman Allin, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Radford, representing the stage; Mr. Thomas Busby, Mr. Horace Halstead, and Mr. van der Meerschen, representing the orchestra; with Mr. Percy Pitt, representing the musical staff, Mr. Busby as managing director, and Mr. Pitt as musical adviser.

OPERA ALL THE YEAR ROUND

In the words of the prospectus:

It is the intention of the company to give spring and autumn seasons of opera in London, joining them by a tour in the great provincial centres; a continuous series of performances extending over a period of forty weeks per annum is their aim. It is their hope to provide not only a national asset, but what may eventually become a national property. The directors are most anxious to avoid clashing with other operatic interests, and they know from experience that there is a great public anxious to hear and eager to support performances of opera in English if given in the best possible manner, and they are confident that the scheme can be made a sound commercial proposition. It is hardly necessary to draw attention to the great possibilities for musical benefit that are contained in the organization, constituted as it is of so many leading native artists and an orchestra that is so famous, all imbued with the highest artistic aims.

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED AND INCREASED

The original estimate of a working sum as capital is £10,000 in £1 shares. This was soon found, and the company then announced that it had passed a special resolution (to be submitted for confirmation in due course) increasing the capital from £10,000 to £50,000, by the issue of 40,000 6 per cent. cumulative participating preference shares of £1 each, to which intending applicants are referred. The directors hope that with proper management there should be a profit of £300 a week when the Opera Company gets into work. If their expectations are realised, the directors consider they should have enough for dividend purposes. It is also their intention to create a substantial reserve fund for the protection of the shareholders' capital, and inasmuch as the whole opera company is willing to work for the best possible fees whenever the weekly business comes up to the standard, it ought to be possible, they consider, to carry out their aim. The necessity for getting in at least £20,000 to purchase and put in pairs the productions that are now obtainable was

F. E. B.

Ex-central concert-giving has a new adherent in Mr. Walter Rummel, the Wigmore Hall pianoforte recitalist. On July 2 he gave a full West-end recital programme at Goldsmiths' College, New Cross, under the auspices of the South London Philharmonic Society. A large local audience listened to Bach, Moussorgsky, Wagner transcriptions, and Liszt's B minor Sonata.

'OPÉRA INTIME'

Mr. Rosing launched his scheme of 'Opéra Intime' on Saturday, June 25. The performances took place at Æolian Hall, which had many disadvantages for the special purpose. When the arrangements were first made, there was no theatre available in London; but owing to the coal strike and the heat, many would have been only too glad to open their doors to Mr. Rosing had it been possible for him to change his plans. The season has been so successful that there is to be another at the Court Theatre towards the end of September.

The principles on which Mr. Rosing started were that by giving opera in a small space and on a small scale, it is possible to get into closer touch with its psychological aspects. Further, he argued, many operas which we have been accustomed in the last two generations to see in the largest opera-houses in the world were originally designed for performance in small halls, or in the salons in the palaces of royalty or of great nobles. The stage of Æolian Hall is very small, and looks overcrowded with more than six people on it, and thus it was a great triumph for Mr. Komisarjevsky that he was able to create any kind of illusion at all.

The first opera to be given was Tchaikovsky's 'Queen of Spades.' The choice was not altogether happy, because so much of the most original and characteristic music is contained in the big scenes and ensembles which it was necessary to sacrifice. The opera resolved itself practically into the duel between Hermann, the gambler, and the old lady, whose secret system of winning he extracted. Here Mr. Rosing's dramatic power found ample scope, and the scenes in which he took part were very effective. We also had good singing from Mr. Augustus Milner, Mr. Mirsky, and Mr. Raymond Ellis.

Next came the 'Barber of Seville,' which turned out very well. It was given in English, but suffered from the fact that, with the exception of Mr. Augustus Milner, the cast was largely lacking in stage experience. Some of Mr. Komisarjevsky's innovations in stage business were made necessary by the size of the stage, and one or two seemed merely arbitrary and not always improvements—as, for instance, where the Count, instead of opening his coat and showing his insignia of nobility, hands to the officer a scrap of paper, which spoils the dramatic effect. I noticed also one very feeble piece of translation. We all know the place where all the characters talk at once at the police officer prestissimo, and he says, 'Ho inteso,' which is funny—because no one could possibly understand. In the English version the officer is made to say something like, 'You be quiet,' which is absolutely pointless. Miss Winifred Lea, Mr. Tudor Davies, and Mr. Mostyn Thomas did good work.

The last programme consisted of 'Bastien et Bastienne,' by Mozart, which was effective in a gentle way. The simple melodies were very suitable to an extremely hot evening. In 'Pagliacci' Mr. Rosing again scored heavily. This opera presented great difficulties to the producer, which were very cleverly overcome. The audience in the hall was taken to represent the audience which listens to the mimic play, and in the end Silvio (Mr. Raymond Ellis) came from the body of the hall on to the stage and was killed by Canio.

The orchestra consisted of leaders of the British Symphony Orchestra, and an organ and pianoforte, and did its work very effectively under Mr. Adrian C. Boulton. The scores had been reduced for the purpose by Mr. C. Leslie Heward.

The idea certainly has possibilities, and there must be a large number of small light operas which are admirably suited for the purpose of performance under these conditions. The advantage to be gained by potting and altering operas conceived on a larger scale is not so clear. For instance, it is understood that 'Faust' is one of the operas to be included in the new repertoire. This seems to be hardly called for. Finally, it must be realised by the promoters that in order to make up for the want of equipment in other respects the performance of the soloists must have an extra amount of polish and artistry. A. K.

'SAVITRI'

Mr. Gustav Holst's 'Savitri' comes near to the ideal of intimate opera. One scene, three characters, no 'supers,' emotional restraint, subtlety in the music—all these place it definitely in a genre to which few works belong, and into which few, if any, can be forced by cutting down. It is a pity the subject of it is so remote from ordinary things. Death appearing in person to an Indian woodman and his wife, and granting a boon in response to homage—there is nothing here to stir more than a languid interest. The exotic deity personified by a singing actor no longer enthralls. When 'Savitri' was done at the Lyric, Hammersmith, on June 23, one was more conscious of Mr. Clive Carey's endeavour to be statuesque than of witnessing the crisis in a woman's life. Beyond this there was no fault to be found by the beholder—although a member of the hidden choir might take exception to the difficulties of Mr. Holst's choral writing. This was perhaps the most distinctive feature of the opera. The choir of female-voices, singing without words, joined itself with the orchestra in accompanying the principals. Both choir and orchestra (nine strings and three wind) were behind the scenes, Mr. Arthur Bliss conducting.

The music was everything. It was a new flavour in modernism—delicate, only half earthly, recalling nothing else, and mixed with no bitter spices. Perhaps it suggested vegetarian diet; but that was better than bad meat. Mr. Holst can be as daring as any experimentalist, but his effects are certain, and they make music. In 'Savitri,' as in other things, he is one of the artist-craftsmen (mostly British, it seems) who are building future music.

His vocal parts are an interesting study. As a musical approximation to speech they seemed, by the casual hearing possible at a performance, as truly and cunningly done as any remembered attempt. Now and then they broke into lyricism, but most of the while they were a fascinating quasi-recit. with the kaleidoscope of chamber-orchestration and crooning voices behind.

Miss Dorothy Silk as Savitri, the woman, showed unsuspected gifts for the stage, and her singing was excellent. Mr. Steuart Wilson as the Woodman and Mr. Carey as Death were capable in their smaller parts.

The opera was preceded by three of Mr. Holst's choral hymns from the Rig Veda for female-voices and harp, and was followed by the Ballet-Pantomime, 'A Doll's House,' by Komisarjevsky and Liadov, daintily presented by the Mayfair School of Dancing.

'Savitri' was also performed with the same cast, on July 14, at the Parry Opera Theatre, Royal College of Music. W. MCN.

RENOIR'S PORTRAIT OF WAGNER

For the benefit of the musical who may not be likely to read much of the literature of French Impressionism, here is, from a new book,* or Auguste Renoir (1841-1919), an account, told in the celebrated artist's own words, of how he came to paint a portrait of Wagner.

By the way, it appears that Renoir, in his youth, nearly forsook painting for music. He was a chorister-soloist at Saint Eustache, under Gounod (then aged about thirty) as choir-master, and Gounod, who also taught him musical rudiments (solfège) at the communal school, urged Renoir's parents to think of music as a calling for him. At the time of the Wagner portrait Renoir was an acknowledged leader of the still young and hotly-discussed Impressionist movement. It was the year 1881.

I was at Naples [relates Renoir] when I had some letters from various Wagnerians at Paris, including Lascoux the magistrate, one of my best friends. They urged me to make every effort to bring back with me a sketch, at least, of Wagner. I decided to go off to Palermo where he was staying, and making my way to his hotel I luckily ran across a most good-natured young painter, a certain Jonkofsky. This Jonkofsky followed Wagner about wherever he went in order to do a portrait of him, and filled-in time by sketching designs for his stage scenery. He told me that for the time being Wagner, engaged on finishing the scoring of 'Parsifal,' was seeing no one. But at last I got my fellow-painter to promise that he would let me know when Wagner had finished his work. Then when the much-expected word came from Jonkofsky saying that he would introduce me to Wagner, I perceived that I had mislaid the letter of recommendation which my friends had sent to me from Paris. I ventured all the same to present myself empty-handed—empty-handed, that is, save for my colour-box.

Wagner's first words were: 'I have only just half an hour to give you.' He thought thus to get rid of me, but I took him at his word. While I worked I made every effort to interest him by talking of Paris. He bore a strong grudge against the French, and did not hide his feelings thereupon. I told him that he had with him the aristocracy of our thinking minds. He was much flattered.

'I should much like to please the French, but up to now I thought that to be pleased they must have the music of a German Jew (Meyerbeer).' After posing for twenty-five minutes Wagner got up abruptly, 'That's enough! I am tired.'

I had had time to finish my study, which I sold later on to Robert de Bonnières.

Renoir goes on to tell frankly his musical tastes.

I was very fond of Wagner's work. I let myself go in that sort of passionate fluid I found in his music. But came a day when a friend took me off to Bayreuth, and must I say I was devilishly bored? Valkyries' battle cries are all right for a bit, but six hours of them straight off are enough to send one mad. I shall always remember the scandal I caused when, with all my nerves on edge, I struck a match to find my way out of the theatre.

I prefer decidedly Italian music; it is less school-masterly than the German. Beethoven himself has sometimes a 'professor' aspect which makes me squirm. After all, nothing comes up to a little tune of Couperin or Grétry, or no matter what of the old French music.

The author of the book adds two anecdotes about Saint-Saëns at Bayreuth. Saint-Saëns was drinking at an inn table with a French friend who ventured to insinuate that there was here and there excess ngthiness in the Tetralogy. Saint-Saëns on this old criticism smashed his glass on the table, and left the room.

* 'Renoir.' Par Ambroise Vollard. Paris: Crès.

Saint-Saëns was welcomed at Villa Wahnfried, and Madame Wagner asking him to play something of his own, he started his 'Funeral March in memory of Henri Regnault.' Whereon Wagner—either in jovial malice or else in all innocence—cries out, 'Ah! a Parisian valse!' and taking by the waist a lady of the company, he starts spinning round the pianoforte with her.

R. C.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

A letter in our correspondence columns—one of several to the same effect lately received—serves to remind us that as yet the gramophone has hardly touched the fringe of choral work, though a few months ago I reviewed some choral records that showed a marked advance on any I had so far heard. There are great possibilities here, both educational and recreational. In our July issue appeared the report of a lecture by the organist of Ripon Cathedral, in which the speaker urged that gramophone records of the best anthems should be made, sung by a small choir under expert direction. He pointed out that many ordinary parish church organists were unable to hear such works sung at cathedrals, but they needed a model, and the gramophone could supply it. There is something in this, though I fancy that most of the best anthems of the type the lecturer had in mind are beyond the powers of the average parish church choir. But I am sure that records of the kind would be welcome to many whose opportunities for hearing fine Church music well sung are few. Here is another suggestion that occurs to me. Great interest is being taken in the work of the Carnegie Trust in reviving the choral music of our Tudor composers. It will be years yet before any of us get a chance of hearing it sung, even in our best-equipped parish churches and cathedrals. But musicians all over the country will be eager to make its acquaintance. I believe a set of records of this old music, sung by a few singers, carefully chosen less for their voice than for their experience in singing old polyphonic music, would have a large sale, and would be of great value not only to musicians generally, but to lecturers on musical history, church music, and counterpoint. The last word may surprise the reader. But think that an improvement it would be if lecturers on this subject (formerly regarded as the dismal science) instead of using the blackboard or playing exercises on a pianoforte, could turn on a fine record and show that counterpoint can be a vital and beautiful thing, even when severe. I hope our record makers are not resting on their laurels, but are looking round for fresh worlds to conquer. Here is one ready to their hand.

A small batch of records waits notice. We now have on a d.s. H.M.V. the third and fourth movements of Elgar's Violoncello Concerto, played by Miss Beatrice Harrison and conducted by the composer. If this record pleases me less than its predecessor, it is probably because the Finale has had to be cut rather too much. One could almost have sacrificed the yearning little slow movement in order to have had the Finale more complete. The recording is good, though it suffers here and there from the 'cello solo being helped to stand out by over-repression of the orchestral background. Elgar's scoring in this work is some of the most delicately beautiful he has ever put on paper, and I grudge missing a note of it.

An exceptionally good balance is maintained in the H.M.V. record of the Flonzaley Quartet's playing of Glazounov's 'Interludium in Modo Antico' from the Five Novelletes. The clearness of the 'cello part is a good feature. It tells out admirably in the fugal section. This piece of Glazounov is something out of the ordinary—a long example of pure modal writing. It may not be everybody's meat. People who have no palate for modal harmony will find it cold; the rest will join me in turning it on again and again.

Heifetz is heard at his best in the Andante from Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole,' with orchestral accompaniment (H.M.V.).

The other young star fiddler, Toscha Seidel, has been well recorded by Columbia in Schumann's 'Traumerei' (10-in.) and Kreisler's 'Caprice Viennois' (12-in.).

Two good vocal records are 'O Primavera,' by Tirindelli, sung by Renato Zanelli, a fine baritone, and 'Les Filles de Cadix' (Délibes), in which Galli-Curci scores brilliantly, as does also the castanet-player. Is there a more consistently successful soprano for recording purposes than Galli-Curci? I have not yet heard one. Both these records are H.M.V. (10-in.).

The Largo from the 'New World' Symphony is now available (H.M.V., d.s.), played by the Albert Hall Orchestra, under Landon Ronald. An excellent reproduction of a movement that never seems to cloy.

Finally, there is the H.M.V., d.s. record of German's 'Theme and Six Diversions,' played by the Symphony Orchestra, conducted by the composer. As usual, German's scoring comes out remarkably well, and the music being (also as usual) bright and straightforward, the result is very attractive and cheering.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Pianist-Violinist (lady) would like to meet with another pianist-violinist, near Liverpool, for mutual accompaniment.—'LOVER OF MUSIC,' c/o Musical Times.

Experienced lady cornet-player wishes to join good orchestra.—'RISOLUTO,' c/o Musical Times.

Vacancies for all instruments in new amateur orchestra. Must be experienced players for advanced music. Rehearsals every Friday, 7.30 p.m., at County School, Hilldrop Road, Camden Road, N. 7.—T. G. WILLIAMS, at above address.

Cellist and violinist (good players) for weekly string quartet and quintet practice. Birmingham. Interested in classical and modern chamber music.—'VIOLA,' c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman pianist wishes to meet with capable violinist with view to the mutual practice of advanced chamber music. Would collaborate in trio (p., v., and 'cello).—R. PUGH, 25, Abergile Road, Liverpool, E.

A new orchestra (amateur) beginning work in September invites applications for all instruments, ladies and gentlemen. Must be advanced performers in classical music. Rehearsals Wednesdays, 7.30 p.m., at the Training College, Brems Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, W.C. For particulars apply Musical Director.

Established orchestra on symphony basis has few vacancies for September. Violas, 'celli, bass, French horn, trombones, timpani, and drums only. Best music, classical and modern. Particulars, 'ZEALOUS,' c/o Musical Times.
 Double-bass (gentleman) and violinist, wish to join Sunday evening orchestra. Church or chapel orchestra would suit.—M. F. N. c/o Musical Times.
 'Cellist wanted for small music circle, meeting one afternoon monthly.—MISS CHRISTINA CHALMERS, 54, Compton Road, Wimbledon, S.W. 19.
 Gold medal pianist would be glad to meet soprano to complete mixed-voice quartet with orchestra. Practice rooms Central London, Thursday evenings.—W. T., 12, Sandmere Road, S.W. 4.
 Musical enthusiast, conducting small orchestra, would be glad to hear of other string instrumentalists to augment the party. Weekly rehearsals held in New Oxford Street.—H. C., c/o Musical Times.

Church and Organ Music

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

JULY, 1921—PASS LIST

FELLOWSHIP

M. C. Boyle, Windsor.	H. Lowe, St. Helens.
J. L. Clarke, London.	A. Minto, Darlington.
S. A. Farmer, London.	V. S. Read, Nottingham.
R. D. Fisher, Halstead	D. B. Sprinck, London
(Turpin Prize).	(Lafontaine Prize).
F. H. Gilbert, Leicester.	H. D. Statham, Mus. B.,
K. P. R. Hosken, London.	Tenbury.
F. Laloux, Windsor.

ASSOCIATESHIP

C. V. Allen, Winchester.	B. J. Maslen, Bath.
Miss M. Barton, London.	D. McIntyre, Mus. B.,
L. Briggs, Acocks Green.	Edinburgh.
J. W. Brocklehurst, Lincoln.	W. H. Mills, Horsham.
G. E. Chadd, Frome.	F. Moyes, Mus. B.,
Miss M. T. Craig, London.	Edinburgh.
R. A. E. Dingle, Wells.	J. B. Nourse, Preston.
F. Dodson, Huddersfield.	B. J. Orsman, London.
P. G. Dore, Chichester.	Miss M. T. Renton, London
Miss F. J. Fitch, London.	(Lafontaine Prize).
A. S. Frost, Slaithwaite.	G. Sampson,
J. E. Green, London.	New Beckenham.
H. Hall, Harrogate.	Miss N. Scandrett,
H. S. Hamer, Leeds.	Kingston-on-Thames.
R. K. Hardy, London	E. L. Simon, Lampeter.
(Sawyer Prize).	Miss M. A. Sims, London.
G. H. Harris, Coulsdon.	Miss E. Smith, Bedford.
R. Hill, Stockport.	A. W. Standidge, London.
W. T. Hooper, Wells.	R. T. Stephenson, London.
E. Huddy, London.	G. E. Tempest, Leeds.
E. J. Hughes, Chwilog.	A. W. H. Thomson,
A. Hulme, Wavertree.	Scarborough.
L. Jeeves, Cambridge.	H. Uttley, London.
C. J. Leighton, Harpenden.	Miss C. J. A. Walker,
H. V. Love, Mus. B.,	London.
Monkstown.	H. E. Wheeler, Yarmouth.
W. A. J. Mantion, London.	Miss A. B. Williams,
F. W. Marriott, London.	Llansamlet.

The Reports of the Annual General Meeting and Distribution of Diplomas will appear in the September Musical Times.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

The last meeting of the season took place on July 16, at St. George's, Perry Hill, Catford, when a large gathering attended a special service. The Magnificat was sung to Noble in B minor, and the anthem was Gounod's 'Send out Thy light.' Tea was taken in the Parish Hall, the host being Mr. E. J. Hammond, after which Mr. B. Vine Westbrook, organist and choirmaster of St. George's, gave an informal lecture on 'Thomas Ravenscroft and his Psalter,' illustrated by numerous examples sung by the St. George's choir.

CHURCH MUSIC FROM THE FREE SEATS

The first summer meeting of the Berkshire Organists' Association was held at Sonning on Saturday, June 25, under ideal weather conditions. A good number of organists throughout the county, with their friends, listened to an address by Mr. H. C. Colles upon the subject of 'Church Music from the Free Seats.' The speaker at the commencement of his remarks stated that he did not wish to air his views as a music specialist, but to talk about music as a part of worship from the point of view of a member of the congregation. While not wishing to 'tell organist about their own business,' his references to his early musical training showed that he had experienced the 'difficulties, disappointments, and rewards' which formed the lot of his hearers. He gave it as his opinion that in the main congregations were not sufficiently considered as participants in the act of worship. That the ordinary congregator should be expected merely to 'stand and listen' was a thing one could not afford with impunity. 'The congregation,' he said, 'should be exerting themselves, there must be a definite place where they could join in.' After describing the types of church service ranging from the most complete Cathedral style or the ideal presented by the Temple Church down to the simplest prayer meeting, he argued that the average policy, 'to leave it to the choir,' was not satisfactory. The music attempted was usually not simple enough for ordinary people to help in, and much of it was not good enough to listen to. What the church papers review as 'music to fill a great want' was too often mediocre and its performance equally mortifying. In outlining the kind of music which might usefully be employed, Mr. Colles pleaded for the 'smooth and beautiful melodies of the folk-song type,' and also asked for greater freedom from rhythmic restraint, having in view the disabilities of the congregator. He next passed on to discuss the very small repertory of tunes which are known to present-day congregations, and suggested that county associations of organists, such as he was addressing, might profitably resolve that the congregations in their districts should learn at least a dozen good tunes each year. In this way they would help to spread a wide knowledge of good Church music, and also cultivate a feeling for the higher appreciation of music generally. People enjoy most what they do for themselves; their best pleasure coming from their own efforts.

Mr. Colles paid a well-merited tribute to the profession of organist, which he called the backbone of the music profession. 'Practically all the leaders and others who have come to the front in music for centuries past were or had been organists. Many in country areas were isolated, and for such there was greater need for good music than in London. The work of a county association of organists in raising the standard of artistic taste of the British public was more important, not merely in regard to Church tunes, but also in the type of music given in organ recitals and in other ways. They should combat the sentimental ties which grew up around feeble tunes by connecting the same interest with tunes which they knew to be good. By the co-operation of people having one end in common, much could be done to level up the standard of taste and to arouse the musical interest not merely of a church but also of the general public. They had much to be thankful for in the amount of discretion and enthusiasm which had been shown by the people.'

Mr. P. R. Scrivener, the president of the Association, voiced the thanks of those gathered together, his remarks being supported by two members of the Council, Messrs. Goodenough and A. C. P. Embling. Mr. Scrivener outlined the aims of the Association, and pleaded for co-operation of every organist in the county.

We regret we have not space to give in full some of the fourteen excellent programmes played at the Crystal Palace from June 13-20 by Mr. Francis W. Sutton. We choiced only a few items: Alcock's Postlude in C and Marston's Triumphant, Mendelssohn's sixth Sonata, Wolstenholme's Fantaisie Rustique, Stanford's Prelude in D minor, Rheinberger's Sonata in B major, Saint-Saëns' Fantaisie in E flat, Franck's third Choral, besides a good deal of Bach, many light organ pieces, and transcriptions.

ORGANS AND ORGANISTS OF ST. OLAVE'S, TOOLEY STREET, SOUTHWARK

BY ANDREW FREEMAN

THE ORGAN IN ST. OLAVE'S, TOOLEY STREET, SOUTHWARK

Nothing short of a miracle can save this historic church from destruction and its site from desecration. Posters announcing its sale 'with immediate possession' are already fixed to its walls, so that in all likelihood before these lines appear in print the house-breaker will have started on his job, and one more instance will have to be recorded in the long and disreputable chapter of sheer and unnecessary vandalism.

St. Olave's, Tooley Street,* is a very ancient foundation, dating back to the period of the Conquest, if not earlier, but the present Church can lay claim to no greater antiquity than 1736. Its architect was Henry Flitcroft, who also designed St. Giles-in-the-Fields and St. John's, Hampstead. In shape it is rectangular, with an apse at the east end, and a vaulted ceiling. The main body of the building is divided into a nave and two aisles by a double colonnade, with galleries over the aisles and at the west end. The interior is well—even nobly—proportioned, while the fittings and ornaments (except, perhaps, for such of them as date from after the fire of 1843), are excellently contrived and brought.

Concerning the former organs in this church and its predecessors little can be said, for the Churchwardens' Accounts and the Vestry Minutes are either mislaid or have been done away with. In his book on 'Churchwardens' Accounts,' Dr. J. C. Cox states that the St. Olave's Accounts are kept at Bermondsey Town Hall; but an inquiry in that quarter elicited the information that all the St. Olave's records which were taken over upon the suppression of the Vestry and Incorporation of the Borough had been destroyed. They were first placed in a shed where the rain spoiled them, and then burnt! It was doubted, however, whether any ancient books were ever received: these, it was said, must have remained at the church itself. A morning's search at the church, in company with the Rev. A. M. Cazalet, the present Rector of the combined parishes of St. Olave and St. John, was equally fruitless; but as there was one safe for which we could not find a key, there is just a chance that some of them still exist, and that information as to former organs and organists may yet be extracted from them.

According to Dr. Rimbault, Father Smith built an organ for St. Olave's, but unfortunately Rimbault gives neither date nor authority. This instrument seems to have been re-erected in Flitcroft's Church, and to have lasted till the fire of 1843. In 1802 Hugh Russell repaired it, and added the Sesquialtera and Mixture to the Great and the Cremona to the Choir. (I think these stops were renewals, or substitutions, rather than additions. Mixtures suffered a good deal from inconsiderate tuning, and for this reason a whole stop had occasionally to be replaced. The Cremona may have been inserted in the room of a Vox Humana.)

* Tooley = Towlies = Stowlies = St. Olave's.

The specification of the organ at this time was as follows* :

GREAT—GG (SHORT)† TO D

	NO. OF FT. PIPES		NO. OF FT. PIPES
1 Open diapason ...	8 52	6 Sesquialtera ... ranks III.	156
2 Stopped diapason ...	8 52	7 Mixture ...	II. 104
3 Principal ...	4 52	8 Cornet (middle C) ...	V. 135
4 Twelfth ...	2 52	9 Trumpet ...	8 52
5 Fifteenth ...	2 52	10 Clarion ...	4 52

CHOIR—GG (SHORT) TO

	NO. OF FT. PIPES		NO. OF FT. PIPES
11 Stopped diapason ...	8 52	14 Fifteenth ...	2 52
12 Principal ...	4 52	15 Cremona (Gamut G)	8 44
13 Flute ...	4 52

SWELL—TENOR F TO D

	NO. OF FT. PIPES		NO. OF FT. PIPES
16 Open diapason ...	8 33	19 Cornet... ranks III.	99
17 Stopped diapason ...	8 33	20 Trumpet ...	8 33
18 Principal ...	4 33	21 Hautboy ...	8 33

* PEDALS TO C. No stops.

Mr. Leffler, organist of St. Katherine's-by-the-Tower during the first two decades of the 19th century, through whose instrumentality this and many other specifications of organs of the period have been preserved, says: 'This may have been a good organ, but 'tis quite worn out.'

After the fire came the present instrument, whose origin is inscribed on a brass plate placed between the manuals :

'This organ, of a 32-ft. Manual Gamut, was designed by Dr. Gauntlett, commenced by Mr. H. C. Lincoln, March, 1844, and perfected by Mr. Wm. Hill, March, 1846.'

In order to lessen the labour of playing, the stops of the Great organ were divided between two sound-boards, front and back. The latter, containing the 32-ft. Sub-bourdon and most of the heavy stops, was brought into action by means of a coupler, 'Grand organ combined.' Later on, when the pneumatic lever was applied to Great and Pedal organs, the necessity for this coupler no longer existed, so it was taken out. Another coupler (Swell to Pedals) was also removed, because the lowest octave of the Swell then acted on the Great keys, so that it was nearly always useless, and frequently most disconcerting.

The organ was renovated by Bryceson in 1884,‡ which was in all probability the date when the above-mentioned alterations were made; but by the year 1892 a writer in the Musical Standard found it 'very much out of repair,' so that 'no adequate idea can be formed of its former grandeur.'§

It is now in a very bad state indeed. Numerous cipherings render it quite unplayable, while much of the pipe-work is in as ruinous a condition as the action. I am afraid that the organ can never be restored to anything approaching its original condition. This is a great pity, for it was in some respects the most remarkable two-manual instrument ever made in England, and also something in the nature of a landmark in the art of organ-building. It is too cumbersome for a museum, and not good enough to form the nucleus of a large three- or four-manual instrument. To make it into a smaller and serviceable organ it would have to be shorn of all its most interesting and characteristic features. The wood flue-pipes will probably be used up in other organs, but the metal ones will hardly escape the melting-pot.

The case ought certainly to be preserved, for though it is only of common wood, grained to look like oak, it is well designed, and the carving on it is really quite creditable. Its weakest feature is the central flat, but this could easily be improved at no great outlay. The interior of many a church or chapel would be vastly bettered by the acquisition of this dignified Renaissance case—designed, it should be said, by Mr. Allen, to accord with the architecture of the Church. It cost £200. The front pipes are gilt.

Here follows the present specification :

GRAND ORGAN—CC TO F

	NO. OF FT. PIPES		NO. OF FT. PIPES
1 Sub-bourdon (ten. C)	32 42	14 Duo-decima, open ...	3 54
2 Tenoroon, open (ten. C)	16 42	15 Super octave ...	2 54
3 Bourdon ...	8 42	16 Piccolo, open (ten. C)	2 42
4 Unison, open ...	8 54	17 Octave decima ...	1 42
5 Unison treble, closed (ten. C) ...	8 42	18 Sesquialtera...ranks III.	162
6 Unison bass, closed ...	8 42	19 Mixture ...	II. 108
7 Viol di Gambe (ten. C)	8 42	20 Fourniture ...	III. —
8 Salicional (ten. C) ...	8 42	21 Doublette ...	II. 108
9 Clarinet (ten. C) ...	8 42	22 Glockenspiel (Septima & Oct.),	II. —
10 Quint, open ...	6 54	23 Posanne ...	8 54
11 Octave, open ...	4 54	24 Clarion ...	4 54
12 Wald-flute (ten. C) ...	4 42	25 Octave clarion ...	2 54
13 Decima, open ...	3 54	26 Cromhorn (ten. C) ...	8 42
		27 Corno flute (ten. C)	8 42

There are now no pipes to the Glockenspiel, Fourniture, or Octave decima.

The pipes of the Viol di Gambe and of the Salicional are inverted cones surmounted by a bell.

The Sub-bourdon (No. 1) has open pipes in the treble.

The Corno flute (a reed) has wooden tubes.

SWELL ORGAN—TENOR C TO F

(The keys extend to CC, but the lowest octave is now out of action.)

	NO. OF FT. PIPES		NO. OF FT. PIPES
28 Tenoroon, open ...	16 42	33 Super octave ...	2 42
29 Unison, open ...	8 42	34 Flageolet ...	2 42
30 Unison, closed ...	8 42	35 Octave fifteenth ...	1 42
31 Octave, open ...	4 42	36 Cornopean ...	8 42
32 Suabe flute ...	4 42	37 Hautbois ...	8 42

PEDAL ORGAN—CCC TO D

38 Contra Bourdon ...	32 27	40 Bass Trombone	} ... 16 2
39 Principal Contra Bass	16 27	(wooden tubes)

COUPLERS

41 Grand to Pedal.	42 Swell to Grand
--------------------	-------------------

ACCESSORIES

Four Composition Pedals to Grand (said to have been added in Dr. Chipp's time. They were not in the original scheme).
Sforzando Pedal (Grand to Swell).
Swell Pedal.

The keyboards have a rather more ornamental appearance than is customary owing to a tortoise-shell inlay along the length of each of the (ebony) sharps.

The stop-knobs are two inches in diameter. The lettering is written in a circle round the edge of each plate.

ORGANISTS

1793. John Purkis.—A most remarkable musician, born in London in 1781. He was blind from birth, but when he had reached his thirtieth year, his sight was gradually restored after a series of operations performed by (Sir) William Adams, a skilful Exeter surgeon and oculist, who began his treatment while on a visit to London and completed it while Purkis was staying with him at Exeter.

Purkis was a pupil of Thomas Grenville, also blind organist of the Foundling Hospital. At nine years of age he became organist of Margaret Chapel (now All Saints, Margaret Street), and at twelve (after a competition and three days' poll), organist of St. Olave's, increasing his salary thereby from £10 to £30.* He had a curious fancy for competing for various vacant organ posts. 'This he did chiefly for the sake of playing their different organs, and in one or two instances he will appear to have been a favourite candidate.' He made three unsuccessful attempts to obtain the organistship at the Temple, and at last took on the position of deputy there, in addition to his post at St. Olave's, chiefly because of the pleasure he derived from playing on what, in his opinion, was the finest organ in the kingdom.

About the year 1802 he gave up St. Olave's, having obtained a similar post at St. Clement Danes. He took great interest in the construction of the celebrated Apollonico organ, built by Flight & Robson, and on its completion gave a long series of weekly recitals which were among the chief musical attractions of London.

* Probably he is the 'Mr. John Perkis' who was unsuccessful at a poll, after competition, for the organistship at St. Martin's, Ludgate in 1792.

* From Dr. Pearce's interesting 'Notes on English Organs,' p. 111.

† No notes between GG and CC.

‡ Mackeson's Guide, 1889, p. 131.

§ Musical Standard, April 30, 1892.

Parkis was not only a (pedal) organist but a thorough round musician with a wonderful memory. He was a filled violinist, and could play the harp almost as well as a pianoforte. In addition he had made himself familiar with practically every instrument then in use in the orchestra—this while he was still totally blind. As he did not till 1849 he probably tried the new organ at St. Olave's and heard his brilliant successor. One wonders what he thought of these experiences.

1827. Henry John Gauntlett.—Born at Wellington (Wiltshire), July 9, 1805. Organist at Olney Church, Bucks, where his father was vicar, at the age of nine. Articled to a solicitor in 1826, organist of St. Olave's from 1827 till 1846. In 1836 he was appointed evening organist at Christ Church, Newgate Street, at a salary of two guineas a year! It was about this time that he commenced his crusade in favour of the C compass, William Hill, the organ-builder, being his most valuable ally, and Samuel Sebastian Wesley his most formidable antagonist. He became Mus. D. (Oxford) in 1842, and about the same year gave up the law in order that he might devote his whole time to music. After leaving St. Olave's he became organist successively of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, All Saints', Notting Hill; and St. Bartholomew the Less, Smithfield. He was a fine organist, and an early exponent of Bach's organ fugues. Mendelssohn selected him to play the organ part at the first production of 'Elijah' at Birmingham, August 26, 1846. He was an indefatigable composer of hymn-tunes, an enthusiastic advocate of plainsong, a keen controversialist, and editor of several tune-books widely used in our day. He died February 21, 1876.

1847. Edmund Thomas Chipp.—Born 1823. Organist, successively, of Albany Chapel, Regent's Park (1843-46); St. Olave's (1847-52); St. Mary-at-Hill (1852-56); Holy Trinity, Paddington (1856-62); Ulster Hall, Belfast (1862-66); Kinnaid Hall, Dundee, and St. Paul's, Edinburgh (1866); and Ely Cathedral (1866, till his death 1886).

He followed W. T. Best at the Panopticon, Leicester Square, and held the organistship there till that institution was closed. He became Mus. B. (Cantab.) in 1859, and was Mus. D. in 1860.

1852. G. W. Morgan.

1854. E. Deane.

1868. J. Coleman.

1884. W. Taylor.

1891. Stretton Swan, F.R.C.O.—Afterwards Mus. B. (Durham), and at present organist of the Church of St. John, Horsleydown, to which church part of St. Olave's parish has been assigned.

1899-c. 1912. Herbert Vincent Miniken.

THE NEW ORGAN FOR THE PUBLIC HALL, BLACKBURN

As briefly stated in the last issue of the Musical Times, a new concert organ is in course of construction by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, of Liverpool, for the large concert-hall which forms part of the handsome block of buildings now being erected by the Corporation to the design of Messrs. Briggs, Wolstenholme, & Thornely and Partners, Stones, & Atkinson.

The specification has been drawn up by Councillor Pollard and Dr. Brearley in conference with the builders, and though the organ will contain fewer speaking stops than some concert organs in this country, when complete it will be a fine example of modern tone-production. Three wind-reservoirs will be used for both the Great and Swell organs, and reeds for the former being voiced on 12-in. and the borus reeds for the latter on 10-in. The Solo Orchestral Flute 16-ft. and Tuba Minor 8-ft. will be voiced on 15-in. pressure, and enclosed in the solo Swell box. The Bombarde 16-ft., Tuba Mirabilis 8-ft., and Octave Tuba 16-ft. will occupy an open position, voiced on 18-in. pressure. It will be possible to transfer the whole of the enclosed Solo to the other manuals independently of the Solo to Manual couplers, thereby increasing the resources of this department. The flue work will be voiced on pressures varying from 4-in. to 8-in., and whilst the organ will contain a great variety of solo stops, the general tonal build-up will not be sacrificed. The following is the complete specification:

PEDAL ORGAN

	FT.		FT.
1 Double Open Diapason ...	32	8 Principal ...	8
2 Open Wood (large scale) ...	16	9 Flute ...	8
3 Open Diapason ...	16	10 Bombarde ...	16
4 Violone ...	16	11 Ophicleide ...	16
5 Bourdon ...	16	12 Double Horn ...	16
6 Salicional ...	16	13 Posaune ...	8
7 Octave ...	8

CHOIR ORGAN

(in a separate Swell box)

	FT.		FT.
1 Contra Salicional ...	16	6 Unda Maris ...	8
2 Geigen Diapason ...	8	7 Salicet ...	4
3 Wald Flöte ...	8	8 Suabe Flöte ...	4
4 Salicional ...	8	9 Echo Cornet ...	3 ranks
5 Zauber Flöte ...	8	10 Cornopean ...	8

TREMULANT

Octave } Acting also through Unison Couplers.
Sub-Octave }
Unison Off }

Enclosed Solo on Choir—by rocking Tablet in key frame.

GREAT ORGAN

	FT.		FT.
1 Double Open Diapason ...	16	9 Octave Flute ...	4
2 Open Diapason, No. 1 ...	8	10 Twelfth ...	2 1/2
3 Open Diapason, No. 2 ...	8	11 Fifteenth ...	2
4 Open Diapason, No. 3 ...	8	12 Mixture ...	4 ranks
5 Harmonic Flute ...	8	13 Trombone ...	16
6 Stopped Diapason ...	8	14 Tromba ...	8
7 Octave Diapason ...	4	15 Octave Tromba ...	4
8 Principal ...	4

Enclosed Solo on Great—by rocking Tablet in key frame.

SWELL ORGAN

	FT.		FT.
1 Contra Gamba ...	16	9 Mixture ...	5 ranks
2 Open Diapason ...	8	10 Oboe ...	8
3 Lieblich Gedackt ...	8	11 Vox Humana ...	8
4 Echo Gamba ...	8
5 Voix Celestes ...	8	12 Double Trumpet ...	16
6 Principal ...	4	13 Harmonic Trumpet ...	8
7 Lieblich Flöte ...	4	14 Clarion ...	4
8 Fifteenth ...	2

Octave } Acting also through Unison Couplers.
Sub-Octave }
Unison Off }

Enclosed Solo on Swell—by rocking Tablet in key frame.

SOLO ORGAN (Enclosed)

	FT.		FT.
1 Orchestral Flute ...	8	6 Orchestral Horn ...	16
2 Viole d'Orchestre ...	8	7 Orchestral Clarinet ...	8
3 Viole Celeste ...	8	8 Orchestral Oboe ...	8
4 Octave Flute ...	4
5 Zauber Piccolo ...	2	9 Tuba Minor ...	8
		10 Carillon Octave ...	8

Sub-Octave } Acting also through Unison Couplers.
Unison Off }

Unenclosed

	FT.		FT.
11 Bombarde ...	16	12 Tuba Mirabilis ...	8
		13 Octave Tuba 4-ft.

ACCESSORIES

- 6 Pistons to Great (one adjustable)
- 6 Pistons to Swell (one adjustable)
- 4 Pistons to Choir (one adjustable)
- 2 Reversible Pistons for Couplers
- 5 Pedal Pistons to Pedal Organ
- 3 Reversible Pedal Pistons for Couplers
- 1 Stop connecting Great and Pedal Pistons
- 1 Stop connecting Swell to Pedal Pistons
- 3 Balanced Swell Pedals.

JOSEPH BONNET'S RECITAL AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY

There is no doubt as to the interest now taken in first-class organ playing. A well-advertised recital by a famous player is as safe a draw as any other kind of solo performance, save that of a prima donna. Indeed, remembering the Dupré Albert Hall recital, we need hardly except the prima donna. It was no surprise, therefore, to find Westminster Abbey thronged to the doors when Joseph Bonnet gave a recital on June 21. His playing was good, but less remarkable than we had been led to expect from his great vogue in America. Perhaps he was below his best form, or maybe the standard of organ playing across the Atlantic is not so high as our cousins would have us believe.

One thing is certain—Bonnet handicapped himself by his programme. We were glad to hear the old pieces by Purcell, Byrd, du Mage, Couperin, and Clerambault. But together they made enough ballast for any scheme to carry. Having followed them up with Bach's G minor Fantasia and Fugue, Bonnet should have given us a string of modern pieces. Instead, he bored us for twenty minutes with Handel's tenth Concerto, sparing us not one of its four long movements. The two Allegros are fair, though they suffer from the complacent padding and repetition to which Handel was prone in his instrumental works. The opening Adagio consisted chiefly of a tame theme in thirds, repeated to weariness. Why do famous organists try to keep such feeble stuff in the repertory when there is so much good modern organ music waiting for the helping hand that they can so easily give? The rest of the programme consisted of four of Bonnet's own pieces, Franck's Choral in A minor, and Bach's six-part Prelude on 'In deepest need,' the chorale melody in its augmented form being played by the London Symphony Orchestra trombonists, placed on the screen. This just missed impressiveness owing to the want of balance, the organ being a trifle too loud. However, it made a fine and sonorous end to the recital. A collection was taken on behalf of the disabled in the French and British Navies. It should be added that the hymn during the collection—'O God our help'—provided a fine example of congregational singing, and that Mr. Nicholson left the great crowd to themselves for a couple of verses with excellent effect.

ORGAN MUSIC AT ASHTON HALL, LANCASTER

The organ in concert-halls is so often made the medium of poor music, arrangements of hackneyed overtures and songs—anything, in short, but fine examples of the music written for it—that we have been particularly struck by the excellence of the programmes of the organ concerts given at Ashton Hall, Lancaster, during the 1920-21 season. Our concern here is with the organ solos only, so we pass over the vocal and other items. Mr. J. H. Reginald Dixon, the organist, has played the following: Rheinberger's G sharp minor Sonata, Claussman's Pastorale and Storm Scene (a picturesque number that might well relieve Lemmens frequently, if we must have storms—and why not?), Mendelssohn's first Sonata, Elgar's Sonata, Hull's Variations Poétiques, Guilmant's first Sonata, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G, Fugue in B minor, and Prelude on 'Christ our Lord to Jordan came,' Lemmens' Sonata Pascale, and shorter pieces. It should be noted that the Sonatas have been played in full, and that the Elgar work was so much to the taste of the audience that two of its movements were played at a subsequent recital by special request. In addition to the organ works Mr. Dixon wisely included transcriptions of various kinds, ranging from 'Casse Noisette' to 'The Mikado.' This is a combination of courage and tact that may be commended to the notice of recitalists who apparently hold that genuine organ music should be given only in homeopathic doses—if at all.

AN ORGAN QUARTERLY

Our new quarterly contemporary, The Organ, has started so well that there need be no doubt as to its success. The organ, partly because of its antiquity and associations, and perhaps even more on account of its extraordinary development and variety, is a constant source of discussion both on its mechanical and æsthetic sides. No all-round musical journal can find room for more than a small portion of the flood of articles dealing with it, to say nothing of specifications and other data. There is room, therefore, for a journal devoted entirely to the instrument, and here the new quarterly comes in. The first number of The Organ contains articles by the Rev. Andrew Freeman ('The Organs and Organists of St. Martin-in-the-Fields'), Ernest E. Adcock ('The Organ in Seville Cathedral'), Dr. Eaglefield Hull ('Couperin's Organ'), Malcolm Hallows ('Organs in Cinemas'), &c., specifications of new instruments, some very interesting extracts from long-forgotten articles by E. J. Hopkins, W. T. Best, and W. E. Dickson, and some admirable illustrations. The Organ is well produced, and should eventually bind up well into attractive volumes. It is published at the office of Musical Opinion.

Mr. E. H. Lemare has been appointed to the post of municipal organist at Portland, Me., and will take up his duties there on October 1. His none too happy term of office at San Francisco ended on June 30, and Mr. Lemare will fill in the spare time by a visit to Honolulu and Hawaii. His many friends at home wish him success at Portland, and hope he will no more be a storm-centre for local politicians. The backers of unsuccessful candidates for the San Francisco post took his appointment very badly, and have never ceased to make things uncomfortable for him. The following telegram was sent by the Mayor of San Francisco to the Mayor of Portland a few weeks ago:

'Please accept my hearty congratulations upon the acquisition of Edwin H. Lemare as Portland's official organist. In the four years he has been city organist of San Francisco, during which he has given a hundred and ninety recitals, Lemare has added to his laurels as the world's premier organist. His following here numbers thousands. No organist appearing here ever approached him in technique, wide range of répertoire, or masterful handling of our wonderful Panama Pacific Exposition organ. He is a star of the first magnitude, and he is lost to San Francisco only because of an unfortunate series of political manipulations. Our loss is Portland's gain, for he will bring honour and credit to your city.'

We have received programmes of an excellent series of recitals to be given during the summer in the Groote Kerk at Rotterdam, by Heer H. de Vries. Two recitals are devoted to Dutch composers, one to Bossi, one to Reger, one to Bach, one to Wolstenholme, one to Hollins, one to Faulkes, and one to a representative English group—Fricker (Concert Overture in C minor), Frank Bridge (Adagio in E), Elgar (Sonata), Lemare (Romance), and John E. West (Festal Commemoration). We are glad to see that the Wolstenholme programme contains some of the gifted composer's more serious works, which are too little played by his fellow countrymen—the Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Sonata in F minor, and the Festival Toccata. The recitals take place on Fridays from June 3 to September 30 at 2.30 and 8 alternately, each programme being played twice. There is a small charge for admission. It is a pleasure to find our organ composers receiving so much attention abroad.

At the conclusion of the annual general meeting of the Church Music Society, held in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster Abbey, on July 14, the company adjourned to the Abbey, and spent an enjoyable hour singing hymns under the direction of Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, and hearing Dr. H. G. Ley play organ music based on the tunes sung. The programme included preludes by Wood ('St. Mary'), Vaughan Williams ('Hyfrydd'), Parry ('St. Anne'), Harvey Grace ('London New'), and treatments of the Passion Chorale by Bach, Brahms, and Reger.

Dr. E. J. Sloane, organist and choirmaster of St. Mary's Church, Blackhill, Co. Durham, has been presented with a beautiful and unique French clock, with a striking mercurial regulator in onyx, enamelled ormolu and crystal case, by the choir of St. Mary's, in recognition of twenty-five years' service as organist and choirmaster of the above church. The presentation took place at St. Mary's Hall, in the presence of a large and enthusiastic company, and was followed by a most enjoyable supper and dance.

A meeting, convened by the local secretary (Mr. Henry Riding), of the Epping Forest branch of the London Society of Organists, was held at Epping on July 16. After tea the Rev. Walter Limbrick gave an address on 'Epping Forest.' A masterly recital on the fine organ in St. John Church, by Mr. H. L. Balfour, drew a large congregation. The members afterwards met in the Vicarage garden.

On leaving Newport, Isle of Wight, to take up his duties at the Church of the Annunciation, Chislehurst, Mr. Albert Orton was presented with a cheque and illuminated address and album of names, a framed photograph of the choir, and (from his choir boys) a barometer in carved oak case suitably inscribed.

The Guardian of July 15 contained an advertisement for an organist. An experienced choir-trainer and disciplinarian as required, as was right and proper. But when the advertiser went on to demand that the applicant should be 'Abstainer,' he was adding one requirement too many. In the far more important question of salary the advertiser was silent. Apparently the post is of the type that goes to the lowest bidder.

ORGAN RECITALS

r. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (four recitals)—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Choral with Variations, Smart; Sonata in D minor, Rheinberger; and a Bach programme.
r. Fred Gostelow, Bushey Baptist Church (Dedication of new organ)—Overture in E flat, Faulkes; Barcarolle, Wolstenholme; Funeral March and 'Hymn of Seraphs,' Guilmant.
r. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude in D minor, Stanford; Choral in E, Frank; Saraband, Blow; Scherzo, G. J. Bennett; Prelude in G flat, Scriabin; Kieff Processional, Moussorgsky.
r. Herbert E. Knott, St. Anne's, Moseley—Overture to 'Occasional' Overture; Andante Cantabile from String Quartet, Tchaikovsky; Festal March, Sinclair.
r. S. T. Chamberlain, Sonning Parish Church (Visit of Berkshire Organists' Association)—Sonata in E flat, Percy Buck; Fanfare, Lemmens; Fugue in E, Best; Grand Chœur, Higgs.
r. J. C. Bradshaw, St. Paul's Cathedral, Dunedin, New Zealand (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Bach; Solemn Melody, Walford Davies; 'St. Francis preaching to the Birds,' Liszt; Sonata in B flat minor, Rheinberger; Andante from String Quartet, Debussy; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Pièce Héroïque, Frank; Marche aux Flambeaux, Guilmant.
r. James M. Preston, St. Cuthbert's, Benfieldside, Co. Durham—Dithyramb, Harwood; Prelude on 'Eventide,' Parry; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Fantasia on French Folk-Songs, Ferrari; Scherzo, Sandiford Turner; Lament, Harvey Grace; Epilogue, Healey Willan.
St. George's, Newcastle-on-Tyne (three recitals)—Variations and Fugue on 'Winchester Old,' Wood; Offertoire, Dallier; Passacaglia, Bach; Intermezzo, Ferrari; Two Interludes, Dupré; Entrée and Cérémonie Religieuse ('Fervaal'), d'Indy; Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Dupré; Pavane, Byrd; Pastorale Sorrentina, Yon.
r. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Allegro, Corelli; Pœan, Harwood.
r. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (eight recitals)—Andante in D, Silas; Meditation No. 2, Repault; Marche Pontificale, Widor; Passacaglia, Rheinberger; Madrigal, Vierne; Marche Héroïque, Lemare; La Fête-Dieu, Dubois; Londonderry Air, arr. Hamand; Andante Religioso, Rowley; Variations on an Original Theme, Stuart Archer; Prelude on 'Old 136th,' Wood; 'Pax Vobiscum,' Karg Elert; Scherzo, Bairdston; Grand Chœur, Baynon; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge.
r. H. S. Middleton, Truro Cathedral. (In connection with Diocesan Conference)—Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Fantaisie in A, Frank; Introduction and Fugue, 'Ad Nos,' Liszt; Dithyramb, Harwood.
r. H. Vincent Batts, St. Mary Magdalen, St. Leonards-on-Sea—Song of Triumph, John E. West; The Curfew, Horsman; Adagio and Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; 'Finlandia,' Sibelius.
r. Henry Poole, St. John the Baptist, Burley—March from 'Casse Noisette,' Tchaikovsky; Overture, 'Calm Sea'; Serenade, Poole; Offertoire, Batiste.
r. Frank Muspratt, Bury St. Edmund's Cathedral—Finale, 'Sonata Britannica,' Stanford; Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Liszt; Visione, Rheinberger; Finale, Symphony No. 6, Widor.
r. Stanley E. Lucas, Harecourt Congregational Church, Canonbury—Fantasia and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Preludes on 'St. Mary' and 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Pastorale, Bach; Adagio, Spohr; 'De Profundis,' Wyatt.
r. H. C. J. Churchill, Central Hall, Westminster—Overture to 'Athaliah'; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Imperial March, Elgar; Serenata, Moszkowsky.

Mr. Albert Orton, Church of the Annunciation, Chislehurst—March for a Church Festival, Best; Overture to 'Athaliah'; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Finale in D, Lemmens.

Mr. Ernest H. Smith, St. James', New Brighton—Fantasia in F, Best; 'The Storm,' Lemmens; March, Thomas.

Mr. Stanley Chipperfield, St. Peter's, Budleigh Salterton—Nachspiel, Noble; Preludes on 'Rhosymedre' and 'Hyfrydol,' Vaughan Williams; Allegro in D minor, Stanford.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Sonata (first movement), Elgar; Final, Frank; Idylle, Vierne; Villanelle, Ireland; Sonata in the style of Handel, Wolstenholme; Festival Toccata, Wolstenholme; Introduction, Air, and Variations, Guilmant.

Mr. Frank H. Mather, Grace Church, Rutherford, New Jersey—Sonata, Borowski; Toccata, Maily; Spring Song, Hollins; Marche Triomphale, Lemmens. (Violin solos by Mr. Ariberto di Butera.)

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Philip Miles, organist, Holy Trinity Church, Gray's Inn Road.

Mr. T. S. Miles, choirmaster, Holy Trinity Church, Gray's Inn Road.

Mr. Arthur E. Temple, organist and choirmaster, Cheshunt Parish Church.

Letters to the Editor

'THE FUTURE OF CHURCH MUSIC'

SIR,—A reading of Mr. Moody's excellent lecture moves me to write. Is he not unduly pessimistic, and does he not spend too much time in destructive criticism?

It is a thousand pities that discussions on Church music reform usually develop—or rather degenerate—into a battle round some Victorian hymn-tune composers. If we wish to ensure an honest trial for the tunes of Stanford, Vaughan Williams, Walford Davies, Holst, the Shaws, and other living composers, we cannot go to work in a worse way than by abusing the Dykes-Barnby-Stainer school.

A few days ago the newspapers reported that a vicar who was about to introduce the 'English Hymnal' in place of 'Ancient and Modern' announced his decision in a violent attack on the latter book. As the man on the spot, he may be presumed to know best how to negotiate such awkward corners in parochial affairs. Still, I wonder. . . . On second thoughts, I don't. As one who has braved the battle and the breeze of a few such crises, I can promise him a rough passage. Unless his flock are sheep indeed, a good many of them will at once develop a prejudice against the new book. It is bad policy to begin a change of this kind by dividing the congregation into pro's and anti's.

Moreover, attacks of the kind are far too sweeping. (Sometimes they are unfair as well. In this particular case, for example, the vicar thundered against a certain popular mission hymn that is in A. & M. But it happens to be in the E. H. as well!) After all, the conservatives' acceptance of the whole of the Dykes-Barnby-Stainer output is hardly less logical than the reformers' sweeping refusal of it. There are good tunes by the despised Victorians—even by the most despised of them. And before slinging about the word 'Victorian' as an approbrious epithet we should remind ourselves that the era in which such men as S. S. Wesley, Pearsall, Walmisley, Steggall, and at least half a dozen other admirable Church composers worked was far from barren. True, it produced a good deal of music that does not wear well, chiefly because (as in other branches of native music) it was a transition period, and also because most of its composers were unfortunate in their choice of models. They took three immensely popular ones from the Continent (Mendelssohn, Spohr, and Gounod), instead of going to older native sources. Before we heave rocks at them for their neglect of the latter, however, we must bear in mind that the bulk of our best native Church music had been lost to sight long before the Victorians were born. Some, at least, of our missiles should be aimed at an earlier generation. Our duty in the matter of Victorian Church music is simply that which we owe in other departments of the art: we have to shed the bad and retain the good, and the less we abuse the bad and its writers the sooner the job will be done.

Admittedly, the hymn-tune as the popular element in Church music is an important factor in any scheme of reform. It is almost useless for a choir to build up a repertory of fine service music unless the taste of the congregation is developed along corresponding lines by the use of equally good hymn-tunes. But the popular hymn-tune has a hold like that of no other music. Its popularity is the result of so many extra-musical considerations—personal memories, association with its text, and so forth—that it cannot be swept away as one would sweep away poor music from a pupil's repertory. It is a case for leading, not driving. Introduce fine new tunes gradually; drop the weak popular ones gradually; hold congregational practices and give the new tunes a fair start instead of shooting them at the head of the congregation without warning; use the new and the old tunes alternately for a few months; let 'em fight it out. In ninety per cent. of cases you may back the better tune to win. Even if the result is but a dead heat, the battle will really be won, because the bulk of the rising generation, starting with fewer prejudices and associations, will be on the side of the new. But for goodness' sake don't condemn a tune just because it happens to be by Stainer or Barnby. To do so is to put yourself on the level of the man who praises it for no better reason. It is a curious fact, by the way, that the most popular tunes by Dykes, Barnby, and Stainer are by no means their best. A glance through their collected works will reveal a good many excellent tunes that are rarely heard. As a matter of tactics, we might do well to revive the best of these, just as the 'Oxford Hymn Book' has restored to use some fine tunes of the Wesleys. Such a revival would make the dropping of a composer's weak tunes easier. For example, instead of telling people they must give up such and such a favourite by Barnby because it is banal, why not put it to them that the tune does not show him at his best, and introduce a neglected one that does?

One other point in connection with the Victorian school is too often overlooked. We are so busy trying to reform them off the face of the earth, that we forget that they themselves were reformers. That seems an odd rôle for such composers, doesn't it? But if we read a curious old journal called The Parish Choir, published in 1849, we shall get a good and startling idea of the appalling state of music, not only in our parish churches, but in our cathedrals as well. The improvements were largely due to the men whom we are now too ready to pooh-pooh. Let us go ahead with our reforms, but let us throw something better than stones at the men who really began clearing the ground.

And, bad as things are now in some respects, need we be such Jeremiahs? Instead of moaning over the continued popularity of some feeble music, let us take encouragement from the fact that so much virile work is now being produced and appreciated. Let us remember that when we were youngsters our finest native Church composers were not even known by name, save to a few antiquarians; that plainsong was either neglected or used only with its rhythm Anglicised and its modal character destroyed; and that our best old metrical psalm tunes were pushed aside, or tolerated only when their harmony was watered down and their rhythm Bowdlerised.

There are hundreds of churches to-day whose choirs and congregations use and enjoy music that our grandfathers would have condemned as barbarous and ugly. To-morrow there will be hundreds more. The process is slow, perhaps, but it is inevitable. Every congregation contains a leaven of people who are in touch with musical developments in general. We know what a leaven does to the lump. This handful of musical people is making its influence felt, and even the bulk of the congregations are hearing so much good music outside the church that they are steadily approaching the stage when they will be prepared to scrap a lot of weak favourites. If not, they must develop two musical palates, one for meat during the week, the other for soothing syrup on Sundays.—Yours, &c.,

'OPTIMIST.'

'THE IMPORTANCE OF CORRECT PLACING' OF THE VOICE

SIR,—I am pleased to see a criticism of the movement I am making towards a better standing of singing (physical), because I want the good effects of it to be still more widely known while my own voice remains 'in its prime.' This because I consider vocal illustrations of very great value to both teacher and student. I am of opinion, after reading Mr. Keay's letter, that he has not experienced that delightful sensation of 'singing with absolute freedom and ease.' And of course his letter shows that he does not know how wonderful and definite is 'true speech into song.' Mr. Keay is prone, I am afraid, like so many others, to make that definite ease a difficulty through too many technicalities. This mode of procedure is largely responsible for the fact that we cannot, perhaps, produce to-day in this country twenty vocalists who have kept their voices unimpaired during, say, thirty years of public work whereas some fifty thousand or more have been trained. It is to wipe out this vagueness, this loss of voice, that I am lecturing all over the country, and showing by vocal illustrations to both teachers and students the absolute simplicity of correct vocal placement. But I admit that it is difficult for anyone who has not experienced the correct method of ease in singing to realise the simplicity of it all. Mr. Keay speaks of the order of adaptability of Italian, Spanish, French, German, &c., which furnishes another proof that he does not realise how easy any of those languages become with the correct method. English is a very singable language, but for this or any other language the singing must take place where true speech and enunciation take place.

'Building minus a foundation.' The foundation of true singing is correct speech. Mr. Keay says: 'Correct speech into song may be helpful in a roundabout and exceeding protracted way.' 'Speech into song' is exactly the reverse of protracted—it is instantaneously successful, as so many teachers all over the country are finding (judging by the personal letters).

It has lately come to my knowledge that an eminent London medical man has for years devoted his whole time in various schools, to bringing speech to that point of excellence where singing may be carried on, and I have given up his medical practice in order to do this. Mr. Keay suggests that 'nasal resonance without nasal quality is a technical error.' We don't want technicalities, we want simple facts. The resonance of singing largely depends on the nasal region, but for heaven's sake let us keep out nasal quality. I do not suggest that the mouth has nothing to do with resonance—it is naturally an indispensable and highly important member. But the nasal resonance which Mr. Keay ignores as unimportant has been for so long the stumbling-block of teachers generally, and seen likely to remain so, so far as my critic is concerned.

No, Mr. Keay, I am afraid we shall have to do without all technicalities and get down to simple proven facts if we are to emerge from this chaos. And, believe me, we shall do it, if those interested, both teachers and student will adhere strictly to those few simple rules which I advocate. They will find them absolutely infallible in all normal cases. We must do away with the camouflage so rampant to-day. I am not engaging in this vocal placement movement to 'blow my own trumpet,' for do very little teaching myself, but I cannot refrain from quoting the adage 'The proof of the pudding is in the eating.'—Yours, &c.,

14, Courtfield Gardens,
Kensington, S.W.5.

June 8, 1921.

CHARLES TREE.

WHO IS THE GREATEST COMPOSER?

SIR,—As a regular and interested reader of your excellent journal, may I be permitted to make a few remarks with reference to 'Feste's' article in your July issue on the vexed question of 'Who is the greatest composer?'

From a careful survey of the subject it would appear that Beethoven occupies a peculiar and almost unique position in the art. His music and his personality seem to make a more universal appeal, both emotionally and intellectually, the heart and mind of humanity than do those of any other composer. It is on this ground perhaps that many musicians as well as professional musicians would acclaimethoven as the greatest of all composers, and in the June number of La Revue Musicale M. André Suarès appears to support this contention. It is curious to note (at least so far I am aware) that Beethoven is the only composer whose name has been linked with the greatest names in the sister arts poetry and painting (Homer, Dante, Shakespeare, Michael Angelo, &c.).

In conclusion, I beg leave to repeat a quotation from Saint-Saëns with regard to this matter: 'Et parcequeethoven a chanté la fraternité universelle, parceque son âme au lieu d'être seulement l'âme allemande est me humaine, il reste le plus grand, le seul vraiment ind.'

All music-lovers; however, have their favourites.—Yours, &c., K. HEATLEY.

The Avenue, Kew Gardens.

July 15, 1921.

ORGANISTS ON HOLIDAYS

SIR,—The month of August will see a general egress from inland towns and a corresponding ingress at our seaside resorts. Among the visitors will be many church organists, who will doubtless visit various churches partly with a view to gaining suggestions for the improvement of their own services or to indulge criticism.

It is chiefly on behalf of seaside organists that I write, for they will doubtless be on their mettle, and strive to make the most of the material at their command.

In an article contributed to the Musical Standard four years ago, I pointed out that after a long absence from England I found the musical portion of the service had preciously deteriorated, and further acquaintance with many churches has not caused me to alter my opinion. No organist who loves his church can contemplate with unanimity the fact that less than one-fifth of the population of Great Britain attend any place of worship to-day, and its number is rapidly diminishing. If the clergy be responsible for nine-tenths of this deplorable state of things, do not hesitate to say that the organists are responsible for the other tenth. During this month many organists will defend themselves 'hearers, and not doers'; let them, then, defend and judge the musical portion of the service from the point of view of the congregation.

I know that the idea of congregational singing is alien to many organists, and that it will be long ere they realise that the choir exists for the congregation, and not the congregation for the choir; yet few people are content to sit Sunday by Sunday through a service in which they can take no active part. It is many years since the Musical Times pointed out that the 'apeing of a Cathedral service had done more than anything to alienate the masses from attending public worship.' Personally, I am tired of the path of elaborate services sung to show off the high notes of a solo boy or the quality of a bass or tenor. I want an honest, plain service, in which I can take part in the worship. If we are to be deprived of the Canticles and hymns, surely we ought to be allowed to join in the hymns, and yet at many churches I have visited lately either the hymns are sung to totally unfamiliar tunes or played in such a way (regardless of time or rhythm) that it is impossible to sing in. The excuse that the organist only receives from £2-£40 a year does not hold good. If an organist cannot play a hymn-tune for twelve pounds per annum, he cannot play it for twelve hundred. My suggestion is to have a plain congregational service on Sundays, and a recital as elaborate as one likes once a week during the season. Copy the Nonconformist plan of printing a notice of the services and the hymns and other music on leaflets to be sent at every boarding-house, with the words 'All visitors are heartily welcome.' I know increased congregations will be the result.—Yours, &c., ALEXANDER M. GIFFORD.

Hunstanton.

July 7, 1921.

GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

SIR,—Some months ago you kindly published a letter of mine, in which I suggested that the makers of gramophone records might turn their attention to recording the music of our Elizabethan masters in music.

I read in the July number of the Musical Times the programme of the music as performed at the Congress on June 17. What a delight it would be to those who, like myself, are lovers of this class of music, if only the madrigals sung by the English Singers could be recorded. There are many of us living in remote places and far away from musical centres, who would gladly and quickly buy such records.

Some of the music from 'The Beggar's Opera' is recorded, and very tuneful and delightful it is, even if the words to the songs are not the original words as set to the tunes. These records sell, and perhaps more for the music than for the words. Much more would the old madrigals command a sale, with their exquisite words.

Please, Mr. Editor, use your influence and try and get such records for us to buy.—Yours, &c.,

R. T. RICHMOND

(Country Doctor).

Seascale, Cumberland.

July 5, 1921.

THE ORGANS AT FARM STREET CHURCH

SIR,—In his article, 'Some Notable English Organs,' contributed to your July issue, Mr. Jay made some interesting references to the large Annessens organ in Farm Street Church. The general impression is that one of the present organs contains a considerable amount of Annessens' work. May I point out that this is hardly correct? The large west-end organ was originally an Annessens, but unfortunately suffered from an inherent and far too common defect in Continental-built organs, i.e., the use of unsuitable material in construction. The result was that the action was by no means durable, and became a constant charge for repairs and renewals, although Messrs. Bishop & Son were fairly successful in maintaining it in a playable condition. Examination showed that the complicated mechanism was completely worn out, and a great many of the pipes, which were taken to be of good spotted metal, proved to be of much baser material. A new instrument was obviously the only solution, and the Annessens organ was scrapped except for the case, the bodies of a few of the large wooden pipes, and some reeds. It was first used, in a very incomplete condition, for the Requiem of the Archduke Ferdinand of Austria, whose assassination at Serajevo was the signal for the world-war.

The organ was voiced in the church to suit the somewhat difficult acoustics of the building, and in construction and tonal features it embodied preferences of the then Father Superior and of the organist, Mr. H. W. Brewer (recently deceased), who filled the post for upwards of thirty years and retired in 1916. In that year the organ passed to Messrs. Willis, Son & Lewis, who re-voiced a portion of it and replaced a number of pipes; also they substituted a Willis Tuba.

They have since renovated the small organ in the Chapel of St. Ignatus.

The electric blowing machinery of these organs is an interesting example of what is attainable with the now little used system of crank-driven feeders. That of the large organ is installed in a room on a level with the church door close by the entrance. The drive is through a worm reducing gear and three-throw crank-shaft actuating six vertical feeders. The machinery and motor for the small organ are below the chapel floor (about 4-ft.), access being obtained by removing the floorboards. Both are quite inaudible whilst working. I have never come across any so quiet.—Yours, &c.,

VIVIAN STUART

(Director of the Music).

114, Mount Street, W.1.

July 13, 1921.

BRITISH MUSIC AT ZÜRICH

SIR,—I wish to write about the concert of British music recently given at Zürich under Sir Henry Wood in connection with the International Musical Festival, particulars of which have only just reached me. It is rather late in the day to call 'Fire!' but that feeble expostulation corresponds rather well with the almost sickening sense of futility which is apt to overcome those interested in British musical welfare at this further instance of downright pitiful mismanagement.

I have heard hard things said about British music as it existed or did not exist during the last century; but I doubt whether it has ever encountered a blacker day than the one on which an alleged concert of British music had to be foisted up at one end by the 'Oberon' Overture and propped up at the other—this the crowning insult—by Tchaikovsky's—Tchaikovsky's, mark you—'Francesca da Rimini' farrago. Art and the propagation of art is, or should be, a national matter, and as a respectable tax-payer, rate-payer, and everything-else-payer of this enlightened country, I demand firstly to know which gentleman or gentlemen may be held responsible for thus insulting our composers, and secondly that he or they should give a public explanation of their conduct. It is hardly good manners on my part to ask you, Sir, to put your journal at the disposal of the man or the men I am seeking, but bad manners are preferable to bad management, and I would suggest that you carry out a searching inquiry into this and other malignant growths that are stifling musical progress in this country. Perhaps amongst other things you might appoint a small sub-commission consisting of myself and a hefty truncheon to inquire into the responsibility for inserting Carpenter's essay in Baby Perambulation into a concert recently given by the British Musical Congress, this being another striking instance of the mulish kicks we have to expect from those who organize concerts in this country.

To return to the Zürich fiasco: even apart from the insults I have mentioned the concert was full of unsatisfactory features. If apparently there was only one concert available I am inclined to uphold the choice of Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations in preference to one of his Symphonies, though I must qualify this by saying that I quite fail to see how any foreigner can hope to form the faintest conception of the present state of British music without hearing one of these masterpieces. I must strongly condemn the inclusion of the Purcell Suite for strings as being entirely unnecessary, as unnecessary in fact as the Prelude to the third Act of 'Lohengrin' was to be in a concert devoted to contemporary German music. Purcell needs no pushing at this time of day, whereas our present foremost composers most decidedly do. Nor can I altogether commend the choice of the Butterworth Rhapsody, as it is far too intimate for a concert of this kind, which ought to have been limited to works that were not so English in their appeal as to be almost unintelligible to foreign audiences in general and a Swiss audience in particular. But where was Delius, where Holst? The 'Song of the High Hills' would have been ideal for this occasion, and the 'Hymn of Jesus,' even if it had not been thoroughly appreciated, could hardly have failed to make a deep impression. It must be remembered that there were choral works in the other programmes, and I don't think that the various choral bodies which united for this festival would have found the study of these two works insuperable.

I hate to go back to the subject of the opening and closing items, and shall not discuss the latter at all, but it seems to me that the choice of an opening number suitable for a concert of this kind was entirely limited to the 'Cockaigne' Overture (perhaps best of all), 'In the South' (a neglected masterpiece), and either the first or fourth 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches, which literally teem with originality in the best sense of the word, and spring from a purely British mentality.

However, constructive suggestions are held to be better than destructive criticism, so I suggest that the following programme would be eminently suitable for the next concert of this kind, whether it be held at Zürich or in Zululand:

Overture...	... .. 'Martha' ... ..	... .. Flotow
Selection...	... .. 'The Merry Wives of Windsor' ... ..	... .. Nicolai
Symphony ... ..	... .. 'The Scotch' ... ..	... .. Mendelssohn
Mad Scene ... ..	... .. 'Lucia' ... ..	... .. Donizetti
Overture ... ..	... .. 'Britannia' ... ..	... .. Wagner

A word of warning in conclusion. I have written very bluntly, but I have not, in my opinion, exaggerated. There are many others who entirely share my views but who are too well bred to state them in the manner I have done. We are not going to put up with this sort of thing very much longer. What support is given to concerts in this country comes chiefly from enthusiastic music-lovers like myself, but they and I are gradually coming to the end of our tether, and the 3s. we have so patiently paid in the past to listen to badly arranged concerts will soon be used for other and better purposes. Another Promenade season is upon us. Will Sir Henry Wood, who for some unaccountable reason allowed his reputation to be associated with the unspeakable Zürich concert, atone while there is yet time to atone, and usher in a new era of orchestral concerts in this country? Put in a nutshell, let those of us who really care for the cause of British music vow that we won't attend a concert or series of concerts which includes Suppé's 'Poet and Peasant' Overture to the neglect of the second 'Pomp and Circumstance' March. Then, at least, we shall be helping to extricate British music from the Soup.—Yours &c.,

Westward Ho! Hotel,
Westcliffe-on-Sea.
July 14, 1921.

ROBERT LORENZ,

ROBERT FAIRFAX

SIR,—October 24, 1921, is the four-hundredth anniversary of the death of Dr. Robert Fairfax, organist of St. Albans Abbey before the Dissolution, and probably the greatest English musician before Tallis.

It is felt that the anniversary might well be observed by the restoration and re-dedication of the memorial brass in the Presbytery, which was destroyed probably during the 17th century. A drawing of the brass made in 1643 still exists, and the cost of restoration would be about £50 exclusive of incidental expenses.

If more money were received, the balance would be devoted to completing the transcript, already begun by Mr. Royle Shore, of the Fairfax music in Lambeth Palace.

Fairfax, in his generation, did great service for music and in the hope that this attempt to revive and perpetuate his memory may appeal to some of your readers, I ask you to publish this letter in your next issue.

Contributions may be sent to E. N. Wix, Holywell House, St. Albans.—Yours, &c.,

G. W. BLENKIN
St. Albans, July, 1921. (Dean and Rector of St. Albans.)

MODERN MUSIC

SIR,—May I add a small contribution to your correspondence on the merits of modern music? Not long ago I was discussing the subject with a distinguished ecclesiastical himself no mean musician, who summed up his opinion thus: 'The greater part of it is not sweet enough for keeping purposes.' My negligence would be inexcusable, were I to leave such a delightful bon mot unrecorded.—Yours, &c.,

24, St. George's Square, S.W. 1, EDWARD WYATT.
July 18, 1921.

WANTED—A MUSICAL CLUB

SIR,—I am very anxious to find a musical club in London. I do not mean the ordinary club, where chamber music is eternally played, but a club where the members each contribute at times, singing, violin, violoncello, piano, forte, glees, and, of course, trios and quartets. It should have a social side, that is to say, the members, as such, could speak to each other without introductions (but this, perhaps, is too much to expect from Mrs. Grundy!). I cannot believe that in this, the largest city in the world, there is not one such club. There must be thousands like myself who don't meet musical people, but who always want to do so. Can you or any of your readers help me?—Yours, &c.,

Hamstead, N.W. 3.
July 3, 1921.

'CLIFTONIA.'

ROYAL CORPS OF SIGNALS MARCH COMPETITION

SIR,—The Royal Corps of Signals are offering two prizes a regimental march—£50 for the first and £10 for the second. The requirements are:

1. Form: A complete Quick March in the usual form.
2. Instrumentation: Similar to that adopted in the Military Band journals.
3. Time limit: Scores must reach me by September 30 next.
4. Selection: Scores will be examined by a committee of civil and military musicians, and those considered suitable will be played by a military band for final selection by representatives of the Royal Corps of Signals.
5. The Copyright of the march selected only will become the property of the Royal Corps of Signals.

Intending competitors should apply to me for further details, which will be forwarded to them forthwith.—Yours, &c.,

Kneller Hall, Twickenham, JOHN C. SOMERVILLE
(Colonel: Commandant Royal Military School of Music).

June 24, 1921.

A successful chamber concert was given by Miss airborne Dixon at the Town Hall, St. Albans, on June 29, which, it is hoped, will be followed by three subscription concerts during the coming winter. Miss Dixon was assisted by Miss Haviland, Mr. Ernest Groom, Mr. Thomas Russell, and Mr. Reginald Hunnux, and the programme included Trios by Schumann and Norman O'Neill, Sonata for pianoforte and violin by Grieg, songs by Lully, Purcell, Handel, Boughton, and Huhn, and recitations by Browning and Service.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A students' orchestral concert was given at Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon, June 21. Amongst the most interesting items were the first movement of Glazounov's Pianoforte concerto in F minor (Mr. Reginald Paul), Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Pibroch for violin (Miss Gladys Chester), the 'Titch's Song from Parry's 'Saul,' sung by Miss Jenny Roberts, and Vaughan Williams' Overture 'The Wasps,' which the orchestra gave an excellent interpretation. The concert concluded with an admirable rendering of the Finale of Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' (solo, Miss E. Mellor), in which the choir under Mr. Beauchamp's baton gave evidence of its excellent training.

The chamber concert given at the Duke's Hall on Wednesday, July 6, included several compositions by students, some of these being works of very considerable promise. The student works ranged from songs by Kathleen Palmer, Russell Chester, and Dorothy Hogben, to Pianoforte Sonatas by Alan Bush and Desirée MacEwan, and also included an interesting and suggestive musical accompaniment to a poem by Gurnett, 'Echoes of the tide.' The music was composed by Inie Bell, who gave an excellent recitation of the poem, the accompaniments being played by Miss Sadie Clayton. The programme also included movements from the Pianoforte Quartet in A by Haussman, and Franck's Sonata for violin and pianoforte, the Variations from Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 109), played by Miss Joan Lloyd, and two songs by Stanford admirably sung by Mr. Howard Fry. A somewhat long programme concluded with an arrangement of Bach's Toccata in F for two pianofortes, by Vivian Langrish, played by Miss Kathleen Wood and Miss K. Rance Corlett.

The annual prize distribution took place at Queen's Hall on Friday afternoon, July 22.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Gustav Holst's opera, 'Savitri,' recently produced at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, was given, preceded by three of his choral hymns from the 'Rig Veda' for female-voices and harp, in the Parry Opera Theatre on July 14. Enough has been written about 'Savitri' of late to render a detailed account unnecessary. Suffice to say that the original cast was employed, Miss Dorothy Silk in the title-role, Mr. Stuart Wilson as Satyavau, and Mr. Clive Carey as Death; but the last-named was producer, that Mr. Arthur Bliss conducted, and that the original dresses designed by the late C. Lovat Fraser were used. A practically perfect performance resulted, the composer, who is a professor of composition at the College, being accorded an ovation.

M. Joseph Bonnet, organist of St. Eustache, Paris, gave a short recital on the organ in the concert-hall on June 20. Mr. Ernest Ansermet, conductor of the Russian Ballet, visited the College on June 17, and secured a fine performance of César Franck's Symphony, the more praiseworthy as the orchestra was sight-reading.

This month three informal, two chamber, and two orchestral concerts have been given.

Sharps and Flats

That Bach possessed, in a superlative degree, the art, the science, and the patience to construct a larger number of fugues than any other composer . . . does not alter the fact that, when all these efforts are summed up, they amount to very little more than a prodigious exhibition of technical equipment for a particular class of work, yielding but a very slight residue of inspired or inspiring music.—Francesco Berger.

. . . that superb humbug and arch-imposter, J. S. Bach. . . —W. J. Turner.

. . . the increasing attenuation of some of these dancers ought to be brought to the notice of the charitable societies. Some of the [Pavlova] corps de ballet at Queen's Hall set me murmuring to myself the other evening, 'not angels, but angles.'—Ernest Newman.

I am singing a lot of nice songs, including some new ones by Leoni. It is a great pity that so few people are writing good songs nowadays.—Dame Clara Butt, in an interview.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of August, 1861:

A LADY SOPRANO, of much experience in choral church service in London, will be disengaged shortly. No objection to lead a congregation where there is an organ. Address, E. C., 17, Hampton Street, Walworth Road, S.

To Singing Classes, Schools, Families, &c.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS versified and set to music, arranged as a solo, duet, or trio, with the Responses harmonized to be sung in chorus, and accompaniments for the organ, harmonium, pianoforte, &c. Price 6d., music folio.

H. & C. Swatton, 35, Holborn Hill, E.C.

L E CIELECOUTE (Heaven hears), answer to La Prière d'une Vierge (A maiden's prayer). Composed by B. ROEFS. Price 2s. Every pianoforte player will be delighted with this charming piece.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 11, Paternoster Row.

E COUTEZ MOI AUSSI (Hear me, also), answer to Ecoutez moi (Hear me). Romance. Sans paroles, par B. ROEFS. Price 1s. This piece is becoming a universal favourite.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 11, Paternoster Row.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The great juvenile festival of the Tonic Sol-fa Association took place on July 17. The number of children at this gathering amounted to 3,500, weighted with about 1,000 adult tenors and basses. From this performance it would appear that greater precision has been attained since the last meeting, as well as superior delicacy. As a musical interpretation, however, the quality of shrillness, which is inevitably associated with so large a proportion of childish voices, remains a defect tending to produce monotony. The fact of so large a number of children being musically educated, and exhibiting such undoubted facility, is a remarkable sign of the progress of the art in this country, and of the seed sown for the future. There is evidently great activity on the part of those favourable to the tonic sol-fa method, and a persistent faith in its efficiency.

HAND DEVELOPMENT FOR THE PERFORMER

The paper read by Mr. R. J. Pitcher at a recent Musical Association meeting dealt with the above subject, which he said was one that should surely command the attention of instrumental players. Muscular control and the development of the special muscles concerned would not of themselves produce a fine player, but they were an essential condition towards that end. It was a curious fact that an instrumental student would give several hours a day to instrumental practice, and not ten minutes to muscular development. There was an admirable little book among Novello's Primers entitled 'Hand Gymnastics,' which was not so well known as it deserved to be, but hand gymnastics of themselves would not sufficiently develop the hand and muscles. They were of use, but it was undoubtedly a fact that some apparatus was required. On the Continent the lecturer had found that in some musical centres there were specialists who devoted much time and made quite a fat income by performing various exercises on hands and arms, with the sole end in view of developing and improving the hands of instrumental players. Some ten years ago he went thoroughly into the matter, and studied the anatomy of the hand and arm. He also examined, in the library of the Patent Office, all the patents that had ever been devised, all over the world, to assist musicians in developing the hand. With small exceptions, these were all failures, for the reason that but few of them were actually the inventions of players. Most of them were cumbersome and complicated. As a result of more than two years' study and research, he himself brought out an invention which he called the 'Techniquer.'

Not more than one hand in five hundred was formed by nature to play an instrument, and clearly some device was necessary for the remainder if they would become players. As it was worth while for every student of an instrument to consider what he was trying to do in the acquisition of technique, Mr. Pitcher explained the construction of the hand and arm. The bones which they comprised were moved and controlled by the muscles. The flexors, on the inside of the hand, were stronger than the extensors, on the back of the hand, and as the lifting of the fingers was important, the extensors had to be trained to gain strength. Playing demanded two different positions of the hand, a normal position and an extended position. It was the latter which caused much difficulty, as the webbing between the fingers prevented stretching without the fingers stiffening. To stretch the hand and still have relaxed muscles was a great point to keep in view. Mr. Pitcher then proceeded to exhibit and explain his 'Techniquer,' demonstrations of which were given with the assistance of a lady in the audience.

THE GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL

The Glastonbury Festival School has issued a revised programme for its summer Festival. This will be held at Glastonbury from August 29 to September 3. The dramatic works to be given for the first time are three one-act musical plays: 'All Fool's Day,' by Josephine Baretta and Clive Carey; 'The Fairy,' by Laurence Housman and Kathleen Davis; and 'The Death of Columbine,' a dance-play by John W. Bostock and Rutland Boughton. The programme will also include 'Spreading the News,' by Lady Gregory; new music by Mr. Boughton (a Violin Sonata and a song-cycle); Mr. Boughton's choral ballet, 'The Moon Maiden'; and chamber music by Byrd, Purcell, Elgar, and Walford Davies. In connection with the Festival Holiday School (August 8-29) there will be special events held on August 25, 26, 27, and 29, namely, a Reading by Laurence Housman, a Reading by Mr. John Drinkwater of his new play 'Cromwell,' and musically illustrated lectures by Mr. E. J. Dent on Elizabethan music and Restoration music.

DUNEDIN, N.Z.—In connection with the New Zealand Returned Soldiers' Association, a concert was given at His Majesty's Theatre on April 21 by the Dunedin Returned Soldiers' Choir. A programme of high standard included Bantock's 'Give a rouse' and 'The Piper o' Dundee,' German's 'O peaceful night,' and Mendelssohn's 'To the sons of Art.' On 'Anzac Day,' April 25, a Memorial Service was held.

THE UNION OF GRADUATES IN MUSIC

BY ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

Thanks to the initiative, energy, and kindness of Sir Hugh Allen, those who were able to attend the Conference of the U.G.M. held at Oxford, June 24, 25, had a very pleasant and agreeable time. The male members of the Union were accommodated at New College, and the ladies were received at Somerville Hall. The actual conferences were held in the famous Holywell Music Room. An outstanding feature of the occasion was the performance in Christ Church of Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater,' Samuel Wesley's 'Exultate Deo,' and Dr. Vaughan Williams' 150th Psalm, by the combined choirs of New College, Magdalen and Christ Church.

The University Professor of Music, who is also president of the U.G.M. for this year, opened the first meeting of the conference with an address on 'Subjects and Methods of Teaching in Universities.' The discussion which ensued was largely devoted to the consideration of counterpoint, strict and free; or, as Sir Hugh Allen preferred to term it, modal and modern. It was a somewhat curious feature of the conference that this discussion did not end with the afternoon of June 24, but overflowed into the morning of June 25 when we were supposed to be discussing an address by Dr. P. C. Buck, of which more anon. It seemed to be generally agreed that 'strict' counterpoint, as understood in this country, had had its day. Certainly the five species seem far too elementary for a university examination. But surely they are useful in teaching beginners how to employ common chords and their first inversions, both with and without passing-notes and prepared discords. There was a remarkable difference of opinion regarding the nature of modal counterpoint, Dr. Buck maintaining that it could never be written without accidentals, while Dr. Roothar asserted that it could be and had been so written. An inquiry as to whether an augmented sixth was admissible in modal counterpoint, only elicited a remark from the president that one such had been struck out of Byrd's 'Cantiones sacre' by Dr. Boyce; but nothing was said respecting another which may be found in 'Trust not to much, fair youth,' a madrigal by Orlando Gibbons. Consecutive fifths came in for a considerable amount of admiration. Why has no one ever been able to state which consecutive fifths, taken alone, are unpleasant?

It appeared to be the general opinion that, while it was impossible and probably undesirable that methods should be the same in every university, yet that the subjects of university examination in music should be identical in all cases. A degree should not be granted for proficiency in playing upon any instrument. Regarding the question of ability in score-playing there was some difference of opinion.

Dr. Buck's address, delivered on the second day of the conference, dealt with 'The Union of Graduates in Music and Modern Musical Developments.' It was intensely interesting, and with very much of it everyone could heartily agree. It displayed a very judicial outlook and to some extent resembled the summing up of a judge to a jury; so much so, indeed, as to leave at least one heart a little doubtful as to the real attitude of the speaker towards some of the 'developments' in question. Ouseley and Macfarren were mentioned with compassion; the former because of his unlucky dictum that 'in making variations the original bass and harmony should never be altered'—after all, not perhaps very unwise advice to give to a student who might be apt to imagine himself about to begin where Beethoven left off; but advice, funnily enough, quite inconsistent with Ouseley's previous suggestion to 'put the melody in the bass'! A still more extraordinary statement of Ouseley's (namely, that every one of the symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, and the earlier ones of Beethoven, contain movements cast in this mould—i.e. the modern binary form) escaped censure. With reference to Macfarren, Dr. Buck was understood to say that he denied the employment of the mediant triad in any music (what the former termed the ancient strict or diatonic style). But where is this statement to be found? In his 'Six Lectures on Harmony' (p. 46) he says, 'in a major key the common chord of the mediant can scarcely be employed without involving such juxtaposition of the extreme notes ( the tritone as produces a harsh effect; and therefore, though this chord is sometimes to be found in ancient music, good taste can scarcely accept it as a concord.' Although by no means endorsing all the views of these eminent men, we must surely admit that both did good service in furthering the claims of music in the universities.

It is, of course, quite true that the critics have, in the past, condemned every advance in music. Nowadays they are afraid to condemn anything. But what does it matter? Who cares to know which of Beethoven's sonatas Mr. X. thinks worth playing? The critics, as Lord Beaconsfield said, are the men who have failed. But it does not necessarily follow that if every new thing in the past was condemned, therefore every new thing in the present must be good. Dr. Buck pleaded, and pleaded very eloquently, for sympathy; but is there really any lack of this virtue among musicians? Surely all artists long for novelty in any art, provided it be good. But it is impossible to forget that reform is one thing, while revolution is another. In this connection, Dr. Buck drew a striking distinction between fashions and laws. He said that a rule was something deduced from general practice, but to which there were exceptions; that a law was immutable. (Perhaps 'principle' would be a better term, for laws—at all events human laws—are able to change.) For example, consecutive fifths are contrary to the rule.

I do not recollect if Dr. Buck mentioned an example of musical law, or principle; but I will venture to say that it is a principle of musical composition that it must be founded upon the common chord. This law has been observed by every composer from Hucbald to Brahms. Dr. Buck made no allusion to the 'whole-tone scale,' but he said a good deal about the 'harmonic chord,' which is surely far better described as the harmonic series; for it is not a chord in the sense in which a musician employs that term. Even the second partial has only twenty-five per cent. of the loudness of the primary. Dr. Buck mentioned an organ which he had tested, in which, commencing with the lowest on the pedals, it was possible to put down and sustain the harmonic series up to the thirty-second; that these sounds were not heard individually, but simply combined into one huge G; and that a chord of F sharp sounded quite satisfactory if played above this combination. Of course it is impossible to express any opinion of an instrument which one has never heard. It can only be said that there can be no objection to the introduction of any sounds into any composition, provided the sounds in question are audible. The famous 'false entry' of the second horn in the 'Heroic' Symphony, if banged out upon the pianoforte sounds horrible. If played as Sir Henry Wood plays it, it is delicious, and is past almost before one has time to notice it. The great objection to so many 20th century compositions is, that the sounds indicated by the notes are audible.

I do not know that any special apology was needed for the (occasionally) simultaneous sounding of the major and minor thirds in modal counterpoint; although Dr. Buck thought that if Byrd had been asked whether he had ever done such a thing he would have replied 'Not that I know of.' Modern composers have done this—for example, Chopin, in the second study of Op. 10:

and, still more remarkable, Hummel, in his Pianoforte Trio in E flat, Op. 12, bar 65, and again in the recapitulation:

During the discussion which followed Dr. Buck's address, Dr. Rootham expressed the opinion that we were on the eve of great changes, and seemed to expect some wonderful artistic revelation as a probable consequence. Those of us who have passed the age of three score have heard such prophecies too often to be very sanguine of their fulfilment. We may well be on the eve of great changes, for to-day the nations stand on the edge of a precipice; but it is only too probable that the great days of creative art are over. We can see evidence of this if we look at some of the pictures which disgrace the walls of Burlington House this season. There is such a thing as Bolshevism in art, as well as in religion and politics.

Unless my memory misleads me, Dr. Buck concluded his address by advocating a performance of a Beethoven symphony per recte et retro—involving, of course, a couple of orchestras. Whether he meant that each movement should be treated in this fashion, or the whole symphony—in the latter case the two orchestras meeting, I suppose, somewhere near the end of the slow movement—I am not quite clear. Neither am I clear whether, in suggesting this, he was not quietly poking fun at the tendency of a good deal of the most up-to-date orchestral music.

At the end of the meeting Mr. W. L. Luttmann proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the president for having initiated, and carried into action, the idea of calling together in conference the members of the Union at Oxford. He said that they had all had a most enjoyable time, thanks to the president and the kindness of the authorities of New College, and he earnestly hoped that the Union would be able to hold more such meetings in the future. The proposition was received with great applause and heartily agreed to by all present. The president in reply said that he was glad that the conference had proved so successful, and that he hoped it would be the forerunner of many more such interesting gatherings.

THE CELTIC CONGRESS IN THE ISLE OF MAN

By ROSALEEN GRAVES.

Some very interesting musical lectures and concerts were given in the Isle of Man during July, in connection with the Celtic Congress, which concerns itself with the music, art, poetry, folk-lore, architecture, and history, both past and present, of the scattered branches of the great Celtic race. Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, as being the largest and most important Celtic nations, were most prominent in the lectures, concerts, and discussions which took place during the ten days' session, but Cornwall, Brittany, and Man also played their parts.

BRETON FOLK-MUSIC

Dr. Diverrès contributed an illuminating paper on Breton folk-music, which he divided into three main kinds—songs, hymns, and dances. He described the 'gwerz'—a ballad of a historical or sacred character—the 'son,' a lyric which is generally a love-song with a refrain, or 'diskan,' repeated in chorus by the listening crowd, and the dance-music, which is abundant, as in Scotland, and often resembles the Scots reel-tunes in character. He gave a description of a Breton dance and the musical instruments in use on these occasions. Upon two large casks in the corner stand the pipers, blowing their bag-pipes and beating time with their feet. To mitigate the shrillness of the pipes, a player on the oboe, or 'bombard,' is called in to assist. At the start, there is a considerable interval between the pitch of the two instruments, but this is gradually overcome by the 'bombard' player forcing his note. Sometimes a small drum is added.

Dr. Diverrès dwelt on the great freedom of rhythm and phrasing to be found in Breton folk-music, phrases of anything between two and seven bars in length, and bars containing five and seven beats being frequently employed. Rhythms (such as are found in Gustav Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus') which Dr. Diverrès calls 'two-and-a-half four time' (i.e., a bar containing a crotchet and a dotted crotchet), 'three-and-a-half four time,' and 'four-and-a-half four time' are also commonly met with. The tonality of these airs is very varied. There are no pentatonic or hexatonic scales such as are found in Scotland and Ireland, but Duhamel finds thirteen diatonic and two chromatic modes in common use.

Dr. Diverrès deplored the fact that in Brittany, as in other Celtic countries, misguided collectors have in so many cases spoilt some of the most characteristic airs by writing them in the ordinary major and minor scales, in the hope of modernizing them. The first reliable collector was Bourgault-Ducoudray (Professor of Musical History at the French Conservatoire), who was given a grant by the French Government to enable him to carry out his researches in connection with Breton folk-songs. As a result, he published his world-famous 'Trente Mélodies de Basse-Bretagne,' a collection in which the airs are absolutely untouched, though their natural beauty is enhanced by the simple, dignified, and characteristic settings which Bourgault-Ducoudray has given them. Dr. Diverrès paid a tribute to Quellien, who in 1889 published his 'Chansons et Danses des Bretons' (a sincere but limited attempt), to 'Le Clocher Breton,' and other papers which have done good work in publishing folk-songs in their columns, and to Vallée, Duhamel, and other collectors. Among Breton composers, who, like Percy Grainger and Sir Charles Stanford in our country, are working their native melodies into modern music, he mentioned Paul le Flem, Florent Schmid, and Paul Ladmirault.

MANX FOLK-MUSIC

An interesting paper on Manx folk-music was read by Mr. Quayle, and illustrated by a fine Manx singer, Mr. John Christian. Manx folk-songs are less distinctive in character than those of Ireland or Scotland, probably because so many races have left their impression on the Island—from the Iberians, Celts, Danes, and Norsemen, down to the Scots and the English. There are, however, some very beautiful old Manx songs, such as 'Mylecheraïne,' 'Ny kirree fo Niaghtey' ('The sheep under the snow'), and 'Iliam Dhoan' (the name of a Manx hero), while some of their 'carvals' (carols) are very fine indeed. Most of the early Manx airs are written in the Church modes, chiefly the Dorian and Æolian. In Man, as in Brittany, we find that collectors have destroyed the character of many of these songs by altering the characteristic major 6th and minor 7th of the Dorian mode. Of late years the public has grown accustomed to modal melodies, and one is glad to find that these airs are now being sung in their original form. When the Island fell under the influence of John Wesley, he and his followers wisely used some of these Manx airs as hymn-tunes, thus giving them a fresh lease of life. For example, one splendid old air in the Dorian mode was converted into a Revival hymn called 'The good old way.'

Speaking on the effect of musical instruments on the folk-songs of a nation, Mr. Quayle said there were no traces of the harp to be found in Manx folk-music, nor were there any melodies founded on the pentatonic scale, such as are found in countries where the bag-pipes are the predominant national instrument. The instrument most in favour in the Island is the violin—the older forms having only three strings, the highest being used for the melody and the two lower supplying a pedal harmony, like the drone of the pipes. But the Manx are a race of singers rather than instrumentalists. Their traditional airs are sung almost like plainsong, the rhythm being disguised by long-drawn-out notes and pauses to emphasise points in the story being sung; but that the Manx do not lack a sense of rhythm may be seen by the accuracy with which dance-music is played. The result, however, of this manner of singing, in which the tune is subservient to the words, is that once the words are forgotten the tune is lost also, since the singer is unable to dissociate the two. The three largest collections of Manx airs are Moore's, Gill's, and Dr. Claqué's, the latter collection being as yet unpublished.

WELSH VARIANTS OF MANX SONGS

Another paper read before the Congress was Mrs. Herbert Lewis' on 'Welsh variants of Manx songs.' Mrs. Lewis is the secretary of the Welsh Folk-song Society, and is intimately acquainted with the folk-songs of Wales. She pointed out that Manx airs are more nearly related to the Scots and Irish than to the Welsh; however, she picked out two which were of peculiar interest on account of the folk-customs to which they allude. The first of these, 'My good old man,' has several variants in Wales, all of which, after differing preliminary verses, deal with death and burial in the smoke-hole under the hearth-stone. This allusion to intermural burial, which is still practised in Nigeria, points to a very great antiquity. In one Welsh version, 'Yr Hen Wr Mwyn,' the old man is questioned, slowly and mournfully, as to what he will do when he is buried under the hearth-stone, to which he replies briskly in the major key, 'I'll watch the porridge bubble, boys,' and adds that he will get up and stir the porridge. Two beliefs may be traced here, that of the 'brownie,' or helpful fairy of the hearth, and that of ancestor-worship, still fairly common in China to-day. In Central Europe the ancestor is supposed to inhabit the oven-room, and to emerge in the form of a snake.

Another Manx song which has variants all over Wales is 'Hunt the Wren.' This custom of chasing the wren on St. Stephen's Day has been practised till quite recently in Wales, and the Welsh songs describe the gay ribbons of the boys, and their door to door collecting. The wretched bird was hunted with sticks and stones, and its death is supposed originally to have been part of some substitution sacrifice where the bird (possibly the emblem of a tribe) was killed in place of the king. This song is found in other Celtic countries. It is common in Ireland, and a version of it is found in Duhamel's Breton collection.

FOLK-SONG COLLECTING IN THE HEBRIDES

A lecture on folk-song collecting in the Hebrides by Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, delightfully illustrated by her sister, Miss Margaret Kennedy, was another unforgettable item in the programme of the Congress. The 'Songs of the Hebrides,' which she collected from the Gaelic-speaking population of those remote islands, are too well-known to need special mention here. All who have had the pleasure of hearing one of Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser's lecture-recitals must have been struck with the gaiety, strength, and fierce exaltation of these airs of wild beauty, and also by the vivid word-pictures which she paints with the sure skill of a poet. She comes of a family of eleven, all of whom were singers, and her very speaking-voice is full of music. Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser is not merely an enthusiastic collector; she is also a trained musician. She described how on her return from studying singing at Milan and Paris, where she had met Ducoudray, and received the impulse to study and collect her native songs, she began to learn Gaelic, and started raiding the Isles in search of folk-songs, some of which she arranged in three or four parts for her sisters to sing.

On Ben Beula she met Calum Barraic, the last of the old Ossianic singers, from whom she obtained several songs of the greatest antiquity, while from his wife she collected labour-lilts of all kinds. Songs of the East have drifted to the Hebrides. Whether they travelled with the race, or were merely waifs, it would be hard to say, but some of these Hebridean songs strongly resemble hypnotic croons from Persia; others are almost identical with Greek motifs; others again seem to be fragments from India and Arabia. One called 'The Fate Croon' she believes to be of editerranean origin, another is exactly like a Scandinavian motif employed by Wagner in Senta's Ballad. On one occasion, Wagner, who was going to Paris, with an opera in Meyerbeer's style in his pocket, was delayed by storms at a Northern port, and it is very probable that, while there, he heard and retained Norse melodies, incorporating them as motifs in his later operas.

Many of the Hebridean songs are full of the superstitions and fancies of these primitive people. Sea-gulls are messengers from the drowned lads to the living who love and mourn for them on shore. Seals are the children of Lauchlan under a spell. 'You would know,' they say, 'by the eyes of them, that they are of the kingly blood.' Once a year they become human, and many are the songs and legends connected with this transformation. Some songs are in the form of incantations, such as the one where a woman who is churning asks that, on dipping her arm to the churn, she may find 'butter to the elbow and butter-milk to the fist only.' Quern-songs are found as in Ireland, and songs sung during the 'waulking,' or shirking, the cloth, weaving-songs too, and spinning-songs, for music helped to lighten the monotony and hardship inseparable from hand-labour. Of these Hebridean songs Ernest Newman, the critic, who is not even a Celt, and who scoffed at folk-songs before he met these, writes: 'Not once in a hundred years is born a melodic genius such as is found in these songs.'

THE HIGHLAND MOD

Another instructive lecture was that contributed by Mr. Neil Ross on 'The Highland Mod.' This musical and literary festival is run on the lines of the Welsh Eisteddfod, starting in 1891, at Oban, with only forty competitors, it has been held annually since, though it lapsed during the war. Last year there were five hundred competitors. The venue changes from year to year, and though it would be preferable if it could be held in the Gaelic-speaking districts, the lack of accommodation compels its organizers, the leaders of the Scots Gaelic League, to hold it in some large town such as Glasgow or Edinburgh. However, the example of Wales might well be followed, in having smaller local Mods such as the local Welsh Eisteddfodau, from which the best singers and writers could be chosen and sent up to compete at the central Mod.

Two Celtic concerts were held at Douglas. At the first, Mr. Perceval Graves' 'Song of the Heather' was sung by a local choir. The song is written to the air of Brian Boru's March, and is arranged by Dr. Charles Wood. Traditional Welsh, Scots, and Irish airs were sung by native singers in their native tongues. The concert wound up with the Celtic National Anthem, which is sung to the tune of 'Land of my fathers.'

CELTIC CONCERT

On the last day of the Congress a grand Celtic concert was given, at which the Governor of the Island and the Deemsters were present. Songs in Irish, Scots, Welsh, Manx, and Breton were sung by such leading artists as Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Roderick Macleod, Miss Margaret Kennedy, and Miss Ada Mylechreest. Mr. Noah Moore's excellent choir sang Manx songs arranged by Vaughan Williams. A fine example of 'penillion' singing was given by Madame Diverres, a Welsh musician. In this peculiarly Welsh custom a well-known air, such as 'The Ash Grove' or 'All through the night,' is played on an instrument, and the singer extemporises another melody, weaving it in a contrapuntal fashion round the well-known melody, which may be considered the canto fermo. The latter goes on in a regular burdy-gurdy fashion, while the impromptu melody breaks off and starts again, very often in a most unexpected manner on the last bar of a phrase of the canto fermo. Mr. Christian, the Manx tenor, sang Manx songs, and Father Conlon sang some lovely Irish airs in the true traditional manner. A first performance of Holbrooke's 'Celtic Suite' for pianoforte was given by Mrs. Towler. This Suite is divided into four movements headed Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Man, each section being based on the national airs of those countries, though the harmonies are so modern as to disguise almost completely the character of the airs. It is, however, a fine piece of work. Lastly, the Manx National Anthem was sung, and when the concert wound up with 'God save the King' in English, one received a perceptible shock after listening to an evening of purely Celtic song and speech.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

To Mr. Barry Jackson, the enterprising proprietor of the now well-known Repertory Theatre, we owe a month's repertory of unique operatic works, which comprised Rutland Boughton's 'The Immortal Hour,' heard in its complete form, Cimarosa's 'Il Matrimonio Segreto,' Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale,' and Mozart's delightful 'Così fan Tutte' (which had already been introduced at the Repertory Theatre a year ago). Rutland Boughton's work was produced by Mr. Barry Jackson, assisted by Mr. Reginald Gatty. The staging and mounting of the opera were on a grand scale, and reflected the utmost credit on all concerned. Mr. Appleby Matthews, the musical director of the operatic season, had an excellent rank and file under him, and showed that he was in thorough sympathy with this original and masterly score. The cast of principals was indeed admirable in every way, and to Miss Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies, a cultured soprano and a sympathetic actress, fell the honours of the performance. Credit is also due to Mr. Herbert Simmonds, Dr. Tom Goodey, Mr. Arthur Cranmer, Mr. William Bennett, Miss Annette Aniswork, and Miss Marguerite Chatwin for their admirable help. The unseen choir was trained and conducted by Mr. W. Galliford Blight, and the gorgeous costumes were designed by Mr. Paul Shelving. 'Don Pasquale' naturally recalls the famous basso Lablache, who made such a reputation in the part of the rich old bachelor. The comic side to this light and sparkling opera was supplied by the presenter, Mr. Melville Cooper, a silent and grotesque figure. Miss Hilda Blake, a coloratura singer from Bath, was an excellent Norina. The cast of principals also included Mr. Arthur Cranmer in the title-rôle, Mr. Samuel Saul, Mr. Frank Titterton, and Mr. Paul Smythe. The novel scenery and costumes were designed by Mr. Barry Jackson. The same artists again appeared in 'Così fan Tutte' as last year, and the principals in 'Il Matrimonio Segreto' did complete justice to Cimarosa's bright opera.

On June 22 notable performances of Brahms' 'Requiem' and Elgar's Te Deum were given under the conductorship of Father Robert Eaton at Edgbaston Oratory. Both works were accompanied on the organ. The singing of the choir was magnificent.

The first South Staffordshire Musical Festival will be held at Walsall, under the musical direction of Mr. Appleby Matthews, from October 9 to 15. The principal works to be given will be Bantock's 'Vanity of Vanities,' Elgar's 'Gerontius' and 'The Music-Makers,' Dr. Harris' 'The Hound of Heaven,' Julius Harrison's 'Requiem of Archangels,' Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' Parry's 'There is an Old Belief,' Bach's 'God's Time is the Best,' Wesley's 'In Exitu Israel,' and Balfour Gardiner's 'News from Whydah.' The following choirs will take part in the Festival: Walsall Philharmonic Society, Wolverhampton Philharmonic Society, Wolverhampton New Choral Society, Cannock Choral Society, Walsall Madrigal Society, and the Cathedral Choir.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

The recent suggestion in the local press that the various Coventry musical organizations should be engaged by the Corporation to appear from time to time at the Park concerts has resulted in the committee of the City Council concerned with such matters deciding to allow local choirs to give concerts in the parks and recreation grounds on Sundays, and also on other evenings to be arranged. Naul's Mill Park, the centre of the greatest public gatherings, is, however, excepted. This of course was to be anticipated—at least as regards Sunday concerts for the current season, military bands having already been engaged to appear there each week throughout the summer. It is to be hoped that the Baths and Parks Committee will see its way to permit some of the more prominent local organizations to appear on certain Sundays next season. Under the new scheme, the Coventry Musical Club and the Armstrong-Siddeley Male-Voice Choirs, conducted respectively by Mr. John Chapman and Mr. S. J. Wisdom, sang a number of part-songs at the opening ceremony of Coventry's War Memorial Park on Saturday, July 9.

Mr. Eric Rice, an able pianist well-known locally, gave a pianoforte recital in Leamington Town Hall on July 6, on the eve of his departure for Hong-Kong.

Both at Coventry and Leamington musical organizations are busy preparing attractive programmes for the coming autumn season.

DUBLIN

On June 20 the O'Mara Opera Company opened its annual summer engagement at the Gaiety Theatre with 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and 'Pagliacci' before a crowded house. All the old favourite operas were given in highly satisfactory fashion, and there was a really good all-round company, with an efficient orchestra. Mr. O'Mara was in glorious voice, and he did not spare himself; indeed, he worked so hard that he suffered from loss of voice for two days. With commendable enterprise he produced Mozart's 'Seraglio' on July 11, the first performance of this lovely opera in Ireland (although selections from it had been heard at the close of the 18th century), and it scored a veritable triumph. Judging by the audiences during the four weeks' engagement—and the weather was positively 'grilling'—the old favourites, including 'Maritana' and 'The Lily of Killarney,' proved trump cards.

Dr. C. H. Kitson delivered four interesting lectures in the University Choral Society's Rooms in Trinity College on June 21, 24, 28, and 29, his subject being the 'Material of Musical Composition.'

As a tribute of regard for his long connection with the Royal Irish Academy of Music, Dr. Jozé has been presented with his portrait by the Governors of that Institution. Notwithstanding his foreign name, Dr. Jozé was born at Dublin in September, 1853, and was deputy-organist of Christ Church Cathedral in 1869. Since 1880 he has been Grand Organist of the Grand Lodge of Irish Freemasons.

Mr. W. E. Hopkins, organist of the Chapel Royal (the chapel of Dublin Castle), has recently been granted Letters Patent constituting him Director of the State Music for Ireland, a revival of an ancient office established over two hundred years ago, and amalgamating the dual offices of 'Director and Supervisor' and 'Master and Composer of the State Musick.' In his new capacity he was responsible for the musical arrangements at Belfast on the occasion of the opening of the Ulster Parliament by the King. Mr. Hopkins, though a young man, is a most accomplished organist.

With the abandonment of Curfew theatres and cinemas have benefited considerably, but of course the concert season is over for the present.

HASTINGS

The strong local effort made to induce the Town Council to re-engage Mr. Julian Clifford and his Orchestra for the coming winter season has resulted in a compromise. It has now been decided to invite Mr. Clifford to resume his enjoyable series of concerts at the Royal Concert Hall, but with an orchestra limited to some twenty-six members. Though this seems to be a step in the wrong direction, we are thankful for small mercies, as there was a distinct danger of Hastings adopting the faint-hearted policy of dropping a venture which has already placed the town in the front rank of musical pleasure resorts.

There is little or no serious music here in the summer. Regimental bands come each for a week to regale the visitors with popular programmes. Organ recitals continue to flourish at Christ Church. During July Mr. Allan Biggs' fine organ has been heard in such diverse styles as those of Bach's E minor Sonata, Schubert's 'Unfinished,' and the recitalist's arrangement of the '1812.' A deep impression was made by the violin playing of Mr. J. W. Read in Bach and Mendelssohn. Mr. Vincent Batts, organist of St. Mary's and an accomplished violoncellist, played Bruch's 'Kol Nidrei,' and Mr. Albert Crouch's admirable Mozart singing was heard in the Priest's Song from 'The Magic Flute.'

PORTSMOUTH

One of the advantages of living at Portsmouth on Southsea is that while most of the local musical societies suspend operations during the summer months, the best of music can still be enjoyed at the South Parade Pier. To cater for the large influx of visitors, the South Parade Pier committee has engaged some of the premier Service bands for the season, and the symphony concerts on Sunday afternoons in the pavilion are especially appreciated. During June the Sunday programmes were provided by the R.G.A. band (under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Lee), the R.M.L.I. band (under Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell), the R.M.A. band (Mr. R. P. O'Donnell), and the band of the Rifle Depot, Winchester (Mr. R. Heller). The vocalists engaged during the same period included Miss Eva Hunsdon-Brown, Miss Mary Winter, Mr. L. Whittenbury-Kaye, and Mr. Edward Chambers.

The band of the 1st Ulster Rifles, from Parkhurst, under Mr. William Allan, paid a visit to the Pier on July 3, and the R.G.A. band has since been not only responsible for the symphony concerts, but also has been giving daily performances in the bandstand. One of the outstanding events of the month was the appearance of Mr. E. L. du Domaine (violin), who took first prize at the Brussels Conservatoire. His delightful interpretations of a number of specially selected pieces proved a welcome addition to the programme on July 10. The month's vocalists also included Miss Alice Coombe, Miss Joan Hewett, Mr. Kennedy Arundel, and Mr. Joseph Farrington, who took part in a special operatic programme on July 22. The Hayes Quintet has also been playing some good music daily.

Another innovation has been the introduction, at the Theatre Royal, of chamber concerts between the Acts, given by the Mayfair Quartet. The members of the Quartet are Miss Ina Bosworth (violin), Miss Milly Sand (violin), Miss Maud Scruby (violoncello), and Miss Marjorie Parker (pianoforte). The engagement terminated in the middle of July, when the orchestra was reassembled, but during the six weeks or so that the chamber concerts were in vogue the Quartet was exceedingly well received, and gave many 'request' programmes.

Although the Portsmouth Male-Voice Choir came into existence only two years ago, it has during that period given upwards of sixty concerts, and has been the means of raising £600 for various charities. A continuation of its efforts is being looked forward to during the coming season.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

The chief characteristic of Dutch musical life during the summer months lies not so much in the fact that important events are less frequent than in the winter season, but that they are not limited to acknowledged musical centres. To keep abreast with the chief among them means, therefore, more or less continuous journeying from place to place.

Among foremost events of the last weeks has to be regarded the performance of the late Alphons Diepenbrock's great Mass, for two male choirs, tenor solo, and organ, which took place in St. Jan's Cathedral, at s'Hertogenbosch, the town where Diepenbrock flourished for a great number of years as headmaster in Latin and Greek, and for the Cathedral of which he actually destined his Mass. This is doubtlessly his greatest work, but at the same time it discloses some weak spots in the composer's art to a greater extent than do many of his other works. Considering the enormous difficulties connected with the performance of this Mass, the highest praise is due to the director of the Cathedral choir, M. Kallenbach, and certainly none less to M. Henry Hermans, whose playing of the extremely difficult gan part was admirable. For the tenor part, which calls for a singer possessed of more than ordinary musicianship, I doubt whether a better performer could have been found than M. Louis van Tulder. The work, which has been given three times in succession, had roused the greatest interest throughout the country, so that the pains bestowed on the production have at any rate not been in vain.

Since June 15 Prof. Georg Schnéevoigt has resumed his activities as conductor of the Hague Orchestra at the Scheveningen Kurhaus, this being his third summer season. According to the time-honoured custom the first concert was opened with our National Anthem, 'Wilhelmus van Nassouwen,' the programme proper consisting of the Meistersinger's Prelude, Sibelius' 'Elegia,' Liszt's Préludes, Chaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet,' and Weber's 'Invitation à la Valse' in Weingartner's orchestration. Schnéevoigt met with a hearty reception on the part of the audience, and achieved a big, though comparatively easily attained success. At one of the subsequent concerts we had the pleasure of renewing acquaintance with an old favourite on the times when the members of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra were regular guests at the Scheveningen Kurhaus, namely, their splendid leader, Anton Witke, whose finished playing of Brahms' Violin Concerto revealed him to be as fine a musician as of old. On June 29 we were entertained with a sensation, inasmuch as a very youthful conductor, who enjoys the name of Polly Fistulari, appeared at the head of the orchestra. Of all musical prodigies one has, I believe, to be most on his guard with one conducting prodigy, and it is sincerely to be hoped that his class is not going to become an institution, for the mention of the orchestral director claims in the first place a marked personality, endowed not only with a ripe musicianship but also with a vast experience. For this reason one can regard a mere boy's acting in such a capacity as nothing more than a curiosity. The appearance of M. Gerard Hekking at one of the concerts gave the audience a highly appreciated occasion of listening to one of the foremost violoncello players. On July 6 Prof. Schnéevoigt, after having gratified his listeners with a splendid performance of Rimsky-Korsakov's enticing symphonic poem, 'Sadko,' handed his baton for the remainder of the evening to the American conductor-composer, Mr. Samuel Gardner, who interpreted for us a symphonic Poem of his own, thereby proving himself not only a versatile conductor but also an able, if just a little too academic, composer. Up to the time of writing the climax of the concerts was reached in an altogether very praiseworthy performance of the Choral Symphony on July 8. Although Prof. Schnéevoigt had not been able to raise his chorus, consisting of rather a mixed assembly of singers, to the artistic level of the orchestra, the performance as a whole was very successful, the solo parts being well sustained by Mesdames Di Moorlag and Dresden-Dhont and Messrs. van Tulder and Karel Butter van Hulst. On July 2 the announcement of a concert, the programme of which was devoted exclusively to works of Bach, and more especially to a well-ordered selection of that master's Church cantatas, called us to the Great Church at Naarden. M. Schoonderbeck, only lately recovered from his illness, had spared no pains to present the large congregation with a real treat. The soloists on the occasion were Mesdames Anna Stronck-Apffel and Maria Philippi and Messrs. Jos. Holthaus and Thom Denys, the orchestral accompaniment being furnished by the Amsterdam Orchestra. Special mention has to be made of M. Speets' fine trumpet playing.

M. Orazio Daniele, an Italian tenor (whom his agent claims is the successor to Caruso!) gave two recitals in the Concertgebouw. Neither his voice nor his execution, however, gave evidence of his being a serious rival to his famous colleague. Although he scored a by no means ordinary success, it would have been more to his credit if his agent had not pitched his puff preliminary on so high a note.

W. HARMANS.

BERLIN

While Germany totters on the brink of bankruptcy, while her politicians cast about for help and succour and Bolshevism threatens at the Eastern frontiers, the art of music is still flourishing as of yore. True the conservatoriums of music are lacking funds. The salaries of the professors are wholly inadequate, and a further rise of fees is sure to create dismay among the poorer students. The question at issue has not only an artistic but also an ethical character, and the State as well as the various municipalities will have to give close attention to the preservation of our great musical institutions.

It will not do to foist on the public operas like Egon Wellesz's 'Princess Gurnara,' recently produced at Frankfurt, whose composer purposely renounced melody as well as thematic treatment (vide story of the fox and the grapes), with the result that the so-called harmony consists of a series of grunting, scraping, squeaking noises. Luckily press and public declined this tiresome as well as unmusical work, thus showing that the spirit of the classics is still leading an overwhelming majority. But many seem to have become estranged from Mendelssohn's and Schumann's symphonies. We were therefore grateful to Otto Klemperer, of Cologne, for playing Schumann's full-blooded 'Rhenish' Symphony, that had not been heard here since 1897. Klemperer also gave us Bruckner's C minor Symphony. It possesses all the composer's romanticism, but lacks the fighting strength of the No. 3, although the Scherzo has a weighty impetuosity. It is an earlier Bruckner, with its characteristic language, wherein the composer seems to gather his strength. Between the two symphonies Max Strub played Brahms' Violin Concerto, of which he gave a strongly heroic reading. This is the time of the German Tonkünstlerfeste, with their new symphonies and chamber music. By a fusion of the Philharmonic Society and the theatre-orchestra old Nuremberg, the town of Hans Sachs and the Meistersingers, saw for the first time the Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein within its walls, those walls where every stone and art-work preaches adherence to the 'Meister,' where at every step one perceives the well-guarded and generally unspoiled expression of a past when in a well-knit society art and life were welded together in unity. Musically, Nuremberg cannot compete with the great industrial cities of Western Germany. The Nuremberger, who around the historical centre of his beautiful town has built large industrial suburbs, knows nothing but work. Yet for this very reason the concerts of the A.D.M. are amidst proper surroundings. They are intended, in the first place, for men of the profession, and they differ from those of other musical festivals inasmuch as they are the expression of eminent artistic work, and are meant to cultivate and further musical life in the spirit of Liszt, i.e., in the sense of gradual development. The opposition maintains that the Society does not sufficiently carry out the intention of the founder. It is true that listeners were not led into new lands, for the radicals among the composers had to stand aside, and comparatively unknown men had a chance. The chief work of the festival was a new opera by Max Wolff, of Frankfurt a/M., with the mysterious title, 'Frau Berthe's Vespergang.'

It is remarkable how many prominent composers of Germany are still cultivating the sonata form, widening it, and filling it with new thought. Hans Pfitzner's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Peters edition), recently played at Cologne by Therese Sarata and Alfred Kührmann, is a romantic work of great beauty, full of activity and innate force. We observe clearly the strange duality of Pfitzner's art: the open portals of his melodic gift, inviting the listener to enter, and the Gothic fretwork of the working-out sections. In the final movement there is a breath of spring not to be misunderstood. Into a different world of thought Paul Büttner leads in his Sonata in C minor, also for violin and pianoforte, with his powerful first movement, his Beethovenian breadth and beauty of melody of the Adagio, and his joyous final movement. In Egon Kornauth, whose Sonatas Opp. 9 and 15 for violin and pianoforte have latterly been played by Francis Aranyi, we recognise the perfection of art. His works are technically of immense difficulty. The violin part, which is often written in the highest position, demands the purest intonation for its constant modulations, and the pianoforte part with its groups of massive chords and its complicated contrapuntal work, evidently influenced by Max Reger, marks a culminating point in the work of Kornath, besides being a remarkable novelty. The aforesaid Büttner conducted at the ninth symphony concert of the Berlin State Opera his fourth Symphony, in B minor, a work reflecting the events of the last six years in the language of Wagner-Strauss-Bruckner, yet in style independent of those masters. Portions of it are dramatic rather than symphonic in character. It is too heavily scored, the entire orchestra being employed almost throughout. The final movement leading to an effective climax caused a storm of applause. F. ERCKMANN.

Miss Katherine Ruth Heyman lectured on 'Rhythm' to the American Women's Club, Park Lane, on July 1. As Miss Heyman has studied the nature of rhythm very thoroughly, her lecture was very learned and enlightening.

PARIS OPEN-AIR OPERA

The open-air concert-opera season has commenced, and Saturday and Sunday afternoons find that part of the Tuileries Gardens which is set apart for the performance crowded. The seats cost from one to five francs, and the audience certainly gets value for money—provided its members are not too remote from the platform. The singing usually is good, the voices—thanks to the French system of emission—carrying well, while the artists often sing with authority of style, qualifications which count for much in France. The French, in fact, set great store by these particular attributes, which they seem to consider almost as important as the possession of a good voice. The singers' diction also is excellent, for that is part and parcel of the school in which they are trained. The repertoire includes 'Mignon,' 'Mireille' (which is très Gounod), 'La Tosca,' 'Manon,' 'Hérodiade,' 'La Fille du Régiment' (ever a favourite with open-air audiences), and other more or less well-worn operas. They are given with lavish 'cuts,' an arrangement which scarcely makes for continuity. Perhaps the less one hears of 'La Fille du Régiment' the better; but it must be confessed that the others suffer from this condensation. 'Pagliacci,' for example, was performed a few days ago—less the whole of Silvio's part. Consequently, a section of the listeners wondered why Canio should have exhibited such anguish in the air with which Act 1 closes, and why in Act 2 his woe remained unappeased. 'Pailasse' (as the work is entitled in the French version) is too well-known to most Parisians to lose by being cut; but the concierges and other workers, who devote Sunday afternoon to operatic relaxation, resent mystification. Set them a-thinking, and they consider that the management is withholding something that their money should command.

The concert-opera season, which, like the Opéra, is assisted by a State subsidy, is not entirely devoted to opera. Many important orchestral works are performed, while festivals also take place. Recently, for example, there have been Beethoven and Wagner programmes, varied by examples of Boieldieu, whose tinkling, Bellini-like strains have a curious fascination for the French, both at Paris and en province. Oddly enough, Meyerbeer's 'Marche des Flambeaux,' a most trivial and meaningless thing, is popular with these concert-opera patrons. It was given at a recent Sunday concert to the intense satisfaction of an audience which must have numbered two thousand persons. It is seldom that Paris displays so extraordinary a lack of judgment. Happily, those who frequent the Tuileries Gardens also applaud that which is good. Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, for example, is always well received, while at a recent Georges Hüe festival the composer's 'Les Pantins' Overture and his symphonic poem, 'Les Emotions,' were vigorously applauded. Perhaps the most appreciated of these programmes has been that partly devoted to 'chansons que tout le monde connaît,' to quote the announcement. The 'Credo du Paysan,' 'L'Angelus de la Mer,' 'Le Vin de Marsula,' and other popular ditties were wildly acclaimed.

'LES TROYENS'

'Les Troyens,' at the Opéra, has proved to be a decided draw. Although the work lacks the enduring qualities of the composer's 'Damnation de Faust,' it appears to have caught the fancy of Paris. The success of the revival owes something to the plot, the amateurs de la musique, who set great store by education, being well up in the classics. For the rest, the music certainly has the makings of a great work, unequal though it be. The orchestration is always the orchestration of Berlioz, and the melodies suggest the classic form. The airs assigned to the ballet are a little thin and monotonous; but Mlle. Yvonne Daunt's admirable dancing more than reconciles one to them. 'Les Troyens,' like everything in the Opéra repertoire, is extremely well staged, and the cast is a competent one. British holiday-makers who find themselves at Paris should make a point of savouring the performance. Besides, to make the acquaintance of a work which is not given in England is part of a musical education.

CONCERTS

Amongst the several interesting concerts which lately have taken place was a recital given by M. Alexandre Borovsky, a virtuoso whom Paris has readily accepted. With the left hand the Russian pianist obtained effects which were almost orchestral in their richness of tone, this being particularly noticeable in the Bach-Strahdal Concerto in D minor. Illuminating, too, was the programme offered by M. Leo Tecktonius, for he drew—amongst others—upon Cyril Scott, whom a section of the Parisian musical public has entitled the 'English Debussy.' This may be accounted a high compliment, since the French think worlds of Debussy. In the interests of English music it is as well that the best of our composers should be known to Parisian musical circles, which, for the most part, are little informed concerning British endeavour. The war has familiarised them with 'Tipperary,' which they believe to be our national invocation to battle. 'Do English composers,' they guilelessly ask, 'write nothing serious?' Fact!

AMERICAN ENTERPRISE

Amongst the Prix de Rome candidates are a number of Americans. About eighty, in fact, are taking part in the three months' course at Fontainebleau, under the guidance of the Paris Conservatoire teaching staff. The aspirants include teachers as well as students, several of the last-named being middle-aged. They are, however, extremely elated at the thought of competing with the French, and with American thoroughness all are prepared to show what America can do in the way of musical output. Some of them are confident that their ranks include at least another MacDowell.

GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

THE FLOWERS OF CRITICISM

Under the title 'A feast of Rhythm,' a recent number of the Tempo had the following paragraph. The notice comes from Naples:

'The young creature who played the violin yesterday in the hall of the Illusi is a personification of rhythm, and a manifestation of grace animated by music. She plays to express her youth, her blossoming in innocence, with her eyes closed, as though borne away by a river, and makes one think of the nymph sung by Virgil. I knew already that she came from Syracuse, and that she yet bore in her soul the sounds of Æschylus' tragedy, in her eyes the marvel of that great crowd before that sea. And when I saw her, I said immediately, "It is Arethusa." She is twenty years old, and unknowingly lives the musical life of the world. She does not know that she brings a message of vast harmony, that she is a voice from the mysterious. She plays with her eyes closed, listening to the voice of the tide that bears her away, confused with its waves, transformed herself into wave. We see her transformed into rhythm. She becomes something new, the most pure apparition of grace; and she recalls to our memory the other sister who was stolen away whilst she gathered the asphodel flowers, and that other who flees and complains, whilst her companion caresses her cheek with amber hand. She is called Letizia Caico. She played recently at the Argentine at Rome, and had a real success. She is a disciple of the grand Ysaye. In this turbid hour it is not easy to comprehend the savage simplicity of an instinctive soul. But those who have had the fortune and the joy to hear her, will not be able to forget her.'

The article is signed, but the writer's name is prosaic beside the florid exuberance of his style, and I will not wrong him by inserting it here.

POPULAR OPERA AT THE STADIUM

Rome, it is well known, is not on the coast, but nevertheless it is, in picturesque Trastevere phrase, usually described as a 'sea-port,' a description amply sustained in the number of strangers thronging the Eternal City at all times. And 'Rome, the Sea-Port,' is the title of a popular revue at present running in one of the music-halls here. Not that I wish to make the present notes a record of musical doings at Rome, but it happens that this revue contains the most eloquent criticism—typically Roman in its urgency—of the recent municipal enterprise at the Stadium, the huge open-air sports arena which, following the precedent of 1911, has this year been prepared as a colossal theatre for the production of popular opera. Two operas were announced, 'Aida' and 'Carmen,' and these characters of doleful visage and woebegone expression are precisely those that appear in the said revue amongst the numerous personages who, in coming to Rome, have 'got out of the rack.' In other words, the much advertised open-air performances have been a dismal failure so far, chiefly owing to the capricious June weather, which, after having caused the postponement of the première on three occasions, is now ushered in with a tremendous thunder-storm that destroyed the stage. 'Aida' was given twice, before a scanty audience that shivered in the night air. At the time of writing it is not known if the management will endeavour to give 'Carmen' under the more propitious stars of August. It is difficult, however, to anticipate any great results for the undertaking, seeing that musical Rome has entered on its aison morte with disconcerting suddenness. The Adriano Theatre is, however, bravely running a summer season of opera, which is proving a fair success, no less a person than Pazzareno de Angelis being the protagonist in a revival of Rossini's 'Mosè.'

The whole of Italy is preparing to commemorate in September the sixth centenary of the death of Dante, and music is to have a conspicuous part in the commemorations—as is natural, for the Divine Poet's works are full of music not only in the broad sense of literary beauty, but also strictly speaking, the Divine Comedy in particular being full of allusions which for philosophical profundity and technical accuracy confirm the tradition that Dante was himself a competent musician. For the solemn national celebrations at Ravenna, where the poet is buried, Fausto Salvatore has written a poem, 'Transitus Dantis,' which has been set to music by Licinio Refice, and will be one of the most ponderous works so far produced by the gifted maestro of the Cappella Liberiana (St. Mary Major) in this city. Meanwhile various Dante concerts are being given, and an interesting example of the programmes of such celebrations is that of the concert directed in the great Exhibition Hall of Rome by Domenico Alaleona on June 27, when the following items were produced:

- Six troubadour songs of the 13th and 14th centuries:
'Réverie' ... .. Anon.
'Alba' ... .. Folchetto di Marsiglia
'Estampida' (for tenor and harp) Raimbaldo di' Aquileras
'Canzone' ... .. Anon.
'Romance' ... .. Moniot d'Arras
'Ballata' (for soprano, chorus, and harp) ... .. Anon.
- (a) Laude spirituale, 'Alla Trinità Beata' (four voices)
(b) Villanella, 'La pastorella si leva per tempo' (three voices and chorus of children).
- Four ancient Italian canzoni (arranged for orchestra by Domenico Alaleona):
'Cor dolente'
'Canzone dei giocatori a palla.'
'La ninfa e il pastore.'
'Primavera d'amore.'
- Laudi alla Vergine (for quartet of children's voices) on the words of St. Bernard's hymn in the 'Paradise' ... .. Verdi
- May songs (from Dante and other ancient Tuscan poets) ... .. Alaleona
'L'ora della Sera.'
'Lia.'
'Mathilde.'
- (a) 'Nessun Maggior Dolore' ... .. Rossini
(b) 'To Dante' (words by d'Annunzio) ... .. Alaleona
- Sonnet to Beatrice (for soprano and orchestra) Gasco
- May songs ... .. Alaleona
(a) 'The Lark.'
(b) 'Ben Venga Maggio'

The Grand Prix de Rome for music, which entitles its holder to four years' residence at the Villa Medici on the Pincian Hill, is annually awarded at Paris in June, and this year has been won by Jacques de la Presl, born at Versaille in 1888, and a pupil of Vidal.

Teresa Brambilla, widow of Amilcare Ponchielli, has died at Vercelli at the age of seventy-six. She was a well-known singer in her time, and the author of 'La Gioconda' first made her acquaintance when she was singing in the 'Promessi Sposi' at the Dal Verme Theatre. She afterwards dedicated herself to the teaching of singing, and for many years exercised her profession at Geneva.

LEONARD PEYTON.

VIENNA

June has been practically a dead month here so far as musical events are concerned. On June 15, at a Rosé Quartet concert at the Musikvereinsaal, a big demonstration was made against Rosé, owing to the absence of Buchsbaum from the combination. On June 26, Arthur Nikisch conducted the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra at a concert in the Musikvereinsaal. The programme included the 'Euryanthe' Overture, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, and the 'Mastersingers' Overture. Nikisch, who conducted all three works without scores, does not appear to have lost any of his pre-war brilliancy. He received a tremendous ovation. On the same day he also conducted the orchestra at the inauguration of a new monument to Johann Strauss, in the Stadt Park. It comprises a golden figure of the composer, standing under a baldachino of white marble. The unveiling of the statue had been taken as an opportunity to honour the name of Johann Strauss, and on July 3, in the evening, at every orchestral performance at Vienna, the bands played the 'Blue Danube' waltz as a mark of respect to the memory of Strauss.

The opera season came to an end on June 30. It may be of interest to give here a complete list of the works performed during the season (September 1, 1920, to June 30, 1921):

Performances.	Performances
'Madame Butterfly' ... .. 20	'Travatore' ... .. 4
Puccini Trilogy ... .. 16	'Manon' ... .. 4
'La Bohème' ... .. 14	'Elektra' ... .. 4
'Die Tote Stadt' ... .. 14	'Frau Ohne Schatten' ... .. 4
'Lohengrin' ... .. 11	'Rheingold' ... .. 4
'Mastersingers' ... .. 9	'Siegfried' ... .. 4
'Tannhäuser' ... .. 8	'Götterdämmerung' ... .. 4
'Freischütz' ... .. 8	'Die Kohlhauserin' ... .. 3
'Carmen' ... .. 8	'Seraglio' ... .. 3
'Pagliacci' ... .. 8	'Così fan tutte' ... .. 3
'Cavalleria Rusticana' ... .. 8	'Don Juan' ... .. 3
'Tosca' ... .. 8	'Tristan and Isolde' ... .. 3
'Rosenkavalier' ... .. 8	'Evangelimann' ... .. 3
'Aida' ... .. 8	'Mignon' ... .. 3
'Tiefand' ... .. 7	'Barber of Bagdad' ... .. 2
'Fidelio' ... .. 7	'The Huguenots' ... .. 2
'Queen of Sheba' ... .. 7	'Merry Wives of Windsor' ... .. 2
'Salome' ... .. 7	'Otello' ... .. 2
'Flying Dutchman' ... .. 7	'Palestrina' ... .. 1
'Faust' ... .. 6	'Hans Heiling' ... .. 1
'Ballo in Maschera' ... .. 6	'Martha' ... .. 1
'La Juive' ... .. 5	'Ring of Polykrates' ... .. 1
'Magic Flute' ... .. 5	'Violanta' ... .. 1
'Tales of Hoffmann' ... .. 5	'Zar and Zimmermann' ... .. 1
'Ariadne' ... .. 5	'Werther' ... .. 1
'Rigoletto' ... .. 5	'Barber of Seville' ... .. 1
'Die Walküre' ... .. 5	'Fledermaus' ... .. 1
'Parsifal' ... .. 5	'Notre Dame' ... .. 1

Of these, nine were 'workers' performances,' that is, private performances given for the workers of Vienna, the tickets being allotted by the City Council to the different trades unions of the city. Eleven evenings were devoted entirely to ballet, and one or two were half ballet and half opera.

Of the new productions during the year, 'Die Tote Stadt' has been the most successful, and the Puccini Trilogy a good second. The only other new work, Bittner's 'Die Kohlhauserin,' cannot be considered a success.

STANLEY WINNEY.

Miss Ethel Higgins gave a lecture on three English lutenist song-writers—Thomas Campion, Philip Rosseter, and John Dowland—at Wigmore Hall on July 2. Illustrations were sung by Miss Coral Peachey, Miss Margaret Champneys, Mr. Herbert Thompson, and Mr. Graham Smart, and Sir Frederick Bridge presided.

Miscellaneous

ENFIELD.—The Enfield (Christ Church) Musical Society, formed in 1917, holds a prominent position in the musical life of the district. During the past season the Society brought out two new works—a 'Sanctus' for six-part treble soli, chorus, and orchestra, by Mr. Donald Reid, and a short choral and symphonic ode, 'The Light Triumphant,' by Dr. Harold E. Watts, conductor of the Society.

HARLECH.—'Within the walls of the Antient Castle' the Harlech Musical Festival was held on June 30. Where last year the rain poured on the umbrellas of the singers, the conductor, and the audience, this time the sun beat down genially. The choral body, which was said to number about two thousand voices, consisted of eighteen choirs from North Wales. No combined rehearsal had been possible, but under the baton of Prof. Walford Davies the singing in 'St. Paul' showed little weakness. The tone was pleasant, and there was definite expression in the choruses. At the morning and afternoon concerts congregational tunes were sung by the full choir, and part-songs were given by the separate choirs. A professional orchestra took part in each of the three meetings.

NORWICH.—Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' was recently performed at the Agricultural Hall by the Handel Society under Mr. Ernest Harcourt. The choral singing had the vigour, expressiveness, and sureness which are associated with the work of the Society. On July 8 the choir took part in the music of a pageant, 'Alceste,' held in the grounds of the Palace.

CONTENTS.

	Page.
Early English Chamber Music. By Rutland Boughton ...	537
'Jean-Christophe' and the Musical Novel. By W. Wright Roberts ...	539
The Dramatic Works of Vincent d'Indy. 'L'Etranger' (contd.). By M.-D. Calvocoressi ...	542
The Organ Works of Bach. By Harvey Grace (concluded) ...	544
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ...	550
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XIX. Richard Davy. By W. H. Grattan Flood ...	552
The Manuscript Libretto of 'Faust.' By Camille Saint-Saëns ...	553
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ...	558
English Folk-Songs and Dances. By Hubert Fitchew ...	560
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch ...	566
Patron's Fund ...	567
The Russian Ballet (with portrait) ...	568
Co-operative Opera: A New Experiment ...	568
Opéra Intime ...	569
'Savitrî' ...	570
Renoir's Portrait of Wagner ...	570
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ...	571
Chamber Music for Amateurs ...	571
Church and Organ Music ...	572
The Royal College of Organists' Pass List ...	572
Church Music from the Free Seats ...	572
Organs and Organists of St. Olave's, Tooley Street, Southwark. By Andrew Freeman (with illustration) ...	573
The New Organ for the Public Hall, Blackburn ...	575
Letters to the Editor ...	577
Royal Academy of Music ...	581
Royal College of Music ...	581
Sharps and Flats ...	581
Sixty Years Ago ...	581
Hand Development for the Performer ...	582
The Glastonbury Festival ...	582
The Union of Graduates in Music. By Arthur T. Froggatt ...	582
The Celtic Congress in the Isle of Man. By Rosaleen Graves ...	583
Music in the Provinces ...	585
Musical Notes from Abroad ...	586
Miscellaneous ...	590

	Music:
'I will sing unto the Lord.' Anthem for Festival or General Use. By Sir JOHN GOSS ...	561

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:
1. 'The eyes of all wait upon Thee.' Anthem for Harvest. By J. Barnby.
2. Competition Festival Record.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines ...	0	3	0
Three Lines ...	0	3	4
For every additional Line ...	0	0	10
One inch (displayed) ...	0	10	0
Half a Column ...	2	0	0
A Column ...	4	0	0
A Page ...	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BOYCE, ETHEL.—'The Pleasant Country.' Four Two-part Songs:

- No. 1. 'The Glow-worm.' (No. 193, Novello's Two-part Songs) ... 3d.
- No. 2. 'English Names.' (No. 194, Novello's Two-part Songs) ... 4d.
- No. 3. 'The Greeting.' (No. 195, Novello's Two-part Songs) ... 3d.
- No. 4. 'The lonely Knight.' (No. 196, Novello's Two-part Songs) ... 4d.

COULDERY, CLAUDIUS H.—'Valse Pastorale' (Suite in G). For Pianoforte Solo. 2s.

CRIMP, HERBERT E.—'Wilderness Way.' Three Songs of Childhood. 3s.

ELLIS, MRS. EDWARD.—'The Bells.' Vesper Hymn. 1d.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—'Orpheus with his lute.' Arranged for Eight Voices by the Composer. (No. 1394, Novello's Part-song Book.) 6d.

GIBBONS, ORLANDO.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. Set to Gregorian Tones with verses in faux-bourdon. Edited by ROYLE SHORE. (No. 1036, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 3d.

GIBBONS, ORLANDO, AND JOHN HOLMES.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. Set to Gregorian Tones with verses in faux-bourdon. Edited by ROYLE SHORE. (No. 1038, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 3d.

GOSS, J.—'I will sing unto the Lord.' Anthem for Festival or General use. From 'The Glory of the Lord.' (No. 942, The Musical Times.) 2d.

HOYLAND, C. E.—Communion Service in modal style. For Unison Singing. Price, 6d.; People's Part, 3d.

LOWE, C. EGERTON.—Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas. Hints on their Rendering, Form, &c.; with Appendices on Definition of Sonata, Music Forms, Ornaments, &c. (No. 95, Novello's Music Primers.) 5s.

MATTA, ARTHUR L.—Four Hymn Tunes (and 'Helmsley'). 1s.

PATTERSON, ANNIE W.—'A Lay of Spring.' Song. 1s. 6d.

PRESTON, THOMAS.—Two Short Pieces. For Pianoforte Solo. 2s.

—'Serenade.' Song. French Words. 2s.

—'Chanda.' An Eastern Love Song. 1s. 6d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 350), contains the following music in both notations: 'A Wigwam Song.' Two-part Song by ALEC ROWLEY. 'An Invitation.' Unison Song arranged by R. T. WHITE. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS, Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notation, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A B

No. 942. 'Elfin Town.'

GRANVILLE BANTOCK. — 2d.

SILVER, REGINALD.—'O Strength and Stay.' Sacred Song. For Soprano or Tenor (with Chorus ad lib.). 2s.

TALLIS, T., AND N. GILES.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. Set to Gregorian Tones with verses in faux-bourdon. Edited by ROYLE SHORE. (No. 1039, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 3d.

TOMKINS, THOMAS.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. Set to Gregorian Tones with verses in faux-bourdon. Edited by ROYLE SHORE. (No. 1037, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 3d.

WILLIAMS, JOHN GERRARD.—'Pot-Pourri.' A Cycle of Fragments. For Orchestra. Full Score. 15s.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

FORSYTH, CECIL.—"At the Play." An Allegory on Four Notes. Set for Chorus of Men's Voices. 2 cents (6d.).

—"To America." A Choral Rhythm for Men's Voices. 5 cents (8d.).

JAMES, PHILIP.—"The Victory Riders." Part-song for Men's Voices. 25 cents (1s.).

MANSFIELD, ORLANDO A.—"Eternal Light." Anthem. 12 cents (6d.).

IMPRESSIONS

(L'ALMANACH AUX IMAGES).

A VOCAL SUITE

FOR SOLO AND CHORUS OF LADIES' VOICES.

THE POEM BY

TRISTAN KLINGSOR.

The English Version by W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

GUSTAVE FERRARI.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Orchestral Score by JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

Parts for Strings, Wood-Wind and Horn (5 players), or Organ, may be had on hire.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HARVEST OR FESTIVAL ANTHEM.

"Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem"

BY

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG.

(PRIZE ANTHEM NORTH OF ENGLAND MUSICAL TOURNAMENT, 1919.)

Price - - - Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY-TWO GUINEAS OFFERED

FOR

ANNIVERSARY MUSIC.

ENTRIES CLOSE AUGUST 30TH.

Particulars, stamped envelope:

JAMES BROADBENT & SON, LTD.,
Boston Spa, Yorks.

ORCHESTRA.—A large and well-known Choral Society in North London DESIRES to CO-OPERATE with an efficient Orchestra in the rendering of Oratorio, &c., during the coming winter. All replies treated in strict confidence. Apply, "N. C. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MR. VICTOR BEIGEL wishes to SELL a Drawing-Room Concert Grand Steinway PIANO. To be seen by appointment, arranged by letter only. 18, Howley Place, London, W.2.

TO ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES AND CONDUCTORS

MESSRS. ELKIN & Co., LTD., desire to draw attention to the following specially attractive works for Orchestra recently issued.

SUITE FROM

"WHERE THE RAINBOW ENDS"

BY

ROGER QUILTER.

	s. d.
Full Orchestra (including Piano Conductor)	10 0
Small ... ..	7 0

CORONACH

(A HIGHLAND LAMENT.)

BY

EDGAR BARRATT.

Full Orchestra (including Piano Conductor) 2 0

Complete Orchestral List, post free on application.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 &amp; 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET

LONDON, W. 1.

MINOR MELODIES

Lyrics and Songs for Musical Setting

BY

J. M. STUART-YOUNG.

Ready about May, 1921, through Messrs. T. & A. CONSTABLE, at the University Press, Edinburgh, at 10s. 6d. net per copy, to the general public, first edition of 2,000 copies. 250 pp., (Crown 8vo).

NOTE.—Composers may secure single copies on sending one or more of their published songs, as proof of their bona fides, and 1s. 6d. (to cover cost of packing and postage) to

THE MISSES HARVEY, TYPISTS,

45, ST. ALBAN'S ROAD, SEVEN KINGS, ESSEX.

"MINOR MELODIES" will be followed a few months later by a second volume of Lyrics, this time with more tropical settings (Mr. Stuart-Young is permanently resident in West Africa) under the caption of "THE SEDUCTIVE COAST." Composers who acquire "Minor Melodies," and who wish to hold an early reserve on the Lyrics now being written, should ask the Misses HARVEY to note down their wish for the new volume. It will be supplied to composers on the same terms (cost of postage and packing only).

BLACKBURN'S EDITION OF ORATORIOS

Edited by ARTHUR PEARSON.

HYMN OF PRAISE.
ST. PAUL.
CREATION.

JUDAS.
ELIJAH.
WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

Price 1s. 6d. each, 25% discount allowed to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

To introduce, a sample will be sent for 1s., or the six assorted as above for 5s., post free to officials, stating position held, when sending.

Ask for samples of our SACRED CANTATAS. A large selection to choose from.

JOHN BLACKBURN LTD., MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings; Paper boards, Five Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100;

String Parts, price 13s. 6d.; Full Score, MS.; Wind Parts, 21s. 5d.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

HENRY KNIGHT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 10d.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Two Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

GEORGE GARRETT.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns. Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH

FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI
AND CHORUS.

THE WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

THE MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Four Shillings; Paper boards, Six Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Chorus only, 2s. Book of Words, 6s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Orchestral parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 10d.; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Four Shillings.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns.

Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

C. M. VON WEBER.

Price Two Shillings.

Full Score, 21s.; String Parts, 12s.; Wind Parts, 9s. 8d.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 9s. 9d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS, Etc.

TWELVE HYMNS FOR HARVEST

Selected from THE HYMNARY.

Price Three-Halfpence.

LET ALL OUR BRETHREN JOIN IN ONE

HARVEST HYMN BY J. BARNEY.

Price Three-Halfpence.

Words only, 3s. per 100.

SOWING AND REAPING

HARVEST CAROL BY J. MAUDE CRAMENT.

Price Twopence. Words only, 1s. 4d. per 100.

THE JOY OF HARVEST

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

Words only, 3s. per 100.

A HARVEST HYMN OF PRAISE

By J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

Words only, 3s. per 100.

THE SOWER WENT FORTH SOWING

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. BARNEY.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

MAKE MELODY WITHIN YOUR HEARTS

HARVEST CAROL BY F. A. J. HERVEY.

Price Twopence.

O LORD OF HEAVEN, AND EARTH, AND SEA

By J. BARNEY.

On Card, Price Three-Halfpence.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

By WALTER B. GILBERT AND J. BARNEY.

Price Three Halfpence each.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

A. M. GOODHART.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

COMPOSED BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Fourpence.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN

COMPOSED BY

HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

FEAR NOT, O LAND

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

LORD OF THE HARVEST

COMPOSED BY

R. REDHEAD,

EDITED BY ALFRED REDHEAD.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES

COMPOSED BY

H. A. CHAMBERS.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD

COMPOSED BY

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER

COMPOSED BY

E. W. NAYLOR.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

AND GOD SAID

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Fourpence.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY

COMPOSED BY

OLIVER KING.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE

COMPOSED BY

E. C. BAIRSTOW.

Price Fourpence.

THE ETERNAL GOD IS THY REFUGE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Fourpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

(From the 100th Psalm.)

COMPOSED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HO, O GOD, ART PRAISED IN SION

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

AND THE EARTH WAS REAPED

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD S. CRASTON.

Price Sixpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS

COMPOSED BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THE VINEYARD OF THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O BE JOYFUL IN GOD

(FROM "SEEDTIME AND HARVEST")

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

COMPOSED BY

BRUCE STEANE.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD

COMPOSED BY

MYLES B. FOSTER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

W. WOLSTENHOLME.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence

THE JOY OF THE LORD IS YOUR

STRENGTH

COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD

COMPOSED BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O HOW GREAT IS THY GOODNESS

(FROM "THE RAINBOW OF PEACE")

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

MUSIC FOR HARVEST

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS IN E—CHANT SERVICE ... ..	4d.
BENEDICITE IN E ... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE IN E ... ..	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN E ... ..	4d.
CANTATE DEUS IN E ... ..	4d.
COMMUNION SERVICE IN E ... ..	1s.

ANTHEMS.

BLESSED BE THOU—FOUR VOICES ... ..	4d.
" " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
THINE, O LORD—SHORT ANTHEM ... ..	2d.
O CLAP YOUR HANDS ... ..	4d.
" " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
I WAS GLAD—FESTIVAL ANTHEM ... ..	4d.
HARVEST OR FESTIVAL HYMN, with words—
"SING TO THE LORD" ... ..	1d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise that tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c. &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest ... ..	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth ... ..	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES

SERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Jubilate ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... ..	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison) ... ..	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use) ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

"THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD."

"SUN OF MY SOUL."

"THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."

"DIVINE LOVE."

"THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."

"LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."

"THE NAZARENE."

"THE PROMISE OF PEACE."

"JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES).

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,

15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

HEREFORD
FESTIVAL MUSICTHE
DREAM OF GERONTIUS

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE POEM BY

CARDINAL NEWMAN

THE MUSIC BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 38).

Price Seven Shillings;
Tonic Sol-fa, Choruses only, Three Shillings.

THE APOSTLES

AN ORATORIO FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 49).

Price Ten Shillings;
Tonic Sol-fa, Choruses only, Five Shillings.

STABAT MATER

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

A. DVORÁK.

Price Five Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, Three Shillings.

BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

CHRISTMAS HYMN

BY

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI

SET TO MUSIC FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA BY

BENJAMIN J. DALE.

Price Two Shillings.

COME, REDEEMER OF
OUR RACECANTATA FOR SOPRANO, TENOR AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS

COMPOSED BY

J. S. BACH

EDITED BY SIR IVOR ATKINS.

Price Two Shillings.

QUINTET

FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 84).

Price Twenty Shillings.

CONCERTO

FOR VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA

BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 85).

Arrangement for Violoncello and Pianoforte,
Price Twelve Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES.

MESSRS. NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED, beg leave to announce that they have a good supply of Copies of the

HANDEL FESTIVAL SELECTIONS

FOR THE YEARS 1906 AND 1912,

which they will supply in quantities to Choral Societies only at the special price of ONE SHILLING NET.

1906.

PART I. (174 pages.)

A SELECTION FROM "ISRAEL IN EGYPT."

RECIT. ...	Now there arose a new King
DOUBLE CHORUS ...	And the children of Israel sighed
DOUBLE CHORUS ...	He spake the word
DOUBLE CHORUS ...	He gave them hailstones for rain
DOUBLE CHORUS ...	He rebuked the Red Sea
DOUBLE CHORUS ...	He led them through the deep
CHORUS ...	But the waters
DOUBLE CHORUS ...	And Israel saw that great work
CHORUS ...	And believed the Lord
DUET ...	The Lord is a man of war
DOUBLE CHORUS ...	Thy right hand, O Lord
AIR ...	The enemy said
AIR ...	Thou shalt bring them in
DOUBLE CHORUS ...	The Lord shall reign
RECIT. ...	For the horse of Pharaoh
DOUBLE CHORUS ...	The Lord shall reign
RECIT. ...	And Miriam the prophetess
SOLO AND CHORUS	Sing ye to the Lord

PART II.

MISCELLANEOUS SELECTION.

VERTURE ...	"Siroe"
R ...	Return, O God of Hosts ( Samson )
CHORUS ...	See the proud chief ( Deborah )
R ...	More sweet is that name ( Semele )
R ...	Oh! had I Jubal's lyre ( Joshua )
RECIT. AND AIR	I rage ( Acis and Galatea )
	O ruddier than the cherry ( Acis and Galatea )
CHORUS ...	Then round about the starry throne ( Samson )
R ...	Lord, to Thee ( Theodora )
DUET ...	"Berenice"
R AND CHORUS	Still caressing, and caressed ( Alceste )
RECIT. AND AIR	{ Where shall I fly? } ( Hercules )
	{ See, see they come }
R AND CHORUS	The trumpet's loud clangor ( Ode for St. Cecilia's Day )
CHORUS ..	Gird on thy sword ( Saul )

APPENDIX.

R ...	Care Selve ( Atalanta )
RECIT. ...	Frondi tenere } ( Xerxes )
R ...	Ombra ma fù }
R ...	Si tra i ceppi ( Berenice )
R ...	Let the bright Seraphim ( Samson )

1912.

PART I. (191 pages.)

A SELECTION FROM "SAMSON."

No.	I. OVERTURE
3. CHORUS...	Awake the trumpet's lofty sound
13. RECIT. ...	Matchless in might
14. AIR ...	Total eclipse
16. CHORUS...	O first created beam
20. RECIT. ...	The good we wish for
21. AIR ...	Thy glorious deeds
31. CHORUS...	Then round about the starry throne
35. AIR ...	Return, O God of hosts
57. AIR ...	Honour and arms
67. CHORUS...	Fixed in His everlasting seat
78. AIR ...	Great Dagon has subdued our foe
79. CHORUS...	Great Dagon has subdued our foe
87. AIR ...	Ye sons of Israel
88. CHORUS...	Weep, Israel
95. AIR ...	Let the bright Seraphim
96. CHORUS...	Let their celestial concerts

PART II.

MISCELLANEOUS SELECTION.

ORCHESTRA ...	Concerto Grosso for Strings (No. 1)
CHORUS ...	Wretched lovers ( Acis and Galatea )
RECIT. AND AIR	{ Rasserena, O Madre } ( Sosarme )
	{ Rendi 'l sereno al ciglio }
AIR ...	Lusinghe più care ( Alessandro )
RECIT. AND AIR	{ Lo, here my love! } ( Acis and Galatea )
	{ Love in her eyes }
CHORUS ...	Ye tutelard gods ( Belshazzar )
AIR ...	Vinto è l' amor ( Ottone )
ORCHESTRA ...	Dance of Sailors ( Rodrigo )
RECIT. AND AIR	{ Tyrannic love } ( Susanna )
	{ Ye verdant hills }
SOLO AND CHORUS	As from the power ( St. Cecilia's Day )

APPENDIX.

RECIT. AND AIR	{ O worse than death } ( Theodora )
	{ Angels, ever bright and fair }
RECIT. AND AIR	{ Deeper and deeper still } ( Jephtha )
	{ Waft her, Angels }
RECIT. AND AIR	{ Frondi Tenere } ( Serse )
	{ Ombra mai fù }
AIR ...	Del Minacciar del vento ( Ottone )
ORCHESTRA ...	Overture ( Giustino )
AIR ...	Si tra i ceppi ( Berenice )
AIR ...	"Oh! had I Jubal's lyre" ( Joshua )
AIR ...	Where'er you walk ( Semele )
RECIT. AND AIR	{ I feel the Deity within } ( Judas )
	{ Arm, arm, ye brave }

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH. CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No.	No. 5.
1. Interlude .. .. .	Th. Dubois	1. Jour de Noces .. .. .	J. Stuart Arch
2. Chanson de Matin .. .. .	Edward Elgar	2. Festival Prelude on "Ein' feste Burg" .. .. .	W. Faulke
3. Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata" .. .. .	W. Faulkes	3. Legend .. .. .	Harvey Grac
4. There is a green hill far away .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	4. Allegretto Pastorale .. .. .	H. M. Higg
5. Marche Triomphale .. .. .	Alexandre Guilmant	5. Benediction Nuptiale .. .. .	Alfred Hollin
6. Ave Maria .. .. .	A. Henselt	6. Sursun Corda .. .. .	John N. Irelan
7. Grand Cœur No. 2 .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	7. Alla Marcia .. .. .	John N. Irelan
8. Andantino in D flat .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	8. Adagio Cantabile .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemar
9. Chanson Triste .. .. .	P. Tschaiowsky	9. Fanfare .. .. .	J. Lemmer
10. Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I. .. .. .	R. Wagner	10. Intermezzo .. .. .	B. Luard-Selb
11. Romanza .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	11. Easter Morn .. .. .	John E. We
12. Allegretto in E flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	12. Finale in B flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme
No. 2.	No. 6.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1. Chanson de Nuit .. .. .	Edward Elgar	1. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) .. .. .	Beethove
2. Alla Marcia .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	2. Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) .. .. .	Brahn
3. Minuetto .. .. .	Alexandre Guilmant	3. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) .. .. .	Chopi
4. Lied .. .. .	H. Hofmann	4. Funeral March .. .. .	William Faulk
5. Barcarolle .. .. .	H. Hofmann	5. Funeral March ("Saul") .. .. .	Hand
6. Spring Song .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hand
7. The Curfew .. .. .	Edward J. Horsman	7. Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") .. .. .	Mendelssoh
8. Pastoral in E .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	8. O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") .. .. .	Mendelssoh
9. Ave Maria d'Arcadelt .. .. .	Franz Liszt	9. Marche Solonnelle .. .. .	Schube
10. Cantique d'Amour .. .. .	Theo. Wendt	10. Marche Funèbre .. .. .	Tschaiowsk
11. The Seraph's Strain .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	11. Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" .. .. .	Tschaiowsk
12. Le Carillon .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	12. Lament .. .. .	John E. We
No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 9 (Funeral Music).	No. 10 (Christmas Music).
1. Scherzo in A flat .. .. .	Edward C. Bairstow	1. Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo" .. .. .	J. S. Bac
2. Melody .. .. .	S. Coleridge-Taylor	2. Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") .. .. .	J. S. Bac
3. Serenade .. .. .	H. Hofmann	3. Quem Vidistis, Pastores .. .. .	W. T. Be
4. Bridal March .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	4. Venite in Bethlehem .. .. .	W. T. Be
5. Berceuse .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	5. December—Christmas Morn .. .. .	Frederic H. Cowe
6. Melodie in E .. .. .	S. Rachmaninoff	6. Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols .. .. .	William Faulk
7. Aubade .. .. .	A. Strelzki	7. For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hand
8. Nocturne in C sharp minor .. .. .	P. Tschaiowsky	8. Pastoral .. .. .	Theodore Kull
9. Procession to the Minster ("Lohengrin") .. .. .	R. Wagner	9. Chorus of Shepherds .. .. .	J. Lemmer
10. Passacaglia .. .. .	John E. West	10. Christmas Pastoral .. .. .	Gustav Merk
11. Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody "Ad cenam Agni" .. .. .	Healey Willan	11. A Christmas Pastoral .. .. .	B. Luard-Sell
12. Allegretto in A flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	12. Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") .. .. .	John E. We
No. 5.	No. 6.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1. Nocturne .. .. .	Thomas F. Dunhi	1. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) .. .. .	Beethove
2. Postludium .. .. .	William Faulk	2. Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) .. .. .	Brahn
3. Andante Tranquillo .. .. .	H. M. Higg	3. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) .. .. .	Chopi
4. In Springtime .. .. .	Alfred Hollin	4. Funeral March .. .. .	William Faulk
5. Madrigal .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemar	5. Funeral March ("Saul") .. .. .	Hand
6. Triumphal March .. .. .	J. Lemmer	6. I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hand
7. Allegro in B flat .. .. .	F. Mendelssohn-Barthold	7. Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") .. .. .	Mendelssoh
8. Choral Prelude on "Rockingham" .. .. .	C. Hubert H. Parr	8. O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") .. .. .	Mendelssoh
9. Præliudium Pastorale .. .. .	J. Stain	9. Marche Solonnelle .. .. .	Schube
10. Romance in F minor .. .. .	Tschaiowsk	10. Marche Funèbre .. .. .	Tschaiowsk
11. Romance in A flat .. .. .	H. Sandiford Turn	11. Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" .. .. .	Tschaiowsk
12. Festal Commemoration .. .. .	John E. We	12. Lament .. .. .	John E. We
No. 9 (Funeral Music).	No. 10 (Christmas Music).	No. 11 (Funeral Music).	No. 12 (Christmas Music).
1. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) .. .. .	Beethove	1. Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo" .. .. .	J. S. Bac
2. Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) .. .. .	Brahn	2. Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") .. .. .	J. S. Bac
3. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) .. .. .	Chopi	3. Quem Vidistis, Pastores .. .. .	W. T. Be
4. Funeral March .. .. .	William Faulk	4. Venite in Bethlehem .. .. .	W. T. Be
5. Funeral March ("Saul") .. .. .	Hand	5. December—Christmas Morn .. .. .	Frederic H. Cowe
6. I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hand	6. Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols .. .. .	William Faulk
7. Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") .. .. .	Mendelssoh	7. For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hand
8. O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") .. .. .	Mendelssoh	8. Pastoral .. .. .	Theodore Kull
9. Marche Solonnelle .. .. .	Schube	9. Chorus of Shepherds .. .. .	J. Lemmer
10. Marche Funèbre .. .. .	Tschaiowsk	10. Christmas Pastoral .. .. .	Gustav Merk
11. Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" .. .. .	Tschaiowsk	11. A Christmas Pastoral .. .. .	B. Luard-Sell
12. Lament .. .. .	John E. We	12. Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") .. .. .	John E. We

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE TWO SHILLING EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service, more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.	No.	Book IV.
1. Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. "Elevation"—Andante e Legato .. .. .	Thomas Adams
2. Andante .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Religioso .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
3. Largamente .. .. .	George J. Bennett	3. "Simplicity"—Andante .. .. .	Barry M. Gilhol
4. Andante Religioso .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	4. Largamente .. .. .	R. G. Hailin
5. Andantino .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	5. "Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Charles H. Lloy
6. Adagio Cantabile .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Andantino .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchar
7. Larghetto .. .. .	Charles J. May	7. Con Moto Moderato .. .. .	William Sewe
8. Andante con Moto .. .. .	John E. West	8. Andante Amabile .. .. .	William Sewe
9. Andantino quasi Allegretto .. .. .	John E. West	9. Andante .. .. .	Clement M. Spurlin
10. Andante .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Sostenuto .. .. .	F. Cunningham Wood
Book II.	Book III.	Book V.	Book VI.
1. Andante con Moto .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. "Invocation"—Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Thomas Adams
2. Con Moto .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante con Moto .. .. .	Percy E. Fletcher
3. Moderato .. .. .	H. A. Chambers	3. Poco Adagio .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
4. Marziale, poco Lento .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	4. Andante Espresso .. .. .	Ignace Gibson
5. Moderato .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	5. Adagio .. .. .	Alfred Hollin
6. Andantino .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Poco Lento .. .. .	Charles H. Lloy
7. Adagio .. .. .	Charles J. May	7. Andante Dolente .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchar
8. "Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto .. .. .	John E. West	8. Andantino con Tenerezza .. .. .	William Sewe
9. Andante Serioso .. .. .	John E. West	9. Andante con Moto .. .. .	Clement M. Spurlin
10. Adagio .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Adagio Molto .. .. .	F. Cunningham Wood
Book I.	Book II.	Book III.	Book IV.
1. Moderato e Legato .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. Dolente .. .. .	Edmund T. Chip
2. Moderato .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Sostenuto .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
3. Andante con Moto .. .. .	George J. Bennett	3. Andantino .. .. .	R. G. Hailin
4. Andante .. .. .	H. A. Chambers	4. Con Moto .. .. .	Alfred Hollin
5. Grazioso molto Espresso .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	5. "Communion"—Cantabile .. .. .	J. Lemmer
6. "Song without Words"—Cor Moto .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Andante Religioso .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchar
7. Andante .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	7. Lento .. .. .	Charles J. Ma
8. Andante Dolente .. .. .	John E. West	8. Larghetto .. .. .	Albert Robin
9. Andante Pastorale .. .. .	John E. West	9. Adagio e Mesto .. .. .	William Sewe
10. Adagio .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Affetuoso .. .. .	William Sewe

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE
ORGAN.
(NEW SERIES.)

RECENT NUMBERS		s. d.
THREE CHORALE PRELUDES ... ..	Harold E. Darke	3 0
SOLEMN PRELUDE ... ..	Hugh Blair	1 6
INTERMEZZO ... ..	Hugh Blair	2 3
CAPRICCIETTO ... ..	Hugh Blair	2 3
POSTLUDE ... ..	Hugh Blair	1 6
POSTLUDE (with Violins ad lib. ) ...	A. C. Mackenzie	1 6
FANTASIA ON THE TUNE "TWRGWYN" ...	T. J. Morgan	2 3
MINUET ... ..	Alfred Hollins	2 3
EPITHALAMIUM ... ..	Alfred Hollins	2 3
THREE SHORT PIECES ... ..	S. Coleridge-Taylor	2 3
TOCCATA ... ..	A. P. F. Böely	2 3
A SOUVENIR ... ..	H. Douglas	2 3
LAMENT ... ..	J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
ELEGIAC PRELUDE ... ..	G. J. Bennett	2 3
CRADLE SONG ... ..	R. G. Hailing	1 6
CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN" ...	J. E. Wallace	3 0
TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer")	C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... ..	Alec Rowley	1 6
SCHERZO ... ..	G. J. Bennett	2 3
THREE PRELUDES ... ..	G. J. Bennett	2 3
DÉSÉPOIR ... ..	Ch. Quef	1 6
CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... ..	J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHORALE PRELUDES FOR
THE ORGAN

BY
C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

FIRST SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. I.

CONTENTS.

CHORALE PRELUDE on "Dundee."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "Rockingham."
CHORALE PRELUDE on S. S. Wesley's "Hampton."
CHORALE PRELUDE on the "Old 104th."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "Melcombe."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "Christe Redemptor omnium."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Ann's."

SECOND SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 45.

CONTENTS.

CHORALE PRELUDE on "Croft's 136th."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "Martyrdom."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Thomas."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Mary."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "Eventide."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Cross."
CHORALE PRELUDE on "Hanover."

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH SET

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWENTY
SHORT AND EASY PIECES

FOR THE
ORGAN.

SET I.

No.
1.	Andante ... ..	Alfred H. Allen
2.	Spring Song ... ..	W. H. Bell
3.	Andante con Moto ... ..	G. J. Bennett
4.	Song of Thanksgiving ... ..	Josiah Booth
5.	Church Preludes No. 5 ... ..	R. E. Bryson
6.	Postlude ... ..	H. Elliot Button
7.	Postlude ... ..	G. Calkin
8.	Prelude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
9.	Andante ... ..	J. W. Gritton
10.	Allegro Moderato ... ..	Kate Loder
11.	Allegro. Op. 21 ... ..	Gustav Merkel
12.	Andante. Op. 162 ... ..	Gustav Merkel
13.	Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn ...	J. T. Pye
14.	Prelude No. 2 ... ..	A. Redhead
15.	Larghetto and Allegro ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
16.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	C. Steggall
17.	Contemplation ... ..	John E. West
18.	Postlude ... ..	John E. West
19.	Moderato Maestoso ... ..	Kate Westrop
20.	Andante Pastorale ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET II.

No.
1.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	George J. Bennett
2.	Church Prelude ... ..	R. Ernest Bryson
3.	Andante Tranquillo ... ..	George Calkin
4.	For Holy Communion ... ..	J. Baptiste Calkin
5.	Postlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
6.	Largo ... ..	Handel
7.	Berceuse ... ..	Oliver King
8.	Adagio, from Sonata No. 2 ... ..	Kuhlau
9.	Allegretto ... ..	Kate Loder
10.	Andante in G ... ..	G. F. Wesley Martin
11.	Andante Quasi Allegretto ... ..	Gustav Merkel
12.	Cavatina in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
13.	Epilogue ... ..	Joseph Rheinberger
14.	Andante in A ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
15.	Andante in G ... ..	Charles Steggall
16.	March in G ... ..	Henry Smart
17.	Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funebre") ...	John E. West
18.	Pastoral Melody ... ..	John E. West
19.	Andante ... ..	Kate Westrop
20.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.
1.	Melody ... ..	A. Herbert Brewer
2.	Maestoso ... ..	George Calkin
3.	Ave Maria ... ..	Edward T. Chipp
4.	Interlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
5.	Intermezzo ... ..	Alan Gray
6.	Postlude ... ..	Alex. Guilment
7.	Sursum Corda ... ..	John Ireland
8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22 ... ..	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
9.	Andante ... ..	Gustav Merkel
10.	Duetto in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
11.	Cavatina ... ..	Joachim Raff
12.	Monologue No. 5 ... ..	J. Rheinberger
13.	Melody in F ... ..	Anton Rubinstein
14.	Dreaming ... ..	Schumann
15.	The Poet Speaks ... ..	Schumann
16.	Soft Voluntary ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
17.	Menuetto ... ..	Berthold Tours
18.	Aspiration ... ..	John E. West
19.	Sketch in C minor ... ..	John E. West
20.	Andante con Moto ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET IV (in the press).

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.
CLOTH, EIGHT SHILLINGS EACH SET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ENGLISH LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

EACH SET, PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS NET.

FIRST SET.

- |                                    |                          |                                   |                    |
|------------------------------------|--------------------------|-----------------------------------|--------------------|
| 1. *My true love hath my heart ... | Sir Philip Sidney | 3. Where shall the lover rest ... | Scott       |
| 2. Good-night ...                  | Shelley           | 4. Willow, Willow, Willow ...     | Shakespeare |

SECOND SET.

- |                                      |                    |                                     |                    |
|--------------------------------------|--------------------|-------------------------------------|--------------------|
| 1. O Mistress Mine ...               | Shakespeare | 3. No longer mourn for me ...       | Shakespeare |
| 2. Take, O take those lips away ...  | Shakespeare | 4. Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... | Shakespeare |
| 5. When icicles hang by the wall ... | Shakespeare |                                     |                    |

THIRD SET.

- |  |                 |                               |                       |
|--|-----------------|-------------------------------|-----------------------|
| 1. *To Lucasta, on going to the wars ... | Lovelace | 4. *Why so pale and wan ...   | Sucklin        |
| 2. If thou would'st ease thine heart ... | Beddoes  | 5. Through the ivory gate ... | Julian Sturgis |
| 3. *To Althea, from prison ...           | Lovelace | 6. Of all the torments ...    | William Wals.  |

FOURTH SET.

- |  |                               |  |              |
|--|-------------------------------|--|--------------|
| 1. *Thine eyes still shined for me ... | Emerson                | 4. Weep you no more ...                    | Anon. |
| 2. *When lovers meet again ...         | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. There be none of beauty's daughters ... | Byron |
| 3. *When we two parted ...             | Byron                  | 6. Bright star ...                         | Keat. |

FIFTH SET.

- |                               |                       |                                   |                                |
|-------------------------------|-----------------------|-----------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| 1. *A stray nymph of Dian ... | Julian Sturgis | 4. Lay a garland on my hearse ... | Beaumont &amp; Fletcher |
| 2. *Proud Maisie ...          | Scott          | 5. Love and laughter ...          | Arthur Bulle            |
| 3. *Crabbed age and youth ... | Shakespeare    | 6. A girl to her glass ...        | Julian Sturgis          |
| 7. A Lullaby ...              | E. O. Jones    |                                   |                                |

SIXTH SET.

- |                                       |                    |                                      |                         |
|---------------------------------------|--------------------|--------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. *When comes my Gwen ...            | E. O. Jones | 4. *A lover's garland ...            | Alfred P. Graves |
| 2. *And yet I love her till I die ... | Anon.       | 5. At the hour the long day ends ... | Alfred P. Graves |
| 3. *Love is a bable ...               | Anon.       | 6. Under the greenwood tree ...      | Shakespeare      |

SEVENTH SET.

- |  |                       |  |                       |
|--|-----------------------|--|-----------------------|
| 1. On a time the amorous Silvy ...       | Anon.          | 4. O never say that I was false of heart ... | Shakespeare    |
| 2. Follow a shadow ...                   | Ben Jonson     | 5. Julia ...                                 | Herrie         |
| 3. Ye little birds that sit and sing ... | Thomas Heywood | 6. Sleep ...                                 | Julian Sturgis |

EIGHTH SET.

- |                            |                               |                         |                        |
|----------------------------|-------------------------------|-------------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Whence ...              | Julian Sturgis         | 4. Dirge in woods ...   | George Meredith |
| 2. Nightfall in winter ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. Looking backward ... | Julian Sturgis  |
| 3. Marian ...              | George Meredith        | 6. Grapes ...           | Julian Sturgis  |

NINTH SET.

- |                                    |                          |                        |                          |
|------------------------------------|--------------------------|------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Three aspects ...               | Mary E. Coleridge | 4. Whether I live ...  | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 2. A fairy town (St. Andrew's) ... | Mary E. Coleridge | 5. Armida's garden ... | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 3. The witches' wood ...           | Mary E. Coleridge | 6. The maiden ...      | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 7. There ...                       | Mary E. Coleridge |                        |                          |

TENTH SET.

- |  |                           |                                   |                               |
|--|---------------------------|-----------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| 1. My heart is like a singing bird ... | Christina Rossetti | 4. The child and the twilight ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell |
| 2. Gone were but the winter cold ...   | Allan Cunningham   | 5. From a city window ...         | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell |
| 3. A moment of farewell ...            | Julian Sturgis     | 6. One silent night of late ...   | Herrie                 |

ELEVENTH SET.

- |                                    |                               |   |                               |
|------------------------------------|-------------------------------|---|-------------------------------|
| 1. One golden thread... ...        | Julia Chatterton       | 5. The faithful lover ...                 | Alfred Perceval Graves |
| 2. The spirit of the Spring ...    | Alfred Perceval Graves | 6. If I might ride on puissant wing... .. | Julian Sturgis         |
| 3. What part of dread eternity ... | Author unknown         | 7. Why art thou slow ...                  | Masinge                |
| 4. The blackbird ...               | Alfred Perceval Graves | 8. She is my love beyond all thought ...  | Alfred P. Graves       |

TWELFTH SET.

- |                                  |                         |                                   |                  |
|----------------------------------|-------------------------|-----------------------------------|------------------|
| 1. When the dew is falling ...   | Julia Chatterton | 4. When the sun's great orb... .. | H. Warner |
| 2. To Blossoms ...               | Herrie           | 5. Dream pedlary ...              | Beddoes   |
| 3. Rosaline ...                  | Lodge            | 6. O World, O Life, O Time ...    | Shelley   |
| 7. The sound of hidden music ... | Julia Chatterton |                                   |                  |

* Published separately, price 1s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

SELECTED EDITION.

SONGS AND BALLADS.

(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

Price ... .. Eighteen Shillings each.

PREFACE.

THIS Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, teys, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purposes of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises counting variants, and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series, which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE BARLESS PSALTER

POINTED FOR USE WITH ANGLICAN CHANTS

AN EASY BOOK FOR CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID,

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS,

THE ATHANASIAN CREED

Together with Short Notes on the Text and a full Explanatory Preface

EDITED BY

WALTER MARSHALL, M.A.,

AND

SEYMOUR PILE, M.A., F.R.C.O.

Imperial 32mo, Price Two Shillings net.

Demy 8vo, Large Type, Price Five Shillings net.

THE BARLESS PSALTER CHANTS

Price, Paper, Two Shillings net; Cloth, Three Shillings net.

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED.

VOICE TRAINING EXERCISES

BY
EMIL BEHNKE

Teacher of Voice Culture and Lecturer on Vocal Physiology,

AND
CHARLES W. PEARCE

M.A., Mus. D., F.T.C.L., F.R.C.O., Director of Studies, Trinity College of Music.

In separate Books for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass.

Price ... .. Two Shillings and Sixpence net.

TESTIMONIALS.

"Admirable, and doubtless will prove of great utility."

"Far more precise in plan than anything I have seen."

"I like the exercises very much; they are scientific, systematic, and ingenious."

"A personal experience enables me to speak in the highest terms of Mr. Behnke's method, which is absolutely invaluable for increasing the power, resonance, and flexibility of the voice; and I am glad to be able to recommend the exercises as being thoroughly practical and most useful."

"May be safely and cordially recommended to vocal students, and even to practised singers."

"The exercises are, with great skill, arranged so as to give a maximum of benefit with a minimum of fatigue. They are melodious and natural, and are consequently pleasant of performance."

"Besides the high commendation which we can give them as voice-training exercises per se, they possess the additional merit of being very melodious throughout."

"The combined simplicity and utility of the plan upon which these exercises have been written will commend them to the notice of professors and students alike."

"It may be said with confidence that no better exercises for the purposes of voice cultivation are to be met with."

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.
NEW YORK. SYDNEY. MELBOURNE.

And may be had of all Music Sellers:

SOME ATTRACTIVE RUSSIAN PIANO ALBUMS.

EDUCATIONAL SERIES OF RUSSIAN MUSIC

Six Volumes in Progressive Order, Edited by ANNIE T. WESTON.

CONTAINING PIECES BY

AMANI, ARENSKY, BARMOTIN, CATOIRE, EIGES, GLIÈRE, GOEDICKE, LADOUKHIN, LANDSTEIN, MAYKAPAR, METNER, PACHULSKI, PANTCHENKO
REBIKOV, SCRIBIN, SELIVANOV, TCHEREPNIN, AND ZOLOTAREV.

3s. net cash each Volume.

GLIÈRE

TEN SELECTED PIECES

3s. net cash.

PACHULSKI

SEVEN SELECTED PIECES.

3s. net cash.

REBIKOV

TEN SELECTED PIECES.

3s. net cash.

TCHEREPNIN

EIGHT SELECTED PIECES.

3s. net cash.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 943.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

SEPTEMBER 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

(Season 1921—1922.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have strong voices of good quality, and should be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W. 7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.
Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

As the Academy is still quite full, Students wishing to join in September are advised to have their names added to the waiting list at once.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins Monday, September 19th.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about September 15th.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams: "Initiative, Southkens, London,"
Telephone: "1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

Intending Students who wish to enter the College in the Christmas term, 1921, are asked to send in their forms as soon as possible.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

ESTABLISHED AND MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL ... LONDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and Orchestra.

AUTUMN TERM commences Monday, September 19th.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

Telegrams: Euphonium Fleet, London.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. J. S. Bach. (Novello & Co., Book 10, p. 214; Augener & Co., p. 382; Peters, Vol. I.)

Choral Prelude on "Darwell's 148th," No. 2 of Three Choral Preludes. H. E. Darke. (Novello & Co.)

Prelude and Angel's Farewell (Gerontius). E. Elgar. Arranged by A. H. Brewer (this arrangement only). (Novello & Co.)

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the January, 1922, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for July, 1921.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Books of Examination Papers may be obtained by members only. Vol. I., 1881-96, price 6s.; Vol. II., 1897-1906, price 8s. 3d. (including postage).

The College is open daily from 11 to 4; closed on Saturdays.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary
Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

THE PHILHARMONIC CHOIR.

Hon. Conductor: CHARLES KENNEDY SCOTT.

(SEASON 1921-1922.)

REHEARSALS resume OCTOBER 5th, at the Ethical Church, 46, Queen's Road, Bayswater, W., at 6.15 p.m.

THE CHOIR is engaged to sing (at Concerts of the Royal Philharmonic Society and the London Symphony Orchestra) in the following works:

"A Pagan Requiem" (new) (Delius); "Ninth Symphony" (Beethoven); "Sarabande" (Ducasse); "Requiem" (Brahms); "Grail Scene," "Parsifal" (Wagner); "Missa Solennis in D" (Beethoven).

A performance of the B minor Mass (Bach) is also contemplated.

Good and musicianly singers (s.a.t. or b.) are invited to join the Choir.

Full particulars from the Hon. Secretary,
Miss R. PHILPOTT, 8, Hatherley Grove, W.2.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The Prospectus containing information as to the courses of study for the Mus.B. and Mus.D. degrees will be forwarded on application to the Internal Registrar. Under the regulations, graduates of other approved Universities who fulfil the requirements of the Syllabus may qualify for the degree of Mus.D. The Hargreaves Scholarship of the value of £30 per annum and tenable for two years, is awarded on the results of the 1st Mus.B. examination. The Session commences October 6th, 1921.

SYDNEY CHAFFERS, Bursar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

BATTERSEA POLYTECHNIC,

LONDON, S.W.11.

Principal—ROBERT H. PICKARD, D.Sc., F.R.S.

CLASSES IN THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, AND COUNTERPOINT.

UNIVERSITY COURSES FOR DEGREES AND HIGHER EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

H. DAVAN WETTON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O. (assisted by W. H. HICKOX, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.).

SPECIAL CLASSES FOR SCHOOL TEACHERS.

A.I.S.C. and F.I.S.C. Diplomas.

(Recognised by the L.C.C.)

E. E. DOUGLAS SMITH, F.R.C.O.

LESSONS IN SOLO SINGING, PIANOFORTE, AND VIOLIN.

Next Term begins on Tuesday, September 20th.

Particulars on application to the Principal.

ADVISORY BOARD FOR COMPOSERS.

Director:—Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.

Advisory Committee:

Arnold Bax	B. J. Dale	S. H. Nicholson, M.A.
York Bowen	Edward J. Dent	Dr. R. R. Terry
Frank Bridge	Eugène Goossens	Dr. Vaughan Williams
Albert Coates	Hughen Harby

Interpretative Committee:

J. Francis Harford	Albert Sammons
William Murdoch	Philip Wilson

For particulars, Rules, &c., apply to the Secretary of Advisory Board for Composers, c/o Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, W.1.

National Union of Organists' Associations

19, BERNERS STREET, W.1.

CONGRESS - - LONDON, 1921.

September 20.—Open Public Meeting, 11.30 a.m., Royal College of Music; Welcome by Sir Hugh Allen, M.A., Mus. D.; Address on "Church Architecture and Organs" by Sir Chas. Nicholson; Reception at the Mansion House at the invitation of the Lord Mayor of London; Official Welcome by the Officers and Council of the Royal College of Organists; Special Music at Southwark Cathedral, 5 p.m.

September 21.—Visit to Blind Institute; Westminster Cathedral, 10.30 a.m.; Westminster Abbey, 3 p.m., and Novello's Publishing House; Banquet at 7 p.m.

September 22.—Visit to St. Paul's Cathedral, 10.15 a.m.

The Congress Programme will be sent to members who make application to

JOHN BROOK, Hon. General Secretary,

19, Berners Street, London, W.1.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC. GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-eight Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom DECEMBER. Last day of entry, November 8.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associa (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A.M.L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L.Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 387

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON

THE TECHNIQUER AN APPARATUS FOR DEVELOPING THE HANDS OF ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. FITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Extract from a letter received from H. COWARD, Esq., M.A. Mus. Doc. Oxon.: May, 1921.

"Re your 'Techniquer.'—Having now had proof of its usefulness, I may say that you are at liberty to use my name as a supporter of the invention. I am ordering another."

"H. COWARD."

Send for particulars and list of testimonials.

"Hand Development," 7d., post free. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O., Secretary;

Miss I. R. FITCHER, Assistant Secretary,

21, Boundary Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone, Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

THE SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

OCTOBER 9th to 15th, 1921.

Patrons:

THEIR MAJESTIES THE KING AND QUEEN.
HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK.

President: THE RIGHT HON. LORD HATHERTON, C.M.G.

Chairman of General Committee:

HIS WORSHIP THE MAYOR OF WALSALL.

Vice-Chairman: ALFRED MOSS.

Vice-Presidents:

THE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT AND MAYORS OF THE VARIOUS BOROUGH AND THE LEADING GENTLEMEN IN THE COUNTY.

OPENING SERVICE at Lichfield Cathedral, Sunday, October 9; CONCERTS at Walsall Town Hall, Monday to Friday, October 10 to 14.

Principal Works to be performed:

Vanity of Vanities" ... ..	Bantock
The Hound of Heaven" ... ..	Harris
The Requiem of Archangels" ... ..	Julius Harrison
(First Performance, conducted by the Composer.)
MIRIABILIA" ... ..	Clifford Roberts
(First Performance.)
The Dream of Gerontius" } ... ..	Elgar
The Music Makers" } ... ..
The Hymn of Jesus" ... ..	Holst
God's time is the Best" ... ..	Bach
News from Whydah" ... ..	Balfour Gardiner

CHOIRS:

THE WALSALL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.
THE WOLVERHAMPTON MUSICAL SOCIETY.
THE WOLVERHAMPTON NEW CHORAL SOCIETY.
THE CANNOCK CHORAL SOCIETY.
THE WALSALL MADRIGAL SOCIETY.
And on Sunday THE CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

MUSICAL DIRECTOR:

APPLEBY MATTHEWS.

CONDUCTORS:

DR. DARBY. JOSEPH YATES.
JOSEPH LEWIS. APPLEBY MATTHEWS.

ADJUDICATORS FOR COMPETITIONS ON OCTOBER 15TH.

ERNEST NEWMAN. JULIUS HARRISON.

PRINCIPAL ARTISTES:

SOPRANI:

FLORENCE PARKES DARBY. MARGARET HARRISON.
MAY HUXLEY.

CONTRALTI:

MARY FOSTER. KATHLEEN MILLER.

TENORI:

ARTHUR JORDAN. FRANK MULLINGS.
W. H. ROBERTS.

BASSI:

CHARLES HARRISON. ERNEST INGRAM.
A. S. SMITH. CHARLES TILL. JOSEPH YATES.

INSTRUMENTALISTS:

V. READ. CLAUDE DE VILLE. LILLIAN MUSGROVE.
T. W. NORTH (Organist).
THE ARTHUR HYTH QUARTET
CITY OF BIRMINGHAM ORCHESTRA.

Saturday, October 15, COMPETITION FESTIVAL in Walsall Town Hall.

For Copies of Syllabus, detailed programme, and particulars of Fees, apply to

C. H. GIBSON (Capt.), Birmingham Road, Walsall, (General Secretary);

or ARTHUR MORGAN, Shelfield, near Walsall (Organisation Secretary).

For particulars of Competitions and tickets for same, apply to
S. H. ROPER, Westbourne Street, Walsall (Competition Secretary).

CHARLES TREE.

LECTURE-RECITALS on

HOW TO SING with ease FOR FORTY YEARS or more.

Mr. ROBSON FEWSTER KEIGHLEY, August 8th, 1921:

"Merely reading your book makes one feel how easy it is to sing. We have too much talk of a mysterious character to-day in connection with singing. Kindly quote dates for the lecture."

The difficulty of singing is its simplicity. But one must realise that simplicity is often difficult to obtain. Of course nothing is so certain as good personal tuition and illustrations from a successful singer. This, however, is in most cases impossible. Therefore it is important that all real teachers do their utmost to obtain the one correct method. The correct Italian, French, English are all correct—they are all the same. In trying to obtain nasal resonance beware of nasal quality. This has always been my warning, and the importance of correct nasal resonance has always been fully illustrated in the lectures.

PARASOTTI, August, 1921, says: "Look at our beautiful voices which disappear after a few years. It is not age, it is not disease, it is bad method that has ended their singing. Most singers do not get the correct nasal resonance."

Lecture-Recital forward bookings include many of the big cities. Mr. Tree repeats his "Lucifer," Royal Choral Society, Nov. 26, 1921.

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree.

(5s. 2d. post free.) (If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W.5.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I can recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly novel, interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Full Particulars, address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING

TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority. . . ."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

L.R.A.M.

Coaching by Specialists for the Practical Examination (all subjects), and also in the Harmony, Form, and Art of Teaching Papers. Special Class for Aural Tests. Apply, Registrar.

METROPOLITAN ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

72-74, High Street, Marylebone, W.1.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPosed AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

POSTAL TRAINING IN MUSIC.

COMPLETE AND INDIVIDUAL PREPARATION FOR L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc., AND ALL DIPLOMAS OF T.C.L. AND R.C.O.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES AT THESE EXAMINATIONS.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

- (1) L.R.A.M. Paper Work. Full Course for Xmas Examination.
- (2) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Full Course for January Examination.

Special Courses for those who wish to Study Theory and Composition apart from Examination Work.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, MUS. DOC. (LOND.).

Tutor in Music to U.C.C., Cambridge; Examiner in Music to College of Preceptors, London.

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone:
Bristol 3033.

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising.

Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 14,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard" Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MR. JAMES COLEMAN THE EMINENT ORATORIO BASS

(Of the Royal National Eisteddfod, South Wales Festival, and principal Choral Societies).

"ELIJAH."

"Mr. James Coleman gave us a reading that let fresh light into the theme, and showed how complete his mastery is of EXCEPTIONAL vocal ability."
Loughborough Echo, March 4, 1921.

Brahms' "REQUIEM."

"Mr. James Coleman sang the baritone solo MERITORIOUSLY."—Yorkshire Post.

"SAMSON."

"Mr. James Coleman displayed his artistry and perceptive faculties in the very highest degree."
Heckmondwike Herald, February 25, 1921.

"THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL."

"Mr. James Coleman is a most accomplished bass, and roused the audience as FEW others have ever done."—Pudsey News.

"THE LAY OF THE BELL" (Max Bruch).

"Mr. James Coleman is a favourite everywhere, and his flexible voice can interpret well both grave and gay."—Kidderminster Shuttle, April 23, 1921.

"MESSIAH."

"Mr. James Coleman is a FINISHED product in the realm of vocalism, and occupies a PEDESTAL ENTIRELY HIS OWN."—Ilkeston Advertiser.

ADDRESS: POOL HOUSE, LICHFIELD.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE

Complete postal preparation for London, Dublin, and Durham Degrees.

SUCSESSES

{	“ First ” Mus. Bac.	- -	10
	“ Final ” Mus. Bac.	- -	8
	Final Mus. Doc.	- -	4

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,

MUS. DOC. (LOND.),

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

THE “DISCUS”

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE “DISCUS”—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly one thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the “Discus” is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the “Discus,” and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

DE BY

WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS.

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

ITE TO

17, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: “HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON.”

Telephone: NORTH 2037.

MILGROM'S

CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, REGENT STREET, W.

(NEAR QUEEN'S HALL). 'PHONE: MAYFAIR 4123.

FIRST-CLASS OPERATIC AND ORATORIO VOCALISTS,
 ... INSTRUMENTALISTS, CONCERT PARTIES, ETC. ...
 ON MY BOOKS.

PLEASE STATE YOUR REQUIREMENTS TO ABOVE ADDRESS.

ALBERT DOWNING,

CANADIAN TENOR,

Will be in England October, and available for Oratorio, Concerts, &c.

"Albert Downing revealed a voice of very pleasing quality in his various solos. His work as Obadiah proved him to be an oratorio soloist of the first rank."—Winnipeg Free Press, April 28th, 1921.

For Terms, please apply to

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

'Phone: Mayfair 4123. 324, Regent Street, W. (near Queen's Hall).

MISS MARY ARMSTRONG

SOPRANO.

FOR CONCERTS, OPERA, ORATORIO, ETC.

For terms and vacant dates, please write to

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, Regent Street, W.

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

PIANOS. PIANOS. PIANOS.

PIANOS (NEW AND SECOND HAND)

From 28 Guineas.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Can be seen at

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, REGENT STREET, W.

'PHONE: MAYFAIR 4123.

(NEAR QUEEN'S HALL).

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

September, 1921.

ARTHUR McALISTER.

AT

A. Mus. T. C. L.

£20 to every student who passes

{ A.R.C.O.	Jan., 1922.
{ Matric.	July, 1922.
{ 1st M.B.	Sept., 1922.
{ F.R.C.O.	Jan., 1923.
{ Ex.	Mar., 1923.
{ Final Mus. B.	Sept., 1923.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR):

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral,
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

ALBERT DOWNING

(CANADIAN TENOR).

Soloist: Toronto Oratorio Society, "Elijah," 1920.

Toronto Masonic Chorus, 1921.

Winnipeg Choral Society, "Elijah" and "Hiawatha," 1921.
Will arrive in England October, and will be available for engagements in Oratorio, Concerts, Recitals, &c.

For open dates, address, The Milgrom Concert Direction, Regent Street, W.: or c/o Redpath Lyceum Association, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, U.S.A.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.

For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W.1.

(CAPTAIN)

LEWIS STAINTON

(BASS).

ORATORIOS, ETC.

The Cloisters,
Windsor Castle.Telegrams:
Stainton, Cloisters, Windsor.

MR. CHARLES THORNTON

(BASS BARITONE).

Oratorios, Concerts, &amp;c.

"Possesses a magnificent baritone voice."—Recent press notice.

Address: Rook's Nest, Whytecliffe Road, Purley, Surrey.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).

8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E.5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7253.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.
Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Busoni Method.

Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER

Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,

A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.

COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—

Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch,"
and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."

Over 500 Successes at Exams.

"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

*. The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WILFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),

c/o "The Faith House," 22, Buckingham St., Charing Cross, W.C. 2.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates
who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B.
at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., A.Mus. L.C.M. (1921), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O.
(1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-seven. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge,"
"Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, and Essay Course with Models. 44 Successes in One Year.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 171 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 45 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
L. ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), gives
Lessons, by post, in Harmony and other Theoretical Subjects,
and prepares for Examinations. Terms very moderate. 18, Chanters
Road, Bideford.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 390 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-
INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c.,
apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Over 100 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920),
specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing
R. A. Music, will resume her lessons in Singing on September 29th, at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 32, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence) Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes
L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private
Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and F.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

R. TAYLOR gives LESSONS by correspondence in all Musical Subjects, Elementary or Advanced. Diploma and green work. Manuscripts revised. Accompaniments written, &c., &c. fees moderate. Portland Place, Lancaster.

R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F."
W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), Licknow Avenue, Nottingham.

R. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) A.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (3) F.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

RECENT SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK:

- |                         |                          |
|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| 6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. | 11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914. | 12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.  |
| 5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915. | 9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., July, 1916. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.  |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.  |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.  |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.  |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.  |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. | 7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.  |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921. | 8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.  |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for JANUARY F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations is now commencing. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work.

Now in these Lessons a series of clear and definite rules and principles is given, enforced and illustrated by musical examples, which go to the very root of the matter.

Every pupil is instructed how to write Musical Counterpoint. Numerous examples are given which clearly show that it is quite simple to produce good music (from a harmonic and melodic point of view), even under the many restrictions and limitations imposed by the laws of Counterpoint.

Special attention given to the new F.R.C.O. test—Modern Counterpoint.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped need not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability which he is endowed with.

R. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
"TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher),
Registered Teacher (T.R.C.)—Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, History, Interpretation. Successes at L.R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Tests (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

VOCAL TALENT AT ST. DUNSTAN'S.

Early 2,000 men blinded in the War have been trained at St. Dunstan's. Of these a small number are possessed of vocal talent which has been properly trained. An appeal is made to music lovers and organizers of concerts, both large and small, to give these men a hearing with a view to engagements. A sympathetic employment is not asked, for only men of real talent will be recommended. Please reply to

CAPT. IAN FRASER.

Headquarters of St. Dunstan's, Inner Circle, Regent's Park.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY CHOIR.—Vacancy
at Michaelmas for a CHORAL CLERK (Alto). Salary, £100 annum. Post especially suitable for a student. Good sight-singer essential. Apply, giving qualifications, to The Chapter Clerk, Sanctuary, Westminster Abbey, by September 15.

CHRIST CHURCH, CROUCH END, N.

ALTO WANTED.—Must be in sympathy with modern music. State salary required by letter to Dr. Walker, Hulse, Tregaron Avenue, Crouch Hill, N.8.

ARISH CHURCH, Stoke Newington, N.—
TENOR WANTED. £20-£25. Apply by letter only to Norman, 37, Queen Elizabeth's Walk, N.16.

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.—The post of
ORGANIST is VACANT. For particulars apply to the Chapter Clerk, Precincts, Peterborough.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED,
for Emmanuel Congregational Church, Bootle, Liverpool. Fine instrument. Salary, £50 per year. Apply, with copies of recent testimonials, Barnes, 31, Merton Road, Bootle, Liverpool.

CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Bridge Street
U.M.F. Church, Todmorden, Yorks. Liberal salary to suitable person. Applications, stating terms, before September 13, to E. W. Cockcroft, Birks House, Walsden, Todmorden, Yorkshire.

MEMORY.—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON
undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

£100 SINGING, £50 PIANO, Free Scholar- ships, Souvenir Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Mr. CLIFTON COOKE'S OPEN COMPETITIONS, 5th and 12th November.—Prospectus, Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

LADY PIANIST (Leipzig Conservatoire) seeks
Post as ACCOMPANIST-HOUSEKEEPER in musical family. "L. F.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—
Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two
Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGAN, by Gruisen, FOR SALE. 12 stops.
Splendid condition. £40. Rickard, 18, Erconwald Street, East Acton, W.12.

ORGAN, two Manuals and Pedals. Seven full rows reeds. Stops "through." 90 guineas. Write "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN FOR SALE.—Two-manuals, 11 stops,
besides couplers. Good case, painted pipes. Apply Vicar, Carnforth, Lancashire.

FOR SALE.—Original Victor Mustel ORGAN.
Two Manuals. Perfect condition. "M.," c/o National Safe Deposit, 1, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.4.

FOR SALE.—Viola, £5; Virgil Clavier, £5;
Pleyel Piano Pedals and Seat, £5. Dr. Brooksbank, Bishop's Stortford.

CATHEDRAL MUSIC LIBRARY.—For SALE,
a quantity of ANTHEMS and SERVICES in good condition. Very cheap. List sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope. Mr. J. T. Horne, Organist, St. Canice's Cathedral, Kilkenny.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN MUSIC by standard com- posers. Four volumes and twenty-eight pieces. 30s. Write, Pearse, 30, Market Place, Reading.

FOR SALE.—LYRICS suitable for Setting to Music. Edith Smallwood, 6, Colville Square, London, W.11.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O.—"THE RUDIMENTS OF CRITICISM." Four valuable models with hints. Enclose 3s. to "Essay," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy descriptive Song,
"THE VOICE OF THE DEEP" (Oakley). Compass: G (or low E flat) to E flat. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1.

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male
Quartet, by Arthur Mangelsdorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarshaw, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

GUIDE TO CANDIDATES FOR THE
A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA PIANO TEACHERS'
EXAMINATION.

Price 1s. 8d. post free.

By ARTHUR FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.,
3, The Crescent, Roundhay, Leeds, Yorks.

TO R.C.O. CANDIDATES.

DR. E. N. HAY, D. Mus. Oxon., F.R.C.O., has prepared model answers to the A. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work, July, 1921.

Explanatory Notes appended.

("Questions" and "Essay" excepted.)

These may be hired for one week, with permission to copy (for personal use only). Fees: A.R.C.O., 7s. 6d.; F.R.C.O., 15s.

Complete Set, £1.

The January, 1921, model answers may still be had.

Applications (dealt with in order of receipt) to 9, Clifton Terrace, Coleraine, Ireland, N.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College and at certain Centres in July last.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Gladys M. Adams, Ellen Allen, Margaret E. Bagguley, Ada Bentley, Marjorie Blackburn, Percy C. Chambers, Ernest M. Greenhalgh, Sybil Haslam, Elsie Haworth, Doris A. Hibbert, Irene S. Holland, Christina Mearns, Jessie Muirhead, Anna I. Orr, Elsie Petterson, Andrew Shaw, Sarah C. Watts, Winifred M. Webb, Tula V. I. Wilkins, Edith Wilkinson.

ORGAN.—Harold E. Dyer-Smith, Ernest F. Palmer, Walter Pickford, Wilfred A. Yates.

SINGING.—Alexander H. Edwards, Irene Moreton.

VIOLIN.—Muriel S. M. Day.

ELOCUTION.—Eunice A. Lord.

ASSOCIATES (A.Mus.T.C.L.).

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—John C. Dunlop, Horace Palmer, Herbert W. Suter.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Nora Atkinson, Julia F. Bannister, Florence A. Bedford, Nellie A. Bell, Ivy M. Bilner, Elsie E. Clarke, May Corden, Margery W. Cottingham, Edna C. Crossley-Billing, Constance M. Crundall, Elsie M. David, Vincent Davies, Annie Donnison, Violet A. Downing, Ada L. Dyer, Dorothy L. M. Egerton, Eileen Foley, Violet K. Gabriel, Nina A. Gadd, Donald H. Gamage, Esther A. Gardiner, Evelyn Gower, Ethel Greenhalgh, Ruby A. Gunthorp, Florence E. Hale, Evelyn M. Handley, John W. Harland, Mabel M. Hauser, Winifred R. Haward, Charles Heaton, Mary Hindle, Thomas Horridge, Harold J. Johns, Mildred A. Jones, William D. Leyshon, Jessie Mather, Margaret Mather, Elizabeth L. Matthews, Beatrice May, Agnes Mill, Ada M. Morton, Marian H. Palmer, James W. Parkin, Winifred K. Pearson, Stella A. Pierpoint, Kate L. Pithie, Nellie Portas, Elsie F. E. Rayner, Rachel Rees, Jeanne Reid-Marr, Edith M. Robb, (Mrs.) Blodwen Shaw, Walter Shaw, Jennie Silcock, George H. Skaer, Doris L. Stones, Annie G. M. Sutherland, Emily Thomas, Elizabeth L. M. Thomas, Charles R. Wagstaff, Pattie D. Wall, Alfred A. W. Waller, Ruth M. Watson, Alice Woolley, Fanny M. Wright.

ORGAN.—Herbert J. Burge, George F. Crick, Frances E. Harris, Emily D. Marshall.

SINGING.—Ellen A. L. Abbott, Eliza B. Barbour, Milly J. M. Clarke.

VIOLIN.—Christine P. Ham, Dorothy F. Sexton.

ELOCUTION.—Marion Allan, Annie S. Lorimer.

CERTIFICATES.

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Hilda Brundrett, Hilda E. Kine, Dorothy M. Saywell.

PIANOFORTE.—Ada Allen, Mary Bolger, Doris Cordery, Archibald J. S. Day (Hons.), Irene M. Good, Blodwin E. Griffith, Nancy Jones, Gwendolyn Morgan, Olwen M. Roderick, Constance M. Suffling, Joseph R. Taylor, Una Wilson, Margaret E. Winfield (Hons.).

SINGING.—Dorothy G. Eves, Eveline M. Martin, Ethel M. Ponting.

EXAMINERS.—J. C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. D., Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D., J. T. Crawford, Mus. B., Sir Frederic Cowen, E. d'Evry, F. A. W. Docker, Dawson Freer, Fred Gostelow, Miss Morden Grey, S. D. Grimson, H. A. Harding, Mus. D., J. W. G. Hathaway, Mus. D., Charlton Keith, A. Mistowski, Mus. B., G. Oldroyd, Mus. D., C. W. Pearce, M.A., Mus. D., Alec Rowley, C. Vincent, Mus. D., G. F. Vincent, J. Warriner, Mus. D., Miss M. A. Winter.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

WILL BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY.

FUGUE IN C MINOR

BY

J. S. BACH.

TRANSCRIBED FOR FULL ORCHESTRA

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Full Score and String Parts (in the Press).

Wind Parts, on hire only.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH'S BRIGHT AND BREEZY BOOKLETS.

This is not the publishers' title for the series of booklets on music subjects, a selection from which has just come to hand, but our. We choose it for two reasons, firstly because of its sonorous alliterative "artful aid"—it looks well at the head of a magazine article and gives a certain degree of distinction to, and awakens a passing sense of interest in, an index, which is always a dreary thing to read and secondly because the pamphlets are indeed both bright and breezy. Their essential purpose is educational, and if ever a Roy Road to knowledge was created, it certainly has been incorporated within the structure of these little books. One reads them as one might read a newspaper article or a novel, so clear is their diction and so interestingly is the matter served up and arranged, and one the end is astounded at the vast amount of information one has assimilated in the process.

The first two are dedicated to pianists, the next two to singers, and the fifth—there are five in all—to all (musicians or others) whom may concern. Mr. E. Douglas Taylor has written the pianist treatises respectively entitled The Secret of Musical Expression and The Secret of Successful Practice. And we are let into these secrets and have become quite mysterious about it before we realise—indeed we ever do so—that they never were secrets at all. But this is where the genius of the author emerges. He tells us a secret—or pretending of course—and we are so delighted at having been let in his confidence that we never forget it again. Mr. Cecil Lawrence also makes a secret of necessity in one of his volumes, The Secret of Acquiring a Beautiful Voice and becoming a Successful Singer. Perhaps it is a real secret in this case, for as every teacher of singing knows, there is only one genuine method of voice-training: his own. How to Sing a Song is the title of his other book. This volume deals chiefly with the great problem of interpretation, and it should have very extensive sale, as most of the present works of the kind are somewhat large and expensive. Musical Sound, by Edward Watts is a well arranged and clearly expressed Introduction to the Study of Acoustics. It has been specially written for the use of Candidates for the Higher Musical Examinations: R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M. Trinity College, and so on, and it is really a masterly exposition of the subject, which in so small a compass is indeed remarkable more senses than one. The volumes are tastefully got up, and published at the small price of 1s. 3d. each.

SIGMA

From The Scottish Musical Magazine.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS RAY'S TUTOR,' GRAHAM P. MOORE'S 'FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVICK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAVIDSON'S TECHNICAL STUDIES,' MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SELECTION FROM

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Op. 30, No. I.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

W. G. ROSS.

Pianoforte Conductor...	...	...	...	...	5.
String Parts ...	...	...	...	...	2
Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	...	...	15

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR
SEPTEMBER 1 1921

EARLY ENGLISH CHAMBER MUSIC

BY RUTLAND BOUGHTON

(Concluded from August number, page 539.)

III.

Times of success and wealth produce works of art on a large scale, involving combinations of many performers. Such times were those of Elizabeth and Charles II., when music and the drama flourished as never before in our history. Times of failure and poverty, people cannot so easily meet in numbers, and luxurious forms of art cannot flourish. Further, in such times human thought grows less optimistic for the future of human activity, and tends to be thrown upon itself: from this frame of mind result more intimate forms and expressions of art, and music a predilection for instrumental forms. The instrumental art of the 17th century originated the need for keeping singers up to pitch or filling missing parts, and in so far as it had a life of its own, was either a simple statement of dance rhythm, or a restatement of the song-thought of the time. But the unsettlement occasioned by the two Revolutions damping down the choral and dramatic forms, freed it from its restrictions, and allowed it to pass the limitations of lute-playing and dance-form. A study of this period would be particularly interesting to us, for we are probably passing through a similar phase to-day. We get little glimpses of this kind of art during the Protectorate. Here are two:

Being in St. James's Park, I heard an organ touched in a little low room of one Mr. Hinckson's; I went in and found a private company of five or six persons; they desired me to take up a violle and bear a part. I did so, and that a part, too, not much to advance the reputation of my cunning. By and by without the least colour of a design or expectation, in comes Cromwell. He found us playing, and, as I remember, so he left us.

That is from the apology of Sir Roger Estrange, who felt it necessary later on to excuse himself for having enjoyed music in Cromwell's company, to say nothing of the usual deprecations to be made by a man of good family for having any musical executive ability. The Hinckson (or Ingston) referred to was a most important link in the continuity of musical art from Tudor to Jacobean days. He was probably a pupil of Orlando Gibbons, and certainly music-master in Cromwell's house; among his pupils was John Blow, the master of Purcell.

The other glimpse of such chamber music is one several given by Anthony Wood, speaking of music at Oxford, where, owing to its special associations with the latter days of Charles I., any first-rate musicians were to be found:

In the latter end of the year 1657 David Mell, the most eminent violinist of London being in Oxon . . . the company did look upon Mr. Mell to have a prodigious hand on the violin, and they thought that no person, as all in London did, could go beyond him. But when Thomas Baltzar, an outlander, came to Oxon in the next year they had other thoughts of Mr. Mell, who though he played far sweeter than Baltzar, yet Baltzar's hand was more quick and could run it insensibly to the end of the finger-board.

I do not wish here to rub the well-worn grievance we English musicians have, because there is something in English character which causes us to prefer imported music and musicians. It is probably, at root, because we have looked for our greatest well-being in world-commercial-power, and contemptuously regarded the non-dividend-returning powers of art as a thing to scorn, unworthy the efforts of our own people. But it is very much to the point of our study to remember that just at the moment when outer conditions were beginning to throw musicians upon themselves and the inner life of their art, and causing a new bud of instrumental music to thrust out strongly—it was even then that they preferred 'the quick hand running insensibly' to the fiddler who by general consent 'played far sweeter.' It was the long adherence to that idea that brought about the oblivion of a series of English Violin Sonatas which for sheer beauty of feeling and fineness of design are equal, and some of them even superior, to similar works bearing the most honoured names in music.

Early in 1919, re-starting the work at Glastonbury after the war with a curious temporary distaste for all modern music (my own included), I was thrown back upon the simpler, unspected beauty of the early English composers and Bach. There was enough vocal music to answer the need, but of fiddle music little beside the Bach Sonatas. The Mozart Sonatas were tried and enjoyed up to a point, but Mozart the craftsman so often continued the work when the artist in him needed a rest, and his violin sonatas could have been boiled down by him to half the quantity of notes with a great increase of power in their essential beauty. The Purcell Sonatas were introduced and loved, and then we came across the Novello series of Early English violin sonatas with the pianoforte part developed from the figured bass by Mr. Alfred Moffat. Mr. Moffat has a positive genius for this sort of work, developing (as he does) the upper tissue of the pianoforte parts freely and easily from the threads offered by the composer, and never obtruding his own personality as arranger, or seeking any good but that of the music itself. These sonatas are a godsend for English violinists. They cover the period from 1700 (when were published the Sonatas of William Croft, who, like Purcell, was a pupil of John Blow) to 1768, the publishing year of certain fiddle music by James Lates, from which Mr. Moffat has chosen a work which, written by a contemporary of Mozart, and under the same Italian influences, is as much finer than the majority of the German masters' sonatas as the music of Bach is finer than that of the rest of his family. Of the eleven works arranged by Mr. Alfred Moffat as sonatas for violin and pianoforte, those by Croft, Babell, Eccles, Macklean, Gibbs, Lates, and Vincent are splendid works, without which the repertoire of any English violinist is shamefully incomplete. All of the above give fine scope to the genius of the fiddle as an instrument without allowing it to betray them into virtuosity and vanity; they are master works of form, and lovely examples of that sweetness which would have given Mr. Mell his chance. Only one in the Novello series exemplifies the fiddler's art of 'running insensibly' (and, may one add, 'insensately?') 'up and down the keyboard'—that is the Sonata by Robert Jones, a sort of incipient concerto which makes an effect of vulgarity similar to that made by an over-jewelled nonentity. Its harmony is monotonous, and it has no slow movement—a most significant fact, for it is in their one (and sometimes two) slow movements that these 18th century fiddle composers poured out the sweetness of their hearts.

These works are nearly all within the first three positions, and it is to be hoped that they occupy a chief place on the lists of all violin teachers. Nor are they too serious to be heard by average audiences of unclassical pretensions. For example, the gay dance movements of the Sonata by William Babell 'went down like hot cakes' when played at The Folk House, Bristol, recently by members of the Glastonbury Festival School; and the Sonatas of Eccles and Gibbs are worthy of a place in any recital programme in juxtaposition with the works of Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms.

Let our violinists see to it that these works are played everywhere, and then Messrs. Novello may induce Mr. Moffat to add to them from the similar pieces that remain to be republished—if possible including more of the works for two violins, and violin and violoncello. Of such works the series includes at present only two Trio-Sonatas—by Arne and Boyce.

We have now to consider certain aspects of chamber music for voices with strings, a form of art which many modern composers are reviving with the happiest results.

IV.

Presumably the essential characteristics of chamber music are intimacy on the expressional side and, on the technical side, a concentration and perfection of design such as will increase our joy with the many repetitions necessary to ensure an unconduted ensemble. Modern composers write for instrumentalists able and proud to achieve that ensemble; but with singers we have generally to deal with an artistically inferior people, and when, as in the Pastorals of Walford Davies and the 'Wenlock Edge' of Vaughan Williams, voices are incorporated with the scheme, it is comparatively seldom that a successful performance follows, inasmuch as the result depends on the singers' capacity to know the instrumental parts as well as their own, to lead when required by poet or composer, or to blend with the nuance of the strings when the paramount beauty ceases to be vocal. Early English composers were no handicapped in the same way. Then it was rather the string players who had to learn how to assume musical responsibility, and have joy in the prominence which followed on the discovery that instruments could express many things of which voices were incapable. The earliest examples of such combination generally available are several pieces by Byrd lately republished in Dr. Edmund Fellowes' splendid edition of the English Madrigal School. In vol. xv. there is a Christmas Carol for contralto voice and four strings followed by a chorus for female voices in four parts. The compass of the string parts involves the use of one violin, two violas, and a violoncello; and this would indeed be the best combination, because the radius of the voice part occupies the position of the second violin—and not only the position but the character and rights as well; for it must be remembered that in these pieces by Byrd the treatment of voices and instruments is identical. Here is no simple problem of vocal part with string accompaniment, but a perfectly balanced and as nearly as possible homogeneous ensemble in which the instruments take their expression from the voice, and the singer learns all she may of that sustained or underheld quality which is characteristic of good fiddle playing. The need for two violas may rule out chances for the performance of this music; so I suggest that the first viola part be given to the second violin, for only once does it exceed violin-compass, and the an easy exchange of parts may be effected for the two or three bars with the other viola.

The next number in this volume is less generally possible, being written for two voices, three violas, and a violoncello; and the same combination is used in the folk-tune Shepherd's Dialogue, 'Who made thee Hob forsake'; but in the last-named the difficulty may be overcome by transposing the piece up within the range of the violins, and allotting the vocal parts to a soprano and tenor, or to two tenors.

A similar transposition involving vocal modification of a more drastic nature is necessary to bring about the performance of other pieces now that we have no consorts of viols generally available. But I think that Dr. Fellowes would agree to such editing, rather than leave this beautiful music unheard, or spoiled by the noisy pianoforte or unrhythmic organ—for we must remember that these old pieces not only represent the ecclesiastical environment of an age knowing neither pianoforte nor organ, but were the fine flower of a religious spirit which found expression in the frequent practice of working together. The tragedy of the loss of this spirit is shown by Thomas Hardy in 'Under the Greenwood Tree.' In the preface he comments as follows:

One is inclined to regret the displacement of these ecclesiastical bandsmen by one isolated organist. . . . Despite certain advantages in point of control and accomplishment which were no doubt secured by installing a single artist, the change has tended to stultify the professed aims of the clergy, its direct result being to curtail and extinguish the interest of the parishioners in church doings. Under the old plan from half-a-dozen to ten full-grown players, in addition to the numerous more or less grown-up singers, were officially occupied with the Sunday routine and concerned in trying their best to make it an artistic outcome of the combined musical taste of the parish. With a musical executive limited, as it mostly is limited now, to the parson's wife or daughter and the school children, or to the school-teacher and the children, an important union of interests has disappeared.

'Under the Greenwood Tree' is further to the point of our present studies :

'Times have changed from the times they used to be,' said Mail, 'People don't care much about us now ! I've been thinking we must be almost the last left in the county of the old string players. Barrel-organs and they things next door to 'em that you blow wi' your foot have come in terrible of late years !' . . .

'More's the pity,' replied another. 'Time was—long and merry ago now !—when not one of the varminths was to be heard of, but it served some of the choirs right. They should have stuck to strings as we did, and keep out clar'nets and done away with serpents. If you'd thrive in musical religion, steck to strings, says I.'

'Strings be safe soul-lifters as fur as they do go,' said Mr. Spinks.

Byrd's instrumental parts are for 'soul-lifters' only. Works of a similar kind are two songs by Dowland for voice, viols, and lute from 'The Pilgrim's Solace' (1612). Dr. Fellowes republishing these in his edition of the English Lutenists, with the lute-part adapted for performance on the pianoforte, and it is by his kind permission that I have been allowed to make copies of these wonderfully beautiful songs. Byrd's music accepts the formative principle as paramount. In Dowland expression accepted not only as an inevitable incident of the art, but as a principle of construction. History shows that when this happens in any art it is accompanied by signs of decadence, but we shall not forego the beauty of Praxiteles or Scopas because they worked during the decline of Greek sculpture, nor the beauty of Ford and Dowland because in their time the music of the English Renaissance had passed its meridian. And if, on the formal side, Dowland's 'Go, nightly cares' and 'From silent night' have little or nothing of the architectonic nobility of Byrd's music, they have yet that sweetness of melody which gives colour and character to the autumn. It is no mere accident that Dowland should have a chromatic quality and languishing expression. It is no mere accident that in one song he wails over his 'tunes of sad despair' and in the other cries 'Welcome, sweet death !' Those are the moods not only of ageing minds, but of ageing periods as well. It is for us to have joy of the beauty which great artists distil from all conditions. These two lovely songs of Dowland for contralto or baritone with violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, need a deal of rehearsal, but they are an addition of the first importance to the limited repertoire of vocal chamber music. It is, however, a repertoire that has grown considerably since, nine or ten years ago, I called attention in these columns to its possibilities. Then there were available but two or three works by Walford Davies and Vaughan Williams ; now, in addition to the republication of these old works, there are chamber pieces for voices and instruments by Holst, Frederic Austin, Arthur Bliss, and others. The more we learn to work in the small the more nearly must our work approach an impossible perfection. Vast resources induce waste, slovenliness, and disorder—the symptoms, in fact, of decadence and death. Such symptoms are importunately present to-day. But out of the cacophonous husk of the art of the past epoch, a new and less pretentious art is emerging—with some pain, so that it seems difficult to many of us to recognise the difference between the death-cries and the birth-cries. That difference is more readily discernible in chamber music than in orchestral music ; and more readily discernible in vocal chamber music than in music with no obvious clues to its tendency.

THE DRAMATIC WORKS OF VINCENT D'INDY

BY M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

(Concluded from August number, page 544)

THE MUSIC OF 'SAINT-CHRISTOPHE'

'La Légende de Saint-Christophe' is, if not the most complex, at least the most elaborate and most diversified in its details of d'Indy's dramatic works. The presentation on the stage of the various episodes necessitates several scenes which are not accessory from the dramatic point of view, but whose musical bearing upon the main element in the drama (i.e., the conversion of Auféris) remains unavoidably slight despite the connections established by the play of leading motives. The progress towards the end is not constant until the moment when for the first time we see Auféris balancing between obedience to the orders of his elected master and obedience to the promptings of his own soul, thrilled by the hymns which arise from the Cathedral.

In other words, 'La Légende de Saint-Christophe' is far more composite than either 'Fervaal' or 'L'Etranger' both as a spectacle and as music. It is a grandiose polyptych, simple in its general scheme but laden with details, full of beauties, and consisting of parts treated in the spirit of punctilious, at times almost puerile realism which is so usual a feature in mediæval art, and parts in which drama and music soar to the loftiest heights.

No work of d'Indy confirms more fully what Romain Rolland wrote of him many years before 'La Légende de Saint-Christophe' appeared :

Thirst for perspicuity is an essential in his nature as an artist; a feature all the more remarkable when we consider how far from simple his nature is. His wide knowledge of music has equipped him with a wealth of diverse, almost contradictory elements. The musical forms of all times and all countries hover in his mind; and we feel inclined to ask ourselves whether his eclecticism does not attempt to conciliate forms not easily conciliable. In order not to be submerged by all those riches, by those conflicting elements and influences, the artist must either be carried away by the sway of his passions, or be endowed with sufficient will-power to be capable of eliminating, selecting, and transforming. D'Indy eliminates hardly anything, but he organizes. In his music he evinces the qualities that go to the making of an army commander: knowledge of his object and resources, patience, determination to succeed, method, perfect command over his doings and over his own self.

Although the more spectacular, more operatic scenes (viz., the first three and the dialogue between the Gold King and the Prince of Evil in the last Act) contain a good many fine things, it is chiefly the religious scenes that call for consideration. In the former, d'Indy gives abundant, unquestionable evidence of his talent; but the latter reveal his genius at its loftiest.

He has succeeded in evolving from plainsong, chiefly by applying polyphonic methods of treatment that range from extensions of purely traditional means such as canonic or fugal treatment to the boldest types of juxtaposition and intertexture, a style that is as rich in suggestive and expressive power as it is in genuine originality, a music as remarkable for its firmness and straightforwardness as for its plasticity. Aggregates or sequences of sounds which school polyphony would condemn, which no harmonic theory could adequately define, appear as perfectly logical and in place, because the function of each sound is perfectly clear and the balance of the structure faultless. Even the most cursory investigation shows how simple and natural are the means by which this style has come into being.

Motives borrowed from plainsong may be utilised in their original form, or altered in some particular. Or again, the vocabulary that goes to the building of plainsong may be used to construct original motives. Whichever the case, it stands to reason that the artistic value of the results will depend solely upon their unity and fitness. The point has already been made with reference to the antiphon, 'Ubi Caritas et Amor,' used in 'L'Etranger,' where it plays a leading and perfectly unequivocal part. In 'Saint-Christophe,' we find the same tune occurring episodically: twice the hermit sings it to the words 'love one another,' and it reappears under the words 'but the humble and needy may safely cross.' No one unacquainted with the Roman Liturgy for Maundy Thursday will perceive the particular virtue of allusion latent in this motive. But, on the other hand, no one will feel the necessity for being conscious of it. In both cases the motive is perfectly in keeping with both words and context. When it reappears in the following combination:

its function as a mere unit within a general scheme, to be judged on its own merits and not with reference to its origin, can less than ever be questioned.

This gives us the key to the whole matter. Throughout the religious scenes in 'Saint-Christophe' we encounter either long phrases or mere arabesques which may in the Roman Liturgy be associated with certain words. But we no more need be aware of their possible origin than we need know, for instance, that when Hans Sachs refers to the story of King Marke the motives which crop up actually hail from 'Tristan.'

One instance, it is true, is less simple. There are in 'Saint-Christophe' two references to the Crucifixion, both marked by the appearance of the following tune:

which constitutes a strong contrast, and strikes us as a quotation, possibly from some French 'complainte.' We cannot help feeling that here it is difficult not to suspect an allusion, and wish to know more about it.

The point, however, is trifling, and I can find in the score no other passage of which the same thing could be said in reason. Every colour, every accent has its purpose, and fulfils it by virtue of its own vitality and convincing quality.

To show the variety of resources which d'Indy's 'organizing power' derives from the various elements he employs is to do but little towards the characterisation of 'Saint-Christophe' as a work of art. Yet we may note that one of the principal motives (it is the 'Ave, Crux'):

appears successively as a plain chorale (vocal score, p. 77), in canon form (p. 78), and under the following bold aspect (p. 115):

and that the motive :

th which the relation of the Pope's sentence
ens, seems to be derived from it.
Another important motive :

pears at first in the Prelude to the second scene the second Act, harmonized as follows (a rmonization to be compared with the example om 'Fervaal,' quoted in the July number, p. 466,
, for its tonal interpretation) :

When Auféris is overcome by repentance, it umes the following dramatic character (vocal re, p. 163 ; compare as above, p. 466, 1b :
method is musically similar, the purpose quite erent) :

And after the Queen's conversion, we find it combined with another motive, widely different in character, which expresses the new-born pure and tender love :

in the final scene (p. 279), it becomes the cous firmus with which other elements combine freely :

Ex. 10.

CHRISTOPHE.

SOPRANO.

CHŒUR CELESTE. ALTO.

TENOR.

The treatment of purely dramatic motives calls for few remarks. D'Indy generally conforms to the methods illustrated in 'L'Etranger,' and more especially in 'Fervaal,' which are, generally speaking, similar to Wagner's, with certain characteristic extensions. Nothing is more curious, perhaps, than his tendency to invert a motive in view of some special connotation—for instance, the two motives which refer to Auféris reappear in inverted form when he enters the service of the Evil One.

Another equally formal mode of procedure is the repetition of certain motives every time the text affords the slightest pretext for repeating them. A motive which consists of a mere arabesque of three notes, and constitutes a mere touch of colour, like that which refers to gold, may recur without attracting undue attention. But not so the motive which accompanies all references to soldiery and warfare, more obtrusive in rhythm, written in harsh whole-tones, and rather conventional in character ; and its recurrence strikes us as too mechanical a device.

Against such minor cases of obvious and purely formal artifice, there are many superb instances of unity secured by the most genuinely artistic means.
For example, the descriptive symphony 'The Quest for God,' in the second Act, is a wonderful achievement. D'Indy gives its programme in the explanation supplied by the Historian, in the course of which all the motives used in the Symphony appear in their order of sequence. But it is no more possible to deny the inner unity and logic, the sustained musical interest and sway of the Symphony, than it is to minimise the surpassing skill and judgment which enabled the composer to anticipate in the explanatory introduction all the effects upon which he relies in the Symphony without thereby weakening the interest.

One of the most beautiful episodes in the Symphony (and in my opinion one of the finest things ever written) is the Easter Hymn at Rome—as simple as it is grandiose:

Ex. 11.

Were we attempting to enumerate the principal beauties in 'Saint-Christophe,' we should certainly mention among the greatest the scene between Auférus and the Hermit, with its wonderful Prelude of which the opening bars are so typical an illustration of the polyphony which is d'Indy's very own:

Ex. 12. Slow.

with the magnificent lyrical climax reached when the Hermit calls upon the beasts and the trees of the forest and the stars in the skies to witness the sinner's repentance. It is, as much as the following scene when Christophe is baptised by Christ, the centre of the whole work, drama and music. No less powerful is the scene in the prison, when Christophe converts the Queen—especially from the moment when the Queen, after a last mental struggle expressed by the music in wonderfully convincing fashion (vocal score, pp. 250-251), yields to his appeals and professes her faith in God.

There is one last point to consider with reference to d'Indy's dramatic scores. All critics agree as to the interest and beauty of his choral writing, but many have objected to his tendency to introduce into the vocal solo parts too many leaps, and especially intervals of sevenths and ninths—with results not quite in keeping with the spirit and tradition of French musical prosody. Even in 'Saint-Christophe,' where the influence of Gregorian song is so marked (the point is worth making, for it has often been said that the more staid, more subtle prosody of a Debussy or a Ravel owes much of its qualities to the same influences), we often meet with passages similar to the following:

Ex. 13.

My own opinion is that although the objection is quite justifiable in theory, most passages of that kind look uglier on paper than they sound when sung. Their recurrence, it is true, may convey the impression of a lack of finish—or might do so, did we fail to remember that d'Indy never overlooks anything or leaves anything to chance. At times an utterance very simple in itself receives a somewhat obtrusive setting, which seems uncalled for and out of keeping:

Ex. 14.

All things considered, we may, without laying undue stress on the point at the expense of all that is beautiful and effective in the vocal parts of 'Le Chant de la Cloche,' 'Fervaal,' 'L'Etranger,' and 'Saint-Christophe,' say that there is something unsatisfactory in that particular feature.

No general conclusion could be drawn from a survey of d'Indy's dramatic works without reference to his instrumental music, from the early tone-poems, so full of ingenuity and spirit, or the early chamber works, to the later productions more subdued, more introspective, and at times more recondite. Indeed, it is a striking feature of his personality that he has never allowed his activities in one order to outbalance his activities in the other. Constantly engaged in planning and writing instrumental music, he was no less constantly concentrating upon the planning and writing of his dramatic works, every one composed with steadfast and long-matured purpose. A natural consequence is that every big work of his in the one order throws light upon something essential in the works of the other. But I hope at least to have shown that music-lovers who take the pains to study those dramatic works will find ample reward.

NOTE.—The musical quotations are by kind permission of MM. A. Durand et Cie, publishers of 'Fervaal' and 'L'Etranger,' and Rouart et Lerolle, publishers of 'Légende de Saint-Christophe.'

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XX.—JOHN REDFORD

It is generally admitted that John Redford was not only a remarkable organist, choirmaster, and composer, but also a playwright of distinction under Henry VIII.; yet his biography is a blank so far as our accredited musical historians are concerned. The only information concerning his personality in the new 'Grove' is the comparatively vague statement that he was 'Organist and Almoner and Master of the Choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral in the latter part of the reign of Henry VIII.' This is the accepted account of Redford, and strange to say modern investigators cheerfully acquiesce in placing Redford as flourishing in the 'latter part' of Henry VIII.'s reign, that is to say, as flourishing between the years 1536-47. The only other item of biography vouchsafed is that Tusser was a pupil of Redford. Now it is fairly certain that Tusser's career as a choirboy of St. Paul's cannot have been after 1542 or 1543, and therefore there is no clear evidence that Redford lived much later than 1543. Prof. Pollard tells us that Redford's Interlude of 'Wyt and Science' was written 'probably towards the end of the reign of Henry VIII.,' that is, 1544; yet there is ample testimony to show that his date must be placed as c. 1538 or 1539. Dr. Ernest Walker, in his 'History of Music in England' (1907), confesses that he knows nothing of the life of Redford save that he was organist of St. Paul's Cathedral 'about the middle of the 16th century,' and Mr. H. Orsmond Anderton, in his 'Early English Music' (1920), suggests that Redford's life 'probably extended from 1491 to 1547,' but gives no further particulars.

No better proof of Redford's powers need be adduced than the inclusion of his name by Morley in his 'Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practicall Musicke' (1597), among the celebrated English composers who flourished under Henry VIII. Still stronger proof may be found in the dozens of Redford's compositions preserved in the British Museum, including his beautiful Organ Fantasias, and his Interlude of 'Wyt and Science.' Yet notwithstanding all his known manuscripts, no serious endeavour has hitherto been made to piece together any facts of his biography. On this account the new light I have been enabled to throw on the career of Redford will be a help to future investigators.

But first I may explain that the name of our distinguished musician will not be found in the printed Calendar of the Letters and Papers of Henry VIII., although I have carefully gone through the thirty-five volumes of that monumental work. Yet, as will be seen, it was an entry in vol. vii., in connection with the year 1534, that supplied me with the hint whereby I was enabled to trace Redford as a Vicar-Choral of St. Paul's Cathedral.

John Redford was born about the year 1486, and was trained in the choir school of St. Paul's Cathedral, ultimately becoming a Vicar-Choral. He was subsequently Organist and Almoner and Master of the Choristers, but in these appointments we do not meet with him until the year 1530. So far as my researches go, it is safe to state that Redford was organist of St. Paul's from 1525, being also Junior Vicar-Choral, and that he subsequently was appointed Master of the Choristers (1532).

One of the duties of the choirmaster of St. Paul's was to prepare choirboy plays, and we find, from the 'Calendar of Papers of Henry VIII.,' that on November 10, 1527, 'the children of Paules' presented at Greenwich, among the Court revels, a Latin-French play, for the entertainment of the French nobles. Cavendish describes it as 'a most godliest disguising or interlude made in Latin and French,' under Master John Rightwise.*

In a previous article† we have seen that, on June 29, 1531, William Whytbroke was appointed Sub-Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral (of which the Dean, Richard Pace, was an excellent musician), and, in 1532, he got John Redford appointed almoner and master of the choristers. No wonder, then, that in the 'Declaration by the Sub-Dean and Canons of St. Paul's of allegiance to Henry VIII. and Queen Anne Boleyn,' on June 20, 1534, with the pregnant passage that 'the Bishop of Rome has no authority in this Kingdom,' the names of Whytbroke and Redford appear. This interesting document is signed by the sub-dean, eight canons, two cardinals, one succentor, six minor canons, thirty-one chantry priests, and twenty-three others.‡ None of the names are given in the printed Calendar, but, through the courtesy of Mr. J. M. Riggs, of the Public Record Office, I obtained the exact transcript of all the signatures in the original document, including Whytbroke, Hayward (succentor), John Smyth and Thos. Balgrave (cardinals), and the following vicars-choral: William Sampson, Bartholomew Ody, Robert Pate, Thomas Baldwin, John Redford, and John Purvock.

Let it not be supposed that this Declaration indicated a change of religion; it was merely a loyal formulary in which the temporal power of the Pope was denied. Anyhow, many of those that signed it were taken into Court favour, and Redford was in high repute as a choirmaster as well as organist. At the close of 1534, or early in 1535, the famous Thomas Tusser was, 'by friendship's lot,' taken into the choir school of St. Paul's, a proceeding which rescued him from being impressed, or conscripted, by roaming choir agents, who had 'placards' for taking up suitable choristers. Tusser thus eulogises Redford in his 'One Hundred Points of Good Husbandry,' § published in 1557:

But mark the chance, myself to vance
By friendship's lot to Paul's I got,
So found I grace a certain space
Still to remain.

With REDFORD there, the like no where,
For cunning such and virtue much
By whom some part of music's art,
So did I gain.

Richard Sampson, Bishop of Chichester, whose career has been described in a previous article (No. VII.), was Dean of St. Paul's from July, 1536 (in succession to Dean Pace), and was a friend to Redford. On October 13, 1537, there was a grand Te Deum sung in St. Paul's under Redford's direction, for the birth of Prince Edward.

There is no other incident chronicled in respect to this remarkable musician until 1538, when his Interlude of 'Wyt and Science' was performed.

* John Rightwise was appointed Usher of St. Paul's School under William Lyly in 1510, and succeeded Lyly as Master.

† Musical Times, April, 1921.

‡ The printed Calendar gives '29 others,' but the actual number was only twenty-three, as the list included the six vicars-choral. The Calendar also mistranslates 'cantarista' as 'chanters.'

§ This title developed into 'Five Hundred Points' in 1573.

The date of this Interlude has been given by all previous writers as between the years 1541 and 1546; yet, as the proof rested on the introduction of the Galliard into England, I venture to assert that Redford's play must be dated as of the year 1538 or early in 1539. For proof of this the reader is referred to a communication of mine in The Times 'Literary Supplement' (March 3, 1921). Prof. Wallace tells us that Redford was a great friend of John Heywood, seven of whose songs he had collected in a volume, with musical setting.

In the Interlude are three songs set to music by Redford, namely, 'Give place, give place, to honest recreation,' 'Exceeding measure with pains continual,' and 'Welcome, mine own.' At the end is written, 'Here cometh in four with viols and sing "remembrance," and at the last quere [verse] all make curtesy and so go forth singing.' As customary, the final prayer is for the King and Queen: 'Thus endeth the play of "Wyt and Science," made by Master John Redford.'

After the year 1540 there is no trace of Redford, and it seems likely that he died in that year or the year following. Probably he was succeeded by Thomas Mulliner, but of this I have discovered no proof. Redford's anthem, 'Rejoice in the Lord alway,' is still sung at St. Paul's, and an octavo edition by the late Sir George Martin was published by Messrs. Novello in 1894. His organ solo 'Glorificamus' (Add. MSS. Brit. Mus. 30,513) has been edited by Mr. John E. West for the same publishers.

From the carefully compiled 'Catalogue of Manuscript Music in the Library of Christ Church, Oxford' (1915), by Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright, we learn that there are three volumes by Redford in the Library, namely, a Motet ('Vestri precincti') for six voices, a Voluntary for organ, and five Organ pieces.

But the great bulk of Redford's work lies interned in the British Museum, including his sacred song, 'Walking alone' (Add. MSS. 15233), and his 'Christus Resurgens,' in two sections for four voices (Add. MSS. 17802-17805).* His Interlude of 'Wyt and Science' (c. 1538) deserves to be better known, and it is of interest to note that this musical play ends with a prayer for the King and Queen, a convention that continued for two centuries, and which ultimately developed into the playing of the National Anthem.

No doubt the best of Redford's compositions will shortly occupy the attention of the responsible committee of the Carnegie Trust, and will, at no distant date, be available for students of early Tudor music.

* Mr. H. B. Collins, Mus. Bac., suggests that Byrd in his 'Gradualia' took Redford's setting as his model.

The Westminster Choral Society, which is under the direction of Messrs. Boosey & Co. and conducted by Mr. Vincent Thomas, has arranged a very interesting programme for next season. This includes Stanford's 'Stabat Mater,' Hubert Bath's 'The Legend of Nerbudda,' Bach's 'Sleepers, Wake,' Emily Woodforde-Finden's 'Pagoda of Flowers,' Napier Miles' 'Music Comes,' and three new choral ballads by Quilter. The Choir will also sing part-songs at three of the London Ballad Concerts at the Royal Albert Hall. There are vacancies for a few ladies and gentlemen possessing good voices, and applications should be addressed to the organizing secretary, Mr. W. A. Bayley, 295, Regent Street, W. 1.

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD

BY ALFRED KALISCH

In some ways the National Eisteddfod at Carnarvon, which was held from August 1 to 6, was not quite equal in interest to its two predecessors at Corwen and Barry respectively, and this was largely due to the quality of the music chosen. But it was redeemed by the striking competition between the male-voice choirs, and much that was said during the adjudication and elsewhere was full of significance for the future development of music in Wales.

Two things attracted the attention of the observer. One was the tendency on the part of those whose chief concern is with the literary aspect of the Eisteddfod—or, in other words, who regard the Eisteddfod as primarily 'The People's University'—to show a little jealousy of the prominence given to music; the other was the predominance of militant nationalists, who always cried 'Cymraeg,' which means 'Welsh,' whenever adjudicators spoke in English. This perhaps is not to be wondered at in that part of Wales, where those who speak little English are a more important section than elsewhere. One way in which feeling manifested itself was that in several cases where a Welsh and an English piece were on the programme, the singers who appeared in the final tests were asked to sing in the Welsh piece only.

The thick and thin nationalists did not, however, have it all their own way. A good many home-truths were told them by those who maintain that the best way of fostering a national movement is not to put a ring-fence round it, but to bring it into line with general world culture. Only in this way can any national movement be saved from becoming parochial, and be assessed by the world at large at its true value.

An interesting paper was read at a meeting of the Cymidorian Society by Mr. Beriah Evans, an esteemed local journalist, who was also chairman of the dramatic committee. He proposed among other things that competing choirs should combine to give a great performance of some masterpiece during the Eisteddfod week. It looks very well on paper, but no way of translating it into practice has yet been found. Another suggestion of great importance, made by Mr. Cyril Jenkins, was that some kind of national board should have a controlling voice in the choice of the test-pieces and the musical arrangements generally. Everyone who has the cause of musical progress in Wales really at heart will cordially agree. The objection was raised by Canon Edwards, who occupied the chair, that local committees, who have the financial responsibility would not submit to dictation. This argument seems beside the point, because the receipts at an Eisteddfod do not depend, really, on the choice of the test-pieces. On the other hand, the better the test-pieces, the more likely are they to attract a number of competitors, which means larger audiences. Indeed this argument is only another form of the old pleas that have hampered musical progress in the past.

A further suggestion—which it is hoped will bear fruit—was that made in one of his adjudications by Dr. Caradog Roberts, who said that the experience of the week had confirmed him in the opinion he had long held, that one of the ways of raising the standard of choral singing, especially as regarded the interpretation of classical music, was the institution of a Summer School for choral conductors.

The concerts require no detailed notice. The two principal works performed were Elgar's 'King Olaf' and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' with excellent soloists. The results proved once again the disadvantage, not to say danger, of entrusting the conducting of such works to local musicians, whose experience with an orchestra is necessarily limited. As will be seen below, the authorities of the next Eisteddfod at Ammanford have fully recognised this.

A GREAT DISAPPOINTMENT

The great disappointment of the week was the chief competition. It was partly due to the financial consequences of the strike, and partly to the inability or unwillingness of the railways to make concessions, that only two choirs competed, both coming from the neighbouring town of Holyhead. It was felt that neither was quite up to the standard which should be demanded at a National Eisteddfod, so much so that the adjudicators felt disposed to withhold the prize altogether. They were however overruled by the committee, which was called into consultation, and it was decided to give a first prize of £100, instead of the £200 announced, 'as an act of grace.' The test-pieces were Sullivan's 'O Gladsome Light,' 'Now all gives way together,' from Dvorák's 'St. Ludmilla,' and 'Night,' by Osborne Roberts. The prize went to the Holyhead Harmonic Society, conducted by Mr. W. S. Owen, and the second prize to the Holyhead Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Hugh Williams.

The disappointment was largely atoned for by the extraordinarily interesting competition for the chief male-voice choir prize. Twelve choirs competed, and it was a neck-to-neck race between the three who were placed first, the differences between them and the last being not great; and, as an adjudicator rightly remarked, even that one had not disgraced itself. The test-pieces were Hegar's 'The Phantom Host,' and 'O Peaceful Night' by Edward German. The first prize was £100, and the second £20.

'The Phantom Host' cannot be considered a good choice. Hegar is synonymous in Germany with all that is meretricious and theatrical in choral music, and the only excuse for 'The Phantom Host' is that it affords choirs an opportunity for the making of obvious effects. The highest praise that could be given to the competitors was that they almost succeeded in making it interesting.

It is worth while to recall a story connected with it. It was this piece that about fifteen or twenty years ago at a National Choral Festival in Germany produced a protest from the German Emperor. Perhaps the officials thought for that very reason it was good, but in this respect the ex-Emperor was right. The ex-Emperor's displeasure had important consequences, for it induced him to initiate the making of a collection of German choral music, both folk-song and other, which is exceedingly valuable. In their adjudication, Dr. Vaughan Thomas and Dr. Coward spoke of the extraordinary excellence of the singing, Dr. Coward going so far as to say that in some respects he had never in his life heard finer choral singing, an opinion with which most present were inclined to agree. Dr. Vaughan Thomas pointed out that English choirs singing in English had some advantage over the Welshmen. In this connection, he himself remarked that he knew his own accent was not very good; but he said he rather liked the idea that his Welsh origin should be betrayed by his speech. Here, it should be remarked in passing, is another instance of nationalism carried to excess. The learned Doctor can surely not have reflected on the full implication of what he said.

Of the twelve competing choirs seven were English—from North Staffordshire, Crewe, Nelson (Lancs), Manchester, Runcorn, Huddersfield, and Stourbridge respectively. The other five were Welsh. In the end the prize went to Holme Valley, Huddersfield, conducted by Mr. Irvine Silverwood, which obtained 99 marks for each piece (198 in all), the second to Nelson Orion, conducted by Mr. Lawson Bury, which obtained 96 marks for each piece (192 in all). The third choir was Llanrwst and Treffriw, conducted by Mr. T. R. Williams, which obtained 95 marks and 94 respectively. There was no doubt among those present as to the justice of the award, though some people thought that the Welsh choirs deserved higher marks for their singing of Edward German's chorus. Poetic justice would have been done—had it been possible—by awarding them equal prizes. The thing that chiefly turned the scale in favour of Huddersfield was the tremendously dramatic singing of the basses in one passage of 'The Phantom Host,' which indeed was one of the most remarkable things I have ever heard.

There was one other competition in which the best traditions of a National Eisteddfod were maintained—that for choirs of female voices. Six choirs competed, of which two, Madame Maggie Evans' Gitana Choir from Birkenhead, and Mr. Benton's Choir from Grimsby, represented England. The test-pieces were the 'Song of the Rhine-maidens' from Act 3 of 'Götterdämmerung,' in W. McNaught's arrangement, and a Welsh Chorus by D. J. de Lloyd. In this competition, however, we had the best—or worst—instances of inferior accompanying on the pianoforte, which was one of the most unsatisfactory features of the week. On the whole, the singing of the Wagner excerpt was suave and smooth, but wanting in dramatic point—one adjudicator said it was sung as if it were a charming part-song. But how are singers in distant parts of Wales to learn much about the significance of 'Götterdämmerung'? It was, indeed, suggested that a Ring cycle might be made a part of some future Eisteddfod, but Wales being what it is, that is like asking a baby to digest beef before it can assimilate a plain pudding, and the Prime Minister, in his speech, gently chaffed the writer who made it. There is no reason why Wales should not appreciate Wagner some day, but the end will not be attained by such drastic measures. The first prize was won by the Grimsby Choir—another English success—Llangefni being second, with 185 and 184 out of 200 marks respectively. These choirs were almost the only ones commended for the significance of their singing of Wagner's music. It was instructive to note, on the other hand, that nearly all the other choirs obtained praise for their good understanding of the Welsh song.

The instrumental competitions attracted few candidates, except that for pianoforte playing. The fact that the winner, Miss Rushden, comes from the neighbourhood of Birmingham, coupled with Mr. Jenkins' remark that so many of the competitors played the Ballade of Chopin, which was the test-piece, as if they had never heard it properly done, throws a light on the difficulties in the way of spreading musical culture in Wales. The winner, it is only fair to add, was congratulated by the adjudicator on the high standard she had attained. That the winner of the two principal violin prizes also came from London points the same way. His playing of the slow movement of Bach's Sonata in A was remarkably intelligent. In the other competitions we were told that the standard had improved, though the candidates were so few. The instrumental test-pieces, except that for violoncello (which the programme insisted on spelling violoncello), were of greater value than those chosen for the choirs. The soloists were also given good music to sing—Parry, Dvorák, Moussorgsky, and Elgar. The sopranos were good, the contraltos up to standard, the tenors weak, and the basses quite exceptional. Each of the three selected for the final test would have won easily in an average year, and Mr. Tom Lloyd, of Birkenhead, sang Handel better than many a well-known oratorio singer.

A FEW NOTES ON NEXT YEAR'S PLANS

The choice of test-pieces for the National Eisteddfod at Ammanford next year is distinctly better than was that of this year, and living native composers are well represented. This matter is of greater importance than appears at first sight, for hundreds of people study the chosen pieces. The choice is not made easier by the fact that Welsh composers, whom it is desirable—a duty, even—to encourage, persist, with few exceptions, in writing in arid Victorian idioms. The London Symphony Orchestra will accompany the principal test-piece in the chief Choral Competition, which is 'O, the Lord is our Redeemer' from Bach's 'St. John' Passion.

The principal feature of the Eisteddfod will, however, be the concerts, at one of which the B minor Mass of Bach will be given. The nucleus of the choir will be the Ammanford Choir, and Mr. Gwilym R. Jones will be the conductor. Mr. Albert Coates and Mr. Walter Damrosch conduct the orchestral concerts, which include works by Elgar, Tchaikovsky, Scriabin, and Cyril Jenkins.

MUSIC OF THE 16TH CENTURY AND TO-DAY

By C. M. SMITH-DODSWORTH

One of the most important by-products of recent musical progress has undoubtedly been the increased interest in, and appreciation of, the polyphonic music of the 16th century, especially on the part of musicians of 'advanced' tendencies. This fact was emphasized recently by Dr. R. R. Terry in the course of a lecture on Tudor Music at St. Martin-in-the-Fields, when he mentioned that his best helpers in the work of editing old music were young musicians whose natural idiom was that of the 'ultra-moderns.' Although this affinity with the great polyphonists is familiar enough to anyone in close touch with contemporary music, it has not yet attained to anything like universal realisation, and until this is achieved there is likely to be a proportionate inability on the part of the musical public to appreciate the underlying spirit of much that has been written during the present century. In seeking a cause it will be necessary to make a rapid survey of the vicissitudes through which music has passed during the last four centuries.

Polyphonic music having been in the main evolved by adding parts to plainchant Canti Fermi, the free rhythms of the latter were as far as possible retained. This resulted in an almost infinite rhythmic variety which, combined with the tonal resources of the eight modes and the melodic vitality of the plainsong tradition, put into the hands of the composers of the period an expressive medium of great range and intensity. During the 17th century, however, the simultaneous development of Italian opera and instrumental music produced some unfortunate results in limiting the modes to two, and producing—through the general adoption of fixed dance-rhythms for instrumental pieces—the invention of the fixed bar-line, which effected the extinction of free rhythm, and may be said to have maintained an undisputed and despotic sway over music thenceforward down to the end of the 19th century. Composers were therefore left with only two means of tonal contrast: between the two modes and by changes of pitch—usually between tonic and dominant. As regards rhythm they were in an even worse case, the monotony being practically complete. Almost the only possible relief was to be found in alternations from duple to triple time at more or less protracted intervals and variations of tempo, with very occasional departures from the standard eight-bar rhythm. The effect thereby produced was of a dreary rigidity, compared with which the forbidding aspect of a Georgian house suggests a feeling of almost hectic jubilation.

By the end of the 19th century all the possibilities of diatonic harmony had been exhausted, the two unfortunate modes had succumbed under the strain of continuous overwork, and all the fixed bar dance-rhythms had been worn too threadbare to be any longer presentable. Composers were now faced with two alternatives, the adoption of a keyless chromatic scale or a return to some sort of polymodal system. At the same time the abolition or partial abolition of the fixed bar became inevitable, with a corresponding freedom and variety of rhythm. These two tendencies will be found in varying proportions in the work of almost all composers of to-day. With some the chromatic predominates, with others the modal, but the latter certainly appears to be one of the strongest influences at the present time, while in nearly all modern works, although the bar-line may still survive, yet there is an effort made on the part of the composer to free himself from its tyranny by using bars of varying lengths according to his needs instead of submitting to a uniform time-division. The bar-line will doubtless continue to survive, however, especially in concerted music, as a convenient means of sub-division, but it will do so as the composer's servant and no longer as his master.

We find ourselves back, therefore, in a position to-day which offers many points of similarity to that from which music fell in the 17th century. Even a generation ago the modal feeling was showing itself in the works of Debussy, while to-day it is almost ubiquitous. In this country it is particularly strong in the music of Vaughan Williams, Holst, and those of a like tendency, where one finds a thoroughly modern harmonic scheme combined with a modal tonality to form a new musical idiom possessing great powers of expression, and particularly apt for vocal music. In fact, some of their songs are almost pure plainchant in their strongly melodic characteristics and rhythmic conformity to the words; while at the same time they display an absolutely modern individuality derived from the mature musical experience of the intervening centuries and the wide harmonic resources of the present day. In the works of Stravinsky may be seen the extent to which rhythmic freedom and independence of parts has been obtained: an extent not reached since the days of Byrd and Gibbons. The bar-line finds itself where the composer wishes it to be—not where it wishes; and in some instances—as in the pianoforte-rag-music—very nearly suffers total eclipse. Whether complete emancipation will ever be effected is problematical, but there seems to be no reason why we should not at least regain the degree of freedom which music enjoyed three hundred years ago.

The most important direction in which much modern music parts company with the ancients, is in that of melody. Although, as has already been mentioned, some composers have undoubtedly a strong melodic feeling, yet a great many at the present time are inclined to rely more on short figures, rhythmic masses of sound, and contrasted colour schemes for their structural material. This may or may not be sound construction—time will certainly decide—but in view of the entire past history of music, it seems open to doubt whether the absence of a strong horizontal line in music makes for strength and stability. At no time was this horizontal continuity more strong than during the 16th century, and it is not impossible that a yet closer study of the sound workmanship of that time would produce increased strength and vigour in the music of to-day.

Enough has been said, however, to demonstrate the strong community of spirit existing between the ancient and the modern, and to explain in some measure the gap existing between the present generation and those immediately preceding it. Neither the resources of sound nor the auditory capabilities of mankind are infinite, and we may well be at the completion of a cycle of musical development which will presently begin to repeat itself.

The Musician's Bookshelf

By 'FESTE'

Of all literary tasks, the cold-blooded setting forth of operatic stories must surely be one of the least grateful. Few, indeed, are the libretti that are not silly or improbable, or both, and the compiler of operatic guide-books can do nothing to make them appear less bad than they are. Fortunately, such books are for reference rather than for reading enough. A set of short stories may be a work of art; a set of opera plots is a desolation—a compilation—one of Lamb's 'books that are no books.' Still, such things seem to be necessary, and here is the latest of them—'The Complete Opera Book,' by Gustav Kobbé. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, 36s.) Of course, the term 'complete' can never be more than temporarily true, since new operas will continue to be produced. But as this book deals very thoroughly with about two hundred works, including such recent examples as 'L'Heure Espagnole,' and the Triptych of Puccini, it should rarely be found wanting for some years yet. Gustav Kobbé died while still at work on the volume, so the task was finished by Katharine Wright. The story-telling is done as convincingly as possible, and there are valuable essays on the various schools of opera, &c. A hundred portraits, a hundred music examples, and a mass of information of every conceivable kind, make 'The Complete Opera Book' the best work of the kind so far issued—a big and difficult task well carried out.

It seems hardly credible that until lately no life of Bishop has appeared. But in his preface to 'The Life of Sir Henry R. Bishop' (The Press Printers, Long Acre, 12s.), Mr. Richard Northcott tells us that such is the case. Bishop belonged to the class of composers who so exactly hit the taste of a very lean time in music that they have little to say to a later generation. The chronological list of his works shows him to have been a prolific composer, chiefly for the stage, but of all his music little more than a few glees retain their popularity. We may presume that 'Home, sweet Home' will keep his memory fresh so long as the word 'Home' means anything to us. Yet it cannot be called a good tune, either in its present or original form. It is one of the many cases in which a musical work attains immortality by virtue of its lucky connection with a text or sentiment whose appeal is perennial. If the most gifted composer of to-day reset the words and gave us a really inspired melody, he would be accused of presumption and his music would be left severely alone. Mr. Northcott shows us the Siciliano from which Bishop adapted the air. It has a miserably weak accompaniment, and the harmonization is sickening in its sentimentality. The book contains a good many illustrations, and is an interesting record. Perhaps its chief value, after all, lies in the light it sheds on English musical life of a long period. It is a pity the price is so high. Twelve shillings for a hundred and fifty nine smallish pages, bound in paper boards, is rather stiff.

We know less of John Field than of Bishop, but he was probably a more original and gifted musician. He also appears to have been so far without a biography. Very late, but better than never, comes Dr. Grattan Flood with a slender booklet, 'John Field of Dublin' (Martin Lester, Dublin, 3s. 6d.). The author adds as a sub-title 'Inventor of the Nocturne,' but Field's claim to remembrance is based on much more than that. He was clearly a composer and pianist of unusual gifts, and but for his irregular life would have left more substantial proof of his talent than a handful of pianoforte and chamber music. Dr. Flood quotes warm testimony from Glinka (who was a pupil of Field) and Joseph d'Ortigue as to his playing. The latter said Field had no rival as a pianist, and Fetis 'declared his playing simply astonishing'—and they knew a bit about pianoforte playing at Paris at that time (1832), for Chopin was giving recitals there. Field, we read, was not impressed by Chopin, whom he described as 'un talent de chambre de malade.' One wonders whether this was said before or after Berlioz's jibe 'il se mourait toute sa vie.' Dr. Flood's monograph is an interesting and well-written tribute to a musician of whom far too little notice has been taken by his fellow countrymen.

Compared with our knowledge of early developments in composition and instrumental performance the stock of information on the early days of singing is slender, and the facts and surmises themselves are scattered about in all kinds of books, accessible and otherwise. Welcome, therefore, is W. J. Henderson's 'Early History of Singing' (Longmans, Green & Co., 7s. 6d.). Mr. Henderson traces the art of singing from the beginning of the Christian era to the period of Alessandro Scarlatti. The early chapters are inevitably concerned chiefly with liturgical music. In some respects this is the most valuable section of the book, because it shows clearly that even in the earliest days of plainsong vocal art was far from being the crude affair many people suppose it to have been. The extremely vocal character of melismatic plainsong is the best of evidence on the subject, of course. It was obviously devised for skilful singers, and even to-day its adequate performance is one of the most beautiful things in vocal music. The standard of singing reached in the Schola Cantorum founded by Gregory in 950 was very high, if we may judge from Mr. Henderson's details of the course. There and in similar schools were laid the foundations of the vocal tradition that culminated in the amazing virtuosity of early Italian opera.

One or two small errors should be noted. Speaking of the 'jubili' on which the early church singers vocalised, Mr. Henderson says that 'the vowels on which these were sung were called "evovae," a title which instantly recalls the Greek "evoe."' But the term 'evovae' was merely an abbreviation of the last clause of Gloria Patri, the word being formed of the vowels in seculorum, Amen. It was used to indicate the ending of the psalm tone at the close of an introit or antiphon, and, in fact, is so used to-day. Rockstro in Grove points out that a modern German critic (Böhme) mistakes the mnemonic word for 'Evoe,' and 'is greatly exercised at the admission of a "Bacchanalian shout" into the office books of the Church!'

On page 26, a primitive example of vocal embellishment of a fragment of plainsong is spoken of as a 'species of embryonic counterpoint,' which obviously it is not. A few such slips apart, this is an admirable book.

One of the results of the Pilgrim Fathers' Tercenary celebrations is a revival of interest in the metrical psalm tunes which played a prominent part in their devotions. Prof. Waldo Selden Pratt, of Hartford Theological Seminary, has just published a brochure on the subject, called 'The Music of the Pilgrims' (Oliver Ditson Co.). It will interest all who enjoy the lore that gathers round hymn tunes. The author would probably be interested to hear that many of these old tunes are enjoying a new lease of life in this country, thanks to their inclusion in the 'English Hymnal.' Mr. Pratt gives specimen pages in facsimile of the old 'Book of Psalmes, Englished both in Prose and Metre . . . Imprinted at Amsterdam by Giles Thorp' in 1612; and after discussing the tunes and words, ventures on a harmonization of some of the melodies. Here he appears to have got out of his depth. His treatments are not only crude, but contain some consecutives of the type that really do matter, because they are obviously the result of lack of skill.

At a good moment, just as we are once more enjoying the 'Proms,' comes a new edition of 'The Promenade Ticket' by A. H. Sidgwick. (Edward Arnold, 6s.) The book made such a hit on its appearance a few years ago, that there is no need to do much more than call attention to it. I am sorely tempted to make this review column a roaring success by quoting a few passages, but I will not risk spoiling one by removing it from its context. For the benefit of readers who have so far missed the work, it may be explained that the author imagines a Promenade Concert season ticket (in the good old days when such things were issued) to be used by seven people, in varying stages of musical development. One of the conditions of such use is that the seven have to record their impressions of the music heard. The result may be imagined, but you must not be content with imagining it. If you can read 'The Promenade Ticket' without learning something on one page and chuckling over the next, you have my sympathy. It is not only far more shrewd and illuminating than the average work on musical appreciation; it is also far more amusing than many avowedly funny efforts. Rarely, indeed, can one give a musical book this double-barrelled praise.

I will say as few words as possible about J. F. Porte's 'Sir Edward Elgar' (Kegan Paul, 7s. 6d.) because little can be said in praise, and fault-finding is an ungrateful job, to be got over quickly. The volume contains a brief biography and a review of the whole of the composer's output in chronological order. Assuming the details to be correct, it thus has value as a book of reference—a value which would have been increased had the publishers' names been added. From literary and critical points of view it is easily the worst book of the kind I have so far come across. It is ill-written, banal, and in several respects shows deplorable want of taste. One almost wonders whether the pages were read in proof, so slovenly is the composition and punctuation. Almost at random my eyes light on such gems as these: 'On his art he could cover a wild (sic) field of discussive matter.' 'No composer ever had a more faithful propagandist (sic) than Elgar did in Richter.' Of 'Salut d'Amour' and 'Mot d'Amour': 'We do not know whether Elgar was under any amorous influence at this time, but both pieces betray a curious earnestness to outline their subject.' As an example of muddled expression and bad taste look at this: 'There are many parts of the libretto of "Gerontius" which seem fanatical to us: for instance, we believe in the existence of "Purgatory" as much as we do Jack's Beanstalk or Alice's Wonderland, but the whole is vivid and imaginative, Elgar's music fitting in exactly with the words.' And there are at least two other passages in Mr. Porte's discussion of Newman's poem that will make a good many readers feel disposed to hurl his book into the dust-bin. I could go on and fill columns with puerilities drawn from this amazing volume. For amazing it is. We may easily conceive an equally bad book being written on a great contemporary painter or writer, but we should be astounded if it found a publisher. Evidently the intelligence of the musical section of the reading public is rated very low. Our sympathy goes out to Mr. Porte's subject. Elgar has been none too well treated by his generation, and should have been spared this wounding in the house of his friends. Well may he say, 'Save me from my propagandists!'

The British Music Society is now permanently established on the third floor of No. 3, Berners Street. These premises have the advantage of including a room large enough for all committee meetings, so that the Society need no longer seek hospitality for this purpose. It is very proud at the moment of the good work done in the cause of British music by its representatives in Paris, Brazil, New York, Melbourne, and Sydney.

At the annual examination at the Brussels Conservatoire the Grand Prix for violin playing was awarded 'with the highest distinction' to Miss Maud Gold, a native of Tonypandy in South Wales. Miss Maud Gold won the Associated Board's scholarship for violin playing at an early age, and then became a student of the Royal College of Music under Señor Arbos, and subsequently studied under Mr. Maurice Sons. She was for a time a member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra.

LISZT, THE PIANIST

BY CAMILLE SAINT-SAËNS

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

The hour of justice had struck when the centenary of Liszt's birth came round; great festivals were organized and his works were performed on the grand scale. No longer was it possible to affirm that the author of 'Christus,' of the 'Legend of Saint Elisabeth,' of the Symphonies 'Dante' and 'Faust,' and of the Symphonic Poems, was simply a writer of pianists' music.' We may now speak of the marvellous virtuoso without running the risk of doing justice to this composer of genius.

Pianists' music! Well, Mozart was the greatest pianist of his day, Beethoven was a pianist of the highest rank, and Sebastian Bach, that mighty genius, was an unrivalled organist and clavecinist.

Unfortunately for Liszt—an extraordinary performer who extracted from his instrument the strongest effects; completely transforming it as Paganini had transformed the violin—he was fated to emphasise his virtuosity.

All the same, it was not this virtuosity, however amazing, but rather his own admirable musical nature that constituted his true worth. When accused of attaching undue importance to the pianoforte at the expense of the music, it was the contrary that really took place: his aim was to introduce the orchestra to the pianoforte. With wonderful ingenuity, substituting the free for the literal (and, therefore, faithful) translation, he actually succeeded in expressing on his instrument the sonorous measures of Beethoven's Symphonies and of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique. Into his lesser pianoforte pieces (even the Fantasias which were written on opera motives) there enters the feeling of the orchestra, giving an æsthetic character even to the most apparently futile things.

As most of his inventions have ceased to be copyright, in these days we are no longer aware of the radical transformation he wrought, of the many novel resources he introduced into pianoforte technique. A veritable revolution was effected, the number of the instrument appearing to have doubled in volume. To listen to some of his compositions from a distance, one would imagine that a duet rather than a solo was being played.

By new methods of fingering he opened up a wide field for those arabesque effects with which the pianoforte could not dispense, and which, before his time, had had a very restricted field of action. I say this without casting any reflection upon Chopin, whose inventions along these lines have been so valuable.

The part played by the left hand he developed to an unusual degree. In the ancient pianoforte music, each hand possesses its determinate rôle from which it seldom departs: this is dualist music, music in two elements.

In the quartet and the orchestra we have something additional; here the musical structure comprises three elements: the song, the bass, and a more or less complex intermediate part.

It was Liszt's wish to transfer this threefold interest to the pianoforte, and he effected his object by means of the left hand, directing it incessantly from the lowest notes to the centre notes of the instrument. The left hand—poor thing!—was not accustomed to such gymnastics, and to perform these new duties it was impelled to acquire a degree of suppleness and agility quite unusual. All this did not take place without encountering opposition, of which no memory remains at the present time. Certain of Liszt's compositions, which were once regarded as impossible of execution, are now everyday performances of the young pupils of the Conservatoire. On the pianoforte, as on all other instruments, virtuosity has made gigantic strides all along the line.

What hard things have been said against this virtuosity! How fiercely it has been attacked in the name of Art with a capital A! To think of that implacable, that impious war declared upon the Concertos both of Beethoven and of Mozart! One could not possibly have been more completely in the wrong.

In the first place—the fact must be proclaimed from the house-tops—in Art a difficulty overcome is a thing of beauty. This truth has been affirmed by Théophile Gautier in immortal verse, and after such testimony there is nothing further to be said.

In the second place, virtuosity is a powerful aid to music, whose scope it extends enormously. It is because instrumentalists have all become virtuosi that Richard Wagner was enabled to dispense so lavishly that delightful wealth of sound, of which a good deal would have been impossible but for the virtuosity we affect to despise.

In such cases, however, beauty comes into existence only when the difficulty is really overcome to such a degree that the listener is unaware of its existence. We thus enter that realm of superior execution wherein Liszt was throned as a king, performing with the ease and assurance of a god. Power and delicacy and charm, along with a rightly-accented rhythm were his, in addition to an unusual warmth of feeling, impeccable precision, and that gift of suggestion which creates great orators, the leaders and guides of the masses.

When interpreting the classics, he did not substitute his own personality for the author's, as do so many performers; he seemed rather to endeavour to get at the heart of the music and find out its real meaning—a result sometimes missed even by the best of players.

This, moreover, was the plan he adopted in his transcriptions. The Fantasia on 'Don Juan' sheds unexpected light upon the deeper meanings of Mozart's masterpiece.

Liszt left behind him admirable Études of a really terrifying nature, though most helpful in pianoforte work. He also wrote a 'Method' which, imprudently entrusted to others whereas it ought never to have left the author's hands except to pass into the publisher's, has disappeared. The loss is irreparable. By this method most valuable teachings would have been handed down from generation to generation, combating those erroneous principles with which conscientious—though woefully mistaken—professors so lavishly flood the world.

Ah! why have I not the art of word-painting? As I write I picture myself once again in the home of Gustave Doré, gazing upon that pallid face and those eyes that fascinated all listeners, whilst, beneath his apparently indifferent hands, in a wonderful variety of nuances, there moaned and wailed, murmured and roared the waves of the 'Légende de Saint François de Paule marchant sur les flots'!

Never again will there be seen or heard anything to equal it.

THE LEAGUE OF ARTS

This admirable organization is still very much alive. Its performances of operas and plays in Hyde Park have provided London with a form of al fresco entertainment which will no doubt be developed considerably in future summers. Meanwhile the League is busy with plans for the autumn and winter. Its scheme of Saturday concerts at the League headquarters—the Guildhouse, Eccleston Square—has already been described in our columns. We are glad to draw readers' attention to the League Choir now being formed. It is proposed that the choir shall consist of twelve hundred voices, and that its main object shall be the provision of music on national and public occasions. The promoters rightly point out that music on the right large scale for such a purpose entails much preparation and organization, and that the obvious way to save time and labour, and also to obtain the best results, is to bring into being a permanent body of performers ready to do duty at any time, even when the notice is short—as it sometimes is, for important events have a trick of catching us on the hop. The new choir is no quixotic experiment. Since 1918 the League has proved on numerous occasions—e.g., the Peace Celebrations, the Thames Pageant, the Lord Mayor's Show, the League of Nations Rally, &c., &c.—that good simple choral music in the open air is a popular feature, and the best of answers to those who would have us to believe that the man in the street (literally in the street) has no ear for anything better than drivel. The encoring of Parry's setting of Blake's 'Jerusalem' by a Trafalgar Square crowd is a case in point. A few years ago the idea of a London crowd caring two pins for Blake and Parry would have been pooh-poohed. The policy of the League of Arts is based on the assumption that the average man's taste is at least decent, though it may not be cultured. This is better than hastily taking it for granted that he has none.

The League of Arts Choir will aim at becoming to the crowd what Queen's Hall is to the concert-goer. The trainer and conductor will be Mr. Martin Shaw—a real, live musician with a democratic outlook. Volunteers (S.A.T.B.) are asked to attend the preliminary meeting, which will be held at the Guildhouse, Eccleston Square, on Thursday, September 29, at 8. The subscription has been fixed at 5s.

An orchestra has also been formed, and good amateur players desirous of joining are asked to write to Mr. Shaw at the Guildhouse aforesaid. Perhaps some of the users of our 'Chamber music for Amateurs' column will find the League orchestra the very thing. We heartily wish choir and orchestra all success. There is ample room for activities of this kind. At present serious musical efforts are almost entirely confined to works of a complex and difficult type, with the result that most people conceive of only two kinds of music—the difficult and the drivelling. The best and quickest way of fighting the latter is not to abuse it, but to demonstrate in and out of doors the fact that there is no lack of music which is good, easy to perform and understand, and as jolly as jazz—though that is no great praise, after all, for the jollity of a good deal of jazz is confined to its title-page.

FOLK-DANCING

SUMMER SCHOOL AT CHELTENHAM

The popularity of the Vacation School of the English Folk-Dance Society was amply evidenced by the success of that held for three weeks in August at Cheltenham, where delightful rooms and grounds were lent by the governors of the Gentlemen's College and by the Education Committee. The number of students attending reached five hundred, about the same number as last year. It should be noted, however, that whereas in previous years the several Education authorities had given grants to enable their teachers to attend, this year many had not the wherewithal to do so. The proportion of teachers who paid their own expenses was therefore larger, and an indication of enthusiasm. Seventeen classes were held in as many rooms, Mr. Cecil Sharp, the director, having brought a staff of seventeen instructors and the same number of pianists. Miss Maud Karpeles, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Kennedy, and Mrs. Kennedy North were amongst the teachers, and the course included classes in sword-, morris-, and country-dances, daily folk-song singing and staff demonstrations, weekly examinations, public weekly demonstrations, and weekly evening parties. On three days in each week Mr. Sharp lectured, and his presentation of the theory of the subject was one of the most valuable features.

Folk-dancing is an art, and must not be classed as gymnastics, for its physical actions are performed under the stimulus of emotion and are natural and unselfconscious, and therefore opposed to a stiff, mechanical bearing. These actions promote physical culture in an easy and efficient manner, yet they inculcate the valuable lessons of discipline and restraint. The technique of folk-dance demands a knowledge of the centres of power and balance of the body, and absolute control is an essential. Its practice teaches lessons in grace of manner, in simple, unaffected courtesy, in the art of moving easily and naturally and yet with dignity. The ever-changing figures demand an active and retentive memory, every movement is rhythmical, and the sober gaiety which pervades the dance creates a fresh and wholesome atmosphere. The students showed themselves responsive to the delightful art, which stimulated their imaginations, disciplined their emotions, and provided a refined pleasure distinct from that of every other pursuit.

By far the greater number of the students were elementary school teachers, and in this lies the hope that the folk-dance will supersede the ungraceful and debased forms of dancing which are seen in our ball-rooms and music-halls. Its dissemination, however, cannot be done by means of text-books only, for the charm and distinctive character of a folk-dance often are found in delicate nuances and subtleties which cannot be explained in words. Hence the call for well-trained and skilled teachers, and the value of the vacation school. For those who cannot attend these schools the services of a trained teacher can be secured on application to the Society at 7, Sicilian House, Sicilian Avenue, Southampton Row, London.

The folk-dance had its origin in religious ritual, and though this significance is lost in modern evolution, the character of the dance appeals to the spiritual side of human nature, and this and its elevating influence were experienced not only by the students, but by the large number of visitors who came daily to look on.

M. B.

ENRICO CARUSO

FEBRUARY 25, 1873—AUGUST 2, 1921

Caruso is dead, in his own sunny Naples where he was born forty-eight years ago . . . dead in pathetic circumstances, after terrible sufferings.

Caruso had expressed a wish to die at Naples, and fate so ordered things that his desire was attained. Everybody knows how, in the midst of glorious success, he ever kept a warm corner in his heart for his native city, and when, apparently freed of the insidious malady which struck him down in New York, he decided to return to Italy, it was to the sunny Queen of the South that his thoughts turned. . . .

The son of a mechanic, Caruso at first applied himself to the paternal trade, and was far from imagining his future greatness. 'Up to eighteen years of age,' he himself related, 'I was in doubt whether I had a tenor or baritone voice. I started to sing in Italian churches when I was ten years old, and when at eighteen I began to take lessons, I soon left my first teacher because he could not tell me anything about the quality of my voice. This first teacher, however, predicted for me a brilliant career. "You will earn two hundred francs a month when you have grown a little," he told me. Another teacher found my voice so thin that the other pupils in the class called it a "glass" voice, perhaps because it broke so easily. When I was doing military service at Rieti, I used to sing while working. Major Mogliati heard it, and made me spend leisure hours for many months with a teacher he procured for me.'

Caruso was also fond of telling a Verdi joke against himself. 'When I created Feodora at Milan, I asked the names of the artists, and when he heard mine, he interrupted: "Caruso? They tell me you have a fine voice but it seems to me that his head is not in its place."'

Caruso was proud of his talents as a caricaturist, and caused an album of his sketches of his erratic colleagues and others to be printed. He had learned the real secret of every success, and it is on record that, when questioned as to his occupations, he replied, 'What do I do? I work, I work.'

His débüt was made at the Teatro Nuovo in 1895, but his greatness may be said to date from the 1903 season at the Costanzi (Rome), when his phenomenal talent was revealed in 'Giant on the extreme' of 'Mephistophele,' and the Finale of Puccini's 'Manon Lescaut.' It was on that occasion that one of the first Italian critics—Nicola d'Atri—wrote the almost prophetic words, 'Here we have at last a great singer—so great that to hear him sing the epilogue of "Mephistophele" it would almost be worth the pain . . . of being damned.'

From that date his triumphs were fantastic, and their details are public property. He seemed to be forgotten Italy, but in 1914 he returned to the Costanzi, and with Toscanini as director, and Crezia Bori and De Luca for companions, sang in 'I ghiacci'—a memorable evening for all, and for me more than the great singer, who said to Mark Mogliati, 'This has been the happiest evening of my career.'

And now his sun has failed at its zenith. In the midst of the universal sorrow, one thought comes to me as I write these lines—the application of the old biblical passage—'Is it well with the dead? . . . it is well.' Caruso himself once said, 'Never believe it if you hear that a singer has retired. While he has voice, he must sing.' The saddest lot of the critic is to meet one of those whose day is done, and who in the twilight of obscurity awaits the end. The sufferings of the forgotten great none but themselves can know, and their pain is always mute. But Caruso has been spared this greatest of all sorrows, and has passed from us loved, admired, and acclaimed. Those who have heard him will never forget him; and those to whom his name is only an inspiration and an ideal will find that they also are all the better because Enrico Caruso left the imprint of his fame on the history of their time.

Rome,

LEONARD PEYTON.

August 5, 1921.

Music in the Foreign Press

AN ADDRESS BY SAINT-SAËNS

Le Ménestrel (July 22) gives the text of Dr. Saint-Saëns' speech inaugurating the 'Ecole des Hautes Etudes Musicales' at Fontainebleau. He . . . advises the pupils to refrain from seeking originality, to allow their individualities to follow their natural course of development. Too many people to-day are originality-mad.

Music, after a long evolution, has reached a stage of perfect balance between necessary laws and no less necessary latitude for artists. There are people who wish to proceed further. They cannot: the utmost limit is reached, and to overstep it would mean a retrogression towards the primitive, cacophonous state of music.

There are fashions in music as in hats. The fashion is now to despise the brilliant French school of light music which flourished from the days of Méhul and Dalayrac to those of Bizet and Massenet. Yet works such as 'La Dame Blanche,' 'Le Domino Noir,' 'Mignon,' occupy not unimportant places in the history of music.

THE TECHNIQUE OF THE 'CELLO

In Le Monde Musical (July) Diran Alexanian describes Pablo Casals' principles of fingering with aim towards ensuring perfect accuracy of pitch. The article is full of useful suggestions, and augurs well for the promised treatise in which the writer gives, he tells us, a full analysis of Casals' views on violoncello playing.

MODERN HUNGARIAN COMPOSERS

In Il Pianoforte (July 15) Béla Bartók outlines the history of modern Hungarian music:

Liszt and Erkel started the movement which gave birth to national Hungarian music, although the former's tendencies were essentially international, the latter's determined chiefly by Italian influences. But Erkel was an excellent teacher; and Liszt's activities in connection with the Budapest Conservatoire were an all-important factor.

After a period during which Hungarian composers were influenced by gipsy music rather than by the genuine musical lore of their country, a generation appeared which devoted its care to the study of Hungarian folk-songs. Its principal representatives are Zoltán Kodály, Ladislaus Lajtha, Anton Molnár, and Bartók. The musical lore of Slovakia and Rumania was also studied, and a considerable number of folk-tunes (7,000 Hungarian, 3,500 Slovak, and 3,500 Rumanian) were collected, but, unfortunately, not published.

Those composers are the first to write music which is 'not a mosaic of harmonized folk-tunes or of variations upon folk-tunes, but an expression of the innermost substance of folk-music.'

Other Hungarian composers are Ernst von Dohnányi, Theodore Szanto, and Leo Weiner. Their output can hardly be described as illustrating national tendencies.

MORE ABOUT 'PRINCESS GIRNARA'

Here are some opinions on Wellesz's 'Princess Girnara.' Thus Richard Ohlekoopf, in the Neue Musik Zeitung:

The music is sheer nonsense: no melody, no motives, no thematic working-out.

Paul Stefan in the Neue Freie Presse:

Dr. Wellesz's music is worthy of praise. The composer has aimed at much that is novel, and achieved not a little. 'Princess Girnara' is the most mature work he has given us, a work interesting in its texture, in its scoring, and in the treatment of its excellently written vocal parts.

Dr. Werner, in the Hamburger Nachrichten:

It is lofty music, which is at its best in its quietest moods, when the composer gives us long, tuneful melodies full of expression and vitality.

Dr. Roesler, in the Schaumburg Lippe Zeitung:

Most attractive is the way in which Wellesz works out motives symphonically.

The critic of the Vossische Zeitung:

The music is racy, daring, refined.

KANT'S MUSICAL ÆSTHETICS

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (May) Kathi Meyer devotes a very thoughtful and thorough-going essay to correcting current misconceptions as to Kant's views on music:

It is usual to consider Kant as an exponent of a purely formal method in musical aesthetics, and the forerunner of the Hanslick school. The misconception was disseminated by Kretschmar in his article, 'Kant's Musikauffassung.'

Kathi Meyer adduces ample proof that Kant's views were broader, that he took into account the emotional element in music, and admitted that form and content should be mutually in keeping.

BYZANTINE CHURCH MUSIC

In the same issue Egon Wellesz—who had previously contributed an interesting discussion of H. J. W. Tillyard's readings of the Byzantine Kasia Hymns—considers various points in connection with the Byzantine Liturgy.

MUSICAL EDUCATION FOR WORKMEN

The Zeitschrift für Musik (second July number) describes in detail the scheme adopted at the colour factory of Bayer & Co., Leverkusen, to develop the musical taste and education of their staff. A technical and musical library is provided; two halls—holding respectively a thousand and three hundred people—serve for concerts of various kinds, and lectures; instrumental and choral classes give free tuition, the firm bearing all expenses of the whole organization. A small fee is charged for admission to the concerts.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

The South West Choral Society begins its next season on September 27. Concerts will take place at Battersea Town Hall on November 30 ('The Golden Legend' and miscellaneous), Ash Wednesday ('The Dream of Gerontius'), and Good Friday ('The Messiah'). Mr. L. J. Calcott, 42, Crieff Road, Wandsworth, is the hon. secretary.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

There are no concerts to be mentioned this month except the Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall, a very important exception, for in the twenty-six years of their existence they have transformed London musical life. But that is an old story which need not be retold here.

The season began on August 13, before an overflowing audience, with a programme vastly different from those which used to be considered necessary on opening nights. It contained, for instance, Granados' delightful Spanish Dances and César Franck's Ballet Music from 'Hulda,' which has some charming moments, but has as little sense of the theatre as some recent British operas. There was also a novelty, viz., three movements from the incidental music to 'The Promised Land,' by Jarnefelt. The composer has a knack of writing agreeable music which tells its message succinctly and clearly in a not very distinctive idiom. The singers were Miss Rosina Buckman, who sang Isolde's narrative from Act 1 of 'Tristan,' which certainly would not have been 'popular' in the Queen's Hall sense a few years ago. Mr. Lauritz Melchior sang 'Vesti la Giubba' from 'Pagliacci' (in Danish). His fine voice and abundant energy brought the house down. I was glad to notice that Sir Henry Wood reduced the orchestral postlude to a few chords. I often think it would be a good thing if operatic conductors were to do the same.

The only other novelty produced so far is a symphonic sketch, 'Crepusculo sul Mare' ('Twilight on the Sea'), by Santoliquido, who may be looked on as one of the leaders of the Italian orchestral revival. The work dates from 1909, when the composer was in the early twenties. Since writing it he has lived in an Arab village near Tunis, and probably he writes differently now. His music of eleven years ago is distinctly pleasant and shows a pretty fancy but is not individual. It is worth recording that the composer had not at that stage of his career any hankering after extreme dissonances.

This work was heard on August 18, on which evening also Miss Lena Kontorovitch played Brahms' Violin Concerto extremely well in a thoroughly feminine way in the best sense of the word. Mr. Malcolm McEachren, who sang on the same evening has taste and a fine bass voice; he does not yet control it, it rather controls him. Although 'Pee Gynt' was in the programme the hall was not very full.

On the previous evening, however, there was a crowded audience in spite of the fact that two of the principal works in the programme were British. I was probably, however, Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony which filled the house. The two native works were three movements ('Mars,' 'Saturn,' and 'Jupiter') from 'The Planets,' conducted by Mr. Holm himself. Although it came very late in the programme, the audience applauded the music very heartily. The other work was York Bowen's Pianoforte Concerto in D, a fairly early work dating from the time when Tchaikovsky's motley was considered the only wear for British musicians. It is very agreeable to listen to, and the composer made the solo part highly effective.

NOTES FOR SEPTEMBER

At the time of writing, the only concerts announced for this month are Mr. Lamond's recital of 10th, Miss Scharrer's recital on the 17th, and that of Mr. Moiseiwitsch on the 24th (all at Queen's Hall), a Tetrassini concert at the Albert Hall on the 25th, and the Promenade Concerts. The novelties and quasi-novelties promised for the month are: Van Dieren's 'Les Propos des Buveurs' (conducted by the composer) on Tuesday the 6th; Montague Phillips' second Piano-forte concerto (conducted by the composer) on Thursday the 8th; Carl Nielsen's 'The Four Temperaments' (conducted by the composer) on Friday the 10th; Vaughan Williams' Fantasy for Strings on a Theme of Tallis (conducted by the composer) on Wednesday the 13th; Frederick Laurence's 'Tristis' for string orchestra on Thursday the 15th; Bantock's 'Sonata' for string orchestra, harp, and organ on Friday the 22nd; Norman O'Neill's 'Prelude and Allegro' from 'Mary Rose' (conducted by the composer) on Saturday the 24th; and Théophile Ysäye's 'Concerto in E flat' on Thursday the 29th. The Monday Wagner programmes have special features. On the 5th we are to have the whole of 'Die Walküre' and the closing scene of 'The Valkyries'; on the 12th a 'Lohengrin' programme on the 12th, and on the 19th excerpts from 'Siegfried' on the 19th.

Other interesting items are Roger Quilter's 'Children's Overture' on Saturday the 10th; Edward Elgar's 'Theme and Six Diversions' on Wednesday the 14th; Cyril Scott's 'Two Passacaglias' on Thursday the 17th; Rutland Boughton's 'Love and the Birth of Arthur' from 'The Birth of Arthur' on Tuesday the 20th; Elgar's 'Falstaff' on Thursday the 22nd; and Eugène Goossens' 'Tam o' Shanter' on Wednesday the 28th, each conducted by its composer.

Worth noting also is Scriabin's second Symphony on Wednesday the 14th, on which evening M. Leff Schinow plays Glazounov's Concerto in F minor; on Tuesday the 27th, Strauss' 'Don Quixote' will be played, with Mr. Warwick Evans as the soloist.

The first of the Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts takes place on October 8, with M. Cortôt as soloist, and the first London Ballad Concert is fixed for October 1.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

The 1921-22 prospectus of the Novello Choir has been issued. Rehearsals will be held in the Novello Hall, 160, Wardour Street, on Tuesdays, from 6.45 to 8.45, the first taking place on September 13.

New members with good voices and fair reading ability will be welcomed. Arrangements for the season include a performance at St. Martin-in-the-Fields on November 5, at 3.15 (Bach's 'Jesu, My Sweet Treasure' and Elizabethan Madrigals), violin, Mr. Thomas Fussell; organ, Mr. Harvey Grace; a Christmas concert at Bishopsgate Church, December 13, at 8 (Bach's 'God so loved the world,' Old Carols, and Madrigals. Soloists, Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Joseph Farrington, and Mr. Harvey Grace, organ); and on May 9, 1922, at 8, a final concert (works by Parry, Elgar, Bantock, and Geoffrey Shaw, &c.).

Inquiries as to membership or other matters should be addressed to the Secretary, Mr. H. A. Novello, Novello Works, Hollen Street, W.1.

New Music

MINIATURE SCORES

Scores are essential to the amateur nowadays—no less than to the professional conductor. Music-lovers have discovered the rare pleasure of score reading, the delight of reconstructing, of galvanizing into life a dead page of printed notes. Of course it is not all plain sailing. A certain practice is necessary, and the experience of a life-time does not always teach the score-reader to grasp the finer and newer points. But even that which is gathered with little labour, the rebuilding of chords, the recalling to the mind of orchestral timbres, is unsurpassed in interest by any other hobby. There is moreover the pleasure of following a performance, score in hand—another practice now common which cannot but help to a better appreciation of musical values. Hence we hail with delight the reappearance of the small score of which war conditions had deprived us for many years past.

I have before me scores from America, from France, and English scores, as different in form as they are in their context, and the question arises unbidden—Which is best, most convenient, and most easily read? Messrs. G. Schirmer, of Boston, send the score of a Quartet in four movements, by Alois Reiser, obviously an enterprising and thoughtful composer. It is printed so clearly that it could easily be used by one of the performers, and be read from a desk at the usual distance. Similar in form, though not in the text, which shows a more mature and easy handling of the instruments, is the Quartet No. 5, of W. H. Reed, published by Augener. So far as clearness of print is concerned, both are admirable. But they have one disadvantage. They are too large to carry in one's pocket.

Two scores issued by Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, on the other hand, are just the right width and height for the pocket, but the printed page is too niggardly of space to be read without difficulty. The compositions in question are both by Josef Holbrooke—the Overture 'Bronwen' and the fantasia 'The Wild Fowl,' from 'The Children of Don.' Now Mr. Holbrooke is not given to writing little melodies to a figured bass. He not only writes for a large orchestra, but uses it. The score of 'The Children of Don' fantasia employs an orchestra of four flutes, three oboes, one cor Anglais, one E flat and two B flat clarinets, one corno di bassetto, one bass clarinet, three bassoons, one contra-bassoon, five saxophones, four horns, four trumpets, three trombones, one euphonium, one contra-bass tuba, timpani, bass-drum, side-drum, tenor-drum, cymbals, tubaphone, harps, and, of course, the usual strings. The printer's task was clearly not an easy one, especially as he was apparently trying to get as much on to a page as was possible. The result is that at times the page looks a miracle of miniature printing which requires almost miraculous eyes to be deciphered. The notes as a rule are read with comparative ease; but flats, sharps, and naturals are occasionally almost indistinguishable from one another.

The happy medium is struck by Messrs. A. Durand & Fils, of Paris, from whom we have received a symphonic study by J. Guy Ropartz entitled 'Soir sur les Chaumes.' Although slightly larger as to format than the preceding score, it has claims to be considered a pocket edition. But instead of Madame Agnes Larkcom returns to London in September, will resume her work at the end of the month, after a successful lecturing tour which has included Hong Kong, Adelaide, Melbourne, &c.

cramming thirty parallel lines on a single page (occasionally rising to thirty-eight), the average is about twenty, and never more than twenty-seven. The gain in clearness is enormous, and although the print is necessarily small, the reader never experiences the least difficulty in making out the composer's signs and directions.

F. B.

SONGS

The many admirers of Roger Quilter's songs will welcome the appearance of his 'Three Pastoral Songs' (Elkin). These are charming and polished settings of words by Joseph Campbell—'I will go with my father a-ploughing,' 'Cherry Valley,' and 'I wish and I wish.' The original edition is for voice, pianoforte, violin and 'cello, but they are also issued for voice and pianoforte only. They may be had in two keys.

Gustav Holst's fine choral settings of 'Hymns from the Rig Veda' are well known. Three groups, each containing three songs, have now been issued for solo voice (Chester), and for those who are acquainted with the composer's splendid work in this direction, no further comment is necessary. The songs are all of medium compass.

Two songs by O. Merikanto, 'Evening' and 'Merella' (Augener), with English words by Elizabeth M. Lockwood, should prove acceptable to singers. The former is short and simple, with a harp-like accompaniment, and would suit a soprano. 'Merella,' with its vigorous second section, would make an effective bass song.

Commendably straightforward in style and with a fine swing to it is D. M. Stewart's setting of John Masefield's 'The West Wind' (Augener). The song is suitable for medium voice.

'Petites Litanies de Jésus,' from Gabriel Grovlez's well-known pianoforte suite, has now been published as a song with French words by Tristan Klingsor, and English translation by G. R. Woodward (Augener). This beautiful little work should prove acceptable in its new form. The compass is E $\flat$  to G $\sharp$  (key G).

Three songs by Phyllis Norman-Parker, 'Quies Amoris,' 'Jacko' Lantern,' and 'November's Thrush' (Bosworth), are settings of words by A. Smart and Monica Chapman. The writing for voice and pianoforte alike is highly effective, and the three songs, which appear under one cover, provide an admirably contrasted group. They are for high voice.

G. G.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

There is much that is interesting and attractive in a group of ten pieces for pianoforte by Jean Sibelius, published separately by Augener. Several are of the moto perpetuo order, and they all provide excellent material for teaching purposes. Two pianoforte solos, Op. 58—'Bluebells' and 'The Carnation'—by the same composer (Augener), are pleasing pieces, the former providing some nimble finger work mainly in the upper part of the keyboard, while the latter calls for expressive treatment. 'Faded blossoms'—short and simply expressive—and 'Berger and Bergerette'—a charming piece with a folk-song-like episode—complete a batch of pieces which should prove welcome to teachers.

H. E. Geehl's 'Twenty-one Studies in Rhythm and Expression' (Augener) are attractive essays in this form. They are moderately easy, and provide a well-varied selection. Gracefully written, and with such titles as 'Berceuse,' 'Water Sprites,' 'Valse Caprice,' &c., the young pianist might easily be beguiled into forgetting that they are studies.

Young pianists of quite moderate attainments will find much profitable recreation in Cecil D. Boulton's 'Water Idyls' (Augener). These are four tuneful pieces entitled 'Water Nymphs,' 'Drifting,' 'Song of the Boatman on the Tagus,' and 'On Moonlit Waters.' Christian Sinding's 'Humoresque' (Augener) is an admirable example of this popular composer's work though rhythmically it lacks relief. It is not easy, and would make an excellent octave study.

Ernest Newton's little suite, 'Robin Hood' (Collard Moutrie) contains five easy dances suitable for young people of the elementary stage. They are bright and tuneful, and contain plenty of useful passage work, lying for the most part well under the hands.

Another little suite 'Good Times,' by Charles S. Cook (Bosworth), is still simpler, and contains five pleasantly written little pieces of a kind to interest and benefit the young player.

'Country Life,' by Herbert Fryer (Bosworth), is a set of eight imaginative little pieces which will surely appeal to intelligent youngsters. They are well written and musically interesting, the composer's handling of his subject being in many ways commendably off the beaten track.

Of John R. Heath's Suite for pianoforte, 'A Child's Night' (Enoch), it may at once be said that it is not intended for children. It must suffice to quote the titles of the five pieces—'Good-Night!,' 'Moon Magic,' 'Bogies,' 'Dream Fancies,' 'Good Morning!'—and to add that the composer has chosen to express himself uncompromisingly through the medium of the 'modern idiom.'

G. G.

STRING AND CHAMBER MUSIC

There seems to be a slump in compositions for 'cello soloists, for only two short pieces—'Melody' for violoncello and pianoforte by J. D. Davies (Novello) and 'Menuet Antique,' arranged for violoncello and pianoforte by Dezső Kordy (Elkin)—claim brief review in this column. On the other hand there is a decided boom in chamber music.

Mr. Davies' 'Melody' is simple and unpretentious as a melody ought to be. It is harmonized tastefully and logically, and keeps the interest of the performer alert without having recourse to oddities. It is quite accessible to players of moderate ability, but all classes of players should derive benefit as well as pleasure by the use of a piece of music which gives peculiar opportunities for the study of good tonal production. The 'Menuet Antique' arrangement is also written by one who knows the strong points and the limitations of the instrument, the original composition being a pianoforte piece by Robert Elkin.

All who are interested in contemporary British chamber music will welcome the publication of the score of Arnold Bax's Quartet in G major (Murdoch), and of Frank Bridge's Sextet for two violins, two violas, and two violoncello (Augener). Mr. Bax's Quartet is one of the happiest examples of his art. His music is always attractive and stimulating, but this Quartet is, to our thinking, more consistently fresh and fragrant than anything else he has done so far. He is one of the very few writers of serious music who to-day venture to explore the possibilities of styles less strenuous than that which ravinsky made fashionable. He is armed cap-à-pied with the modern devices, but his knowledge and his philosophy do not prevent him from being genial and human.

Mr. Frank Bridge's Sextet adds another to the number of valuable chamber compositions we owe to this gifted composer. Indeed, chamber music is in any ways his own special field. He has tried very successfully and very ably other branches—song and orchestral music—but brilliant as these experiments are they do not strike so characteristic a note as his chamber music. This bears the general marks of his tendencies—a keener appreciation of melody than is usual to-day, a feeling for beautiful harmony which prevents him from easily sacrificing beauty for the sake of rude strength and oddity. It bears evidence besides of individual mastery in the use of the medium. It is not right to suppose that because Mr. Bridge is himself a distinguished pianist he enjoys unusual advantages in this respect. Beethoven and Mozart were neither of them string players, though their quartets endure when the work of eminent performers like Spohr and Bazzini is forgotten. It is instinct for the genius of these instruments that enables Mr. Bridge to make straight for his goal. Whatever trouble he takes in balancing his score, the effort is never apparent to the listener or to the reader, for there is never a hint of stumbling after far-sought results. This perfect and easy command of the medium is one of the main features of the Sextet.

The pianoforte and violin Sonata by M. Auguste Chapuis (Durand & Co., Paris) introduces to us a composer hitherto unknown in England. That he possesses a certain refinement and distinction this Sonata proves beyond doubt; but it is less certain that its individuality is sufficiently striking to give it wide appeal. M. Chapuis is successful in avoiding the obvious and the reminiscent. He is not quite so successful in convincing us that there are in his musical qualities that will endure. If we were told that this Sonata represented the first essay of a young man we could give it high praise, for much is possible to the young whose heart is in the right place. If, on the other hand, it is the fruit of long experience we could not hesitate to call it disappointing. On the assumption that it is an early work we may venture call attention to a small detail in which M. Chapuis follows the present extravagant fashion. His reactions to the performers are in keeping with the mode inaugurated by Scriabin in his later poems. It has been said that the innovation is an improvement on the old conventionality by which any movement, no matter whether tragic or pathetic, was called Allegro if it was taken at a certain speed. Apart from the very important fact that no one ever thought of Allegro in music as having any connection with 'merriment,' as the literal translation implies, it is difficult to see where the improvement comes in. The new directions are more bewildering than the old. Dans un sentiment dramatique, tour à tour lent, attendri et résolu is the description of M. Chapuis' first movement. Where does violent begin and where does it end? Where does attendri merge into résolu?—these are some of the questions a reader will ask. Can it be supposed that such a definition as Evocation pathétique dans la sérénité tourmentée will be of real assistance? Surely the description would fit a thousand other pieces. These prefatory remarks are at once too general and too vague to be of practical use. The character of the composition must be found inside the music. If conscientious study does not reveal it, all the flowery phrases in the world will not enable the interpreter to realise it. A score can never be anything but the sign-manual of a musical thought.

Fortunately the fashion has not extended so far to 'Studies' and 'Caprices,' and the directions to the student with which M. Emile Chaumont prefaces his 'Trente-six Etudes de technique' (J. & W. Chester, London) are as lucid and to the point as could be wished. This work, however, has much else to commend it besides the lucidity of its definitions. There was a time when many thought that the question of technique had been solved once and for all. Violin playing, however, is so individual an art that the field of research can never be definitely closed. There exists no panacea for the mass production of violinists. The Studies of M. Chaumont will be valuable to many needing a bridge between the serious classics who form the inevitable steps on the way ad parnassum. They will be found useful, also, both as a complement and as a preparation for any work of revision. Some of them have a second violin part attached—a procedure which ought to be adopted more generally than it is, since it gives the student support without in any way lessening his responsibilities, as happens when pupil and teacher play in unison.

F. B.

CHURCH MUSIC

The steadily growing appreciation of the rich heritage of Church music which we owe to our old English polyphonists, is shown by the revival last year, at St. Alban's Cathedral, of some of the works of three great Church musicians anciently associated with the Diocese—John Dunstable, Robert Fayrfax, and Thomas Tallis; and, more recently, by the remarkable series of services held in connection with the Quincentenary Celebrations at Manchester Cathedral, which were in effect a practical illustration of the development of our native Church music during the past five hundred years.

Conspicuous amongst the music sung in both instances was the Magnificat in the first mode, by Fayrfax (about 1470-1521), and those who heard it will be interested to know that it has now been published under the safe editorship of Mr. Royle Shore, of whom copies may be obtained through Messrs. Novello. We are reminded in a preface that 'following the usual custom of the day . . . the canticle is not fully set . . . and about half of the verses were sung to the traditional plainchant, thus preserving, at least in theory, a congregational element in the music, on antiphonal lines.' The plainchant part, for congregational use, may be obtained separately. Much of the music is for S.A.T.B.B., and it need hardly be said that a good choir is essential.

Under the same editorship appears a second series of Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis set to Gregorian Tones with verses in faux-bourdon by Gibbons, Tallis, &c. (Novello). These make ideal settings of the canticles, as they provide interesting and appropriately dignified music for the choir while at the same time the congregation is enabled to take its share in the simple plainchant verses. Most of these faux-bourdon settings are for five voices with an additional part for solo treble added by the editor, for the last verse. The plainchant of this second series of settings is the same as that contained in a little manual for the congregation, published in modern notations for a former set of eight canticles (Diocesan Music, No. 2. Novello).

Alec Rowley's setting in A minor of the Office for the Holy Communion (Ashdown) may be cordially recommended to the notice of organists. The writing is fresh and full of interest, with a strong modal flavour which will appeal to many. Those interested would do well to examine for themselves a copy of this excellent setting of which want of space prevents fuller notice.

A new Advent anthem, 'Our God shall come' (Novello) by Myles B. Foster, is written for soprano and bass soli and four-part chorus. It is straightforward and dignified in style, and would present no difficulties to the average parish church choir.

G. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

A record of Rachmaninov's 'O cease thy singing, maiden fair' (H.M.V., 10-in.), sung by John McCormack, with Kreisler playing the violin obbligato, leads us to hope that our gramophone manufacturers are beginning to see that many musicians want good songs, especially modern ones, rather than operatic extracts which are really dead, and are only galvanized into a semblance of life by a fine voice. This is a good vocal record, with the words clear as a whole. The violin part is very effective. Is Mr. McCormack's voice quite as nasal as some passages here make it out to be?

Gadski and Amato do their best to make 'Ciel mio padre!' from 'Aida,' interesting, but I fancy that hearers who do not know the opera, or who cannot understand Italian, will remain cold. When will the H.M.V. records be provided with an English version of such numbers, either pasted on the back of the record, or delivered, like the Æolian-Vocalian, explanatory notes, ore. rotundo by the reverse side? (H.M.V., 12-in.)

A charming 10-in. H.M.V. gives us Kreisler playing the 'Chanson Hindou' from Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Sadko,' with orchestral accompaniment.

A 12-in. d.-s. H.M.V. records the Catterall Quartet in the Allegro from Mozart's G major Quartet, and the Variations from Arensky's Quartet in A minor. Both are good on the whole, though, as is too often the case, there is a lack of clearness in the lower string parts. Some people say that this is inevitable, but gramophone recording has improved so much during the past few years that it will never do for us to rest content with anything so far short of perfection as a reproduction that misses two of the charms of chamber music—balance and texture. The Mozart is a jolly and tuneful movement. Arensky's Variations deal with the Russian folk-tune well-known in this country through Tchaikovsky's version of it as a Christmas song. Arensky's treatment is not quite convincing—sometimes the variations are too violent for a tune so simple and elegiac.

'Siegfried's Journey to the Rhine,' played by the Symphony Orchestra under Percy Pitt, is recorded on a H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s. The first part is spoilt by the very vague opening—again the trouble is the reproduction of quiet low tones. The second half wakes us up, and gives us a generous allowance of the surging life of the original. At the risk of drawing down the wrath of one of my correspondents, I must still stick to my opinion that brass via the gramophone suffers a sea-change into something neither rich nor strange. The tuba and bass trombone become faint grunts, and the trumpet lose their nobility, and suggest the toy with which, as children, we made ourselves nuisances. Here again we must keep on complaining, lest inventors think they have nothing further to do.

On the whole, the best record of this moderately good batch is a H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s. of Una Bourn playing the Alla Menuetto and Finale from Grieg's Pianoforte Sonata in E minor. The performance is beautifully crisp, and the animated and enjoyable music comes out well, though again more sonority in the bass would be an improvement. We shall get in due season, if we are sufficiently importunate.

BRITISH MUSIC AT THE QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS

We have received a prospectus of the forthcoming series of Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts, and are pleased to see that of the sixty-two works to be played no fewer than three are by British composer. We have long held the view that the cause of British music is best served by giving our composers fair representation in programmes of international scope rather than by thrusting all-British, or even almost all-British, programmes down the public throat. We are glad to find this policy at last adopted at Queen's Hall. It may be added that of the remaining fifty-nine works only forty are German, and that Strauss is represented four times. We hope the anti-German will not complain that Richard gets too big a show. After all, he appears in the programme only one more than all the British composers put together.

The Sackbut has a new editor in Miss Ursula Greville, and we wish her all success and enjoyment in her task. In a brief heart-to-heart foreword to the July number, she discovers an optimism that should be a valuable asset. Her first number has only one fault—there is not enough of it.

A further bit of interesting news in the matter of musical journalism is the announcement of yet another magazine devoted to the art. On October 1 appears the first number of Fanfare, a fortnightly edited by Mr. Leigh Henry, and published by Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb. 'From its first number we read, Fanfare will sound the Note that its readers will learn to expect in every issue, THE OPEN NOTE. Moreover, it is to be 'a Musical Causerie of free opinion edited for those for whom Music is an Art not merely an occupation.' We hope the editor will also consider the needs of those of us for whom it is both an art and an occupation. Anyhow, we welcome Fanfare with interest. The increase in the number of musical journals is one of the best signs of the times. There are so many issues to be considered and the musical public is so large and growing, that the ground cannot be covered as it should be covered by a good number of organs. By the way, the titles of our new contemporaries are refreshingly violent. After the Sackbut and the Fanfare it will be difficult for a fresh arrival to avoid tameness.

Perhaps THE BLAST.

Yet more news. As we go to press we hear that The Musician and The Music Student will in future appear as one journal, being published at Montague House, Russell Square, W.C.

Church and Organ Music

ORGANS AND ORGANISTS AT PARIS

BY A. M. HENDERSON

To the organist, indeed, to all organ-lovers and lovers of good organ music, Paris at the present time is one of the most interesting of cities. If to his love of his instrument, he add an interest in beautiful churches and church architecture, then the organist visiting Paris can have a very refreshing and stimulating time. As a boy it was my privilege to receive pianoforte lessons at Paris with Pugno. Thanks to his kindness, I had the happiness of meeting many of the older generation of organists, and in this group such distinguished men as Vincent-Saëns—now eighty-seven, and still very much alive—Dubois, Widor, Fauré, Gigout, and Dallier, and later, on subsequent visits of study, to make the acquaintance of some of the younger men Louis Vierne, Tournemire, Dupré, and Bonnet. Most of these acquaintanceships have now happily entered into friendships, with the result that my visits to Paris, and especially my Sundays, are of the most interesting and intimate character.

On my last visit of a month, from which I have recently returned, I had the pleasure on my first Sunday of being seated with Dupré at the console at Notre Dame; and in the same way, on the following Sundays, of being with Widor at St. Sulpice, Gigout at St. Augustin, Dallier at the Madeleine, and Tournemire at St. Clotilde.

Some impressions of these visits may be of interest to other organists and lovers of the instrument. Let us commence with the organs. As most organists know, there are two instruments in all the Paris churches: the grand organ at the west end of the building, placed in a gallery above the main sanctuary, and the choir organ, a smaller instrument situated near the altar or chancel, for the accompaniment of the choir. There are, therefore, two organists, with entirely different duties, in each church. As an illustration of this, Dubois (now a delightful and very gracious old gentleman of eighty-two) told me a week or two ago, when talking of his experience as an organist, that he began his career as choirmaster and choir-organist under César Franck at St. Clotilde, Franck being organist at the grand organ. Later he was promoted to the Madeleine, where he acted in a similar capacity under Saint-Saëns. On the resignation of Saint-Saëns as organist, Dubois was promoted to his position, Fauré coming in as choir-organist; and on the resignation of Dubois, Fauré was promoted in the same manner. Truly a very interesting succession.

In speaking of Fauré one cannot help regretting that he has never written anything for the instrument played so long. His contributions to the literature of chamber music, and especially his songs, so characteristic, refined, and beautiful that something for the organ from the same pen would surely have been interesting and personal.

We have spoken of the two organs. The choir-organist accompanies the choir only, the organist at the grand organ playing the preludes, interludes, rotours, versets, and postludes. The two finest organs at Paris are unquestionably those at Notre Dame and St. Sulpice. Both are large, five-manual instruments, and represent the best work of the latest of French organ-builders, Cavaillé-Coll.

Of the two, I prefer that in Notre Dame, perhaps because of its better and more open position, and possibly also because of the noble building in which it stands. The flutes in these instruments are superb. The diapasons are good, but not distinguished, and do not compare with the best British work in the same line. They have not the body, the roundness, in a word, the 'foundation tone' that can be heard in any of our English Cathedrals, where the round, rolling tone of the diapasons is a characteristic feature. The solo reeds have character and quality, but the chorus reeds, unless very well tuned, are apt to be harsh and blatant, and these faults are very evident in the smaller instruments, where in the full organ the foundation tone is quite covered by the reeds.

Some years ago, when I first visited St. Sulpice with Widor, I was amazed to find four or five men installed behind the organ, for blowing purposes.

CHARLES-MARIE WIDOR

This old-fashioned method of 'raising the wind' actually still prevails at Notre Dame, at St. Sulpice, and at most of the other churches at Paris. Indeed, the only organ I saw this summer where mechanical blowing was used was at Guilmant's house at Meudon, where an electric motor is used. It was in the beautiful music-room of this house, where there is an excellent chamber organ by Cavaillé-Coll, that Dupré held his interesting organ class this summer.

The touch employed in the French organs is generally that of the Barker lever pneumatic, which is much liked, and seems to give general satisfaction. It will be remembered that Barker, who brought out his patent in England in 1839, was unable to get any of the British builders to take it up. Being unsuccessful here, he went over to Paris to interview Cavaillé-Coll. That eminent builder at once appreciated the value of the invention, with the result that it was immediately applied at the Madeleine, at St. Sulpice, and elsewhere. Indeed, it was only after Barker had made a success in France, had received a first-class medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1855, and the Cross of the Legion of Honour, that his ideas were taken up in England.

On the side of mechanical arrangement and convenience at the console, the French organs seem somewhat conservative and old-fashioned. At none of the large church organs known to me, do we find pistons or buttons giving stop combinations of any kind. As the pedals above the pedal-board, corresponding to our combination pedals, control only the coupling actions (manual to manual or manual to pedals), and rarely the registers, it will at once be realised that practically all the stop changes have to be made by hand. At the Trocadero concert-hall, at St. Augustin, St. Clotilde, St. Eustache, the Madeleine, and elsewhere, the draw-stop action is mechanical (not pneumatic). The stops require very vigorous handling, and seem to pull out about a foot! In all these organs, also, the draw-stop action is not, as with us, at an angle of forty-five degrees, but parallel with the keys—a very inconvenient arrangement. At Notre Dame and St. Sulpice, the stops are arranged in a curious semicircular fashion on either side of the player, in tiers, stepwise, one above the other.

NOTRE DAME, PARIS—ORGAN GALLERY

In all the Paris organs, the pedal-boards are straight (parallel) and flat, not concave and radiating.

Before leaving the subject of the Paris organs, I should like to mention a delightful little instrument which belonged to Marie-Antoinette, and formerly stood in the Palace at Versailles. It is now installed in a private chapel at St. Sulpice (the Chapelle des Etudiants), and was kindly shown to me by Widor on my last visit. This charming little organ, which has been kept in its original condition, has two manuals of four-and-a-quarter octaves, and an octave of pedals. The stops are all deliciously mellow in quality, the flutes especially being delightful. It is interesting to recall that, in all probability, both Gluck and Mozart played on this little instrument.

Now we come to the organ playing. Unfortunately I have never heard Saint-Saëns, Dubois, or Fauré as organists. Even at the time of my earliest acquaintance with them they had all retired from office at the Madeleine. From all accounts, Saint-Saëns was particularly excellent as an improviser, a side of his art in which he has always taken great pleasure. As a pianist, I have heard him frequently. Only last summer I heard him in a recital of his own compositions, when he took part in his Trio in F major (no trifle to play), accompanied some songs and played a pianoforte solo. It was an excellent performance, so clear and finished, and, for one of his years, quite exceptional. Speaking to him afterwards, I remarked on the performance, adding, that I thought it quite astonishing for an artist of his age—I could not bring myself to say 'for an old gentleman!' Quick as a flash he responded, 'Pas de tout, mon cher, you see I'm much too busy to get old.'

Of the older players, Gigout and Widor I have heard frequently.

On the death of Guilmant, in 1911, Gigout was appointed his successor as professor of organ at the Conservatoire. On Sundays he can be heard at St. Augustin, where he plays on a three-manual

ST. ETIENNE DU MONT, PARIS—THE ORGAN

organ by Cavallé-Coll. This instrument has specially good flutes, fair diapasons, but very harsh reeds.

Gigout is one of the most charming and courteous of men. He is a capital classic player, and has special readiness and pleasure in improvising the old modes. His gift in this direction has found expression in the two volumes of short pieces of the Gregorian tones, published by Leduc, and in a new volume shortly to be issued by Chester. Gigout is now a man of seventy-six, but he certainly does not look his age, and still less does his playing suggest the passage of years.

Widor has long been known as one of the most distinguished organists at Paris. As he was appointed organist at St. Sulpice in 1869, he has actually held this appointment for the long period of fifty-two years. The characteristic features of his playing are those which have found permanent expression in his organ symphonies—a fine type of virtuosity coupled to musicianship of the first order. His love of Bach is well-known. I have sat beside him at many services at St. Sulpice, when apart from improvisation, he has played only some work by the great Sebastian. His improvisations are almost invariably characteristic and original; his improvised postludes at the end of mass, on plainsong themes sung at the service, I have never heard surpassed.

Of the younger players at Paris, Vierne and Dupré are in my judgment easily the most distinguished. Since Vierne, whose splendid organ-music is known to every enterprising organist, is one of the finest players of the present day. A pupil of César Franck and Widor, he was appointed organist of Notre Dame in 1900. It is a thousand pities that this fine artist has for some years past been greatly handicapped by serious ill-health. A distressing and painful affection of the eyes has caused almost total blindness. Ordered to take a complete rest, he was granted two years' leave of absence from the Cathedral. During this period Marcel Dupré, who is a pupil of Guilmant, Widor, and Vierne, was appointed acting-organist. Vierne has now made some recovery, but is still so far from well that he is able to undertake only occasional services. His improvising, especially on the side of harmonic interest and variety, is pre-eminent, and rarely have I heard it equalled. Dupré, the youngest player in the group, is already well known in this country, having been heard in London and elsewhere during the past season. He is a brilliant player, with a clean, finished style, and an immense repertoire, including the complete organ works of Bach, which he played last year at Paris—from memory! But apart from the technical finish and certainty of his performance, one is ever conscious of his splendid musicianship (he won the Prix de Rome in 1914), a quality which also distinguishes his masterly and very original improvising.

I have left myself very little room to refer to any of the other younger players. Of those known to me the best are Tournemire, Jacob, and Bonnet. Tournemire, who is a successor of César Franck at St. Clotilde, is a specially good and very modern improviser. Jacob, who plays at St. Ferdinand-des-Matines, has very good technique, and excels in the playing of modern pieces. Bonnet, the organist of St. Eustache, is already well-known in this country and in America by his recital tours.

The French school, especially as represented by composers and performers like César Franck, Saint-Saëns, Widor, Guilmant, Vierne, Dupré, and others, has been and continues to be a refreshing source of interest and stimulus to all organists. Long may it flourish!

FATHER HOWE, AN OLD-TIME MAKER OF ORGANS

BY ANDREW FREEMAN

Most English organ-builders of the pre-Restoration period are little more than names to us, and some of them not even that: for in many instances we have the name of a craftsman but no record of the work he did or of the churches by whom he was employed, as also we have references to the skill and labour of others whose identity is concealed under the tantalising formula, 'paid the organ-maker his fee' or 'as his bill sheweth.' Had the early scribes taken the trouble to insert the names of these worthies with greater frequency there would have been fewer gaps in the history of English organ-builders and their works.

Even when we can credit the construction or repair of many instruments to one member of the craft, as is the case with the subject of this sketch, we find that we know little or nothing of his personality.

The reason is not far to seek. It is that for most of our knowledge of these men and their affairs we are dependent upon such records of ancient churches as have survived to our time. These are mainly Churchwardens' Accounts and Vestry Minutes, few of which are earlier than the 15th century. Some records are fuller than others, but all alike are sparing in the use of words. Only here and there do the account books enter into details. Of Articles of Agreement and of Accounts Rendered and Received, whose number was once legion, only a few have come down to us. These, where known, are rightly treasured: others, though few, remain to be discovered and made public.

Of John Howe, alias Father Howe, we can now say that he was not only perhaps the most considerable builder of his day, but also one of the outstanding figures in the history of his craft during the thousand years and more of its practice in this country.

He seems to have been one of a family of organ-makers, for at least three of the same name are known to have worked at their trade between 1485 and 1572, namely, John (Father) Howe himself, his son (Thomas?), and an earlier John Howe, who was quite possibly his father. For I take it that repairs executed at St. Mary-at-Hill in 1500, and at St. Stephen's Walbrook, in 1507, can hardly have been done by a man who was in active work in the 'sixties of the 16th century, and was alive as late as the year 1570. It is far more likely that these reparations were carried out by John Hewe,* who did work to the organ at the altar of the B.V.M. at York Minster in 1485.†

The fact that Father Howe himself repaired the York organ in 1531, and again in 1536—he is referred to as 'John How of London, organ-maker'—is itself suggestive of a possible close relationship between him and the earlier John Hewe.

At this point it may be said that the title 'Father' had nothing to do with his religious opinions. The fact that he was well-established in business some years before the dissolution of the monasteries renders it extremely improbable that he had ever been a monk. Moreover, he does not seem to have been called Father Howe till he was getting on in years.* The inference is that the appellation was bestowed upon him on account of his venerable appearance, possibly, too, because he inspired a feeling of friendliness and even of affection. He seems to have become somewhat of an institution towards the end of his life, for certain City churches continued to pay him for looking to their organs a few years longer than they would otherwise have done rather than deprive the old fellow of his job. At any rate, after his death, which seems to have occurred towards the middle of 1570,† the account books of several churches contain no further reference to organs, except perhaps to record their sale, while at least three churches (St. Andrew Hubbard, St. Alfege, London Wall, and St. Peter, West Cheap) pensioned him off at his full fee for the last two or three years of his life, after they had, apparently, given over using their instruments. In his old age his circumstances became much reduced, and he himself, as one churchwarden rather pathetically describes him, 'a very pore man.'

* I have met with no less than thirteen variants of the name Howe—How, Howwe, Hough, Hoowe, Howgh, Howge, Hugh, Hughe, Hew, Hewe, Hewes, Hoo, and Owe.

† Hopkins and Rimbault, 3rd ed., p. 49.

Though he is sometimes styled 'Mr.' or 'Master,' the frequent reference to him as 'the Goodman Howe' is convincing testimony that he was of humble social position. If, as I believe, the extract next given is in Howe's own hand, we have proof that he was able to read and write, though, to judge from the crabbed calligraphy and the queer spelling, his pen was not a very ready one. The extract referred to is a tuning contract, written in the account book itself, and dated 1534. (See reproduction on p. 635.) It is signed with a curious combination of a double Maltese cross and the name Hoo. The latter rather suggests that though he spelt his name 'Howe,' he pronounced it 'Hoo.' If so, this would account for most of the various forms of his patronymic:

Be it kne [known] to all men I Jhon Howe skensner of london haffe promeset ffor the tyrem of xx yere to kepe In tuene the organs off the parres off Sent tanderos [Saint Andrew] hupberds In estchep an ffor es payne to Reū xij*d*. by the yere to be payde the flurst payment at the ssumsschun off ore lade daye m v honder & xxxiiij.

John may have been a player as well as a maker of organs, for Mr. John E. West‡ includes him in his list of the Organists of Westminster Abbey, and says he was appointed in 1549. I feel sure, however, that if Father Howe ever played at the Abbey it must have been quite casually. His extensive business in London and the provinces precludes all possibility of his ever having been the regular organist.§

At one period of his career—apparently at the outset of it—he had a partner, John Clymmowe, who helped him to make and set up a new organ in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Coventry, in 1527. Nothing else seems to have come down to us concerning Clymmowe. Later on, Howe had the assistance of his son, who seems to have been named

Thomas.* If so, this son would in all probability have been the 'Thomas Howe, of London, organ maker, and servante w<sup>h</sup> docto<sup>r</sup> ffreer Docto<sup>r</sup> i phisycyk,' who was examined before Sir William Chester, Lord Mayor of London, on April 23, 1561 on suspicion of recusancy. It appears that Dr. Freer 'went oute of London The wednsdaye afor Easter daye laste paste And did ryde to m<sup>r</sup> Doct<sup>r</sup> Martyns house aboute vj myles from Buntingford and that Thomas Howe followed him 'on fote vpon good fridday and came vnto his said m<sup>r</sup> vpon Easter even.' The object of the excursion seems to have been to avoid the Easter Communion. At any rate this was the only fact of importance revealed at the examination, Howe admitting 'that he himselfe hath not received the comunyon sithe the quenes ma<sup>tie</sup> reigne nor his m<sup>r</sup> to his knowledge.' At Dr. Martyn and also at Ware, where, on their return journey they 'lay . . . at the signe of the Bulle,' they met or fell in with others, who, like themselves, probably held to the old faith: of these Thomas knew neither their names nor their business. As for his master the reason why he was not at home when the Lord Mayor sent for him was that he was staying at the house of 'Bushoppe Aclors the spanyshe bushopp and nowe ambasad<sup>or</sup> here.'†

In the tuning contract given above, John Howe calls himself 'skensner.' This, together with reference in the Accounts of St. Stephen Walbrook,‡ serves to show that he was a member of the Skinners' Company. At my request Mr. G. Kennedy, Beadle of the Company, was kind enough to make a careful search of their Records over considerable period. These are not quite complete for many pages are now missing, but they contain one reference which seems to belong to John Howe the organ-builder, and his son. It is from the 'Apprenticeship Book,' and is dated 1553:

Mem. that Thomas Howe the son of John Howe of london Skyenner hath put him selfe apprenytce to John Hallywell citizen and Skyenner of london from the fleaste of the Natyvitie of St. John Baptiste Anno Edwardi Sexti Septimo for Seven yeares.

There was no Organ-builders' Company, so that those members of the fraternity who wished to enjoy the privileges of Freeman of the City of London had to make their choice amongst the others. Thus the Howes became Skinners, as later on the Dallars became Blacksmiths, and Thomas Griffin a Barber Surgeon.

The following is a list of organs made, repaired or tuned by Father Howe during his long and busy life. The list is probably far from complete—indeed I have been able to make several additions to it during the past few months—but it serves to show both the amount and the extent of his work, while some items testify to the esteem in which he was held.

* St. Peter, Cornhill. 1548-49. Item, paid to the Goodman How and his sonne to sell the little orgaines, iij*s*.

† St. Michael, Cornhill. 1552. Itm. pd to Thomas Howe mendinge the Organes, iij*s*.

‡ 1554. Itm. paid to Thomas Howe for his yerles fee for mendinge of the Organes, iij*s*.

§ Itm. paid to Thomas Howe for mendinge of the greates orgayn and the small paire beinge broken, in the takinge downe, and remeuinge of them ij tymes . . . xxiij*s*.

Thomas may have been written in mistake for 'John,' but it quite likely that Thomas represented his father occasionally.

† S. P. Dom. Eliz., vol. xvi., No. 60.

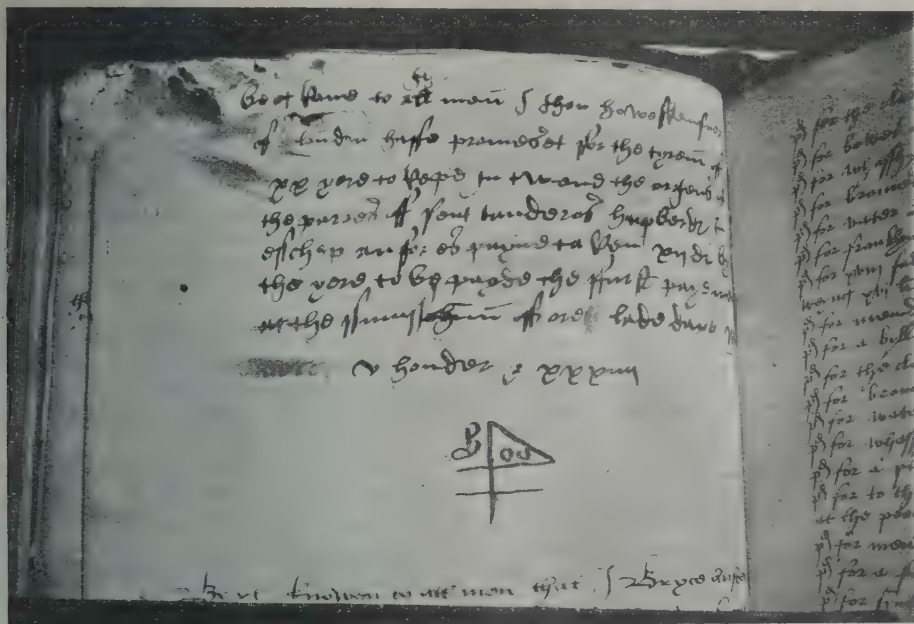

‡ 1548. Received of Master Howe Skinner for the orgayne pd weighing vj*l*.x*l*. [wt. ?] xiiij [lb. ?] at v*d* [per lb.] . . .

* I have not met with its use previous to 1558 (St. Alfege, London Wall). After that date it became pretty general.

† St. Andrew Hubbard. 1568-70, paid to father Howe for anewetie 2 years, iij*s*. 1570-72, paid to housewife [Howe's wife] for 1 qters. fee for the organs, v*d*.

‡ Cathedral Organists, 1899, p. 112.

§ The last of twelve references to Howe in the accounts of St. Mary Woolchurch Haw, runs thus: '1570-71. paid to father Howe somtyme organ player for his fee, xij*d*.' Here I am convinced the word player has been erroneously substituted for maker. All the other entries refer to him as maker and repairer.

For further information about the organs in the churches marked * the reader is referred to an article by the writer entitled 'Records of British Organ-Builders,' in the second issue of 'The Dictionary of Organs and Organists.*' The 'extracts' given below have in all cases been taken direct from original documents. So far as my knowledge goes, only one of them has appeared in print before, that one (St. Mary Woolnoth, under date 1561-62) here given in corrected form :

Coventry—Holy Trinity Church, 1526-27.

New organ with seven stops, built in conjunction with John Clymmowe, cost £30.

London.—St. Mary Magdalen, Milk Street c. 1528-70.

1528. pd to John Hoowe the iiijth day of Aprell ffor mendyng and tuneng of oure organs, sm vjs. viiiij<sup>d</sup>.

1537. payd to hew orgynmaker for his flee, xij<sup>d</sup>.

From 1537 to 1568-69 John Howe's name occurs almost every year, the most interesting entries being :

1543-44. pd to John howe ffor hys flee lokyng vnto the horgans, xij<sup>d</sup>.

pd ffor iiij skyns of lether for to mend the bellos, xvij<sup>d</sup>.

pd for iij belloswayts of yeren for the bellos, xij<sup>d</sup>.

pd for A ponde of glew iij<sup>d</sup>. and for naylls j<sup>d</sup>.—iiiij<sup>d</sup>.

pd ffor worke man & hype [= helpe] for letheryng of the bellos, xvij<sup>d</sup>.

1547-48. Payd for takyng downe the organs to the organ maker & for setting of them vp a gayne wher they be in the chapple, vjs. viiiij<sup>d</sup>.

1551-52. Item pd to howe the organ maker for an annite of old tyme graunted hym & allowed by the parysh, sm xij<sup>d</sup>.

1564-65. pd to John owe orgayn maker ffor toweres yeres at or ladye daye 1565, ijs.

1567-68. pd to father howe the orgayn maker for hys fee, xij<sup>d</sup>.

The last item is repeated in 1568-69, and thereafter the only mention of the organ is in 1576, when we are told that it was sold to a Mr. Skynner for 50s.

*3. York Minster, 1531 and 1536.

Tuned and repaired.

4. London—St. Andrew Hubbard, 1534-71.

There was an organ here in 1459, if not earlier. John Howe's connection with this church began in 1534 (perhaps before), and lasted till his death. Most of the repairs he effected were inexpensive, but in 1558 he was paid lijs. iiij<sup>d</sup>. 'for mendyng of the orgayns,' which was of course a considerable sum of money. His tuning contract has already been given, also the last two references to him.

*5. London—St. Mary-at-Hill, 1535-59.

Two organs repaired at various times, also the regals.

6. London—St. Alfege, London Wall, 1537-71.

This church contained an organ before 1527, but no organ-maker's name is given till 1537-38, when 'the Goodman howe' received xij<sup>d</sup>. 'at christmasse' for his fee. In 1555-56 he was paid vs. viiiij<sup>d</sup>. 'for ys flee & takyng down y<sup>e</sup> horgans,' and in 1559-60 (when the rood loft was pulled down) a further sum of viijs. was given him 'for Takyng downe of the orgenes and mendyng of the pypes and for setting of theme in ther place.'

A rather pathetic reference in 1565-66—'pd to Goodman How orgynmaker for his yere fee being a Very poreman xij<sup>d</sup>.'—bears out what was said above of his social position and the kindly feeling which the authorities of several city churches entertained for him in his old age. His full fee was paid to him for five more years (in 1566-67 'at the Requeste of the p[ar]ishe'), the last entry being in 1570-71—'payd to ffather howe ffor the horgons, xij<sup>d</sup>.'

*7. London—St. Mary Woolnoth, 1539-71.

In this instance Howe was in charge of the organ in 1539 (when the earliest accounts start) till the year of his death. At first his fee was iiijja. a year, but from 1555-56 onwards it was increased to xij<sup>d</sup>. The following are some of the many references to Howe and his work here :

1540-41. 'Itm paid for mendyng of the bellows of the organs, iiij<sup>d</sup>.'

1541-42. 'Item paid to howe the organ maker for mendyng of oon of the bellowses of the organs, viij*l*.'

'Item paid to howe the Organ maker for mendyng the orgas, vijs.'

1559-60. 'Item payed to howe the Organmaker the iijth of Aprill for mendinge and sawderinge the Organ-pipes and Letters, xv*l*.'

'Item payed to howe the organmaker the xvth daye of September 1560 for viij springes for the basys, viij*l*.'

1561-62. 'Item paid to John Howe organ maker for skoring [not "flowring," i.e., decorating, but "skoring," i.e., cleaning] of the organ pypes and mending some of them, iij*l*.'

1563-64. 'Item paide to goodman howe the Organ maker the last day of January 1563 for ij sprynges for the base pypes of the Organs, v*l*.'

1570-71. 'Item paide to John Howe Organ-maker for his fee for one hole yere lokinge to the Orgaynes endinge at the feast of Saint Michell tharchell last paste 1571, xij*l*.'

(This is the last reference to the organs for about a century with one exception, the mention of a 'pewe made where thorgaynes did stand.')

*8. Westminster—St. Martin-in-the-Fields, 1542-69.

Howe probably built the organ which was set up here in 1538 at a cost of v*l*. xiijs. iij*l*. He certainly had charge of it from 1542 till 1569. The instrument seems to have remained in the church till 1637, when the case was utilised to contain a new organ. Old case and new organ alike disappeared during the Commonwealth.

*9. Blechingley Church, Surrey, 1545-c. 1552. Repairs.

10. London—St. Benet, Gracechurch, 1548-70.

This is another church where John Howe is found in charge of the organ when the Parish Accounts commence. The most interesting of the many references here follow:

1549-50. 'Item paid to the forsaid John Hough, for the new making of vj organ pypes whiche were broken at the pulling downe of the high alter that is to say for v lib. of mettall at v*l*. the lib, ijs. v*l*.; for the sowder, x*l*.; for the workmanship for iij dayes, iiij*l*.; summa viijs.'

'Item paid to the forsaid John Hough for ye moving of the organs to the place where they now stand, viij*l*.'

1550-51. 'Imprimis paid to John Howe for mending of Ten pypes and other falts that the Rats had eaten in our organs and for candell and coles, xs. iij*l*.'

1554-55. 'Item payd to the saide J. howge for the new mending and reparyng of the organs xiijs. iij*l*.'

1561-62. 'It. pd more to him (Hugh) for mendinge the organs as foloweth: pd for tinne and soder for to make a newe pype for the organs, v*l*.'

'It. pd for latten wier to make springs for the ij bases iij*l*.'

'It pd for lether and glewe i*l*.'

'It pd to him for workemanshippe of the same v*l*.'

1565-66. 'paide more to flather howe flor mendinge the organs, vjs. v*l*.'

1567-68. 'Item Recevued of mr baker ffor thorgans 30*l*.'

[Though the organ was sold, Father Howe continued to receive his wages, xij*l*. per annum, till Lady Day, 1570.]

*11. London—St. Michael, Cornhill, 1548-60.

Repairs to both pairs of organs, one 'greate' and the other 'smalle,' at various times. The only Christian name that appears (it is given thrice in some ten or twelve entries) is Thomas.

*12. London—St. Peter, Cornhill, 1548-49. Repairs.

*13. London—St. Stephen Walbrook, 1548.

'Master Howe Skinner' seems to have bought the organ pipes of the organ here as so much old lead.

*14. Wandsworth Parish Church (All Saints), 1540-65. Repairs.

15. London—St. Botolph, Aldersgate, 1550-71.

Howe had charge of the organ from 1550—perhaps a year or two earlier—till his death. (iij*l*. was paid for 'takinge doune the Orgaynes' in 1570-71.)

The chief items are iiij*l*. iij*l*. for 'mending' it in 1550-51; the same amount 'for takinge out the Sounde borde of thargans & mending of it, & for trymmyng the organs at sondry other tymes in 1553-54; and xv*l*. 'to John Howe for a principall pype' in 1566-67.

*16. London—St. Dionis Backchurch, 1551. Organs tuned.

17. London—St. Matthew, Friday Street, 1552-71.

The items include iij*l*. iij*l*. 'to y<sup>e</sup> goddmar howe for mendyng of the orgaynes' in 1552-53; ijs. 'to the goodman howe for mendyng of the orgyns and y<sup>e</sup> he shall have no more' in 1554-55; viij*l*. 'pd more to John how for mendyng the organpypes' in 1556-57; and ijs. v*l*. 'payd to the goodman clarke for helpyng to sell the organes in 1572-73—not long after John's death. The organ realised iij*l*.

18. Westminster—St. Clement Danes, Strand, 1554-69.

We find John Howe in charge when the accounts start. In 1556-58 he is paid xij*l*. 'for sodring iij pypes'; in 1558-59 ix*l*. 'for Repacon at dyv*s* tymes doon to the organs as appereth by bill'; and in 1559-60 a further ijs. 'for mending the organs & for latten wyre to the springs of the same.' In 1570-71 xvij*l*. is 'payd to a brycklea for mendyng the place where the Orgaines Stowd.

*19. London. St. Peter, West Cheap, 1556-71.

The following entries have not previously been made public, to my knowledge:

1557-58. 'Item payde to howe for mendyng the organs and for brasse for the two regalls, x*l*.'

'Item payde more to the same howe for two skynnes for the bellowses and the sounde bo'de and for latten wyer for the spryngs bases & pryncypall & for sowdryng vj smalle pypes and for worke manshipp of the bellowses, ijs. viij*l*.'

'Item to howe for brasse for the regalls, x*l*.'

'Item more to hym for latten wyer for viij gret bases, v*l*.'

'Item more for lether & glewe for the sound bourde, i*l*.'

1558-59. 'Item to the goodman howe and to nother man that was wth him for mendyng the organs, iij*l*. iij*l*.'

1559-60. 'Item paid vnto John Howe organ maker fo<sup>r</sup> Laten wyer for makynge eight Spryng for the greate Bases and for Bras to tonge the stopes of the Regolls.'

'Item paid to How fo<sup>r</sup> mendinge the Organes ijs. viij*l*.'

1568-69. 'paide to father howe of charytie thi yerd, ijs.' (The last entry is repeated in 1569-70 and 1570-71, but the amount is increased to iij*l*. in each instance. Thereafter there is no more mention of either Howe or organs.)

*20. Westminster Abbey, c. 1558.

Repairing and tuning the organs in the quire and in Henry VII.'s Chapel.

*21. Sheffield Parish Church, 1560.

(Continued on page 641.)

ADAPTED TO THE WAR HYMN-ANTHEM "SAVE THEM, O LORD.*

Words by ISAAC WATTS.

Music by FERRIS TOZER, Mus. D., Oxon.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Adagio.

SOPRANO. mf Je - sus shall reign wher - e'er the sun f Doth his suc - ces - sive rit.

ALTO. mf Je - sus shall reign wher - e'er the sun . . . Doth his suc - ces - sive f rit.

TENOR. mf Je - sus shall reign wher - e'er the sun . . . Doth his suc - ces - sive f rit.

BASS. mf Je - sus shall reign wher - e'er the sun . . . Doth his suc - ces - sive f rit.

ORGAN. mf Adagio. ♩ = 54. f rit.

ff a tempo. f mf

jour - neys run; His king-dom stretch from shore . . . to shore,

ff a tempo. f mf

jour - neys run; His king-dom stretch from shore to shore, Till

ff a tempo. f mf

jour - neys run; His kingdom stretch from shore . . . to shore, . . . Till

ff a tempo. f mf

jour - neys run; . . . His king-dom stretch from shore to shore, Till Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

* Words by Florence Tozer.

SOPRANO SOLO (OR ALL THE SOPRANOS)

mf

Till moons shall wax . . . and wane no more. Peo - ple and realms of moons . . shall wax . . and . . wane no more.
 moons . . shall wax . . and . . wane no more.
 moons shall wax and . . wane no more.

p legato.

rit. a tempo.

ev - 'ry tongue Dwell on His love with sweet - est song,

rit. a tempo.

And in-fant voi - ces shall pro-claim Their ear - ly bless - ings on His Name.

mf rit. a tempo. f

- cu - liar hon - ours to . . our King; An - gels descend with

mf rit. a tempo. f

- cu - liar hon - ours to . . our King; An - gels descend with

mf rit. a tempo. f

- cu - liar hon - ours to . . our King; An - gels de - scend with

mf rit. a tempo. f

- cu - liar hon - ours to . . our King; . . An - gels descend with mf f rit. a tempo. f

rit.

songs . . again, And earth . . re - peat . . the loud A - men.

rit.

songs a - gain, And earth . . re - peat the loud A - men.

rit.

songs . . a - gain, . . And earth . . re - peat the . . loud A - men.

rit.

songs a - gain, And earth re - - peat the loud A - men, > > >

rit.

Poco meno mosso.

rall.

An - gels descend with songs again, And earth . . re - peat . . the loud A - men.

rall.

An - gels descend with songs a - gain, And earth . . re - peat . . the loud A - men.

rall.

An - gels de - scend . . with songs a - gain, And earth . . re - peat . . the loud A - men.

rall.

An - gels descend with songs a - gain, And earth . . re - peat . . the loud A - men.

Poco meno mosso.

rall.

(Continued from page 636.)

22. London—St. Mary Woolchurch Haw, 1560 till 1571.
‘John Howe, Organmake’ was in charge of the organs here in 1560 when the Churchwardens’ Accounts commence, and he continued to look after them till his death. The last entry, in 1570-71, refers to him as ‘sometyme organ player,’ but this is an obvious slip. The fee, xij*d.*, is that of a tuner, not that of a player. The only other entry of interest runs thus:
1564-65. ‘paid more to ffather howe ffor mending the horgans as doth apere by hys byll, iijs. iiij*d.*’
- *23. London—St. Helen, Bishopsgate, 1564.
Organ ‘kept’ by Father Howe.
- *24. Lambeth—St. Mary’s Parish Church, 1567-68.
Organ ‘kept’ and repaired by Father Howe. It was probably in his charge for several years before and after this date, but no name is given in his period.
- *25. London—St. Mary the Virgin, Aldermanbury, 1570.
Repairs in 1570, the date when the Wardens’ Accounts begin.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

DIPLOMA DISTRIBUTION

On Saturday, July 23, Dr. Charles Macpherson, president of the College, presented the diplomas to the recently-elected Fellows and Associates. Amongst those present were the following members of the Council: Sir Ivor Atkins, Mr. H. L. Balfour, Mr. E. T. Cook, Dr. Alan Gray, Mr. A. Eaglefield Hull, Dr. J. F. Read, Dr. F. G. Shinn, Mr. H. W. Richards, and Dr. H. A. Harding (hon. secretary). Dr. Harding opened the proceedings by announcing that for the Fellowship examination 60 candidates entered and 12 passed, and for the Associateship 143 entered and 12 passed. The Fellowship Lafontaine Prize had been awarded to Mr. T. B. Sprinck, and the Fellowship Turpin Prize to Mr. R. D. Fisher. The Lafontaine Prize for the Associateship had been awarded to Miss M. T. Renton, and the Sawyer Prize to Mr. R. K. Hardy.

The president, after distributing the diplomas, referred to the recipient of the Turpin Prize, and said that for three years Mr. Fisher was in the trenches on active service, and spent nearly all his spare time working at harmony and counterpoint, and so kept his musical faculty alive, and as a mental exercise he had written out all the music he had ever learnt. Mr. Fisher had done well to get this prize, and was heartily to be congratulated upon receiving his Fellowship diploma.

REPORTS OF EXAMINERS

Dr. Harding read the following reports:

FELLOWSHIP ORGAN EXAMINATION

The performance of the pieces was marred by a great deal of timid, rhythmless playing, which showed neither long purpose nor authority. These failings were due to the following faults: Making rallentandos before they were called for, time changes out of all relation to the context, and the inability to ‘carry on’ generally. Very few candidates noted the specific directions to avoid the use of Great and Swell reeds in Dr. Vaughan Williams’ pieces, and missed the opportunity for producing a rather unusual blue-colour, and one peculiarly in sympathy with the mood of the pieces.

The standard of the sight-reading and extemporization is lower than that of the other tests. In sight-reading candidates were unable to apply an accidental even to the very next chord to that wherein it occurred, certainly not more than one in ten playing F double-sharp in the second ord in bar 4.

The harmony used by most of the candidates in their extemporization showed that their studies in chord progression necessary for the theoretical side of the examination were not applied in a practical way, also that their taste in harmony was of a poor, not to say, vulgar order, many of the progressions being borrowed from the weakest class of Church music.

The timidity referred to led many candidates to play their tests considerably slower than the metronomic rate indicated. Any candidate doing this caricatures the music and seriously jeopardises his chances of success.

W. G. ALCOCK.
EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW.
ALAN GRAY.

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK EXAMINATION

Harmonisation of the Melody.—On the whole there was more grasp of the right style for strings.

Ground Bass.—There was a great want of variety not only in the harmony, but also in the rhythm of the upper parts. Candidates should study Bach and Rheinberger in this connection.

Ear-Tests.—There were several absolutely accurate answers, but there was a general failure to seize the rhythm of the test.

Counterpoint.—Marks were lost through a tendency to ignore syncopation in the florid species. It is a valuable feature in the matter of variety.

Modern Counterpoint.—Some good and interesting effects were obtained by imitations on the initial figure of the given theme.

Fugue.—Many of the candidates failed to realise the main principle that the Tonic key in the subject should be answered by the Dominant key, and vice versa. The part-writing at the fourth entry was invariably weak.

WALTER PARRATT.
J. F. BRIDGE.
F. J. READ.

ASSOCIATE ORGAN-PLAYING EXAMINATION

The playing of the selected piece attained to the usual level, but mechanical proficiency was more evident, in many instances, than intelligent interpretation.

The examiners were much disappointed that their criticisms—which have been so often repeated—as to the proper preparation of the tests, were apparently ignored. Those candidates who had worked at the tests gained their reward.

It must be remembered that the organ piece is only a part of the examination; the other tests are very necessary in an organist’s equipment, and the examiners look for a correct and musical performance of them. They do not expect to be obliged to listen to bad mistakes of a most elementary character in an examination such as the Associateship of this College.

E. T. SWEETING.
H. L. BALFOUR.
H. W. RICHARDS.

ASSOCIATE PAPER-WORK EXAMINATION

Counterpoint.—There were many instances in which the counterpoint was not well done even where the other papers of the same candidates were satisfactorily worked.

In the exercise in C minor, the minor key was sometimes only established at the final cadence, the leading-note (B natural) appearing there for the first and last time. The rhythm of the florid parts in both exercises was often uninteresting, and showed poverty of resource. There were frequently too many crotchets and sometimes not a single suspension. The melodies were often crude and angular, and possessed very little of that smoothly-flowing vocal idiom which is characteristic of strict counterpoint whatever school of thought a candidate may favour. The harmonic basis in the form of arpeggios was occasionally thrown too much into evidence in the melody by the presence of awkward leaps, and the selection of chords was frequently unsatisfactory.

Melody (to be harmonized for the organ).—Many examples were in good organ style, exhibited musicianly treatment, and revealed the possession of genuine musical feeling.

Figured Bass.—Occasionally the unessential notes were difficult to find, and figures obviously intended to imply suspensions were interpreted as accented auxiliary notes. The figuring of some of the suspensions was also occasionally misunderstood, and incorrect notes included in the harmony.

Modulation (three-part harmony).—This was rarely done really well. The modulation to the new key was frequently forced and clumsy. There were very few who seemed able to approach it with suitable chords in a musicianly manner.

Fugue and Ear-Test.—The answers to the fugue subject and the adding of a counter-subject were generally well done, as was also the ear-test, except for a few hopelessly bad examples.

Questions.—The first and most important condition for the successful answering of a question is to ascertain exactly what is asked. Marks were frequently lost because candidates missed the real point of some of the questions, and wrote much about matters that were irrelevant. Many answers to the question dealing with transposing instruments revealed very loose and inexact reading of the question, while in the question on tonality one candidate wrote a long and quite interesting essay upon tone-colour.

T. KEIGHLEY.

S. MARCHANT.

F. G. SHINN.

Dr. HARDING said that this concluded the business part of the meeting, and that he hoped the president would have something to say to those present.

Dr. CHARLES MACPHERSON; On the last occasion when I had the honour of addressing you, we considered some of the questions relating to the specialised activities of our Institution. We saw how much of the value of the work peculiar to the Royal College of Organists was dependent upon the ability of the examiners to criticise the practical and theoretical attainments of those who presented themselves for examination. On this occasion, therefore, it may not be out of place to say a few words about musical criticism as exercised by musicians in general, both towards music and its performance and towards fellow-musicians. By the term 'music' we mean the plain impersonal one—music before it comes fully to life at the bidding of something personal, that is, a performer. It is often necessary to keep before us this impersonal side of our art, for we often hear such a remark as 'What a splendid performer,' which remark, though perhaps perfectly true, may have been made by one who entirely overlooked the fact that possibly the actual music was exceedingly poor. This shows that the act of criticising any performed music is, in the main, two-fold, applied firstly to the music itself, and secondly to its exposition by performers. It is the balancing of this two-fold act which makes criticism valuable, and it remains valuable just in proportion as the two-fold act remains balanced. Why do we pity those who go into raptures over some absurdly futile drawing-room ballad which has received a rendering far better than it deserves from a singer who is perhaps capable of much better things? Simply because we know that they judge only the performer and the performance, and do not care two straws as to whether the music itself is good or not. That is a dangerous class of critic, though not so dangerous as the type which also accepts the music as being all it should be. The sad part of it all is this: that many of those who exercise their power of criticism in music do so in a manner that they would not adopt towards any of the sister arts. If you were invited to dine at the house of one of these worshippers at the shrine of triviality, you would certainly be surprised if you found the dining-room walls hung with cheap German oleographs; or the hostess decorated with curl-papers; or the host arrayed in his dressing-gown. You would rather, in the majority of cases, find everything just as you would expect in an ordinary well-conducted household, except, perhaps, in the drawing-room. Here, instead of finding music worthy of the name, you would see the usual selection of dog-eared editions of popular songs and ballads, and a cheap volume or two of the latest craze in dance music. Well, this kind of thing gives a sinking sensation to any serious-minded musician who is inclined to ask himself, 'Is the game worth the candle?' At the same time he will probably examine some of the reasons for this state of things. He will, perhaps, come to the conclusion—a pretty safe one—that all criticism and opinion is the outcome of experience, and is biased by what has been seen or heard, or suffered or enjoyed, either by ourselves or by those with whom we have been associated. Perhaps the strongest opinions are those emanating from personal experience and observation, modified or corrected when compared with the wider experience of others; they are far superior to the opinions which are affected by those tame persons who exist entirely on other people's conclusions. This predigested food—requiring no mental mastication—is a real source of danger to unwary musicians in general, and perhaps to young students in particular who will in due course have an attack of musical indigestion. Opinions and criticisms are so often read in books and newspapers by people who are mentally too lethargic to find out the reason for a statement. Those of us who try to teach such a thing as harmony, for instance, know this only too well. A student will possibly know every rule in the book, and yet remain quite incapable of putting the simplest rule into practice. Why is this? Simply because he has never thought of finding out the reason for the rule. When once the reason has been found he need no longer bother much about the rule itself. This, however, is easier to urge theoretically than to carry out practically, for there is no doubt that the gift for finding out reasons for anything is a comparatively late-comer in our series of experiences. Then again, it must be admitted that there are certain rules for which there is no satisfactory reason except that breaking them sounds bad in the majority of cases. So long as they hold good in the majority of cases, by all means let them stand. But if actual practice should ever show that there is a majority of cases where a rule does not hold good, then that rule should be altered. For example, the prohibition of the use of consecutive perfect fifths will some day require to be modified if actual practice shows that the number of good sounding consecutives exceeds the number of the old 'impossibles.' But that by the way. People are very apt to take things for granted, until it comes as a shock when they are asked by children a long list of questions which they themselves have asked in childhood, and to which they have never yet had a satisfactory answer. The question I heard asked by a child the other day at the seaside, when the tide was out, 'Mother, why is there no water?' is the kind that deserve an answer then and there—if the parent is capable. But a child takes a doll to pieces in order to find out how the eyes open and shut, it is a question whether the parent or the child should be smacked. If the parent has refused to give a sufficient, or, at least, a diplomatic reason for the phenomenon, then the child should go scot-free. In the first of these two cases, if the child were told that the tide was out, he would not be a properly-constituted young human being if he did not immediately ask, 'Why is the tide out?' If he once knew the answer to this latter—but by no means the last—question, he would no longer be bothered by the fact that there was no water. Nor is the student in music bothered who knows the reason—or, at least, the necessity—for a rule; he is in a better state of knowledge than one who knows it merely by heart, and is in a much better position to give an opinion on anything connected with it. He is able to adopt a considered critical attitude in the matter. Probably most of you have, during a holiday in a very remote part, come across some local 'worthy' with whom you have lightly entered into conversation—perhaps a Scottish shepherd on a mountain-side, who has only his dog as a companion for the greater part of the week. In nine cases out of ten you will sooner or later become aware of the fact that here you have a man who is accustomed to think about things in his own individual way, and is able to give you his reasons for arriving at some sage conclusion, which at first sight you would not have thought him capable. The outcome is humiliating and instructive; you realise more than ever that the proper power of criticising is largely, if not entirely, the result of our personal thought and experience. And this being the case, it becomes evident that as no two people will criticise in precise the same manner, for no two people have ever had precisely the same experiences, there may be a general consensus of opinion but disagreement as to detail. Two persons may find that they both admire, say, the C minor symphony; they may also discover that they both admire one of the movements more than the others, yet in spite of this they will perhaps almost come to blows over some point in that movement. One will say that it is 'the most striking feature in the movement,' while the other will declare that 'Beethoven would not have written it like that if he had lived now.' From what has been said we may consider that, at best, a critical attitude is dependent upon the individual outlook at the moment of presentation. This colours everything which comes under our notice, and it is constantly changing with fresh experience. The more experience we have, the more does our outlook change. It would take too long to enumerate all the musical heroes who have in turn helped to form my own musical experience; but I may say that, being a 'whole-hogger,' when any new composer sailed into my life the others were apt to be almost forgotten for the time being. This may or may not have been a mistake, but I am quite sure that when I was obsessed by any particular composer I became an intolerable nuisance to my relations and friends. Sanity was kind, however, and usually came to my aid to the rescue and mercifully prevented me from becoming one of those odd people who study only one composer's works, or only one school of composers, to the extent of denying merit in any other school of thought. Of course there is no harm in this specialising, provided that the specialiser does not air his views on subjects of which he has made no study, or in which he cannot possibly have the necessary breadth of outlook. Experience is the sum-total of countless incidents, some childish, others trivial; the childish ones will nearly always be sincere, while this is not true with the trivial. But it is just the apparently unimportant incidents that go to the making of our experience and our general outlook; and it is the proper application of this experience that counts in matters requiring criticism or judgment. On a recent occasion a well-known organist gave a recital from memory. In the middle of one piece his memory failed, but instead of stopping he played a practically improvised Coda. Two or three people mentioned the lapse of the mental lapse, but only one said anything about it: an extemporised conclusion. Personally I feel that the latter man used the better judgment, because he had asked himself whether he could have done the same thing. This is only mentioned in order to show how it is that two people perfectly capable of understanding the situation can each take a different view and give an outsider two perfectly different impressions of the same performance. Such a case like this makes us wonder whether it is possible for any two people to judge a performance in the same way. A conductor, for example, will sometimes listen to another conductor's reading of a work with the main purpose of finding where his own reading differs. If he is a wise man he will learn where his own can be improved. A student will probably listen to the same work with the intention of finding something to his technical knowledge; an ordinary concert-goer will possibly revel in the mere variety of sound regardless of the value of the composition; an experienced musician may be tempted to see whether the performance fits in with his preconceived notion of what should or should not be, and will, in some cases, readily condemn anything he does not like, especially if the performance is that of a work that he does not yet understand. A cultured listener will care little for anything that is not sincere, and will at the same time make due allowance for anything that is beyond his grasp if he thinks that it is the product of sincerity. In other branches of art, so music can be quite sincere on subjects which really do not count for much in the solution of the human race, but a person whose artistic intuition does not reach beyond some symphonic-poem entitled, let us say, 'The dying mosquito's last prayer,' will not be a reliable guide to those who are seeking to find expression in music of the deepest things in life. At the same time we ought not to deny to such music the right to exist, so long as it bears the hall-mark of sincerity. In judging the performances of others we should judge not only the result, but should try to get behind the result in order to find out the cause of the result. We may at this point ask what constitutes a good performance. It can be tersely described as getting the right notes at an inevitable moment with the right quality and quantity of sound. There must be a logical balance both temperamental and mechanical from the beginning of the first sound to the end of the last. A performer who has rightly gauged the expressive and technical demands of a composition is more likely to give a well-balanced performance than one who has made no such personal effort, but is content to do the same things in the same way as Mr. So-and-So does them. This servile imitation is the enemy of all individuality both in the performance and composition of music. The other extreme, of doing something that no one else has done before, is equally dangerous if it is undertaken merely with this object in view. It is somewhere between these two poles that our reasoning observation and deduction should reside, together with the gift of turning our power of criticism towards either direction. In this way only will critical equilibrium be maintained. With regard to our critical attitude towards other musicians in general, it seems safe to assume that the wider our experience the more generous will be our judgment, even though that experience may have been won from things a good deal less pleasant than music. In these days, when each new experiment in music is hailed with intoxicating satisfaction by certain admirers as being 'the' thing, and everything that has gone before is simply a 'back-number,' it is just as well quietly to remember that, unless this new thing has grown out of the old, it is an exotic, and as such will have a pretty precarious existence. If on the other hand it has grown out of the old, it is really playing the game to call all other music 'back-numbers'? And what about the composers of these back numbers? It is unfortunately the fashion in certain quarters to disparage the works of composers whose chief fault was that they were not acquainted with modern methods, but who, nevertheless, in their day made the most of the resources at their command. The obvious fact that it is upon the foundations laid by past composers that the present musical fabric rests, is selfishly and ungenerously overlooked. On the other hand those who have passed through considerable musical experience should always try to be sympathetic towards a younger generation which is trying, generally honestly, to develop what has gone before. The 'superior attitude' is not less offensive in music than it is in other human affairs. To come nearer home. Many younger musicians—especially composers perhaps—are apt to forget the efforts of a few British composers who, in mid and late Victorian times, used all their power in trying to regain some of the lost lustre of British composition. The position of young composers to-day would be very different but for the work of these untiring and by no means pampered pioneers. It is impossible to over-estimate what Britain owes to their high aims and proud achievements. Let honour be given where honour is due. Although this personal factor is always present both in composition and performance, our critical attitude towards the resultant music should be entirely free from anything which does not make straight for the motive at the back of the music. Anything which is not clearly connected with this motive should be swept aside as an obstruction. A short time ago I was riding on the top of a motor omnibus in a very beautiful part of Kent. It would have been perfect but for the overhanging branches of trees which were a constant nuisance, not only obliterating objects that I wanted to see, but rendering the passengers liable to sudden decapitation. After I had been hit on the head for about the twentieth time I came to the conclusion that as a means of locomotion the aeroplane had certain advantages. It would be a little far-fetched to apply this little experience in the form of a direct simile, as there is no doubt that for nervous old ladies the motor omnibus is still a better mode of travel than the aeroplane; but for all that, the underlying inference may not be altogether without merit as an object-lesson, and it is this: that in all matters requiring critical powers we should try to rise to a height where the vision is not obstructed by branches of the trees of prejudice, jealousy, or ignorance, for in this way only will it be possible to arrive at a judgment which will be both worthy of ourselves, and, better still, helpful to others.

Dr. HARDING: I am sorry to do anything to take your minds off the very admirable address by our president, but we have a letter from Mr. Cart de Lafontaine. You know how very grateful we are to him for the continuance of his handsome prizes. He writes from the South of France: 'I am too far away to be with you on Saturday, but my thoughts will be with you all.' I am sure we all regret that Mr. Cart de Lafontaine is not able to give us his presence on this occasion.

Dr. H. W. RICHARDS: I wish to propose a vote of thanks to our president, Dr. Macpherson. We have had his valuable services for a year as president, and we now know that whether he presides at these diploma distributions and gives us delightful addresses, or whether he presides at his beautiful organ, or whether he presides over a body of very sensitive musicians in the Council, we know that he does all these things with distinguished success and conspicuous ability. We are all proud to have him as president to rule over us, for his rule is full of tact and kindness, and he is absolutely impartial. In all he says and does he has one object in view, and that is to further the excellent objects of this College. I am glad to have this opportunity for expressing our warmest thanks to him on your behalf and on behalf of the members of the Council. I beg to propose the vote of thanks, and I know it will meet with the very warmest support.

The proposition was received with hearty acclamation.

The PRESIDENT: I am very much obliged to you for the way in which you have received this proposal, and to Dr. Richards for all the untruths he has so nicely spoken! Personally, I feel I ought to apologise for having given you a rather dull address, and I thank you for listening to it so attentively.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

The fifty-seventh Annual General Meeting was held at the College, Kensington Gore, on Saturday, July 23, 1921, under the chairmanship of the president, Dr. Charles Macpherson. Amongst the members present were Sir Ivor Atkins, H. J. Austin, H. L. Balfour, M. C. Boyle, B. Brymer, E. T. Cook, E. M. Dent, E. Douglas-Smith, Miss V. B. Emerton, R. D. Fisher, Miss F. J. Fitch, Rear-Admiral M. Fitz-Maurice, F. R. Frye, Dr. A. Gray, Dr. H. A. Harding (hon. secretary), R. K. Hardy, Miss K. E. Hicks, Herbert Hodge, E. Huddy, E. J. Hughes, Dr. A. Eaglefield Hull, W. J. Kipps, F. Laloux, Mrs. Mary Layton, G. Leake, W. Lovelock, Dr. S. R. Marchant, B. J. Maslen, W. Mallinson, D. McIntyre, C. E. Miller, B. J. Orsman, Dr. W. J. Phillips, Miss M. T. Renton, G. Sampson, E. Smith, Miss Cholditch Smith, D. B. Sprinck, A. E. Temple, and Miss L. R. Trott.

The minutes of the last Annual General Meeting were read and confirmed.

Voting papers for the election of two London members of the Council were distributed to those members of the College who had not voted by post.

Dr. Harding proposed that Rear-Admiral Fitz-Maurice and Mr. G. Leake should be scrutineers. The Admiral was a most generous benefactor to the College, and they were all very glad to see him safe home from distant ports. The proposition was carried unanimously.

The hon. secretary read the Annual Report.

FIFTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT

Your Council have the honour to report that the work of the College has been carried on with signal success during the past session.

The financial resources of the College have been placed under considerable pressure during the trying epoch in the history of this institution, through which in the last few years it has passed. Your Council are able, however, to report that by the loyalty and active support of its members, the College funds are rapidly regaining their former satisfactory state.

There has been a large increase in the number of candidates for examination during the past year, and an unusually large enrolment of new members.

Ever desirous of maintaining and strengthening the status of the College diplomas, your Council have decided that and after the next July examination (1922) candidates in the Associateship will be required to play two organ pieces instead of one piece as heretofore.

Your Council notice with much gratification that His Majesty The King has conferred the dignity of Knight Commander of the Victorian Order upon Sir Walter Parrat—vice-president of the College—and the honour of Knighthood upon Mr. Ivor Atkins, Mus. B., member of the Council; also that the University of Durham has conferred the M.A. degree upon the hon. treasurer of the College Dr. C. W. Pearce.

The examiners appointed for 1919-20 were: Sir Frédéric Bridge, C.V.O., Sir Walter Parratt, K.C.V.O., Dr. Alcock M.V.O., Dr. Bairstow, Mr. Balfour, Mus. B., Dr. P. C. Buck M.A., Dr. Stanley Marchant, Dr. Alan Gray, M.A., LL.B., Dr. F. J. Read, Dr. Richards, Dr. Shinn, and Dr. Sweeting.

Your Council desire again to record their high appreciation of the splendid work done so generously for the College by Dr. H. A. Harding, the hon. secretary. They also wish to express their cordial thanks to the hon. treasurer, Dr. C. W. Pearce, M.A., for the admirable way in which he has managed the finances of the College, and to Mr. T. Shindler, M.A., LL.B., for his devotion to the best interests of the College and for his unswerving faithfulness in the discharge of the duties appertaining to his position as registrar.

Sincere thanks are accorded to the hon. auditors, Mr. O. D. Belsham, J.P. and Mr. G. R. Ceiley, A.R.C.O., also to the professional auditors, Messrs. Pannell & Co., for their able services.

Your Council also acknowledge their indebtedness to the College staff for their loyal and ready assistance on all occasions.

Mr. HERBERT HODGE: I beg to propose the adoption of the annual report.

This was seconded by Mr. KIPPS, and carried.

The hon. secretary presented the annual financial statement and apologised for the unavoidable absence of the hon. treasurer, Dr. C. W. Pearce.

Dr. W. J. PHILLIPS: I think the annual financial statement an admirable one, and I imagine that the College is in a most satisfactory financial condition. I propose that the statement be adopted.

Mr. F. R. FRYE seconded, and the resolution was carried.

Dr. H. W. RICHARDS: I propose the re-election of Dr. C. W. Pearce as hon. treasurer. Dr. Pearce has held the office for many years, has been a very good treasurer, and he stuck to his post in spite of indifferent health. We owe him a debt of gratitude, and with great pleasure I propose his re-election.

This proposal was seconded by Dr. J. F. READ, and carried unanimously.

Dr. SHINN: I wish to propose the re-election of Dr. Harding as our hon. secretary. I should not like to say how many years he has held that office. The amount of time he has given to the work is better known to the Council than to the ordinary members. We know how much trouble he takes over every detail, and we see the result in the very smooth working of the examinations and general organization. The amount of time he gives to the College is tremendous, and some of us do not quite know how to do it. We owe him the heartiest thanks for his service, and I am sure you will warmly support my proposal that he should be re-elected.

Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL: I second this resolution with the greatest pleasure. It is very difficult for the members of any institution such as this, and even for the Council who see the hon. secretary regularly, to realise what a tremendous amount of responsibility and work there is to be done by some one man without whom the institution could not go on. For any institution like this to be successful you must have one man at the helm who is a link between all the forces, one who will make the welfare of the College the central interest of his life. Such a man is Dr. Harding.

The PRESIDENT supported the proposition, and said he could not think what the College would be without Dr. Harding. The more one came to the College the more one saw what a prodigious amount of work he did.

The proposition was carried with acclamation.

Dr. HARDING: I feel very grateful to you for your confidence. I am very proud of this College. The successful work it is doing is a great joy to me. As regards the Council, I always think it is the strongest board of musicians in the world. I do not know any other institution possessing a purely musical board anything like so strong in respect as the Royal College of Organists. The Council are a very sensitive body, and they are frightfully ahead! They are men whom I very much regard, because they are accustomed to say what they mean! I remember the time when some of us used to sit at the end of the Council table and hardly dared put our feet under it, like the giants at the other end settled everything; but now nobody is afraid of anybody else. To have the confidence of the Council and of the members is a very great joy to me, therefore for one more year I take on this office, and I am very much obliged to you for re-electing me. The scrutineers then delivered their report. The President announced that the voting for the London members of the Council was as follows: Mr. S. H. Cholson, M.A., Mus.B., 415, Mr. E. T. Cook, Mus.B., 3, Mr. J. A. Meale, 163, and he declared that Mr. Cholson and Mr. Cook were duly elected. He explained that Dr. A. H. Brewer and Mr. T. H. Collinson were the only members nominated for the two vacant country seats of the Council, and that therefore they were elected.

Mr. E. DOUGLAS-SMITH proposed the re-election of the professional auditors, Messrs. Pannell & Co., and of the non-professional auditors, Mr. Oliver D. Belsham, J.P. and Mr. George R. Ceiley, for the ensuing year. Sir Ivor Atkins seconded. Carried.

THE PRESIDENT: I am pleased to see the seconder, Sir Ivor Atkins, who is with us to-day for the first time since a long illness has been bestowed upon him. We are all very glad to see him here.

SIR IVOR ATKINS: I am extremely grateful to you for giving me this opportunity for congratulating me. It is a very great pleasure to find myself on this platform as a member of the Council. It is always difficult for those of us who are in the country to do as much for the Royal College of Organists as we wish, because the meetings come at the end of the week, when those who have cathedrals in their care are leaving after their choirs, but from time to time I shall hope to come and do what I can.

DR. HARDING: It is my duty and pleasure to thank our President for taking the chair at our meeting. I am sure everybody appreciates Dr. Macpherson more than I do. He is not only our friend, he is also an ideal President. He does not think so himself, but we do, and we have persuaded him to stay on for another year. Ever since he started he has been asking me when it was time to give up, but we never now I hope got him through all those paroxysms. Our President has a wonderful way of keeping order, though he does not say much. He has really been of great use to us this hot weather—he is an ideal hot-weather President. I propose a vote of thanks to him for all he has done, and for his kindness in consenting to go on for another year.

The proposition was received with enthusiasm.

THE PRESIDENT: I am extremely obliged to you. I will try to do my best. It is always a delight to see so many friends, and I hope we shall have many opportunities for meeting again.

The proceedings then terminated.

WHAT IS ANTIPHONAL SINGING?

BY T. FRANCIS FORTH

Men who were at Oxford in the early 'nineties—at least some who were reading theology—will remember a crowded room at Christ Church, up a narrow staircase, in which the Rev. Bright, Canon of Christ Church and Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History, gave his lectures. What a stupendous knowledge he had of the early ages of the Church! He it was who was responsible for the words: 'The antiphonal chant became the symbol and support of orthodoxy.' He was not the man to make such a statement unless he could support it, nor would he use terms except in such a way as they were used in the centuries of which he was speaking. What then was this antiphonal chant which was in use in the Church about the date of the Arian controversy early in the 4th century? Evidently it was something different from the general music of that time.

To answer this question it is necessary first to notice that it was a term borrowed from the Greeks, but like many another term, such as lógos, endued with a fuller meaning when used in the Church.

The Greeks evidently meant by antiphony what we wrongly speak of as unison-singing, or singing together at the distance of the octave; but the Church took this idea and developed it until it became something quite different from that of the chorus of the Greek play. The Greek form of singing, known also as magadizing, can be traced back to several centuries before Christ, and was known not only to the Greeks, but also to the Egyptians. The magadis appears to have been a stringed instrument with a bridge dividing each string in such a way that the part on the one side was twice the length of that on the other, and so producing octaves when both parts of the string were played at the same time. Aristotle in his 'Problematica,' xix., 39, says: 'Antiphony is born of the voices of young boys and men, whose tones are distant from each other as nete and hypate.'*

Again, the word 'antiphony' in its derivation (ἀντιφωνία) means singing with contrasted voices—not from side to side, as it is so often thought to mean.

In Greek music, 'antiphonal singing' meant the simultaneous sounding of voices an octave apart. In Church music the idea of voice contrast was retained, but antiphonal singing in this case became the singing alternately of two choirs, the voices of which differed from each other by the distance of the octave. The division of the sexes in the early Church possibly came about because it was so convenient for this method of singing.

It is possible that Pliny's letter to Trajan, early in the 2nd century, referred to this when he says that it was the custom of the Christians to sing 'by turn among themselves' a 'Hymn to Christ as God.'

Still it is St. Ignatius who has the honour of being the first to train a choir in antiphonal singing, or singing by voice-contrast. He is said to have had a vision of angels 'hymning in alternate chants to the Holy Trinity, after which he introduced the mode of singing he observed in the vision into the Antiochian Church, whence it was transmitted by tradition to all other churches. Such is the account that we have received in relation to these antiphonal hymns.' (Socrates Eccles. Hist., Bk. vi., Ch. 8.)

Ambrose, that great musician-saint, realised the spirit of emulation that lay under the method of singing by voice contrast in alternate choirs, for not only did he divide his choir in two, but his congregation also during a time of persecution at Milan; and found this method a valuable asset in keeping up the spirits of his people. Evidently he developed the idea, for we find a few years later that St. Augustine speaks of the beauty of the music in the Cathedral of Milan, feeling that uplifting of the soul which is still so noticeable when the Psalms are sung in alternate verses by contrasted voices. So noted did the choir trained by St. Ambrose become, that the churches in the West soon began to follow the method of the East—Milan itself being the meeting place of East and West. The words of St. Augustine bear this out: 'Then it was first instituted that Hymns and Psalms should be sung after the manner of the Eastern Church, lest the people should wax faint through the tediousness of sorrow; and from that day to this, the custom is retained; divers, yea almost all thy congregations throughout other parts of the world following herein.'

St. Basil in speaking of customs from the East says that 'the people . . . rising from prayer, betake themselves to Psalmody, and now divided into two parts they sing alternately to each other.' In another passage he evidently describes the responsorial method as well as the antiphonal; for he not only speaks of two choirs singing alternately, but also of one voice beginning a Psalm and the rest joining in. This may of course mean that the Psalm was merely precented by a cantor. At Alexandria, however, in the time of St. Athanasius, we certainly have a definite example of responsorial singing, for when beset by the Arians he ordered the Deacon to read the Psalm, the people repeating the refrain, 'For His mercy endureth for ever.'

* The highest and lowest notes of the octave.

To such an extent did the antiphonal method spread, that it was used even in family worship. We read (Socrates Eccles. Hist., Bk. vii., 22) that Theodosius the younger, 'together with his sisters, rose early in the morning, and recited antiphonal hymns in praise of the Deity.' So, too, does Tertullian tell us that husband and wife 'respond to each other in psalms and hymns, challenging each other which shall better chant the Lord's praises.'

The last quotation points to the spiritual emulation which the true form of antiphonal singing brings about, and most of the quotation would seem to point to that contrast of tone-colour which is the essence of antiphony—the 'voice against voice,' the 'vox reciprocat,' the voice of women answering that of men. But this method also has another recommendation which every choirmaster knows is so necessary for good psalm-singing—it is that of definite periodic voice-rest.

Antiphonal singing, then, is not singing from side to side with two perfectly-balanced choirs in four parts as in a Cathedral where Anglican chants are used; nor can plainsong chants sung from side to side in unison be called antiphonal—such a method approaches nearer to the Greek chorus than to the Early Church. Neither form of singing has that which is the essence of antiphony in the Church, viz., voices singing in alternate verses at the distance of the octave. It is this which Canon Bright meant when he said 'the antiphonal chant became the symbol and support of Catholicity.' This is that form of singing which brings out the real beauty of the Psalms and Canticles, for it combines spiritual emulation and contrast of tone-colour with that which is so necessary for good voice-production—viz., periodic voice-rest.

A NEW ORGAN AT BIRMINGHAM

The Birmingham Royal Institution for the Blind has been in existence since the year 1846, when a small three-manual organ was erected in the music room. For a period of sixty-nine years this one instrument has done duty, and has been the means of training a good number of blind organists. Some months ago the committee decided to provide a new organ with the object of ensuring that blind candidates qualifying for R.C.O. diplomas would not be at a disadvantage when playing their test-pieces on the College organ. The institution has had the benefit of the advice of Mr. C. W. Perkins, Mr. A. J. Cotton, Mr. H. Taylor, and Mr. H. E. Platt, the head music-master. These gentlemen drew up a specification, and the new instrument has been built by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, of Liverpool. The organ was opened on July 11 by Mr. A. W. Wilson, chairman of the institution, a recital being given by Mr. C. W. Perkins, the Birmingham City Organist. The specification is as follows:

PEDAL ORGAN

	FT.		FT.
1 Open Wood ... ..	16	6 Trombone ... ..	16
2 Salicional ... ..	16	(Enclosed in Swell Box)
(from Great)		a Swell to Pedal
3 Sub-Bass ... ..	16	b Great to Pedal
4 Octave Wood ... ..	8	c Choir to Pedal
5 Flute ... ..	8

CHOIR ORGAN

(Enclosed in separate Swell Box)

	FT.		FT.
1 Viole d'Orchestre ... ..	8	Tremulant
2 Harmonic Flute ... ..	8	8 Tromba ... ..	8
3 Salicional ... ..	8	(From Great)
4 Concert Flute ... ..	4	d Choir Octave
5 Salicet ... ..	4	e Choir Octaves only
6 Cor Anglais ... ..	16	(acting also through
(extended up for additional		Unison Couplers)
Octave)		Swell to Choir
7 Clarinet ... ..	8

GREAT ORGAN

	FT.		FT.
1 Double Salicional ... ..	16	6 Wald Flöte ... ..	4
2 Open Diapason I. ... ..	8	7 Grave Mixture ... ..	2 ranks
3 Open Diapason II. ... ..	8	8 Tromba ... ..	8
4 Hohl Flöte ... ..	8	g Swell to Great
(Open throughout)		h Choir to Great
5 Octave ... ..	4

SWELL ORGAN

	FT.		FT.
1 Open Diapason ... ..	8	Tremulant
2 Stopped Flute ... ..	8	9 Contra Fagotto ... ..
3 Echo Viol ... ..	8	10 Trumpet ... ..
4 Viole Celeste ... ..	8	11 Clarion ... ..
5 Principal ... ..	4	i Swell Octave
6 Fifteenth ... ..	2	h Swell Octaves only
7 Mixture ... ..	4 ranks	(acting also through
8 Oboe ... ..	8	Unison Couplers)

The numerous accessories include about thirty pistons.

CHORAL FESTIVAL AT TEIGNMOUTH

On July 7 the first choral festival of the Kenn Deane held at Teignmouth for many years united seven choirs: two from Teignmouth, two from Dawlish, two from Bishopsteignton, and the choir of All Saints', Kenton. Mr. J. C. Chant was at the organ, and Mr. Sydney Harris led an efficient orchestra which added greatly to the success of the singing. The book was that selected by the committee of the Exeter Diocesan Choral Union. The Festival of the Union took place in the Cathedral on July 1, conducted by Mr. T. Roylands-Smith. Six hundred singers took part, representing twenty-three choirs from six dioceses in the Archdeaconry of Totnes, uniting with the Cathedral choir. Dr. Ernest Bullock was at the organ. The service book had several points of departure from precedent. The proper Sarum melody was used, not very successfully, in the hymn 'Be near us, Holy Trinity'; and modern tunes were used for the hymns 'At the Name of Jesus' ('Cuddesdon'—W. H. F.), 'Love Divine' ('Airdale'—Stanford), 'Lift up your hearts' (H. G. Ley), and 'For all the Saints' ('Sine Nomine'—Vaughan Williams). The Stanford tune went well, but the others, particularly 'Sine Nomine,' used as a processional, were ragged in performance. The conspicuous feature of the service was the anthem—Tchaikovsky's 'Hymn to the Trinity,' which, however, was sung with accompaniment, except the third verse, which the Cathedral choir sang with much beauty of tone and expression. The evening canticles were sung to Goss in E. In the Magnificat there was some divergence between chancel and nave, and in 'For He shall' the Cantoris entries were very shaky. Indeed, this music, straightforward as it is, was not successfully treated, probably because many of the singers could not arrive in time for the morning rehearsal. The Nunc Dimittis went very much better. M. B.

VARIETY AT ORGAN RECITALS

A good deal of enterprise is being shown in providing relief at organ recitals. Gone are the days when Gounod 'There is a green hill' or a well-worn oratorio air were considered the only possible items for the purpose. String music, both solo and concerted, is being more and more drawn on for the purpose, with good results, for the quiet fluework provides the best of backgrounds for string tone. Some good examples of string and organ recitals were recently given at Hope Street Church, Liverpool, Dr. Arthur Pollitt and Miss Isabel McCullagh. Dr. Pollitt played Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Mendelssohn's first Sonata, Three Miniatures by Ernest Bryson, Baird's Scherzo in A flat, &c., and joined Miss McCullagh in Bach's A minor Violin Concerto, Tchaikovsky's Sérénade Mélancholique, the Adagio from Brahms' Violin Concerto and the Adagio and Rondo from Mozart's E flat Concerto. At the third recital of the series Miss Mary McCullagh came into the scheme, the three players giving Brahms' Concerto for violin, violoncello, and orchestra. The two-fold advantage of such programmes is that fine chamber music is introduced to an audience probably unfamiliar with it while the organ items themselves gain from the contrast.

Interesting departures have been made, too, at some recitals at St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh, where Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Allt and Miss Cathie Thomson played programmes consisting entirely of pianoforte and organ duets. Naturally some of these consisted of movements from Pianoforte Concertos, Tchaikovsky and Mendelssohn being drawn on. The other items included Debussy's 'Clair de Lune,' 'La Cathédrale Engloutie,' and the Prelude from 'Suite Bergamasque,' Rachmaninov's Prelude in G minor, Guilmant's Pastoral (presumably the one written for pianoforte and harmonium), Liszt's Nocturne and 'Marche Hongroise,' &c. This kind of combination calls for taste and discretion, especially, perhaps, in the choice of items. 'La Cathédrale Engloutie' is a type of piece that ought to gain by this duet performance. No pianoforte can give us all the weight it calls for at times. Discreetly used, the organ can make the work as impressive as one feels it ought to be, but somehow never is—quite. It should be added that these recitals were part of a series of unusual interest. Mr. Allt's programmes included a Bach scheme (five Chorale Preludes, Gavotte from the sixth Violoncello Sonata, Prelude in E flat minor from the 'Forty-Eight,' &c., with three vocal items), one of modern British organ music, and one of modern French, and a choral-organ recital at which the instrument played second fiddle, so to speak, the Scottish Choir providing the bulk of the programme, singing Cornelius' 'Surrender of the soul,' Elgar's 'As torrents in summer' and 'Go, song of mine,' Sullivan's 'Evening hymn,' and Parry's 'Jerusalem.' Such recitals as these are of real importance in the musical life of the community.

A CHURCH MUSIC CONFERENCE IN THE TRANSVAAL

A Conference and hymn-practice, on the lines of those so frequently held in England during the past few years, took place in St. Andrew's Church, Pretoria, on May 17. The gathering consisted of the clergy and organists of the Transvaal Presbytery, and the fact that a good many of the members travelled distances varying from forty to a hundred miles each way in order to be present shows their enthusiasm. Mr. J. S. Yates, the organist of St. Andrew's (who will be remembered by many of our readers for his good work at Park Chapel, Crouch End, a few years ago) addressed the meeting, described the conferences he had attended in England, and advocated the holding of congregational practices. He then demonstrated by holding a specimen practice, rehearsing his hearers with hymns to sterling tunes, such as 'Hanover,' 'French,' 'Commandments,' &c. Descendants were employed in some cases, and questions of rhythm, climax, phrasing, &c., were discussed. It is hoped that, as a result of this successful meeting, similar conferences will be held in the various districts—indeed, several have already been arranged.

At the Patronal Festival of Leeds Parish Church (St. Peter's Day) the music list was, as usual, a notable one. On June 29 the communion service was sung to Merbecke, and on July 3 to Ireland in C—an admirable setting that we are glad to see is becoming well known. The evening canticles were sung to Wesley in E, Lee Williams in F, Noble in B minor, and Stanford in B flat. The anthems were Brahms' 'How lovely' and 'Blessed are they that mourn,' Tye's 'O Lord of Hosts,' Bairstow's 'Blessed City,' and by way of introit to the communion service in memory of Leeds soldiers killed in the war, Ireland's 'Greater love hath no man.' Stanford's Te Deum in B flat, Purcell's String Suite, and Handel's 'Occasional' Overture concluded the Festival. On the afternoon of the Sunday in the octave Dr. A. C. Tysoe gave an organ recital, playing S. S. Wesley's Andante in F, Franck's 'Grande Pièce Symphonique,' Bonnet's Variations de Concert, and Mendelssohn's 'Military' Overture. Mr. Edward Maude and Mr. William F. Wilson played Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins.

A combination of choral and organ music has been the rule at a series of monthly musical services held on Sunday evenings at Albion Congregational Church, Ashton-under-Lyne, Manchester. On July 24, the choir sang three numbers from 'Judas Maccabeus' and Keighley's 'Now he day is over,' and Dr. T. Keighley played the 'Unfinished' Symphony and Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor. Each recital has been preceded by a short explanation of the works played. These have included three parts of Ernest Austin's 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' Beethoven's first and second Symphonies, and works by Bach, Franck, Mendelssohn, Parry, Reger, and Dupré. The attendances have been large.

The degree of Master of Arts, honoris causa, recently conferred on Dr. Charles W. Pearce, at Durham University, has been well earned. Dr. Pearce has done fifty years of fine service in the cause of Church music, having begun as organist at St. Martin's, Salisbury, in 1871, when he was fourteen years old. Three years later he was appointed to St. Luke's, Old Street (one of Henry Smart's posts), and has been a familiar figure in London academical and Church music circles ever since. Though he has retired from active service as an organist, Dr. Pearce still holds a Church appointment, being a licensed lay-reader for the Diocese of London.

Sir Frederick Bridge writes:

'Mr. W. J. Winter, organist of North Finchley Church, died on July 18. For over forty years Mr. Winter was my private assistant at the Abbey, and no more faithful and true friend could possibly be found. He never failed me, would always put off his own work to help me, and was indeed a loyal and devoted assistant. When I retired from active work at the Abbey Mr. Winter also ceased his connection with it. I had the melancholy privilege of playing at the Memorial Service held at Finchley Church on Sunday, July 24.'

Here is an excellent programme of British organ music recently played by Mr. Alexander McConachie, at Christ Church, St. Kilda, Melbourne, Australia: Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Dithyramb, Harwood; Impromptu, Alcock; Vilanella, Ireland; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme, with vocal items by Sullivan and Walford Davies, sung by Mr. William Taylor.

'Elijah' was sung at Tenby Parish Church by the Oratorio Choir on July 5 and August 9. The soloists were Master Ronald Brown, Mrs. Cole, Mr. Vivian Bennetts, Mr. F. Rees, and Mr. A. Parsell. There were very large audiences. Mr. W. Cecil Williams conducted.

The Welsh Regiment paraded in large numbers at Tenby Parish Church on August 12, at a service held in commemoration of the Gallipoli landing. Bands and organ joined forces with impressive result, under the direction of the organist of the church, Mr. W. Cecil Williams.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber gave the opening recital at the dedication of the new organ at Hurdfield Parish Church on July 21. His programme included Bach's D major Fugue, chorale preludes by Darke, Charlton Palmer, and Parry, and Brewer's 'Marche Héroïque.'

Mr. James Brash, formerly organist and choirmaster of Park Church, Helensburgh, Scotland, has been appointed to the historic building known as 'the Scots Church' at Sydney, N.S.W.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. John Pullein, Corsham Parish Church—Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Trumpet Tune and Air, Purcell; Fantasia on the 'Old 100th,' Blow; Gavotte, Pullein; Andantino, Franck; Allegretto, Vierne; Festival March, Bossi. (Viola solos by Mr. Herbert Spackman: Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Chanson de nuit, Elgar.)

Mr. A. M. Gifford, Union Chapel, Hunstanton (two recitals)—Toccata, a' Evry; An Irish Phantasy, Wolstenholme; Minuet and Trio, Faulkes; Irish Air, arranged by Hardebeck. (Songs by Mrs. Isobel Gifford: 'A mother's grief' and 'The young birch tree,' Grieg. Violin solos by Mr. Randolph Hall: 'Preislied,' Wagner; Meditation, Massenet.)

Mr. Norman Collie, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Marche Militaire, Schubert; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant.

Mr. W. G. Breach, St. John's, Clapham Rise—Toccata in C, Bach; Finale, Symphony No. 5, Widor.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary Abchurch (four recitals)—Allegro Moderato (Symphony in C minor), Holloway; Visione, Rheinberger; April Song, M. L. Wolstenholme; Mountain Song, Wolstenholme; Allegro con spirito, Dupuis; Adoration, Ford; Andante Religioso, John E. West; Angelus ad Virginem, Pearce; Triumphal March, Guilmant.

- Mr. N. S. Wallbank, Hexham Abbey (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Pastorale, Claussmann; Scherzo in G minor, Bossi; Toccata in C, Bach; 'Holsworthy Church Bells,' Wesley.
- Mr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church (two recitals)—Funeral March and 'Hymn of Seraphs,' Guilmant; 'The Holy Boy,' Ireland; March in C, Maily; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Allegretto Grazioso, Hollins. (Anthems by the choir: Wesley's 'The Wilderness,' Smart's 'The Lord is my Strength,' &c.)
- Mr. H. Matthias Turton, Robin Hood Methodist Church, near Wakefield—Pean, Harwood; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Sonata Pascale, Lemmens; Four pieces by Bonnet.
- Mr. H. S. Greenwood, the World Cotton Conference, Free Trade Hall, Manchester—Overture in C minor, Hollins; Andante, Mozart; Marche Militaire, Gounod; 'Yankee Doodle' in various styles, Mason.
- Mr. A. G. Colborn, St. Stephen's, Bristol—Nocturne in D flat, Colborn; March in D, S. Wesley; Romanza, Colborn; Grand Chœur, Baynon.
- Mr. R. Barrett-Watson, Giggleswick-in-Craven Parish Church—Prelude in E flat, Bach; Andante con moto, Bridge; Pastorale, Vierne; Minuet from 'Berenice,' Handel; Prelude in G flat, Scriabin; Marche Pontificale, Lemmens.
- Mr. Alban Hamer, the Cathedral, Bloemfontein—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Prière, Jongen; Elegiac Romance, Ireland; Fantasy—Prelude, Macpherson.
- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, Wigan Parish Church—First movement of Sonata, Elgar; Chorale Preludes by Bach, Brahms, Karg-Elert, Parry, Charles Wood, Harvey Grace, Harold Darke, and Vaughan Williams.
- Mr. Walter Hoyle, Holy Trinity, Exmouth—Fantasia and Fugue in G, Parry; Solemn Prelude, Noble; Chorale No. 3, Franck; Fantasia in E, John E. West; Allegretto (Symphony No. 3), Vierne.
- Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church—A Bach and Handel programme. Bach: Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C; Prelude on 'Christians, now be joyful'; Fugue alla giga; and a Vocal Aria. Handel: Overture to 'King Otho'; Minuet; and 'Let the Bright Seraphim.' (The vocal numbers were sung by the Priory Choristers.)
- Mr. F. C. J. Swanton, St. Mary's, Nenagh—Bridal March and Finale, Parry; Fantasy—Prelude, Macpherson; Fugue in D minor ('Fiddle Fugue') Bach; Finale, 'Sonata Celtica,' Stanford.
- Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Fantaisie in A, Boëllmann; Meditation in F, Roparts; Bourrée, Wood; Prelude and Fugue (from Symphony), Barté; Voluntary in A, Stanley; Prelude Pastoral, Liapounov; Minuet, Romance, and Finale from Symphony No. 4, Vierne.
- Mr. Ernest H. Smith, St. James', New Brighton—Grand Chœur alla Handel, Guilmant; Berceuse et Hymne Séraphique, E. H. Smith; Toccata in E minor, Callaerts.
- Mr. Henry Poole, St. John the Baptist, Burley—Fantasia, Tours; Concerto in B flat, Handel; Imperial March, Elgar.
- Mr. Joseph Walton, Glasgow Cathedral (two recitals)—Two Preludes on 'Farewell I give thee,' Bach; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Marche Religieuse, Saint-Saëns; 'Ride of the Valkyries'; Variations on 'Austria,' Chipp; Prelude on 'Deck thyself, my soul,' Bach; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Impromptu No. 2, Coleridge-Taylor; Funeral March, Tchaikovsky.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. Harold M. Boucher, organist, Charlestown Wesleyan Church, Baildon, Yorks.
- Mr. F. W. Dickerson, organist and choirmaster, All Saints' Parish Church, Southport.
- Mr. W. A. Montgomery, organist and choirmaster, All Saints' Cathedral, Halifax, Nova Scotia.
- Mr. Donovan F. Ryan, organist and choirmaster, St. Leonards, Heston, Middlesex.
- Mr. W. Kirk Sterne, organist and choirmaster, Clapton Park-Congregational Church.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Gentleman pianist wishes to meet with capable violinist with view to the mutual practice of advanced chamber music. Would collaborate in trio (p., v., and 'cello).—R. PUGH, 25, Abergile Road, Liverpool, E.

A new orchestra (amateur) beginning work in September invites applications for all instruments, ladies and gentlemen. Must be advanced performers in classical music. Rehearsals Wednesdays, 7.30 p.m., at the Training College, Brems Buildings, Chancery Lane London, W.C. For particulars apply Musical Director. Established orchestra on symphony basis has few vacancies for September. Violas, 'celli, bass, French horn, trombones, timpani, and drums only. Best music, classical and modern. Particulars, 'ZEALOUS,' c/o Musical Times.

Double-bass (gentleman) and violinist, wish to join Sunday evening orchestra. Church or chapel orchestra would suit.—M. F. N., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist wanted for small music circle, meeting one afternoon monthly.—MISS CHRISTINA CHALMERS, 54, Compton Road, Wimbledon, S.W. 19.

Gold medal pianist would be glad to meet soprano to complete mixed-voice quartet with orchestra. Practice rooms Central London, Thursday evenings.—W. T. 12, Sandmere Road, S.W. 4.

Musical enthusiast, conducting small orchestra, would be glad to hear of other string instrumentalists to augment the party. Weekly rehearsals held in New Oxford Street.—H. C., c/o Musical Times.

A Saturday afternoon Chamber Music Club is being formed in connection with the Bedford Institute Orchestra. The club will be coached and directed by Mr. Henry F. W. Horwood (late of Queen's Hall and Philharmonic Orchestras). Amateurs wishing to join should apply at the Institute (adjoining Bishopsgate Goods Station, G.E.R.), on Wednesdays, at 6.30 p.m., or write to E. J. COATES, 86, Highbury Hill, N.5.

'Cellist would like to join trio or quartet. Practice classes, &c. Two or three evenings weekly.—Apply 18, Chesney Grove, Hunslet, Leeds, Yorks.

Tenor and bass wanted to balance a musical party with own orchestra and L.R.A.M. pianist. Rehearsals Thursdays, 7-9 p.m. Central London.—W. T., 12, Sandmere Road, S.W. 4.

'Cellist and violinist (good players) wanted for weekly string quartet and quintet practice, Birmingham. Interested in classical and modern chamber music.—'VIOLA,' c/o Musical Times.

Advanced pianist wishes to meet with a capable violinist. Classical and modern music. Would also collaborate in trio (pianoforte, violin, 'cello).—BENNIE SOPHER, 388, Victoria Road, Crosshill, Glasgow.

'Cellist wishes to meet capable chamber musicians, Wallasey district.—RAWCLIFFE, 12, Westminster Road, Wallasey. There are vacancies for instrumentalists and vocalists (ladies and gentlemen) in the Bowes Park Choral and Orchestral Society, in connection with the Carter Memorial Club, St. Michael's-at-Bowes. Weekly rehearsals will commence in September.—All communications to Mr. ALBERT HAZELL (conductor), 54, Belsize Avenue, Palmers Green, N.

The Croydon Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Mr. W. H. Reed, F.R.A.M.) invites applications from amateurs for all instruments. Rehearsals commence end of September, on Fridays, at 8.15 p.m., at South Croydon. Full particulars from hon. secretary, C. J. E. CABLE, 118, Fairholme Road, Croydon.

the Fulham Cecilian Orchestral Society has vacancies for good amateur brass and wood-wind, 'cellos, violins, &c. Double-bass provided. Rehearsals Mondays. For membership apply hon. secretary, 209, Munster Road, Fulham, S.W. 6.

anted for special musical services to be given at an Islington Church in October, November, and December next, the help of a small orchestra which would provide illustrative music to addresses on Rossini, Haydn, and Beethoven.—MR. WILL F. SALMON, 58, Berwick Street, W.1.

anist and 'cellist (young men) would like to meet violinist for regular practice. (Nottingham.) Large library of classical and modern music.—'LENTON,' c/o Musical Times.

Letters to the Editor

CHURCH MUSIC

SIR,—It was, I think, Mark Twain who said, 'We all talk about the weather, but no one does anything.' Does that the same remark apply to Church music? That it is dead in probably ninety per cent. of our churches, and—older still—in some cathedrals, cannot be denied. I have loved about a good deal since the war, and often do I dread the dawn of Sunday. Church-going is not a privilege only, it is a duty. Why then is it often a painful duty? At even the 'said' services I am irritated by the harsh voice and bad singing of the priest. On a recent Sunday I went to worship at one of the magnificent churches, and the music was not helpful. The chants and hymns of a secular type were really badly sung; the accompaniments, played by an F.R.C.O., were trusive and in bad style; the anthem was a disgrace to all concerned, and but a poor offering to the Almighty. What is to be done? Good, helpful books abound. The English Hymnal has been out twenty years. We have many societies, papers, meetings, &c.

Who can suggest a remedy for this state of things? A thousand priests met at Oxford a few weeks ago to consider their efficiency. What a power for good an organists' convention might do! Is it possible to organize one for next spring?—Yours, &c., PEREGRINE.

HYMN TUNES. BEETHOVEN

SIR,—Two novel ideas were presented by certain of your respondents last month.

'Optimist' proposed that we should revive good tunes by and only, a suggestion that is interesting, and should, if possible, be acted upon. But where are these good tunes? Men, again, it would seem to follow from this that, if we wish to dispense with 'Pentecost' for 'Fight the good fight' and 'Maidstone' for 'Pleasant are Thy courts above,' we all require to resuscitate neglected masterpieces by the Rev. W. Boyd and the late W. B. Gilbert, but I foresee difficulty in this. Besides, it is just possible that each of these tunes does show its composer 'at his best.'

Regarding the 'greatest composer' it appears that, after Beethoven has won. But pourquoi? Oh, merely because he has 'chanté la fraternité universelle,' and also because he had 'l'âme humaine' instead of 'l'âme allemande' (stupid contrast this!), therefore he is 'le seul vraiment utile' (Oo-la-la). I may say, however, that he will soon lose this distinction. If I remember rightly, he dedicated one of his compositions to members of the aristocracy, and expect to score heavily against him on this account, since the forthcoming symphonic tone-poem (for double choir, male orchestra, and quadruple conductor) will be dedicated to Bob Smillie. Considerable use will be made of such tunes as the 'Internationale' and the 'Red Flag,' while the work will be entitled 'The Solidarity of Labour.' Et le pauvre Beethoven? Il sera complètement napoo. Fraternal greetings.—Yours, &c., (Comrade) K. G. F.

'THE IMPORTANCE OF CORRECT PLACING OF THE VOICE': A CHALLENGE

SIR,—I wish to preface my remarks by stating that when, in the June number, I replied to Mr. Tree's article that appeared in the April issue of the Musical Times, I did not know anything about him. I had been absent abroad for quite thirty years, and had got out of touch with musical and other personalities. I wrote, first, because I am quite as enthusiastic a supporter of the classical method as Mr. Tree can be of his own method; and secondly, it seems to me that the Musical Times is pre-eminently the place to discuss such matters. It is an authoritative periodical, read, I postulate, chiefly by professional people and those who are more or less deeply interested in matters musical, who ought to be able and willing to envisage, and discuss dispassionately, points of view other than their own.

Permit me, Sir, to enlighten Mr. Tree. He fears I have not experienced 'absolute freedom and ease' in singing. His fear is baseless. These qualities have been my constant companions ever since I was trained, and that in the most strict conformity to the classical method. Besides, my voice is as fresh and fit to-day as it was at the end of the 'eighties. This is but natural, so I am not boasting about it.

I do not disparage technicalities, because I know their importance. When I am sick and require the services of a physician I call in the one whom I consider to be most completely master of the technique of his profession. I do not expect him to treat me to a scientific lecture on medicine; his business is to cure my ailment. My view is that a professor of voice training is, in a manner of speaking, a physician, who must be able to diagnose vocal trouble and apply a direct remedy, but is not called on to lecture a pupil on either the one or the other.

I am profoundly convinced that the classical method is quite capable of surmounting any difficulties of language (articulation) no matter what they be, but that does not alter the fact that certain tongues lend themselves more than others to make singing easy. If Mr. Tree does not admit this, the fault is not mine, but his own deficiency in philology.

I am also of opinion that no one ought to undertake the training of voice who is not capable of facing and treating all sorts of abnormal cases. Besides, the training even of normal voices is apt to bring out many strange and unusual phenomena, which demand skilled treatment. One sort of medicine will not cure all manner of diseases.

I feel convinced that Mr. Tree does not know the classical method practically, yet he thinks it responsible for spoiling a great many voices. I wish to assure him that such is not—indeed, cannot be—the case. It cannot spoil voices! By no means all Italian singing masters know or teach it. (Two cases of excellent voices being ruined by professional teachers at Milan, while I was a student there, came under my personal notice.) It is those who pretend to teach it, but do not, and those who, being only instrumentalists, yet undertake to train voices, who are to blame for the harm done in its name, and I fear that such are numerous.

In order to be specific I shall proceed to state why I disapprove of Mr. Tree's method, in so far as I can grasp it. He ignores the control of the breath, which I consider to be the first step in voice training. He makes correct speech his basis, but experience has taught me that the speaking voice affords no indication of the location of the vocal organ. A soprano or tenor may, and often does, speak in deep tones, whereas a contralto or baritone may converse in high tones. They sometimes continue to do so even after their singing voice has been properly placed. How the difficulty presented by such a natural phenomenon is to be overcome by Mr. Tree's method is not apparent to me. Every normal voice contains what is commonly known as a 'break,' which has so to be bridged over as to render the voice perfectly equal from its lowest to its highest extreme. There, again, Mr. Tree does not assist me. The higher notes of a properly trained voice must be covered, otherwise they remain open, unpleasant to the ear, and most trying to the voice itself. Correct speech does not assist me in effecting that necessary modification of tone.

Mr. Tree invites me (although he does not specify in what manner) to come down to business, and I am quite prepared to meet him, as the following sporting offer will show. Unfortunately I am not personally acquainted with the principal of the Guildhall School of Music, but a friend whom I trust has spoken so highly of him that I place complete confidence in his knowledge and judgment. Probably Mr. Tree knows him, and if that be the case he will be able to approach him.

The number of applicants for admission to the School must be in excess of the vacancies, and my proposal is to ask Mr. Ronald to choose two of the best of his latest rejected candidates, as nearly as may be in the same vocal condition, one of whom shall be gratuitously taken in hand by Mr. Tree, and the other by myself. Not all voices yield equally to training, but I am prepared to take the risk of getting the more difficult one. I wish, however, to stipulate that my prospective pupil shall: (1) be seriously and enthusiastically devoted to singing; (2) have perfect intonation; (3) be possessed of a genuine artistic temperament, and (4) should a lady be chosen, she shall under no consideration be under eighteen years of age. I should be pleased to leave it to Mr. Ronald to settle the number of lessons to be given before the results of our respective tuition be submitted to judgment.

I have an open mind; now let Mr. Tree prove that he has a decided claim to be reckoned with seriously.
—Yours, &c.,

A. KEAY.

National Liberal Club.

August 3, 1921.

'THE GRAMOPHONE—PRESENT AND FUTURE'

SIR,—The article in your July issue, under the above heading, heralding a new departure in gramophone construction, which the writer, Mr. Ulric Daubeney, considers an enormous forward movement from existing models, has whetted my curiosity very considerably; for, as recording secretary of the North London Phonograph and Gramophone Society, I have for the last five years witnessed a grand march past of nearly all the 'revolutionary innovations,' connected with the 'talking-machine,' in the shape of sound-boxes, tone-arms, needles, and all the various accessories, about which, as Mr. Daubeney suggests, there has been 'much cry but little wool.' In his guarded reference to the gramophone of the future, which he claims to be a long leap, rather than a step forward towards the perfection of sound reproduction, he seems to indicate the basis of improvement as follows: 'The secret lies mainly in the acoustic properties of the cabinet . . . The object of a horn is to act as a sound-wave chamber and amplifier, much as does the body of a violin or the "bell" of a brass instrument. The larger the horn—within reasonable limits—the greater volume of tone a gramophone will give, and the greater the depth of such tone.'

Now although it is true, generally, that gramophone manufacturers have seldom incorporated the above ideas in their methods of production, being more concerned in appealing to the eye than to the ear (hence the elaborate cabinet and the diminutive amplifying chamber), nevertheless I am pleased to be the possessor of an instrument, the construction of which has been carried out in the light of just those very ideas which Mr. Daubeney deems indispensable. My gramophone is of the external horn type, entirely of wood (with the exception of the motor), solidly constructed in triangular formation to fit the corner of a room. The top of the horn stands 7-ft. from the floor, the flare being 24-in. in diameter. The curved length of the horn is 56-in., literally built up of thick rings of wood tapering internally from 2-in. diameter at the junction of the sound-box to 2-ft. at the outer extremity. This is supported by a heavy cabinet having a frontal width of 4-ft., containing three cupboards for the storing of records. The tone is pure, full, and natural, but I cannot claim it to be a novelty, since the inventor has been constructing such instruments for the past fifteen years.—Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM J. ROBINS.

126, Whidborne Buildings,

King's Cross, W.C. 1.

THE GRAMOPHONE AS AN AID IN TEACHING ORCHESTRATION

SIR,—We hear so much of the educational value of the gramophone to-day, that it seems strange that this instrument has not hitherto been used for the most obviously suitable branch of musical education, i.e., the teaching of orchestration. It is safe to say, I think, that orchestration is the one branch of theoretical music that cannot be taught from text-book alone. Familiarity with the actual sounds and tone-qualities of each instrument is essential. Surely the most effective method of teaching the subject would be to prepare a series of records embodying a short course of lectures on orchestration, with proper illustrations and examples. The first part should be devoted to music illustrations of the various instruments, separately; the second part to the principles of balance of tone, orchestral colour, &c. Accompanying the records should be a text book reproducing the examples and the words of the lecture.

I fully believe that the scarcity of orchestras in the country may ultimately be traced to the difficulty of teaching orchestration. Owing to this difficulty, the subject seems to be practically unknown except to students at the music colleges, and consequently the average person takes little active interest in orchestral music. If only this great subject which is surely the most fascinating branch of music to learn could be introduced to the average music-student as natural and as universally as harmony and counterpoint, people would begin to demand orchestras, and, what is quite a different thing, to support them.

The difficulty from which the teacher of music appreciation, as regards the orchestra, suffers, is this: In his theory, he can start from the beginning and the elementary, and work up to the complicated and the advanced; but in his practice he must start with the highest grade. He cannot say to his pupil, 'There is a great difference of tone between an oboe and a clarinet,' and then go to an orchestra and show him what the difference is. All he can do is to explain the difference as best he can. The difficulty and ineffectiveness of this are too well known to need comment.

If any of your readers can see any method of overcoming this difficulty other than the gramophone, I should be interested to hear it. I think the day is past when orchestration was regarded as an abstruse subject too high for ordinary mortals' comprehension.

The gramophone has already done great work in introducing orchestral music to 'the man in the street.' Cannot it also be used for imparting the secrets of its structure, or rather construction, to the earnest seeker after musical proficiency?—Yours, &c.,

Eaglescliffe,

Haddington, Scotland.

August 10, 1921.

JOHN HUNTER BLAIR.

[The Gramophone Company has just made a start in issuing a couple of double-sided records giving typical passages played on orchestral instruments—string, woodwind, brass, and percussion.—ED., M.T.]

GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

SIR,—Your correspondent who wrote about the making of Madrigal gramophone records last month, and other interested, will be glad to hear that a series of such recordings by the English Singers will be issued by the Education Department of this Company next month, and can be obtained through the usual channels. It will be possible, I hope, to produce records of the Church music of the Elizabethan Masters at some future date.—Yours, &c.,

August 5, 1921.

ALEC ROBERTSON

(Lecturer to Education Department
The Gramophone Company, Ltd.)

KITSON'S ELEMENTARY HARMONY

SIR,—In your review of Dr. Kitson's Elementary Harmony you give the impression that Part 3 is not yet published. I write to say that all three parts were published last year.—Yours, &c.,

H. C.

ORGANISTS OF ST. OLAVE'S, SOUTHWARK

SIR,—In his interesting article on 'The Organs and Organists of St. Olave's, Southwark,' Mr. Freeman omits names, which are thought worthy of a place in Grove. James was organist there early in the 18th century, appears to have been the first organist in the new church. J. J. Harris was organist early in the 19th century, during his tenure of the office published a selection of hymn and hymn tunes used at St. Olave's. He was afterwards organist of Blackburn Parish Church and of Manchester Cathedral, where he preceded Sir Frederick Bridge.—Yours, &c., J. ALBERT SOWERBUTTS.
Edgar Road,
Winchester.
August 10, 1921.

MODERN MUSIC

SIR,—Mr. Elkin says: 'All great composers are to some extent innovators.' This cloak, though threadbare, still covers a multitude of errors, doesn't it? Every goose is a genius, and every experiment a work of genius. Like Mr. Pitcher, I am not a reactionary, but I have my objections, and am not to be led by the nose by every opportunist and crank who arises. But in order to show at my aims are, permit me to throw off a few parables from motoring. Modern music is a car which is travelling too fast down the road. I am trying to apply the brakes, not necessarily to stop the car. Another: Years ago, being inexperienced, I was cheated by an automobile. Now I have learnt about cars, and it would require a clever salesman to cheat me. The public are now in my then inexperienced condition. The salesman is the critic or composer who has his own axe to grind. I, and countless others, mostly voiceless, are in the position of referee or less expert advisers. If we were to draw a graph of the progress of music from the beginning onwards, we should find that of late years the curve did not only be unsteady, but would even be taking a sharp bend. And, to pursue our parable, hairpin bends are dangerous. Miss Doris Brookes, in her letter, refers to my criticisms sweeping, but in order to obtain the correct tension in a string, surely it has to be overstretched. However, I make one remark with which I agree, namely, that there are men now who are writing music both from the heart and from the head. But (and here's the rub) they do not get a hearing. It is the empty pots which make the most noise. But let us be patient, and remember the story of the emperor's new suit of clothes. The ultra-modern critics and composers think they are in the van. But one of these fine mornings they will wake up and find themselves in the rear.—Yours, &c., C. À BECKET WILLIAMS.

A RARE INSTRUMENT

SIR,—A lady friend of mine possesses a musical instrument which is, I think, a very uncommon one—at least in England, as none of my musical acquaintances to whom I have described it has ever either seen or heard of one before. It is called a 'Nagel-Geige,' or nail violin, and it is in a perfect state of preservation. There is a specimen in the South Kensington Museum, and my friend, who wishes to know what value to place upon hers, inquired from the authorities, but unfortunately they were unable to state even at their own instrument might be worth. From a commercial point of view I do not suppose it is very important, but to a collector, either of rare musical instruments or curios in general, it may be of considerable value. I should be very grateful for any information upon the subject at either you or any of your readers may be able to give me, more especially as to its value, with a view, among other considerations, to its adequate insurance.—Yours, &c.,
1, Dunster Avenue,
Rochdale.
August 14, 1921.

WALTER HASKELL.

A VILLAGE PERFORMANCE OF MILTON'S 'COMUS'

SIR,—It may be of interest to some of your readers to hear of the production of Milton's 'Masque of Comus' (with Henry Lawes' original music) at Little Gaddesden on July 30 last.

The new Little Gaddesden Competitive Musical Festival held on April 23 of this year had stirred the village to great enthusiasm for choral singing and for music generally, and the idea of producing 'Comus' was immensely popular.

The choir and crowd were entirely recruited from Little Gaddesden, and some of the principal actors and the orchestra were also found in the neighbourhood. In Mr. Paul Edmonds, the composer, we found an excellent conductor, and it was very largely owing to his skill and tact (this last not a minor quality in a stage manager) that the production was so successful.

The arrangement of the music followed was, in the main, that of Sir Frederick Bridge. Three folk-dances from Mr. Cecil Sharp's collection were introduced, and the incidental music included a 'Miniature' Suite of Mr. Paul Edmonds' composition, and contemporary music by Giles Farnaby and William Lawes.

Two performances (afternoon and evening) were given on July 30, and we were lucky in having perfect weather throughout the day.

We were extraordinarily fortunate in our cast, selection being no easy matter, since many of the performers are required to sing as well as to act and declaim blank verse. In Miss Elizabeth Mitchell-Innes we had an ideal Attendant Spirit, and her charming singing and speaking voice were a delight to all who heard her. Others particularly worthy of praise were Miss Christabel Liddell as the Lady and Mr. Granville Ram as Comus. As the former Miss Liddell had an especially trying task, but she made the part completely convincing. Comus showed plenty of wickedness and wizardry, and was well-supported by a group of ugly-headed and riotous monsters.

I do not think that 'Comus' has often been produced by a village, and the keenness and interest shown by the villagers themselves have been a revelation to outsiders. The audience, too, appeared much delighted, and one is glad to find that Milton is not without honour in his own country. Milton's birthplace, Chalfont St. Giles, is not far from here, and of added local interest is the fact that the 'Masque' was originally produced for Milton and Lawes' patrons, the Bridgewaters, who at one time owned the seat of Ashridge, hard by Little Gaddesden.—Yours, &c., Berkhamsted, August 6, 1921.

SPECTATOR.

BRITISH MUSIC AT THE 'PROMS.'

SIR,—It would be very unsporting of me if after my letter in your August number I did not admit that the programmes for the present Promenade Concerts show an almost astonishing improvement. They are still thoroughly badly arranged in many respects, but there is no doubt that they are far more up-to-date than they have been for a long time. It really does one's soul good to see Elgar gradually coming into his own, and very nearly beating Tchaikovsky in the number of performances allotted to him. Unfortunately neither of his two Symphonies are to be played, though we are to have two very welcome performances of his 'Falstaff,' which many of us have not heard for years. May the time soon come when ten performances of an Elgar symphony will be given to crowded seat-payers for every one of a Tchaikovsky to paper dead-heads! As you see, I remain incurably optimistic.—Yours, &c.,

14, Craven Hill, W. 2.

ROBERT LORENZ.

August 5, 1921.

WIDOR RECITALS

SIR,—May I ask how it is so few of our great organists seem to play Widor's Symphonies? Beyond the fifth and one or two movements of Nos. 2 and 4 one never hears them. Surely our recital organists whose business it is to play big masterpieces might play the whole ten from time to time. Is it not possible in London to have Widor recitals after the style of the Bach recitals at St. Anne's, Soho?—Yours, &c.,

Hunstanton.

A. M. GIFFORD.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The annual dinner of the R.A.M. Club took place at the Monico Restaurant on Saturday evening, July 23, when a large gathering of members and friends spent a most enjoyable evening under the genial chairmanship of the president, Dr. H. W. Richards. In proposing the 'Success of the Club,' the chairman in a witty speech referred to the manner in which the meetings of the Club afforded a kind of social education to the members, whatever peculiarities of character or disposition they might possess. Sir Alexander Mackenzie in his reply referred to the coming centenary celebrations of the R.A.M., which would include a great musical and social festival next July. The toast of 'The Ladies' was proposed by Mr. Louis N. Parker in a brilliant speech and replied to by Dr. Eaton Fanning. During the evening songs were contributed by Miss Amy Evans and Mr. Fraser Gange, and violin solos by Miss Elsie Owen. Mr. Harold Craxton played the accompaniments in a most delightful manner.

A CORELLI FORGERY.

At the Musical Association meeting on April 19 a short communication by Mr. F. T. Arnold was read. In the British Museum there is what purports to be a reprint of the first six Sonatas of Corelli's Opera Quarta (H. Aertssens, Antwerp, 1692), which is mentioned by Eitner in his 'Quellen Lexicon.' Goovaerts in his 'History of Music-Printing in the Netherlands' mentions as one of the most important publications of Aertssens, his edition (1695) of the twelve Sonatas of Corelli. Everything would seem to point to this being a reprint of the British Museum edition, which was evidently unknown to Goovaerts. The edition which has always been accepted as the editio princeps, on which all subsequent reprints of the Opera Quarta are based, is that published at Bologna in 1694. It is an astonishing fact that the Antwerp edition of 1692 contains an entirely different work. There is not a single movement common to the two. The question is: Who wrote the Antwerp Sonatas? It seems almost incredible that a publisher of repute, as Aertssens was, should have had the audacity to publish an edition—and a reprint, moreover—of a spurious work two years in advance of the real work itself. Corelli's authorship seems impossible, or at all events in the highest degree improbable, for various reasons which Mr. Arnold adduced. Who was the culprit?

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of September, 1861:

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Madame Grisi's Farewell took place at a Festival given on July 31, when between eleven and twelve thousand visitors were present. The programme comprised a selection of Italian songs and duets from the operas, all very good and pleasing music, but not by any means chosen for producing an effect in the vast area of the Palace. It would not be fair, therefore, to criticise the actual singing, half of which could not be heard beyond the first few rows of the audience, but we may say that the demonstrations of the public in behalf of their long-established favourite were of the warmest description, and such as would be gratifying to her to remember hereafter. The honoured name of Grisi has for nearly thirty years proved unfailingly attractive, and the remembrance of the gratification she has never failed to inspire, was fresh in the minds of all when they wished her adieu for ever.

STROOD, ROCHESTER.—The members of the Church Choir enjoyed their annual picnic on Monday, August 12, in Cobham Park, by permission of Lord Darnley. During the afternoon, the singers, numbering fifty voices, performed a selection of glees and part-songs, the majority being from the 'Open-air Music' of Mendelssohn. The effect of the harmony was listened to with much enjoyment by a number of the gentry of the neighbourhood, including the noble owner of the park and his lady.

NATIONAL COUNCIL FOR MUSIC IN WALES

SECOND ANNUAL CONFERENCE

The National Council of Music which came into being two years ago met for a second annual Conference at Gregynog Hall by the kind invitation of the Misses Davies, Llandinam. Gregynog is in a remote Montgomeryshire valley, and its beauty and remoteness make it an ideal spot for the quiet working out of plans for the good of Wales. The Council held six full sessions from July 15 to July inclusive. Sub-committees also sat, sometimes till after midnight; and concerts were held each evening to which visitors from the surrounding neighbourhood came. On the Sunday evening the worshippers from both the church and chapel at Tregynon attended to join in and hear some of the finest music ever written by Bach, Beethoven, Wesley, and others. Members of the Council formed themselves into a small choral society for the occasion, singing Tall Wesley, and notable Welsh melodies with the help of a few better singers than themselves, including Madame Lau Evans-Williams. Members of Council who attended the Conference were Dr. Mortimer Angus, Mrs. Mary Davis, Miss Gwendoline E. Davies, Mr. E. T. Davies, Mr. F. Dodd, Prof. David Evans, Mr. D. W. Evans, Mr. T. John, Mr. A. Lyon, Sir H. R. Reichel, Miss Hann Reynolds, Miss C. A. Samuel, Miss M. A. Vivian, Prof. J. Lloyd Williams, Mr. Percy E. Watkins, the director (Prof. H. Walford Davies), and the secretary to the Council (Mr. J. C. McLean).

A great many matters of national musical interest were considered. The Hymnal for Schools and Colleges of Wales received its final review. The issue of a Welsh University Song-Book was discussed; any student or ex-student of the constituent colleges may give practical help in this particular matter by sending suggestions or contributions to the secretary of the National Council of Music, Aberystwyth, who will pass them to the director and his editorial board of three—Mr. E. T. Davies, Bangor, Prof. David Evans, of Cardiff, and Prof. J. Lloyd Williams, of Aberystwyth. The establishment of an instrumental trio at Bangor, as at Aberystwyth, was agreed upon, and gave great satisfaction; and the consequent extension of the Council's scheme for a national evangel of chamber music was faced and discussed. The Council's musical hopes run even higher than the financial anxieties which necessarily accompany them, and this is saying a great deal. It is an open secret that up to the present, but it has not been for the exceeding generosity of two donors, neither the Council's evangel of classical instrumental music nor its present series of publications could have been attempted at all. Other matters of major importance discussed included the establishment of tutorial classes in music and extensive plans of co-operation with school authorities for the furtherance of a national policy for music in schools; the establishment of University Fellowships in Music—a question raised two years ago and sent to the University Court, but since in abeyance owing to lack of funds; detailed consideration of the draft of a scheme for the formation of a National Orchestra; estimates of expenditure for the coming year; the wider circulation of the National Council Gymnasia Book recently published, and the co-operation with Harlech and other festival authorities in the encouragement and publication of native works.

One specially interesting feature of the Conference was the testing of the first gramophone record of a lecture given by the director to children on how to build tunes. The lecturer quoted a first-rate pentatonic tune actually written by a first standard Council School boy in a Cardiganshire school after one short lesson similar to that given on the gramophone.

It will be seen that the activities present and to come of the director and Council are multifarious, urgent, and of national interest. The need for funds in every direction is pressing. But it may well be imagined that on no other national matter would money be better spent than on the furtherance of a sound musical policy in schools and colleges, and the Finance Committee of the Council look anxiously at this juncture for a few rich enthusiasts who will entrust the work with a liberal annual sum for two or three years till the evangel of instrumental music is spread and established on its own merits. So far the Council has given two hundred fifty-three illustrated lectures on instrumental master-ces. They desire to give more than three hundred next sion. Anyone willing to help financially should municate directly with the Director, Prof. Walford vics, Aberystwyth.

 The following letters have passed between the Committee
 the Barry National Eisteddfod and the Council of Music:

'Glyn Geraint,' 15, Somerset Road,
 Barry, Glam.

The National Council of Music for Wales,
 Aberystwyth.

DEAR DR. WALFORD DAVIES,—I hereby forward you a cheque for £200, being a donation from the Committee of the above towards the National Council of Music for the purpose of promoting Musical Culture among the people of Wales and of fostering instrumental music in our midst. I hope the Council will succeed in promoting the very best in Welsh music and in developing the distinctly Welsh character of our birthright and song.

I am, yours truly,

D. ARTHEN EVANS
 (General Secretary).

May 24, 1921.

The Music House,
 University College of Wales,
 Aberystwyth.

D. ARTHEN EVANS, Esq.,—I am desired by the National Council of Music to forward an expression of gratitude to the Committee of the Barry Eisteddfod, 1920, for its liberal donation of £200 towards the funds of the Council. The Council notes with pleasure that you single out the culture of instrumental music for special mention; and the generous gift now sent will be used to extend the work already embarked upon by the Council in the very direction which your Committee evidently most desires.
 Many things made the Barry Eisteddfod memorable.
 No factor in the Council's opinion was more significant there than the appearance of five local orchestras of excellent promise. The Council only awaits the needed funds to send orchestral players and tutors throughout Wales.

I am, Dear Sir,

July 23, 1921.

Yours faithfully,
 J. C. McLEAN
 (Secretary to the Director and Council).

CHORALISM AT KETTERING

There is abundance of musical activity in the Kettering strict, but during recent years it has not been brought gether so often as it should have been. For this reason e performance of 'The Messiah' in the Parish Church on ne 30 deserves record. A choir of about a hundred and 'enty and an orchestra of thirty-six gave an excellent rformance, under the direction of Mr. H. G. Gotch, with
 r. E. B. Bishop at the organ. The soloists were Miss fine de la Côte, Miss Dora Arnell, Mr. John Collett, and
 r. Joseph Farrington. There was a crowded church, and a result £112 was handed to the fund for restoring the imes to the church clock. Now that this capable choral d orchestral force has been organized, chiefly owing to the orts of Mr. James Palmer, we hope it will be kept gether. A town of Kettering's size should be able to n at least two first-class concerts of this type every season.
 here should be no shortage of tenors and basses, for in e Kettering Gleemen the town possesses one of the best ale-voice choirs in the district. On July 24 they provided e programme at the Abington Park concert at Northington, singing, among other things, German's 'O Peaceful ight,' Dunhill's 'Full Fathom Five,' Button's 'Sally in our lley,' Goss's 'O Thou Whose beams,' and Elgar's Five art-songs from the Greek Anthology. It is worth noting at the entire programme—about twenty items—was sung on memory. This has been the case at the past twelve ncerts given by the Gleemen at Kettering. Mr. Samuel oughon is the conductor.

Obituary

By the death of Dr. C. B. HEBERDEN, late Principal of Brasenose College, the University of Oxford loses one of the most distinguished and beloved of her sons. In all walks of life, whether on the side of learning or of administration, Dr. Heberden was the ideal Oxford don. In the high offices which he filled—as Proctor (1881), Principal (1889-1920), Vice-Chancellor (1910-13)—he was noted for a singular graciousness of disposition. But it is with reference to his connection with the music and the musical life of Oxford that this note is written. It is only appropriate that the name of one whose chief delight was in music and who so strongly influenced the men of his time at Oxford, should be recorded in the Musical Times.

Heberden was educated at Harrow and at Balliol, and was often brought into touch with John Farmer, whose vivid personality made the music of both places famous. He also studied music in Germany, and so developed his powers

Photo by

[Elliott & Fry.]

CHARLES BULLER HEBERDEN, 1849-1921.

of playing that he was for a long time regarded at Oxford as one of the best performers on the pianoforte the University possessed. He rapidly became a leader among the small band of University musicians who were responsible for the well-being of its music. He was one of the original members of the University Musical Club, founded by Dr. Lloyd in 1869-70, and for fifty years was one of its staunchest supporters, serving sometimes as its president and continuously on its committee. In the early programmes of the Club his name appears as performer on several occasions.
 As University and College business made increasing demands upon his time his musical activities naturally became rather those of the patron than of the performer.

In the year 1913-14 the thousandth concert of the Club was to be celebrated, and by the unanimous wish of the members the Principal of Brasenose was elected president.
 No choice could have been happier or more appropriate, for Heberden was an original member, had just completed his term of office as Vice-Chancellor, and was the first head of a House since the days of Dean Aldrich to boldly champion the cause of music in the University. The programme arranged for the thousandth concert included Mozart's Sonata for two pianofortes, the performers being Dr. Heberden and the Dean of Christ Church (who had just become Vice-Chancellor in succession to Heberden). That two heads of Houses and successive Vice-Chancellors should perform in such a work on such an occasion is a record, and says much for the change of attitude towards music which high dignitaries of the University can now adopt without prejudice to their position. This particular performance was greeted with unbounded enthusiasm, and gave the occasion an unique distinction.

When Dr. Strong became Bishop of Ripon, Dr. Heberden succeeded him as chairman of the board of studies for Music. By his death the Board suffers an irreparable loss. His knowledge of University business, his musicianship, and his delightful personality, made him an ideal chairman, in whose hands University music was in safe keeping.

A few months before his death he gave to the music students' library a large selection of books on all kinds of musical subjects. By this act he confirmed the deep interest he took in the foundation and influence of this valuable collection. Such men as Heberden are very rare. He was one of those who went about doing good. The gratitude Oxford musicians feel for his sympathy, advice, and affection can never be expressed.

It was an honour to know him and a joy to work with him. It will be our delight to keep his name in remembrance.

H. P. A.

We regret to record also the following deaths:

JOHN FRANCIS BREWER, who had been for many years organist of the Jesuit Church, in Farn Street, London. Born in London in 1865, the son of Henry W. Brewer, artist and archaeologist, and grandson of J. S. Brewer, the brilliant editor of the 'Calendar of Letters of Henry VIII.,' he made his mark both as a composer and a novelist.

ROBERT MACHARDY, LL. D., at Strathaven, Lanarkshire, aged seventy-three years. He was an enthusiastic musician from boyhood, studying both at home and on the Continent. For a time he was honorary organist of Edinburgh Cathedral. He was a prolific composer, though little of his work has so far been published.

THE GENIUS OF DUNSTABLE

The Musical Association recently had the privilege of listening to a paper by M. Charles Van den Borren, of the Brussels Conservatoire, his subject being 'The Genius of Dunstable.' In the absence of the author, the paper was read by Mr. W. Barclay Squire, who was also responsible for the translation into English of the original French. Three of Dunstable's Motets were rendered by a small body of singers under the direction of Dr. R. R. Terry.

M. Van den Borren said that all that was known of Dunstable for certain was that he died on December 24, 1453, and that he was an astronomer as well as a musician. It might further be admitted as a conjecture that he was older than Dufay, and that he passed an important part of his life on the Continent. His work was better known to us. About fifty of his compositions had been preserved in manuscripts of the 15th century, mostly of Italian origin. Thirteen of them had been made accessible by publication in modern notation. Amongst these, three were works of the first rank, characterised by individual features which were entirely out of the common. Two were nearly as remarkable. The eight others displayed nothing which appreciably distinguished them from the mass of contemporary compositions. The three best—'Crux fidelis,' 'O crux gloriosa,' and 'Veni Sancte Spiritus'—exhibited special qualities which separate them in a striking way from all contemporary works. The lecturer did not lay so much stress on the form as on the substance, and here, said he, Dunstable brought ideas to which one could not deny the merit of entire originality. Setting aside all consideration of technique, the original element in Dunstable lay essentially in the intrinsic quality of the melody. With or without words, sung, or played by an instrument, the melody of the 'Superius' at the beginning of 'Crux fidelis' possessed a value of originality which placed it outside and above everything known to us of the product of the period. This was by no means a solitary example.

Brasard and Sarto, were among the 15th century musicians most directly inspired by Dunstable, though they did not attain to his commanding breadth, nor to his amplitude of line and contemplative ardour. Dufay, on the other hand, though he owed much to Dunstable, knew how to emancipate himself from this influence and to win his eminent position in the history of music, though he would not have been what he was if the English master had not shown him the way. The statement of Tinctoris, that the origin of the ars nova of the 15th century must be looked for 'among the English, of whom Dunstable is the principal seemed to be the expression of an undeniable truth.

Dunstable so treated the plainsong as to restore to it the mobility which it had seemed to have lost after two and a half centuries of polyphony. It thus appeared as an entirely new creation, enhanced by a harmonic richness which no later attempt at harmonization had ever succeeded in doing. The result was a lyrical atmosphere impregnated with a strange mysticism, which the personal temperament of the master had developed to the utmost limit of expression. Expression was the right term to use in speaking of Dunstable, although that quality was not conceded to him by all. Admitting that the 'madrigalesque' conception of expression as displayed in the music of Western Europe from about 1530 was entirely absent from the work of Dunstable, as indeed from that of all his contemporaries, the lecturer remarked that this absence of 'specialized' expression by no means excluded expression in the general sense of the term, and there could be no doubt that in this respect Dunstable had realised works which were more than and better than, beautiful sonorous compositions. His sacred motets had not only a character essentially different from the secular chansons of the time, but it might also be said that the English master often inspired the generalize expression of his melody with a romantic subjectivity of which no trace was to be found in his Franco-Netherlandish successes of the second half of the 15th century. These latter, better disciplined and more strictly subject to a kind of technical orthodoxy, gradually abandoned the expansive and fantastic figurations which were indeed ill-adapted to the exigencies of a contrapuntal science based on strict laws. Like the Florentine arabesque of the 14th century, the figurative embroidery of Dunstable gradually passed into the background, though not without leaving the indelible imprint of its ethereal flexibility and its dreamlike quality on the broader cantilenas of such composers as Dufay, Okeghem, Obrecht, and Josquin.

FIRST TOUR OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN FESTIVAL CHOIR

Towards the end of June the first choral tour to be organized in South Africa took place. A hundred members of the Johannesburg Philharmonic Society and of the Pretoria Choral Society, under the leadership of Mr. John Connell (town organist of Johannesburg), started on a tour of the Transvaal, Orange Free State, and Natal, with the object of giving high-class miscellaneous concerts and oratorios. Mr. Connell is a firm believer in the value of singing as a counterbalancing influence of many social ills, and has the ambition of making South Africa a singing country. The tour was practically a round of visits among already existing musical societies, but it had the effect of stimulating the formation of others, and Mr. Connell's intention is to make the festival an annual one in which choirs from all parts will be encouraged to participate.

The joint choirs started on their journey on June 22, but a preliminary performance of 'Elijah' took place on June 5, in the Johannesburg Town Hall, and a miscellaneous concert was given at Pretoria on June 12, which was repeated at Johannesburg on June 21. After this the Choir boarded the special train which was to become its home and shelter as well as means of travelling during the twelve days occupied by the tour. In each place visited local talent was incorporated in order to promote close fellowship; at Bloemfontein, for instance, the Bloemfontein Choral Society helped in the choruses; at Pietermaritzburg

A SONG AT BETHLEHEM RAILWAY STATION

Choral Society not only gave substantial assistance in singing but entertained the visitors with the utmost hospitality. The same thing occurred at Durban, where the Musical Association rendered assistance. In addition to singing the programme as arranged, the Festival Choir sang several railway stations, en route, such as Bethlehem, Durban, Ladysmith, and others, being on these occasions entertained on the principle that

Little Tommy Tucker
Sang for his supper.

At Durban the Choir was entertained on board the 'Penilworth Castle,' by kind permission of the Union Steamship Company, and after making inspection of the vessel and tea with the Captain and rendered thanks musically. There was an excellent batch of soloists, amongst them Mr. Montague Borwell. (His many friends in England will welcome this news of him.) The solos were of high quality, the 'shop ballad' being almost entirely absent. The standard of the choral items may be gauged from the programme sung at Johannesburg Town Hall (only the vocal items are given):

'Judge Me, O God'	...	Mendelssohn
'Evening has lost her Throne'	...	Bantock
'When Love and Beauty'	...	Sullivan
'O Wild West Wind'	...	Elgar
'Song of the Pedlar'	...	Lee Williams
'How Lovely are Thy Dwellings'	...	Brahms
'The Charge of the Light Brigade'	...	Hecht
'Bold Turpin'	...	Bridge
'All in an April Evening'	...	Robertson
'A Franklynn's Doggie'	...	Macfarren
'You Stole My Love'	...	Fletcher
'Fantasia on "Tannhäuser"'	...	Fletcher

The tour covered many hundreds of miles, and meant long and not too comfortable journeying; but it was characterised throughout by the happiest possible spirit of good fellowship. It is no mean test of forbearance to live for so long in the cramped quarters of a railway train, and the gentleman who 'must have my morning bath' was an object of general praise for being able to accomplish his purpose at the drinking-fountain in the corridor. Needless to say, the members of the Choir have many happy memories and pleasant friendships to compensate them for temporary trials, and a repetition of the experiment is certain to be made in a year's time.

L. H. V.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

The musical outlook in connection with the forthcoming season promises to be full of activity, but at the present a complete forecast cannot be given, as the various societies have not issued particulars of their season's recitals. So far we are assured of six 'international celebrity' concerts, the first of which will be given at the Town Hall on September 28, with Madame Tetrassini as the principal attraction. Among the artists to be heard at these concerts during the season will be Mesdames Rosina McKim, Edna Thornton, Stella Power, and Marie Hall, and Messrs. Josef Hofmann, Kubelik, Kreisler, Maurice Disly, Peter Dawson, and William James. At the last concert, on March 2, the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra, under the baton of Landon Ronald, with Misses Florence Austral and Irene Barker, should prove a special attraction. Mr. Hubert Parry has arranged to give six popular subscription concerts, and the artistic personnel is to include Mesdames Carrie

Tabb, Desirée Ellinger, Dorothy Silk, Jennie Cleur, Edna Thornton, Olga Haley, Margaret Fairless, Murray Lambert, Adela Verne, and Fanny Davies, and Messrs. Webster Millar, Lenghi-Cellini, Robert Radford, Norman Allin, Horace Stevens, Foster Richardson, Dennis Kennedy, Albert Sammons, Melsa, Arthur de Greef, and Josef Holbrooke. The series will also include a Landon Ronald recital and a Grieg recital.

The Festival Choral Society will open its customary series of concerts with 'Elijah,' and at Christmas 'The Messiah' will be given as usual. The Midland Musical Society, the Birmingham Choral Union, and the Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association have not as yet issued their outlines of concerts.

We may safely expect to hear a number of orchestral concerts by the Birmingham Orchestra, under the baton of Mr. Appleby Matthews, particulars of which will be given in next month's issue.

Of special interest, on August 8, was the appearance of Madame Pavlova and corps de ballet at the Town Hall. The dances were accompanied by a small but efficient orchestra under the guidance of Mr. Theodore Stier.

CORNWALL

Band contests are usually popular in Cornwall, but for some unexplained reason the second annual event at Newquay, on July 23, was an exception, and in contrast to last year's gathering, less than half the number of contestants and only a third of the number of visitors being present. There were no entries of big bands, and only six in other classes. Mr. Tom Eastwood, who was judge of the Crystal Palace championship last year, was the adjudicator. In Class B the test-piece was 'Recollections of Wales.' Stenalees band, conducted by Mr. J. M. Hinchcliffe, won first place. In Class C, the test-piece was 'Spirits of the Nations,' and first place was won by Fraddon band, conducted by Mr. W. Juleff. Medals for euphonium playing were won by Mr. R. Gilbert (Stenalees) and Mr. W. Trevarton (Fraddon); for cornet by Mr. W. T. Lobb (Wadebridge) and Mr. A. V. Minear (Fraddon); for trombone solo by Mr. J. Stephens (Stenalees); and for three trombones by Messrs. J. Stephens, J. Richards, and B. Martin (Stenalees).

The small town of St. Dennis was en fête on August 6, when over three thousand people attended the annual band contest, organized by the local Silver Prize Band, a new class being a champion one in competition for a challenge cup presented by the Hon. H. D. McLaren, M.P., the contest being for second and third section bands, not exceeding twenty players. The adjudicator, Mr. T. Proctor, of Oakdale, South Wales, laid stress on the importance of interpretation. For march playing the Stenalees band won first place; in third section bands Fraddon (Mr. G. H. Wilson) came first, and Mr. W. G. Trevarton, of the same band, was the best euphonium player. Queen's band, conducted by Mr. G. H. Wilson, won first place among second section bands, Mr. P. Knight, its leading trombone, winning the medal for the solo class, and Mr. M. Kestle that for euphonium solo. Mr. F. Morcom, of the Foxhole band, won the medal for cornet playing. In the open challenge class Foxhole band, conducted by Mr. J. Morcom, came first. The medal for trombone playing in this class was awarded to Mr. H. E. Wills (St. Columb), and the best cornet player of the day was Mr. R. Gilbert (Stenalees). Nine bands participated in the events, and after the contests they were conducted by the adjudicator en masse.

St. Ives Choral and Orchestral Societies, conducted by Mr. Ernest White, on August 10 performed Brahms' 'Song of Destiny' and selections from 'Faust.' The singing was characterised by vitality, good tone, and excellent sense of rhythm.

DEVON

Members of the South-West section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians met at Newton Abbot on July 23 to discuss various business matters with Mr. Hugo Chadfield, general secretary of the Society, the chief topic being the alterations which have been brought about by recent legislation, and how those changes affect the Society as a body and music teachers as individuals.

Holiday centres were visited at the end of July by Miss Margaret Cooper and party, and Miss Carrie Tubb who brought with her Mr. Randell Jackson (vocalist), Signor Giovanni Barbirolli (violin), and Mr. Herbert Dawson (pianoforte).

During August the Royal D'Oyly Carte No. 1 Company gave a two weeks' season of Gilbert and Sullivan opera at Plymouth. 'Princess Ida,' which had not been played at Plymouth for many years, was revived, and the production of 'Ruddigore' aroused much interest. The band of the Grenadier Guards toured Devon early in August, conducted by the band-sergeant. Neither Dr. Williams, the retiring director of music, nor Mr. P. S. G. O'Donnell, who has been appointed to succeed him, was able to be present.

DUBLIN

In the last week of July the Dublin Society of Musicians decided to sever its connection with the Amalgamated Society of Musicians, and to form an independent association on trade union lines.

The dispute between the Dublin orchestras in regard to salaries, &c., at theatres, cinemas, and other places of amusement, was amicably settled on July 28, the very day which the musicians had decided to go out on strike—rather to refuse to 'strike up.'

In pre-war days Horse Show Week was invariably associated with many musical attractions, but this year the only concert was that on August 7, when Mr. Harry Dear and Miss Kitty Fagan were the vocalists at the 'Mate Orchestral Concert at La Scala Theatre. The orchestral selections were of the 'popular' type, under the direction of Mr. Vincent O'Brien, and seemed to please the audience. Miss Lucy Leenane played the accompaniments satisfactorily.

Quite a delightful interlude during Horse Show Week was the exhibition of folk-music in connection with the Irish spinning and weaving exhibition by the aged peasants of Killoe. An old lady of eighty-seven, Mary Quinn, footed gaily as an Irish jig dancer, to the accompaniment of the Uilleann bagpipes, a really astonishing performance which was greatly appreciated.

An attractive concert was given at La Scala Theatre on August 14, when the principal feature was the singing of Miss Lily Meaghen, described on the programme as the 'Irish Queen of Song.' Mr. Joseph O'Neill also sang some acceptable items. The Dublin Symphony Orchestra gave a fine interpretation of the 'Unfinished' Symphony, and other selections, under the direction of Mr. Vincent O'Brien.

LIVERPOOL

Mr. Gustav Holst had the advantage of idyllic surroundings for his open-air address to the local members of the British Music Society assembled in the garden of Mr. Mason Hutchinson's house at Bromborough in Cheshire, on July 23. Mr. Holst gave a most interesting survey of his work for the last fourteen years at Morley College, in Waterloo Road, London. This is an institution for working men and women, and music is Mr. Holst's department in the general scheme of culture. Under his rule, which we are sure is kindly as well as strict, a great number of amateurs have been trained in choral and orchestral music of the best kind. It is not an evening college for training professionals, and soloists, whether vocal or instrumental, are not specially encouraged. There are two harmony classes, elementary and advanced. College concert is never given without some example of student work in the programme, and Mr. Holst specially mentioned one instance of a beautiful work written by a student at the age of sixty. There are also classes for sight-singing and for the study of orchestral instruments. Mr. Holst has thus at his disposal a home-made choir of sixty-five and an orchestra of fifty-five to sixty. Students are obliged to take up a second subject, so that a soprano soloist may be able to play a violoncello when not singing, or a tenor may take the timpani in addition. Mr. Holst has not the least objection to a bricklayer by occupation being his bass soloist, even in an exacting Bach item, and the priceless experience gained by the necessary wangling of orchestral parts by interchangeable players would teach many modern composers how to economise in overlaid scores. Directed with such enthusiasm and patient persistence, it was not surprising to hear that the forces were equal to giving a creditable account of such difficult music as movements from Bach's B minor Mass and the 'Eroica' Symphony, besides madrigals and part-songs of the English school—works which have a special attraction for Mr. Holst. The performances may perhaps not reach an extraordinary degree of finish, and critical hearers are 'invited at their own risk,' but after hearing Mr. Holst's vivid and humorous description of his work and methods, his audience came to the conclusion that at Morley College he is doing good and a laudable service to his art.

The present season is one of anticipation only, but not of preparation are being heard on all sides. The scheme of the Philharmonic Society's series of ten concerts has been ued in outline. M. Koussevitzky will conduct the opening concert on October 11. Other conductors engaged are Henry Wood, Mr. Albert Coates, Mr. Adrian Boult, Mr. Eugène Goossens, M. Ansermet, M. Bronislaw Ulc, and Mr. Julius Harrison. The solo pianists include Cortôt, Siliti, and Moiseiwitsch, and the instrumentalists, Casals, Thibaud, and the sisters Harrison. There are no startling novelties announced for performance, but it is satisfactory that we are to hear Vaughan Williams' 'London' Symphony and John Ireland's 'A Forgotten Rite.' Also after Mr. Holst's concert visit a personal interest will be taken in a chorus from 'Rig Veda.'

The excellent choir will have its opportunity in 'Requiem' and selections from Act I of 'Arsifamilia,' and in Cornelius' exquisite 'O Death, thou art a tranquil night,' which is competitive choir music worthy the name.

Conducted by Mr. Hopkin Evans, the Welsh Choral Union will give four concerts, three choral and one orchestral. The works selected are Elgar's 'King Olaf,' 'The Messiah,' and 'St. Matthew' Passion, two of which perhaps not great 'draws' from the box-office point of view, but will give notable opportunities for this splendid body of singers to be heard to advantage.

Friends and admirers of the late Harry Evans, and they are many, will be interested to hear that his eldest son, a youth in his teens, has passed his first M.B., London examination, with distinction in biology, winning at the same time a second scholarship at his hospital.

Considerable interest has been taken in the dispatch of a new large concert organ for the Public Halls, Blackburn. Built by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, of Liverpool, it is the largest organ which has yet been made in this city, and a modern instrument of great and varied resources, it is certainly a credit to the builders and an acquisition to Blackburn. Of four manuals, the console with its array of stops is at once an attractive feature. The instrument possesses ample weight of foundation tone and a fine pedal organ, also a carillon stop of three octaves of steel tubes. The builders are justly proud of notable examples of orchestral tone-colour, which they have provided in fluted string-tone, including a creamy octave flute and the orchestral gamba, oboe, and horn. The action is tubular-pneumatic, and the blowing is by a 'Discus' machine operated by an electric motor, the wind pressures varying from 4-in. to 18-in.

Another instance of modern ingenuity in pneumatic action is provided in the adjustable switch-board, which affords endless possibilities of combinations to be fixed on the thirty dumb-pistons giving ready control of the sixty-five speaking stops and four thousand pipes. Exclusive of casework, the organ has cost about £15,000.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

Arrangements for next season are gradually being unfolded. On October 1, at the New Queen's Opera House, there is to be a week's opera by members of the Beecham Company, with the Hallé Orchestra and Mr. Hamilton Harty in charge. The scheme comprises 'Carmen' and 'Faust,' and the casts are up to the old standard. Those who heard Mr. Harty last winter in a concert-performance of 'Carmen' will look for something unusually stimulating. The Manchester Beecham chorus lends valuable aid, and everything points to an artistic triumph to the charities concerned) beneficial success. The Manchester Wholesale Co-operative Society's concerts assume even greater importance than in the recent past. Five concerts have been arranged, at which Misses Myra Jess, Agnes Nicholls, Dorothy Silk, Florence Fielden, Jessie Thomas, Caroline Hatchard, Miriam Licette, and Renée Hemet, and Messrs. Harold Williams, John Coates, Peter Dawson, Edward Isaacs, Captain Stephens, and the Catterall quartet are to appear, in addition to the two choirs conducted by Mr. Alfred Higson, the C.W.S. male choir being responsible for over thirty items during the season. At the first concert, on October 12, the Sale and District Mixed-voice Choir is to sing half a dozen recent Festival testpieces.

I have recently mentioned the efforts of Mr. Charles Neville in giving song recitals well off the beaten track. These he supplemented by singing on July 1 Schubert's 'Schwanengesang' from a folio copy of the original edition and in their original tenor key instead of the more customary transposed baritone one, and if no other purpose were served the event showed that in their transposed form the songs lose much in intensity. The 'North Sea' poems of Heine, particularly 'Atlas' and 'Doppelgänger,' proved a much greater stimulus to composer, singer, and pianist than did the settings of Rellstab. Mr. Neville was happy in association with his old fellow-student, Mr. R. J. Forbes. No one in the last generation or two has at Manchester played Schubert's 'Erl King,' 'Doppelgänger,' or 'Abschied,' with any approach to Mr. Forbes' rhythmic impetuosity. The autumn will bring us the 'Schöne Müllerin' series and the 'Drinking Songs' of Wolf, and later the promise of a modern British series together with the Wolf 'Italienische Lieder.'

The customary Royal Manchester College of Music examination concerts were given under torrid conditions, open windows and doors often spoiling concentration. I was able to be present at only one of the series, and gathered that its quality was on the whole on a rather higher plane than the earlier or later events. The outstanding feature was a student-composition by Mr. Maurice Johnstone, played by a student violinist (Miss Helen Jackson). The results of the composition class under Dr. Keighley are not too frequently brought to light, but Mr. Johnstone's 'Poem' was unaffected stuff that at once gripped and held attention. Its several sections were not too neatly dovetailed, but the subject-matter had some edge—there was no aimless meandering.

The best singing I heard was from Mr. Samuel Worthington, of Bolton, in the great aria from 'Boris Godounov.' He is studying under his fellow-townsmen, Mr. Richard Evans, and on the form displayed in this work shows uncommon promise. Mr. Elie Spivak repeated here two movements of the Elgar Violin Concerto which he recently played at a Noon-tide recital. He is leaving Manchester for London, and will probably rank amongst Dr. Brodsky's more famous pupils. Miss Vyvian Lewis is a young violoncello player of exceptional promise.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE

The Newcastle and District Festival Choir, which since 1918 has given annual open-air performances, decided to have an indoor festival this year, and also to expand the single Sunday afternoon concert into a week-end event by adding two Saturday programmes. The choral items, which were the same for all three occasions, comprised Holst's 'Turn back, O man,' Vaughan-Williams' 'Clap your hands,' Boughton's 'Song of Liberty,' and 'The Messiah' choruses 'And the glory,' 'Hallelujah,' and 'Worthy is the Lamb.'

The singing was really fine, although the numerical weakness of the inner parts detracted from a broad effect, especially in the Handel choruses. On the Saturday afternoon the accompaniments were in the hands of the strings of the Newcastle Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. J. M. Preston at the organ.

The orchestra gave a sprightly performance of Cimarosa's 'Il Matrimonio Segreto' Overture, and a reading of Mozart's 'Serenade' which, though somewhat lacking in delicacy, was nevertheless quite charming. Mr. Preston gave several organ solos in his usual masterly fashion, and in his accompaniments to the choruses ably filled the gap caused by the absence of wind instruments. In the evening the St. Hilda's Brass Band, conducted by Mr. J. Oliver, was heard in the slow movement from the 'Unfinished,' the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, and in some arrangements. It is, however, a pity that a band of such splendid technique should have included in its excellent programme the 'Lost Chord,' if only as an encore.

On the Sunday afternoon the choral items were repeated with full orchestral accompaniment, the programme being completed with the 'Euryanthe' and 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overtures, Berlioz's 'Hungarian March,' and selections from 'Meistersinger.' Dr. W. G. Whittaker conducted at all the performances.

PORTSMOUTH AND DISTRICT

Portsmouth is to have another series of 'international celebrity' subscription concerts during the coming season. Four are being arranged, and it is hoped to open with an operatic concert on October 21, when the artists will be Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Maurice d'Oisly, Mr. Peter Dawson, and Mr. William James, the Australian pianist. The series will include the usual two popular programmes, on November 26 and February 25, but a special feature will be a Kubelik concert on December 10, marking the return of the violinist to England after an absence of eight years.

The Sunday orchestral concerts on the South Parade Pier by the Service Bands continue to give great pleasure to visitors and residents alike. The local authorities have long been pressed to make provision for municipal concerts—in fact the Town Hall committee went so far as to draw up a scheme last season—but it is often overlooked that the South Parade Pier concerts are also municipal concerts, inasmuch as the Pier is a Corporation concern and run by a Corporation committee. During July and August the committee has extended the band engagements to cover daily performances, afternoon and evening, and thus, since the period dealt with in last month's notes, the R.G.A. band (under Mr. Charles Lee), in addition to the Sunday symphony concerts on July 24, fulfilled a week's engagement, the Royal Marine Artillery band (Mr. R. P. O'Donnell) a fortnight, and the Royal Marine Light Infantry Band (Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell) a week. The Sunday vocalists during the same period were Miss Gladys Hay-Dillon, Miss Dorothy Colston, Mr. Sydney Wilson, and Señor Jose de Moraes.

In addition to the band concerts, the J. H. Squire Quintet has been heard in some delightful programmes each morning at the Minor Hall, as well as in entr'acte music at the theatrical performances. The Cloister Singers, a Southampton male-voice quartet (Messrs. J. H. Tribe, George de Orfe, Arthur Sewell, and Frank Parry), were also responsible for some tasteful concerted programmes between the afternoon and evening entertainments from August 8 to 12.

A signal honour has been paid to the Royal Naval School of Music, Eastney Barracks, by the command to supply the band which will accompany His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in the battle cruiser 'Renown' on his forthcoming visit to India. It was anticipated in many quarters that the choice would have fallen on the Welsh Guards, and the Naval School is the envied of Service organizations. It is interesting to note that in view of the comparative dearth of orchestral concerts, the authorities of the Royal Naval School of Music were also approached recently with a view to giving the local public a series of free open-air performances, but unfortunately facilities were not available, and for this season the idea had to be dropped. But the matter is not to be lost sight of, and there is no doubt that something more will be heard of it before next summer. There is, of course, the other side of the question,—competition with the civilian bands, which at present pay their expenses for the performances in the public parks on week-days and Sundays by means of collections and programme money; but no doubt the difficulty could be got over. The civilian bands, by the way, are arranging for a grand musical festival to be held at the Town Hall in September.

There has been an interesting development, or, rather, amalgamation, in the district, the Fareham Philharmonic Society and the Fareham Music Circle having decided to join forces under the name of the former. Thus while the old Society retains its name, the new one gains in prestige. The Philharmonic, under the conductorship of Captain Eugene Spinney, who has also accepted the leadership of the new organization, rendered splendid service for local music in the past. The Philharmonic suspended operations during the war. In October, 1914, Captain Spinney, with the 4th Hants Regiment, went to India, and thence to Mesopotamia, where he took part in an important expedition to Persia. He met with an accident during the operations, being crushed by a horse, and was invalided out of the Army in 1918.

SOUTH WALES

Concerts here this month have been limited to rehearsals by various organizations competing at the National Eisteddfod held at Carnarvon, and to concerts held locally in aid of the distress funds. Among these latter may be mentioned that given by the Gwalia Male-Voice Party at the Palace, Ebbw Vale, on July 24, under the conductorship of Mr. W. R. Lewis, assisted by artists of local repute, and an orchestra under Mr. A. Ford. The attendance was good, and the Party gave a very creditable reading of 'The Martyrs.'

Preparations for the forthcoming season are already begun. At Cardiff five 'international celebrity' concerts will be held, at which will appear successively the following artists; (1) Kubelik and Leila Megane; (2) Tetrassini, Bieluaia, Bratza, and Adela Verne; (3) Hofmann; (4) Kreisler; and (5) an operatic party. The Tredegar Choral Union has decided to prepare 'St. Paul' as its next work, and practice commences in September. The Society is in a healthy condition both numerically and financially. The Treharris and District Welsh Baptist Churches have completed their arrangements for next year's singing festival. 'The Heavens are telling' and some Welsh anthems have been selected, and the conductor appointed is Mr. D. Vernon Davies.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

At the time of writing, Amsterdam has, musically, good to rest for the while, as also have Rotterdam and the lesser musical centres of Holland. The only music-dispensing venue is The Hague—or, more properly speaking, Scheveningen—although even here the exceedingly hot weather is probably accountable for much less being done than in former years. Appearances of soloists have up to now been restricted to the fulfilment of engagements previously closed with the management of the Kurhaus. Novelties have so far not been included in the scheme of the Symphony Concerts, unless Dvorák's symphonic poem 'The Golden Spinning-Wheel' be regarded in that light. It certainly was new to the majority of concert-goers. From a purely musical point of view acquaintance with the work was very gratifying, even though the thematic material compared with the composer's earlier works is lacking in poignancy. As a specimen of programme music it may be regarded as a failure. It is not clear what induced Dvorák to choose for musical treatment a subject so unfit for that underlying this symphonic poem. The plot deals with a witch cutting up a beautiful girl in order to pass off her own daughter as bride for a king who chances to be hunting in the neighbouring woods. The tables are turned by the entry of a benevolent sorcerer, who restores the unfortunate girl to life through the medium of a golden spinning wheel. The remainder of the story can easily be imagined. In the same concert Madame Vera Schapira appeared as soloist in Saint-Saëns' spirited G minor Concerto, a work which for this artist's touch proved far too delicate. Her stupendous technique, moreover, tempted her to race through the third movement of the Concerto. As a display of virtuosity this was marvellous enough, but it did not go to strengthen belief in the pianist's musicianship. The programme was completed by two exceedingly bright works, viz. Glazounov's 'Carnaval' Overture and 'L'apprenti sorcier' by Paul Dukas, both of which received splendid interpretations under Schnévoigt. The following concert furnishes the nowadays rare sensation of a virtuoso on the double-bass in the appearance of Herr Goedecke, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. Assisted by M. Sam Swaap, played a Grand Duo for double-bass, violin, and orchestra by Giovanni Bottesini. Both artists acquitted themselves in splendid fashion, and earned vociferous applause. The programme included also the 'Oberon' Overture by Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini,' and Brahms' E minor Symphony, which latter, at the hands of Schnévoigt, received somewhat too impulsive treatment. The succeeding two concerts had Madame Birgit Eng

M. Jacques Thibaud for soloists. Besides some songs Richard Strauss, Madame Engell sang a concert-aria by art, with pianoforte obbligato and orchestra, in which provided the audience with a rare treat. Her unique ing (especially in the higher register) secured her a great success. M. Thibaud gave a compelling reading of Mozart's Certo in E flat, and of Saint-Saëns' Havaïnaise.

W. HARMANS.

BERLIN

Recently the orchestra played a novelty, viz., Arnold Mendelssohn's first Symphony (Op. 85). Not long ago Mendelssohn, a grand-nephew of Felix Mendelssohn, published a Sonata (Op. 71) for violin and pianoforte, a work that places him foremost among the composers who cast modern thought into the classical mould. The sonata form, which is also the scaffold of the symphony, has not been supplanted by impressionism or expressionism. Both desire to crush the form. Debussy's impressionism brushed the sonata form aside and created a musical sham form. It was a protest against Richard Wagner. We now know that Debussy was but an episode, his whole-tone scale a mannerism. He did not distinguish Wagner. Arnold Schönberg, the latest and chief of the expressionists and the most remarkable personality in the music of to-day, composes asymmetrically and finally. He dispenses with the outer ear and hears from within. What will it all come to?

And while these revolutionaries and red-hot communists seek new forms and new modes of expression, there are composers who create beautiful works on the lines laid down by the great masters. To these belong Arnold Mendelssohn, Richard Reuss, Büttner, Pfizner, Walter Niemann, Hanna Senfter, and others.

Arnold Mendelssohn calls his Symphony a portrait. It is possibly a portrait of himself: at any rate, it is the reflex of a great personality striving after that which is highest and noblest in the world. True, the passion is not of mental strength, but from start to finish there is a strong personal note. It is no 'paper music.' The themes are simple and warm, standing on the firm ground of tonality. The work is well built, the four movements flowing in character and length the classical symphonic form. It was enthusiastically applauded by the numerous admirers of the composer.

THE JUBILEE OF 'DER FREISCHÜTZ'

At the opening of the 19th century Rossini reigned supreme all over Germany and Austria, while France refused to 'allow' to listen to the seductive melodies of the great Italian. Two events fell like bombs into this state of things, and caused a revolution in the world of music: the birth of Beethoven's 'Fidelio', at first declined, and in the year 1814 sensation, and in 1822 enthusiasm. A greater victory was achieved by Weber's 'Freischütz', which was produced for the first time on June 18, 1821, at the Königsstadt Theatre, Berlin.

'Freischütz' has hit the mark,' said the composer to the librettist, immediately after the performance. Indeed it had, for no opera before or since ever became so popular or so generally a favourite. It was played at Paris (1824) and hissed, just to show that every rule has its exception; it was given in London with such favour that a gentleman advertising for a servant is said to have found it necessary to stipulate that he should not be able to whistle the airs.

The Overture when played at Dresden at a concert given by Hermann, the celebrated clarinetist, toward the end of 1820, did not make much impression. The originality of the music prevented the people from appreciating its beauty. At Berlin the Overture was enthusiastically received. As a dramatic prelude it ranks with the great 'Leonora' and the 'Annhäusern' overtures—indeed, as regards picturesque scriptiveness, concentrated energy, and varied splendour of orchestral effect it stands at the head of introductory symphonies. It is extraordinary how this opera solves the most difficult theoretical problems with perfect certainty. There are dialogues—i.e., outwardly the work is but a singspiel—yet everywhere it teems with dramatic truth, and it is remarkable how the dramatic element grows out of the Volkslied.

Weber added no new instruments to his orchestra, yet he remodelled the entire art of instrumentation, and is in this respect the immediate predecessor of Berlioz and Wagner. For every thought he found a characteristic orchestral colour, employing at the same time a wise economy as regards modulation and orchestral means. Indeed, the professional critics were not satisfied. They maintained that Weber could write a pretty Singspiel, but not an opera in the grand style. Weber proved that they were wrong. The solitary giant at Vienna alone felt the greatness of 'Freischütz', and he expressed his astonishment and admiration of the work to Rochlitz.

The opera meant nothing less than the turning-point from the romantic opera to the musical drama. Weber had created the German Volksoper, and at the same time the musico-dramatic style.

The Germans discovered their Mozart and Beethoven much later than Weber—their Bach even later still. It was love that showed them the road to Weber.

Said Wagner: 'Never lived a musician more German than you: the Briton has done you justice, the Frenchman admires you, but the German loves you—you are his, a beautiful day in his life, a warm drop of his blood, a piece of his heart!'

BACH FESTIVALS

Although the spring musical season has terminated some time ago, several musical events have yet to be recorded. After the eighth Deutsche Bachfest had paved the way—by producing a number of hitherto inaccessible, important compositions of the pre-Bach period as well as by contemporaries of Bach, all of which are now published by Breitkopf & Härtel, of Leipzig—Ulm on the Danube celebrated for the first time in the South of Germany a Bach festival on a grand scale. Bach's art is a Northern product, and the leading Church musicians of the South had somewhat neglected its study. They have atoned for this neglect, for the festival, under the conductorship of Musikdirektor Fritz Hayn, and with the help of distinguished soloists—T. Goppner (flute), F. Hepps (violin), Karl Bittner (trumpet), Gabriele von Lottner (cembalum), and Arno Landmann (organ)—was a great success. A yet greater success attended the ninth Bach-Fest at Hamburg. It has proved that Germany has no cause for pessimism and fatalism, so long as she cherishes the great works of the past. It is impossible in the space at disposal to exhaust the wealth of music presented to enthusiastic and well-disposed audiences. The programmes contained soli for organ, cembalum, gamba, violin, and voice, chamber music, and orchestral dances by William Brade and Thomas Simpson, two English musicians, who had made their mark at old Hamburg. The culminating point was the production of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion (without cuts) in two concerts, and the B minor Mass, conducted respectively by Alfred Sittard and Gerhard von Keussler.

It is remarkable how, in these troublous times, these old works maintain their hold on the public with increasing strength. Year after year the Neue Bachgesellschaft, in addition to the Bach-Jahrbuch, publishes under the title of 'Die Kunst des Bach'schen Geschlechts' compositions by members of the Bach family, that show the strongly creative wave of this race of musicians. Recently we heard an Overture by Johann Bernhard Bach (1670-1749) for two violins and string orchestra, in the form of a suite, consisting of an overture, followed by several dances, and a Mass in E minor for mixed chorus and string orchestra by Nicolaus Bach (1660-1753), written for use in the Protestant church. Johann Sebastian Bach is conquering the world. The 'St. Matthew' Passion was performed at Barcelona, Spain, leaving a deep impression. Christiania followed with the first Norwegian Bach festival, under the direction of Prof. Straube (Leipzig), lasting four days. The programmes comprised cantatas, soli for organ and violoncello, suites, concertos, and finally the 'St. John' Passion. The Press speaks enthusiastically of the proceedings, which is the more remarkable as Bach's music is little known and as little cultivated in Norway.

News comes from various towns of the performance of Johann Hermann Schein's sacred compositions. Schein is one of the worthiest predecessors of Bach (see Grove iv., p. 255). The publication of his compositions (by Breitkopf & Härtel) makes a valuable addition to the store of Church music, and the performance of his works is proof of the fact that the people are seeking in music those things which the world cannot give. A Passion by Johann Theodorich Römihildt (1684-1756) was performed at Meiningen. Although this music, when compared with that of the great Thomas Cantor, shines as does a star to the sun, yet Römihildt's is a bright star worthy of study. Each of the two parts is preceded by an introduction consisting of Lamento and a Sonatina. The choruses are lively and characteristic, and the recitatives, especially those of Jesus, rich in colour and beautiful in expression. Römihildt was a master capable of achieving great things with limited means. It was a thoughtful act of Kirchenmusikdirektor Karl Paulke (Meiningen) to resuscitate this forgotten musician, and present the world with a score that will be welcomed, especially by smaller societies.

The performance of Waldemar von Bausnern's 'Hohelied vom Leben und Sterben,' at the little Westphalian town of Herford, famous for its linen manufactures, was an artistic event of the highest importance. The love for musical art that compassed the production of such a very difficult work in a small town, appears like a fairy-tale. It proves that outside all the prevalent materialism there is a great deal of idealism that augurs well for the future of the art. The work is interesting, as the composer breaks through technical form and presents an oratorio filled with new ideas. Two little German towns put on festive garb during the month of July. Kreuzburg in Thuringia celebrated the three hundred and fiftieth birthday of her great son Michael Praetorius (1571-1621). Two concerts of secular and sacred music were given by the Meiningen Bach-Verein, under Karl Paulke, with Frau Ran-Weber (vocalist) and Herr Gerhard Otto (organ), both from Bückeburg. The programmes contained choruses, and vocal and organ solos. On July 17, little Eschenbach, in Bavaria, witnessed an unusual conflux of strangers to celebrate conjointly with the inhabitants the seven-hundredth anniversary of the birth of her great son, Wolfram, the author of 'Parzival.' The Fest included a serenade, a festive procession, and a musical play, written and composed by Pfarrer Heller, an historic church concert, and a sermon worthy of the occasion. After having a year ago produced Handel's opera 'Rodelinde' (1725), the students' union of Göttingen, under the guidance of Dr. Oskar Hagen, followed this year with the production of the opera 'Otto and Teophano,' thereby destroying the long cherished tradition, which had become almost a dogma, that Handel's operas were but an aberration, at best a preparation for the great oratorios. Both operas prove definitely the immense dramatic power of Handel. Dr. Moser reports: 'We felt deeply the melodic persistence of the most charming arias, the vivacity and smoothness of the recitatives, the refreshing power of the final choruses, and stood ashamed at the fact that for two centuries a treasure of not only most noble music but of vivid dramatic portrayal had lain slumbering.'

F. ERCKMANN.

PARIS

M. MESSEGER

At the time of writing the health of M. André Messager, if not all that his friends could wish, is decidedly on the mend. So the Paris edition of one of the various London daily papers with 'the largest circulation' has thoughtfully refrained from again announcing his supposed demise. Meanwhile, the composer has been suffering from congestion of the lungs, and at one time his condition was of the gravest. It is to be hoped that M. Messager may long be spared premature obituary notices, and that he will compose another 'Véronique.'

'Véronique,' by the way, is occasionally given in the smaller theatres, and always to full houses—hot evenings excepted. The work is well sung, for if the voice of the artist who impersonates the heroine is not always of the first quality, it is at least properly used. As to this effective baritone rôle, the most distinguished singers are glad to appear in the part. Several baritones from the Opéra-Comique, for example, may be heard in it both at Paris and in the provinces. Indeed, opérette in France is immensely helped by the co-operation of capable performers. 'Le Mousquetaires au Couvent' and 'Les Cloches de Corneville' are frequently performed with some noted tenor, while baritone of the first order may be specially engaged for 'La Petite Mariée.' And the acting, no matter how small the part, is excellent, for the French, like the Italians, are born mimes. Thus is lustre shed upon the light opera stage.

There is talk of producing several new opérettes during the coming winter, each of which is said to be precisely 'what the public wants.' The projects, however, languish for want of financial backing. Last summer one of two really good things, though favourably received, soon went the way of less successful productions. Consequently capitalists are fighting shy of proposed ventures, though they are ready enough to risk their money over revivals with well-selected casts. 'La Fille de Madame Angot,' for example, never lacks backers, for its tuneful airs prove attractive—as they have any time these many years.

THE OPÉRA

The Opera has benefited from the August tourist traffic. Almost every week-ending Briton makes a point of putting in at least one appearance there, if only to admire the auditorium. 'Les Huguenots,' which so far as length is concerned, may be said to give value for money, again figures in the répertoire. The Raoul of the occasion is an Irishman, whose voice is remarkable for a particularly useful upper register, the most arduous phrases being well within the singer's means. It is, however, unfortunate that his singing has few other recommendations, for the character demands a great deal more than mere voice. The other artists are competent, but it must be confessed that the pre-war performances of the work at Covent Garden were in advance of those now being given at the Paris Opéra. Meanwhile, the Parisians seem to be pleased with the representation, so perhaps nothing else matters.

Gabriel Dupont's 'Antar' continues to draw good houses owing in great measure to the vivid scenery, which is of the ultra-impressionist school. The work also is helped by its Eastern story, the French being extraordinarily interested in the East. The opera might, however, be shortened with advantage to everybody concerned.

THE OPÉRA-COMIQUE

After the holidays the Italian management (the brother Isola) of the Opéra-Comique will doubtless set about producing novelties: for the direction is a progressive one, and every year sees the répertoire augmented—and occasionally rendered additionally attractive—by the inclusion of something fresh. Unfortunately a percentage of these works fail to please. Musicians they may be, but musical they are not. Each has a purpose; its composer is a person of talent—with an unlimited contempt for the forms which have served their betters, and sustained melody is not thought necessary. 'Puccini,' the composers will tell you, 'is little better than Ponchielli, and Ponchielli is almost as banal as Verdi.' Yet the would-be rival works seldom live long, while the management rings the changes on 'Traviata,' 'Tosca,' and 'Butterfly,' varied by constant representations of 'Werther,' 'Manon,' 'Mignon,' that unequal but popular entertainment 'Le Roi d'Ys' (which does not live up to its atmospheric Overture), 'Carmen,' and 'Mireille,' the last named being performed frequently. A week is seldom allowed to pass without 'Manon' being heard, and as a rule the cast is a satisfactory one. 'Carmen' is difficult to avoid, as also are 'Butterfly' and 'Mignon,' the respective plots being much appreciated by Parisians. Popular, too, is 'Les Contes d'Hoffmann,' which has had several performances this month. The most notable thing about the representation has been the appearance of M. Lafont in the four baritone rôles. His fine voice is so well directed, his acting is so impressive, and in the Venice scene he cuts so brave a figure, that the cognoscenti pay for a seat mainly to savour the art of M. Lafont. His Don Quichotte, an outstanding feature of the unfortunate Hammerstein London season will—or should—be remembered.

We hear a great deal about the slump in theatrical affairs; that the hot weather keeps people away from the theatre; and that at this time of the year Parisians prefer to spend their evenings out of doors. Nevertheless, waiting queues besiege the Opéra-Comique box-office from early morn till dewy eve.

OPEN-AIR CONCERTS

The open-air concerts in the Tuileries Gardens continue to attract tout Paris. A Vincent d'Indy programme has been given—without, however, going very far towards popularising the composer's somewhat dull music—and selections from 'Cavalleria Rusticana' (which does not go well in French) have roused the audience to enthusiasm. The acoustics are unusually good, owing, perhaps, to the platform, with its well-contrived sounding-board, being fairly high. On a calm day pianissimo effects in alt are heard distinctly in the back row of the enclosure, which seats two thousand persons. They are also heard almost equally well by those who prefer to save their money by remaining on the outside of the enclosure.

It may, by the way, interest English critics to learn that at Paris the Press is not welcomed by those who are in charge of musical affairs, al fresco or otherwise. The accredited correspondents of equally accredited London and provincial papers are sometimes invited to 'assist' at the députation générale of an opera, but their presence at concerts is not encouraged. Managers argue that tickets are a marketable commodity, and that favourable criticisms in the papers of other countries are of no use to them. In default of evidence to the contrary, the objection is a sound one.

PARIS AND CARUSO

Paris has expressed a certain amount of regret on learning of Caruso's untimely end; but the calamity has made little difference to musical circles. When, some time before the war, he appeared at the Opéra, his style was considered too Italian; the exploiting of the voice by holding the upper notes met with disapproval, the French giving the preference to the graces of singing. The large fee which Caruso was paid aroused feelings of envy in the breasts of native tenors, who thought him over-rated.

Socially, however, Caruso was fêted—especially by the Parisiennes. This made the other tenors all the more jealous.

GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

On July 8 there passed away Giovanni Ricardo Daviesi, a singing-master whose interesting and varied though unhappy artistic life did much to unite Italy and England in the last century. Born at Rome on April 12, 1839, Daviesi early manifested a surprisingly rich contralto voice, and after having frequented the then flourishing school of singing in the Hospice of St. Michael, he was admitted successively to the choirs of the Lateran and St. Peter's (the Cappella Giulia), in 1870 passing into the Sistine Choir. Already, at his native city, he had begun the study of medicine, and shortly after his admission to the Sistine, desiring a more ample field for his activities, and no doubt influenced by the political events of that epoch, Daviesi went to London, where he continued his singing, and at the same time completed his medical studies under the guidance of Morell Mackenzie. The great misfortune of his life—a throat malady—ruined for ever his vocal career, and after an unsuccessful operation at Berlin he returned to London, deeply embittered, and there founded his first singing school. Later he was recalled to Italy, and established himself at Milan. At the age of sixty he visited Russia, where he directed the Conservatoires of Irkutsk and Moscow. It is related of Daviesi that when Gounod heard him sing at Paris, the great Frenchman said: 'Est-ce que vous êtes peintre, Monsieur?' 'Non, pour-quoi?' replied the singer. 'Parce-que vous chantez avec tant de couleur,' was Gounod's flattering response.

From Vienna comes the news of the death of Leon Stein, author of many well-known operetta libretti, amongst them 'The Merry Widow' and 'The Count of Luxembourg.'

The Press reports a curious accident at the Diana Theatre at Milan, on the night of August 1. During Act 3 of 'Fra Diavolo' the tenor seizes an ancient gun, and this, no doubt, for an unexplained reason, burst in his face, producing burns and contusions. The incident would have passed without much comment were it not for the fact that it was at the Diana that an atrocious anarchist outrage was perpetrated a short time ago. Owing to this fact, a panic ensued in the theatre, which fortunately was subdued without serious consequences.

The Choral Society of the Harvard University Glee Club, under the direction of Mr. T. Davidson, is at present in Europe, and has given several concerts in France, at the Paris Trocadéro and elsewhere. On August 1 the Society gave a concert at the Rossini Liceo of Pesaro, with the following programme: 'Adoremus Te' (Palestrina), 'Crucifixus' (Lotti), 'In dulci jubilo,' 'Miserere' (Allegri), 'Now let every tongue adore Thee' (Bach), Popular song (Brahms), 'May is coming' (Morley), 'The Tower of Babel' (Rubinstein), 'Drake's drum' (Coleridge-Taylor), 'On the water' (Mendelssohn), 'Serenade' (Borodin), Hallelujah Chorus (Handel). The Society is now proceeding to Ravenna, to take part in the Dante celebrations.

A fine new organ, the gift of American benefactors, has been erected in the great hall of the Pontifical School of Music at Rome. The official opening has been deferred to the beginning of the new season, but on July 25 the feast of St. James, an informal opening was held by Dr. Manari, organist of the Lateran, in honour of the name-day of the Pope, who is greatly interested in the school. The programme comprised Fugue in E flat (Bach), 'Récit de Nazard' (Clerambault), Fantasy (Guilmant), Caprice (F. Capocci), Spring Chorus (transcribed for organ by M. E. Bossi) (Haydn), Gavotte (from the twelve Organ Sonatas) (G. B. Martini), and Toccata (Dubois).

LEONARD PEYTON.

Miscellaneous

The August number of The Pianomaker devotes two of its advertisement pages to 'A Personal Note,' explaining why the space in question is not occupied by the usual advertisements of the Gramophone Company. The note says:

'The Company wished us to accept a record announcement of Fritz Kreisler, which they say has been accepted by the Press of the country without demur. That may be true, but The Pianomaker will not give publicity to any late alien enemy, however high may be his standing in the artistic world. For that policy we are willingly sacrificing the advertising revenue we receive from the Gramophone Company.'

Whatever we may think of our contemporary's policy, we must respect the courage and self-sacrifice with which it sticks to its guns. Unfortunately the Personal Note, by going into detail, manages to give the Kreisler record two pages of excellent advertisement, free. We hope the late alien enemy and the Gramophone Company are duly grateful.

We have received No. 9 (July, 1921) of the 'Bulletin de la Société Française de Musicologie' (Paris: Librairie Fischbacher). It contains many articles of great interest, with special reference to French music and musicians. The contributors include G. de Saint-Foix, Ch. Bouvet, L. de la Laurencie, Leon Vallez, F. Boghen, and others. In the Miscellaneous there is a record of the recent discovery at Milan by M. G. de Saint-Foix, of the burial certificate of the celebrated G. B. Sammartini, who died on January 15, 1775, the first authentic document hitherto discovered regarding this remarkable composer. Burney saw him at Milan in 1770, but until now, the date of his death was unknown.

The office of 'The Techniquer' has been removed from 33, Orchard Street, W. 1, to 21, Boundary Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

Answers to Correspondents

F. L. B.—A version of 'Angelus ad Virginem,' harmonized for S.A.T.B. by Martin Shaw, appears in 'The English Carol Book,' Series I (Mowbray). 'Alma Redemptoris Mater' is an antiphon. There are two versions, one florid, the other simple. Both will be found in 'A Manual of Gregorian Chant' (Desclee, Lefebvre et Cie., Tournai, Belgium). The book is no doubt obtainable at Roman Catholic book-shops). The 'Ave Marie' mentioned in the 'Prioress' Tale' may have been the antiphon 'Ave Maria,' or the office hymn for the Annunciation, 'Ave Maris Stella' (see 'English Hymnal,' 213).

C. TILTMAN.—The passage you quote is from Handel's 'Holy, Holy,' an air in 'Redemption.' According to the title-page, 'Redemption' is 'a Sacred Oratorio in Score Selected from the Favourite Works of G. F. Handel, and formed into a Regular Drama; by Samuel Arnold, Mus. Doc., Oxon: Organist of Westminster Abbey.' So far as we know, the work has never been reprinted. The Air is published by Messrs. Novello.

F. C. J. S.—The St. Paul's Cathedral music lists are not published in full in any journal, but we understand that the printers, Messrs. Thomas, White Street, E.C. 2, will send you a copy at any time on receipt of a stamped envelope.

EQUAL TEMPERAMENT.—'A Manual of Pianoforte Training,' by H. Keatley Moore, will meet your needs. It is published by Musical Opinion, Chichester Chambers, Chancery Lane, W.C. 2 (2s.).

P. L. C.—The German address of Messrs. Bechstein is Berlin. They have no branch in London so far as we can ascertain.

G. WILLIAMS.—Try Stanford & Forsyth's 'History of Music' (Macmillan, and Stainer & Bell), or Davey's 'History of Music' (Curwen).

CONTENTS

	Page.
Early English Chamber Music. By Rutland Boughton ( concluded )	611
The Dramatic Works of Vincent d'Indy. The Music of 'Saint-Christophe.' By M.-D. Calvocoressi ( concluded )	613
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XX. John Redford. By W. H. Grattan Flood	617
The National Eisteddfod. By Alfred Kalisch	618
Music of the 16th Century and To-day. By C. M. Smith-Dodsworth	620
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	621
Liszt, the Pianist. By Camille Saint-Saëns	623
The League of Arts	624
Folk-Dancing: Summer School at Cheltenham	624
Enrico Caruso	625
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	625
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	626
New Music	627
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	630
British Music at the Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts	630
Church and Organ Music	631
Organs and Organists at Paris. By A. M. Henderson ( illustrated )	631
Father Howe, an Old-time Maker of Organs. By Andrew Freeman ( illustrated )	633
Royal College of Organists. Diploma Distribution and Annual General Meeting	641
What is Antiphonal Singing? By T. Francis Forth	645
Chamber Music for Amateurs	648
Letters to the Editor	649
Royal Academy of Music	652
A Corelli Forgery	652
Sixty Years Ago	652
National Council for Music in Wales. Second Annual Conference	652
Obituary ( with Portrait )	653
The Genius of Dunstable	654
First Tour of the South African Festival Choir ( illustrated )	654
Music in the Provinces	655
Musical Notes from Abroad	658
Miscellaneous	661
Answers to Correspondents	662

Music:

'Jesus shall reign.' Adapted to the War Hymn-Anthem, 'Save them, O Lord.' By Ferris Tozer

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number:

'March of the Cameron Men.' For Chorus of Mixed Voices (unaccompanied). By Grawville Bantock.

LITHOGRAPHING and DUPLICATING. Send MS. and stamp for estimate, Ibbotson & Co., 25, York Street, Wakefield.

£200 WORTH! Music for Mixed and Male Voices. Works, Anthems, Part-Songs. Half published price. Overstocked library. 2d. stamp for either list. Mr. Woolley, 85, Oxford Street, Reading.

CARUSO AUTOGRAPH LETTER. Offers. 326, Lytham Road, Blackpool.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED

BACH, J. S.—Solos from the Sacred Cantatas. For Sets for Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. 2s. each (For Contents, see page 672.)

—Two Chorales ("Rejoice and Sing," and "All darkness flies.") (No. 242, Novello's Short Anthems.) 2d.

BARNBY, J.—"The eyes of all wait upon Thee." Anthem for Harvest, from "I will give thanks." (No. 243, Novello's Short Anthems.) 2d.

COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.—"Hiawatha's Wedding Feast." A Selection arranged for small orchestra by W. G. ROSS. Piano Conductor, 2s. 3d.; 1st Violin 2s. 3d.; 2nd Violin, 1s. 6d.; Viola, 1s. 6d.; Violoncello 1s. 6d.; Basso, 1s. 6d.; Wind parts, &c., 15s. 6d.

RAWLINSON, H.—"Aubade." Arranged for small orchestra by HOWARD CARR. 1st Violin (Conductor), 8d.; 2nd Violin, 8d.; Viola, 8d.; Violoncello and Basso, 8d.; Wind parts, 3s. 4d.

—"Serenade." Arranged for small orchestra by HOWARD CARR. 1st Violin (Conductor), 8d.; 2nd Violin 4d.; Viola, 4d.; Violoncello and Basso, 8d.; Wind parts 1s. 8d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 351), contains the following music in both notations: "Soldier Lad." Unison Song. Arranged from the Little Russian Folk song, "Minka." "Twinkle, twinkle, little star." Two part Canon for equal voices. Composed by GEORGE RATHBONE. 2d.

STOCK, F.—"Souvenir." For Violin and Piano. 2s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2361. Two Chorales ("Rejoice and Sing," and "All darkness flies") J. S. BACH 1½d.

No. 2362. "Dream-Love." Four-part Song. PERCY E. FLETCHER 3d.

No. 2363. "In ev'ry place." Madrigal for S.A.T.B. Edited by LIONEL BENSON. THOMAS MORLEY 2d.

No. 2364. "The eyes of all wait upon Thee." Anthem for Harvest, from "I will give thanks." J. BARNBY 2d.

TOZER, FERRIS.—"Jesus shall reign." Hymn Anthem. (No. 943, The Musical Times.) 2d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"The Peace of God." Anthem. 10 cents (4d.).

HALL, W. H.—"Alma Mater" (Columbia). Chorus for T.T.B.B.

PROTHEROE, D.—"Dolly." A Pastoral for Men's Voices. 12 cents (6d.).

BLACKBURN'S EDITION OF ORATORIOS

Edited by ARTHUR PEARSON.

HYMN OF PRAISE.

ST. PAUL.

CREATION.

JUDAS.

ELIJAH.

WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

Price 1s. 6d. each, 25% discount allowed to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

To introduce, a sample will be sent for 1s., or the six assorted as above for 5s., post free to officials, stating position held, when sending.

Ask for samples of our SACRED CANTATAS. A large selection to choose from.

JOHN BLACKBURN LTD., MUSIC PUBLISHERS, 188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

MUSIC, PIANOS, GRAMOPHONES.—Exceptional opportunity for purchasing an old-established BUSINESS in large market town, Eastern Counties. Very fine premises. First-class stock. Valuation about £3,500. Premises freehold, can be purchased or leased. Write "Music," at Horncastles, 60, Cheapside, E.C.2.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

E. M. SMYTH.

ON THE CLIFFS OF CORNWALL.

Prelude to Act 2 of "The Wreckers."

Full Score, 15s. String Parts, 4s. 2d. Wind Parts, 15s. 2d.
Pianoforte Solo, 3s.

SONGS FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO OR BARITONE.

With Instrumental or Pianoforte Accompaniment.
English and French Words.

1. ODELETTE.

Full Score, 10s. Instrumental Parts, 5s. 11d. Voice and Pianoforte, 2s.

2. THE DANCE.

Full Score, 10s. Instrumental Parts, 5s. 6d. Voice and Pianoforte, 2s.

3. CHRYSILLA.

Full Score, 6s. Instrumental Parts, 4s. 2d. Voice and Pianoforte, 2s.
Voice, Violin, and Pianoforte, 2s.

4. ANACREONTIC ODE.

Full Score, 10s. Instrumental Parts, 8s. Voice and Pianoforte, 2s.

MASS IN D.

Vocal Score, 4s. String Parts, 17s. 6d.
Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

SHORT CHORAL PRELUDES for the Organ.

Nos. 1-3 ... .. 2s. 3d.
Nos. 4 and 5 ... .. 2s. 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MINOR MELODIES

Lyrics and Songs for Musical Setting

BY

J. M. STUART-YOUNG.

Ready about May, 1921, through Messrs. T. &amp; A. CONSTABLE, at the University Press, Edinburgh, at 10s. 6d. net per copy, to the general public, first edition of 2,000 copies. 250 pp., Crown 8vo.

NOTE.—Composers may secure single copies on sending one or more of their published songs, as proof of their bona fides, and 6d. (to cover cost of packing and postage) to

THE MISSES HARVEY, TYPISTS,

45, ST. ALBAN'S ROAD, SEVEN KINGS, ESSEX.

"MINOR MELODIES" will be followed a few months later by a second volume of Lyrics, this time with more tropical settings. Mr. Stuart-Young is permanently resident in West Africa under the name of "THE SEDUCTIVE COAST." Composers who acquire "Minor Melodies," and who wish to hold an early reserve on the lyrics now being written, should ask the Misses HARVEY to note down their wish for the new volume. It will be supplied to composers on the same terms (cost of postage and packing only).

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me."

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

GRANVILLE BANTOCK

FIVE NEW SONGS

WORDS ADAPTED FROM THE CHINESE BY

E. POWYS MATHERS.

THE EMPEROR. G minor (C to E flat) and A minor.

THE RED LOTUS. A minor, B minor (C to F sharp), and D minor.

IN THE PALACE. E flat, F (C to F sharp), and G.

THE PEACH FLOWER. G minor (D flat to E) and A minor.

THE GARDEN OF BAMBOOS. G minor, A minor (D to E), and C minor.

Price 2s. net each.

"The words have a life and charm that is genuinely fresh as well as exotic. Prof. Bantock, with his subtle harmonies and rhythms, has re-delivered the poems in music that is a delight to render or receive."
—The Bookman.

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

And of all Musicsellers.

VALSE LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND THREEPENCE.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRAS

	s. d.
String Parts ... ..	2 8
Wind Parts ... ..	5 4
Harp (or Pianoforte) ... ..	1 6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WILLIAM BAINES'

FOUR SKETCHES FOR PIANO.

1. THE CHIMES.
2. ONLY A FEW WOODEN SOLDIERS.
3. DREAMING.
4. LITTLE IMPS.

Price, 2s. net each.

Played by FREDERIC DAWSON, Esq.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK

MUSIC FOR HARVEST

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS in E—CHANT SERVICE ... ..	4d.
BENEDICITE in E ... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE in E ... ..	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS in E ... ..	4d.
CANTATE DEUS in E ... ..	4d.
COMMUNION SERVICE in E ... ..	1s.

ANTHEMS.

BLESSED BE THOU—FOUR VOICES ... ..	4d.
" " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
THINE, O LORD—SHORT ANTHEM ... ..	2d.
O CLAP YOUR HANDS ... ..	4d.
" " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
I WAS GLAD—FESTIVAL ANTHEM ... ..	4d.
HARVEST OR FESTIVAL HYMN, with words—
"SING TO THE LORD" ... ..	1d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise that tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."

—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c. &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest ... ..	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth ... ..	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES

SERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Jubilate ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... ..	1s. 4d.	10d.

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison) ... ..	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use) ... ..	2s	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

- "THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD."
 "SUN OF MY SOUL."
 "THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
 "DIVINE LOVE."
 "THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD"
 "LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
 "THE NAZARENE."
 "THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
 "JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES).

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
 15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

MESSRS. NOVELLO & Co. beg leave to announce that they have purchased the copyright of the following works, hitherto published by them as Author's property:

FRANK ADLAM

Ave Verum (from Missa de Sanctis in E flat) (Short Anthems, No. 244) ... ..	2d.
Benedicite in F (Parish Choir Book, No. 1050) ... ..	2d.
Benedictus in F (Parish Choir Book, No. 1049) ... ..	4d.
Benedictus and Agnus Dei (from Missa de Sanctis in E flat) (Parish Choir Book, No. 1057) ... ..	4d.
Communion Service—
In G (Parish Choir Book, No. 1053) ... ..	6d.
In F (Do. do. No. 1051) ... ..	8d.
In D (Do. do. No. 1055) ... ..	8d.
In E flat (Missa de Sanctis)—
(Parish Choir Book, No. 1056) ... ..	10d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis—
In F (Parish Choir Book, No. 1052) ... ..	4d.
Saviour, Who didst make (Octavo Anthems, No. 1002) ... ..	4d.
Do. do. (Words only) per 100 net 1s. 6d.
Te Deum laudamus—
In D (Parish Choir Book, No. 1054) ... ..	4d.
In F (Do. do. No. 1048) ... ..	4d.

CHARLES A. HEWITT

Communion Service—
In E flat (Parish Choir Book, No. 1046) ... ..	8d.
D. R. MUNRO
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis—
In F (Parish Choir Book, No. 1045) ... ..	4d.
In D (Do. do. No. 1044) ... ..	4d.

DAVID WATKINS

Te Deum laudamus—
In B flat (Parish Choir Book, No. 1047) ... ..	4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS BY C. E. JULEFF

A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., L.T.C.L., Etc.

- ANTHEM—"Behold how good and joyful." Price 4d.
Ye Freeman.—"We congratulate the composer, whose reputation is greatly enhanced by this production."
 Sung at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, London, and in many Cathedral.
- BENEDICITE, KYRIE, and GLORIAS. Price 3d.
Musical News.—"Highly to be commended; varied and effective the Kyrie has a charming melody."
- ANTHEM—"O Strength and Stay." Price 3d.
 For Men's Voices, or for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass.
Western Morning News (Plymouth).—"This exceedingly effective Anthem merits the greatest success."
 Sung at St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, &c., &c.
- SACRED SONG—"For here have we no continuing city." Price 2s. net.
 For Alto, Contralto, or Bass.
Organist and Choirmaster Journal (London).—"Will make its mark wherever well sung."
- ORGAN POSTLUDE ON FAVOURITE HYMN TUNE—"We love the place, O God." Price 2s. net.
Organist and Choirmaster Journal.—"Most effective, yet no difficult."
- SONG—"My Lady-Love." Price 2s. net.
Musical News (London).—"Most useful for pupils, especially in the practice of intervals."
- SONG—"I dreamt of you." Price 2s. net.
 "A very fascinating melody and attractive accompaniment."
Madame Fanny Moody (Prima Donna).
- SONG—"Love's Service." Price 2s. net.
Western Daily Press (Bristol).—"A most charming song."
- SONG—"Doing Good." Price 2s. net.
The Lady.—"It should be a favourite with all singers."
- SONG—"Cornish Pride"—In Memoriam, Fallen Heroes. Price 2s. net.
 "Sung with such success by Mr. GRAHAM SMART, at the Central Hall, Westminster, that it had to be repeated."

Copies may be had from the Composer, ST. JOHN'S HOLT, TAUNTON.

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES.

MESSRS. NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED, beg leave to announce that they have a good supply of Copies of the

HANDEL FESTIVAL SELECTIONS

FOR THE YEARS 1906 AND 1912, which they will supply in quantities to Choral Societies only at the special price of

ONE SHILLING NET.

1906.

PART I. (174 pages.)

A SELECTION FROM "ISRAEL IN EGYPT."

1. RECIT. ... Now there arose a new King
2. DOUBLE CHORUS ... And the children of Israel sighed
3. DOUBLE CHORUS ... He spake the word
4. DOUBLE CHORUS ... He gave them hailstones for rain
5. DOUBLE CHORUS ... He rebuked the Red Sea
6. DOUBLE CHORUS ... He led them through the deep
7. CHORUS ... But the waters
8. DOUBLE CHORUS ... And Israel saw that great work
9. CHORUS ... And believed the Lord
10. DUET ... The Lord is a man of war
11. DOUBLE CHORUS ... Thy right hand, O Lord
12. AIR ... The enemy said
13. AIR ... Thou shalt bring them in
14. DOUBLE CHORUS ... The Lord shall reign
15. RECIT. ... For the horse of Pharaoh
16. DOUBLE CHORUS ... The Lord shall reign
17. RECIT. ... And Miriam the prophetess
18. SOLO AND CHORUS ... Sing ye to the Lord

PART II.

MISCELLANEOUS SELECTION.

- OVERTURE ... "Siroe"
- AIR ... Return, O God of Hosts (Samson)
- CHORUS ... See the proud chief (Deborah)
- AIR ... More sweet is that name (Semele)
- AIR ... Oh! had I Jubal's lyre (Joshua)
- RECIT. AND AIR ... I rage (Acis and Galatea)
- CHORUS ... O ruddier than the cherry (Acis and Galatea)
- CHORUS ... Then round about the starry throne (Samson)
- AIR ... Lord, to Thee (Theodora)
- DUET ... "Berenice"
- AIR AND CHORUS ... Still caressing, and caressed (Alceste)
- RECIT. AND AIR ... (Where shall I fly? See, see they come) (Hercules)
- AIR AND CHORUS ... The trumpet's loud clangor (Ode for St. Cecilia's Day)
- CHORUS ... Gird on thy sword (Saul)

APPENDIX.

- AIR ... Care Selve (Atalanta)
- RECIT. ... Frondi tenere } (Xerxes)
- AIR ... Ombra ma fu }
- AIR ... Si tra i ceppi (Berenice)
- AIR ... Let the bright Seraphim (Samson)

1912.

PART I. (191 pages.)

A SELECTION FROM "SAMSON."

- No. 1. OVERTURE
3. CHORUS ... Awake the trumpet's lofty sound
13. RECIT. ... Matchless in might
14. AIR ... Total eclipse
16. CHORUS ... O first created beam
20. RECIT. ... The good we wish for
21. AIR ... Thy glorious deeds
31. CHORUS ... Then round about the starry throne
35. AIR ... Return, O God of hosts
57. AIR ... Honour and arms
67. CHORUS ... Fixed in His everlasting seat
78. AIR ... Great Dagon has subdued our foe
79. CHORUS ... Great Dagon has subdued our foe
87. AIR ... Ye sons of Israel
88. CHORUS ... Weep, Israel
95. AIR ... Let the bright Seraphim
96. CHORUS ... Let their celestial concerts

PART II.

MISCELLANEOUS SELECTION.

- ORCHESTRA ... Concerto Grosso for Strings (No. 1)
- CHORUS ... Wretched lovers (Acis and Galatea)
- RECIT. AND AIR { Rasserena, O Madre } (Sosarme)
- AIR ... Rendi 'l sereno al ciglio
- AIR ... Lusinghe più care (Alessandro)
- RECIT. AND AIR { Lo, here my love } (Acis and Galatea)
- CHORUS ... Love in her eyes
- CHORUS ... Ye tutelard gods (Belshazzar)
- AIR ... Vinto è l'amor (Ottone)
- ORCHESTRA ... Dance of Sailors (Rodrigo)
- RECIT. AND AIR { Tyrannic love } (Susanna)
- SOLO AND CHORUS ... Ve verdant hills
- SOLO AND CHORUS ... As from the power (St. Cecilia's Day)

APPENDIX.

- RECIT. AND AIR { O worse than death } (Theodora)
- RECIT. AND AIR { Angels, ever bright and fair } (Theodora)
- RECIT. AND AIR { Deeper and deeper still } (Jephtha)
- RECIT. AND AIR { Waft her, Angels } (Jephtha)
- RECIT. AND AIR { Frondi Tenere } (Sera)
- AIR ... Ombra mai fu }
- AIR ... Del Minacciar del vento (Ottone)
- ORCHESTRA ... Overture (Giustino)
- AIR ... Si tra i ceppi (Berenice)
- AIR ... "Oh! had I Jubal's lyre" (Joshua)
- AIR ... Where'er you walk (Semele)
- RECIT. AND AIR { I feel the Deity within } (Juda)
- RECIT. AND AIR { Arm, arm, ye brave } (Juda)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH. CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.	No. 6.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1.	Interlude .. .. .	Th. Dubois	1.	Jour de Noces .. .. .	J. Stuart Arc	1.	Nocturne .. .. .	Thomas F. Dunl
2.	Chanson de Marin .. .. .	Edward Elgar	2.	Festival Prelude on "Ein' feste Burg" .. .. .	W. Faulk	2.	Postludium .. .. .	William Faulk
3.	Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata" .. .. .	W. Faulkes	3.	Legend .. .. .	Harvey Gri	3.	Andante Tranquillo .. .. .	H. M. Hig
4.	There is a green hill far away .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	4.	Allegretto Pastorale .. .. .	H. M. Hig	4.	In Springtime .. .. .	Alfred Holl
5.	Marche Triomphale .. .. .	Alexandre Guilmant	5.	Benediction Nuptiale .. .. .	Alfred Holl	5.	Madrigal .. .. .	Edwin H. Lem
6.	Ave Maria .. .. .	A. Henselt	6.	Sursum Corda .. .. .	John N. Irela	6.	Triumphal March .. .. .	J. Lemme
7.	Grand Chœur No. 2 .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	7.	Alla Marcia .. .. .	John N. Irela	7.	Allegro in B flat .. .. .	F. Mendelssohn-Barthol
8.	Andantino in D flat .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	8.	Adagio Cantabile .. .. .	Edwin H. Lem	8.	Choral Prelude on "Rockingham" .. .. .	C. Hubert H. Par
9.	Chanson Triste .. .. .	P. Tschaiowsky	9.	Fanfare .. .. .	J. Lemm	9.	Præludium Pastorale .. .. .	J. Stair
10.	Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I. .. .. .	R. Wagner	10.	Intermezzo .. .. .	B. Luard-Sel	10.	Romance in F minor .. .. .	Tschaiowski
11.	Romanza .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	11.	Easter Morn .. .. .	John E. W	11.	Romance in A flat .. .. .	H. Sandiford Turn
12.	Allegretto in E flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	12.	Finale in B flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenhol	12.	Festal Commemoration .. .. .	John E. W
No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.	No. 6.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1.	Chanson de Nuit .. .. .	Edward Elgar	1.	Scherzo in A flat .. .. .	Edward C. Bairstow	1.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) .. .. .	Beethov
2.	Alla Marcia .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	2.	Melody .. .. .	S. Coleridge-Taylor	2.	Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) .. .. .	Brabi
3.	Minuetto .. .. .	Alexandre Guilmant	3.	Serenade .. .. .	H. Hofmann	3.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) .. .. .	Chop
4.	Lied .. .. .	H. Hofmann	4.	Bridal March .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	4.	Funeral March .. .. .	William Faulk
5.	Barcarolle .. .. .	H. Hofmann	5.	Berceuse .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	5.	Funeral March ("Saul") .. .. .	Hand
6.	Spring Song .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6.	Melodie in E .. .. .	S. Rachmaninoff	6.	I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hand
7.	The Curfew .. .. .	Edward J. Horsman	7.	Aubade .. .. .	A. Strelezki	7.	Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") .. .. .	Mendelsso
8.	Pastorale in E .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	8.	Nocturne in C sharp minor .. .. .	P. Tschaiowsky	8.	O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") .. .. .	Mendelsso
9.	Ave Maria d'Arcadelt .. .. .	Franz Liszt	9.	Procession to the Minster ("Lohengrin") .. .. .	R. Wagner	9.	Marche Solennelle .. .. .	Schube
10.	Cantique d'Amour .. .. .	Theo. Wendt	10.	Passacaglia .. .. .	John E. West	10.	Marche Funèbre .. .. .	Tschaiowski
11.	The Seraph's Strain .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	11.	Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody "Ad cenam Agni" .. .. .	Healey Willan	11.	Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" .. .. .	Tschaiowski
12.	Le Carillon .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	12.	Allegretto in A flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	12.	Lament .. .. .	John E. We
No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.	No. 6.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1.	Arietta .. .. .	S. Coleridge-Taylor	1.	Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo" .. .. .	J. S. Bac	1.	Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo" .. .. .	J. S. Bac
2.	Souvenir de Printemps .. .. .	Joseph Holbrooke	2.	Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") .. .. .	J. S. Bac	2.	Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") .. .. .	J. S. Bac
3.	Andante in D .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	3.	Quem Vidistis, Pastores .. .. .	W. T. Be	3.	Quem Vidistis, Pastores .. .. .	W. T. Be
4.	Pavane in A .. .. .	Bernard Johnson	4.	Venite in Bethlehem .. .. .	W. T. Be	4.	Venite in Bethlehem .. .. .	W. T. Be
5.	Harmonies du Soir .. .. .	Sigfrid Karg-Elert	5.	December—Christmas Morn .. .. .	Frederic H. Cowe	5.	December—Christmas Morn .. .. .	Frederic H. Cowe
6.	Grand Cortège .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare	6.	Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols .. .. .	William Faulk	6.	Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols .. .. .	William Faulk
7.	Allegro alla Marcia .. .. .	A. L. Peace	7.	For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hand	7.	For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hand
8.	Vision .. .. .	J. Rheinberger	8.	Pastorale .. .. .	Theodore Kull	8.	Pastorale .. .. .	Theodore Kull
9.	Chant sans Paroles .. .. .	P. Tschaiowsky	9.	Chorus of Shepherds .. .. .	J. Lemmei	9.	Chorus of Shepherds .. .. .	J. Lemmei
10.	Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger") .. .. .	R. Wagner	10.	Christmas Pastorale .. .. .	Gustav Merk	10.	Christmas Pastorale .. .. .	Gustav Merk
11.	Allegro Pomposo .. .. .	John E. West	11.	A Christmas Pastoral .. .. .	B. Luard-Sel	11.	A Christmas Pastoral .. .. .	B. Luard-Sel
12.	Canzona .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	12.	Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") .. .. .	John E. We	12.	Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") .. .. .	John E. We

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service, more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.	No.	Book IV.
1.	Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. "Elevation"—Andante e Legato .. .. .	Thomas Adams
2.	Andante .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Religioso .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
3.	Largamente .. .. .	George J. Bennett	3. "Simplicity"—Andante .. .. .	Barry M. Gilhol
4.	Andante Religioso .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	4. Largamente .. .. .	R. G. Hailing
5.	Andantino .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	5. "Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Charles H. Lloyd
6.	Adagio Cantabile .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Andantino .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchant
7.	Larghetto .. .. .	Charles J. May	7. Con Moto Moderato .. .. .	William Sewel
8.	Andante con Moto .. .. .	John E. West	8. Andante Amabile .. .. .	William Sewel
9.	Andantino quasi Allegretto .. .. .	John E. West	9. Andante .. .. .	Clement M. Spurling
10.	Andante .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Sostenuto .. .. .	F. Cunningham Wood
Book II.		Book V.
1.	Andante con Moto .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. "Invocation"—Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Thomas Adams
2.	Con Moto .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante con Moto .. .. .	Percy E. Fletcher
3.	Moderato .. .. .	H. A. Chambers	3. Poco Adagio .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
4.	Marziale, poco Lento .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	4. Andante Espressivo .. .. .	Ignace Gibson
5.	Moderato .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	5. Adagio .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
6.	Andantino .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Poco Lento .. .. .	Charles H. Lloyd
7.	Adagio .. .. .	Charles J. May	7. Andante Dolente .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchant
8.	"Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto .. .. .	John E. West	8. Andantino con Tenerezza .. .. .	William Sewel
9.	Andante Serioso .. .. .	John E. West	9. Andante con Moto .. .. .	Clement M. Spurling
10.	Adagio .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Adagio Molto .. .. .	F. Cunningham Wood
Book III.		Book VI.
1.	Moderato e Legato .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. Dolente .. .. .	Edmund T. Chipp
2.	Moderato .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Sostenuto .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
3.	Andante con Moto .. .. .	George J. Bennett	3. Andantino .. .. .	R. G. Hailing
4.	Andante .. .. .	H. A. Chambers	4. Con Moto .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
5.	Grazioso molto Espressivo .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	5. "Communion"—Cantabile .. .. .	J. Lemmens
6.	"Song without Words"—Con Moto .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Andante Religioso .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchant
7.	Andante .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	7. Lento .. .. .	Charles J. May
8.	Andante Dolente .. .. .	John E. West	8. Larghetto .. .. .	Albert Robins
9.	Andante Pastorale .. .. .	John E. West	9. Adagio e Mesto .. .. .	William Sewel
10.	Adagio .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Affettuoso .. .. .	William Sewel

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN

SET I.

Andante ... ..	Alfred H. Allen
Spring Song ... ..	W. H. Bell
Andante con Moto ... ..	G. J. Bennett
Song of Thanksgiving ... ..	Josiah Booth
Church Preludes No. 5 ... ..	R. E. Bryson
Postlude ... ..	H. Elliot Button
Postlude ... ..	G. Calkin
Prelude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
Andante ... ..	J. W. Gritton
Allegro Moderato ... ..	Kate Loder
Allegro. Op. 21 ... ..	Gustav Merkel
Andante. Op. 162 ... ..	Gustav Merkel
Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn ... ..	J. T. Pye
Prelude No. 2 ... ..	A. Redhead
Larghetto and Allegro ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	C. Steggall
Contemplation ... ..	John E. West
Postlude ... ..	John E. West
Moderato Maestoso ... ..	Kate Westrop
Andante Pastorale ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET II.

Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	George J. Bennett
Church Prelude ... ..	R. Ernest Bryson
Andante Tranquillo ... ..	George Calkin
For Holy Communion ... ..	J. Baptiste Calkin
Postlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
Largo ... ..	Handel
Berceuse ... ..	Oliver King
Adagio, from Sonata No. 2 ... ..	Kuhlau
Allegretto ... ..	Kate Loder
Andante in G ... ..	G. F. Wesley Martin
Andanti Quasi Allegretto ... ..	Gustav Merkel
Cavatina in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
Epilogue ... ..	Joseph Rheinberger
Andante in A ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
Andante in G ... ..	Charles Steggall
March in G ... ..	Henry Smart
Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funebre") ... ..	John E. West
Pastoral Melody ... ..	John E. West
Andante ... ..	Kate Westrop
Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.

1. Melody ... ..	A. Herbert Brewer
2. Maestoso ... ..	George Calkin
3. Ave Maria ... ..	Edward T. Chipp
4. Interlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
5. Intermezzo ... ..	Alan Gray
6. Postlude ... ..	Alex. Guilmant
7. Sursum Corda ... ..	John Ireland
8. Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22 ... ..	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
9. Andante ... ..	Gustav Merkel
10. Duettino in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
11. Cavatina ... ..	Joachim Raff
12. Monologue No. 5 ... ..	J. Rheinberger
13. Melody in F ... ..	Anton Rubinstein
14. Dreaming ... ..	Schumann
15. The Poet Speaks ... ..	Schumann
16. Soft Voluntary ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
17. Menuetto ... ..	Berthold Tours
18. Aspiration ... ..	John E. West
19. Sketch in C minor ... ..	John E. West
20. Andante con Moto ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET IV.—JUST PUBLISHED.

No.

1. Romance ... ..	W. H. Bell
2. Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor) ... ..	W. Sternelale Bennett
3. Canzonetta ... ..	César Cui
4. Interlude ... ..	Th. Dubois
5. Elegy ... ..	Edward Elgar
6. Allegretto ... ..	Niels W. Gade
7. Judex ("Mors et Vita") ... ..	Ch. Gounod
8. Intermezzo No. 3 ... ..	Alan Gray
9. Chanson de Joie ... ..	R. G. Hailing
10. Hymnus ... ..	A. C. Mackenzie
11. Lieder Ohne Worte No. 44 ... ..	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
12. Trio ... ..	J. Rheinberger
13. Short Postlude ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
14. Andante Maestoso ... ..	B. Luard Selby
15. Prelude ... ..	Henry Smart
16. Fughetta ... ..	Henry Smart
17. Choral Song ... ..	S. S. Wesley
18. Lamentation ... ..	John E. West
19. Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	John E. West
20. Andante ... ..	W. G. Wood

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.

CLOTH, EIGHT SHILLINGS EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE
ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
60.	THREE CHORALE PRELUDES ... .. Harold E. Darke	3 0
61.	SOLENN PRELUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1 6
62.	INTERMEZZO ... .. Hugh Blair	2 3
63.	CAPRICCIETTO ... .. Hugh Blair	2 3
64.	POSTLUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1 6
65.	POSTLUDE (with Violins ad lib. ) ... A. C. Mackenzie	1 6
66.	FANTASIA ON THE TUNE "TWRGWYN" ... T. J. Morgan	2 3
67.	MINUET ... .. Alfred Hollins	2 3
68.	EPITHALAMIUM ... .. Alfred Hollins	2 3
69.	THREE SHORT PIECES ... .. S. Coleridge-Taylor	2 3
70.	TOCCATA ... .. A. P. F. Boëly	2 3
71.	A SOUVENIR ... .. H. Douglas	2 3
72.	LAMENT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
73.	ELEGIAC PRELUDE ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
74.	CRADLE SONG ... .. R. G. Hailing	1 6
75.	CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN" ... J. E. Wallace	3 0
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1 6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
80.	DÉSÉSPOIR ... .. Ch. Quef	1 6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHORALE PRELUDES FOR
THE ORGANBY
C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

FIRST SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 1.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Dundee."
2. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Rockingham."
3. CHORALE PRELUDE on S. S. Wesley's "Hampton."
4. CHORALE PRELUDE on the "Old 104th."
5. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Melcombe."
6. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Christe Redemptor omnium."
7. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Ann's."

SECOND SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 45.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Croft's 136th."
2. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Martyrdom."
3. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Thomas."
4. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Mary."
5. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Eventide."
6. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Cross."
7. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Hanover."

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH SET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN

BY
GEO. P. ALLEN,
Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

- | No. |  | s. | d. |
|-----|--|----|----|
| 1.  | Fantasia on Hymn Tune "Abide with me" ...  | 3  |    |
| 2.  | Concert Fantasia in C ... ..   | 2  |    |
| 3.  | Grand Chœur in D... ..   | 2  |    |
| 4.  | Andantino in C ... ..  | 2  |    |
|     | Also transposed to the Key of D for Violin orVioloncello and Pianoforte ... .. | 2  |    |
| 5.  | Fantasia on Carol "Christians, awake" ...  | 2  |    |

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FROM THE ORGAN LOFT

BY
ALFRED H. ALLEN
(Assistant-Organist Rochester Cathedral)WITH A FOREWORD BY SIR W. H. HADOW, C.B.E.
(Vice-Chancellor of Sheffield University).

2s. 6d. net; postage, 1½d.

SIR W. H. HADOW writes:

"This Paper is another welcome sign that we are beginning once more to recognise ideals in the musical part of our service, and that we are endeavouring, though slowly and imperfectly, to carry them into effect. Mr. Allen puts his case clearly and trenchantly. He aims high, and has the full courage of his convictions. I should like to commend specially his protest against the use of bad hymn-tunes, his statement that Chopin's Funeral March is suited neither to the Church nor to the organ, and the admirable list of programmes which he has added in the appendix. These are indeed patterns of what such selections should be, and it is much to be hoped that they will serve both as a guide and as a stimulus to Mr. Allen's colleagues throughout the country. I heartily commend his essay to the careful and sympathetic consideration of the reader.

OXFORD: BASIL BLACKWELL, BROAD STREET.

ROMANY LIFE

A SUITE OF EASY PIECES

FOR THE PIANOFORTEBY
ERNEST NEWTON.

Price, Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Miniature Suite for String Quartet

BY
R. F. WOOD-SMITH.

Parts, Four Shillings. Score, Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

N ENGLISH SUITE FOR STRINGS.

- PRELUDE 4. CAPRICE
IN MINUET STYLE 5. PASTORAL SARABAND 6. AIR
7. FROLIC.

COMPOSED BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

SCORE ... EIGHT SHILLINGS.

PARTS, COMPLETE, TEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

(Separate Parts, 2s. 6d. and 2s.)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWO PIECES FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

BY

HAROLD RAWLINSON.

ERENADE.	s.	d.
String Parts ... ..	2	0
Wind Parts ... ..	1	8
Pianoforte Solo ... ..	2	3

UBADE.	s.	d.
String Parts ... ..	2	8
Wind Parts ... ..	3	4
Pianoforte Solo ... ..	2	3

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

WILDERNESS WAY THREE SONGS OF CHILDHOOD

THE WORDS BY

DOROTHY BEVAN PARRY

THE MUSIC BY

HERBERT E. CRIMP.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHORAL MUSIC

FOR MIXED-VOICES UNACCOMPANIED

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

MOTET: "A HEAVY HEART." ... .. 6d.
(Composed for the Westminster Abbey Special Choir.)

PART-SONGS:

"TO MUSIC" ... .. 3d.
(Composed for the Bristol Madrigal Society.)
"TELL ME, I CHARGE YOU" ... .. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO &amp; COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA THE ANCIENT MARINER

30th 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.
Band Parts may be hired.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

IMPRESSIONS

(L'ALMANACH AUX IMAGES).

A VOCAL SUITE

FOR SOLO AND CHORUS OF LADIES' VOICES.

THE POEM BY

TRISTAN KLINGSOR.

The English Version by W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

GUSTAVE FERRARI.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Orchestral Score by JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

Parts for Strings, Wood-Wind and Horn (5 players), or Organ, may be had on hire.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 95.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BEETHOVEN'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS

HINTS ON THEIR RENDERING, FORM, ETC.,

WITH APPENDICES ON

DEFINITION OF SONATA, MUSIC FORMS, ORNAMENTS.
PIANOFORTE PEDALS, AND HOW TO DISCOVER KEYS

BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ENGLISH LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

EACH SET, PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS NET.

FIRST SET.

- |                                    |                          |                                   |     |     |                    |
|------------------------------------|--------------------------|-----------------------------------|-----|-----|--------------------|
| 1. *My true love hath my heart ... | Sir Philip Sidney | 3. Where shall the lover rest ... | ... | ... | Shakespeare |
| 2. Good-night ...                  | ...                      | 4. Willow, Willow, Willow ...     | ... | ... | Shakespeare |

SECOND SET.

